Machinery is kept off the field as much as possible because it can ruin the turf, Bonjour said.

During the summer months, the field is prepared for the upcoming football season.

"We make sure everything is presentable and repainted in the summer," McNally said.

"With the bad summer we had, we ran out of time for painting," McNally said.

Keeping up stadium appearance and field maintenance means less repair in the long run, he said.

"The field is like carpet. Dirty artificial turf wears out quicker, and it looks better if it is clean," Bonjour said.

We want the facilities to look nice for visiting teams, and it helps with recruiting, McNally said.

Maintenance of the field and stadium is costly, and it involves many people.

Including painting, it costs about $7,000 a year to maintain the field, Bonjour said.

Routine maintenance on the rest of the stadium costs from $10,000 to $15,000 a year, Bonjour said. This includes painting, cleaning, repairs and labor.

Several workers help with the cleaning and painting of the field, McNally said.

"I have, as far as a maintenance staff, a full-time assistant and students who help. Athletic grounds has a staff also, roughly three full-time people and three students," Bonjour said.

The K-State band practices on Fridays and Saturdays and conducts a marching band clinic, Bonjour said.

State high school football playoffs also take place on the field, Bonjour said.

Museum to have art collections from K-State, national sources

CHAD HARRIS
Collegian

With ground breaking for the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum next spring, Museum Curator Jessica Reichman and Director Nelson Britt said they anticipate an exciting year for art enthusiasts.

"The ground breaking is scheduled to begin in the spring of 1994. It will be located behind McCain Auditorium, which gives it convenience for both students and the general public," Reichman said.

As curator, Reichman's duties entail the primary care of collections, adding of collections, conducting research and getting works into the public arena.

She will work with Britt, who has been directing art museums for 15 years.

Britt began his career at the Greenville Museum of Art in Greenville, N. C. He was attracted to K-State, he said, because of its decision to build a new museum.

"I played a part in getting the Greenville museum off its feet, so I thought I might be able to contribute quite a bit. I think that starting from scratch gives you unlimited possibilities," Britt said.

Britt has just finished his first year at K-State.

His duties as director before construction include implementing many new policies, selecting and working with the architects, as well as fund raising. Currently, K-State is the only Big Eight school without a museum.

"I feel we will have one of the biggest in the Big Eight after we're finished. We will be capable of obtaining art work from all over the country. It really will be a great milestone for K-State," Britt said.

Reichman said she enjoys her work as curator.

"I have been at K-State for 11 years now. Before K-State, I was assistant director at a museum in Baton Rouge, La., and before Louisiana, I was exhibits designer at a museum in Flagstaff, Ariz.," she said.

Many of the art collections, including some from as far back as 1928, are stored at the former Farm Bureau building.

The collections that will be contained in the museum will not only be from K-State but will come from national sources as well.

The Wefalds were a prime source in getting the museum started, Reichman and Britt said.

"The Wefalds were enthusiastic about the idea and appreciative of Ross Beach's donations," Reichman said.

U.S. enthusiasm encourages llama studies

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

A recent surge in American enthusiasm for llama breeding provided Dr. Horst Leipold, an expert in animal genetics, with a new challenge.

Because of his 20 years spent researching genetic defects in cattle, Leipold, distinguished professor of veterinary medical genetics, was asked by the Llama Association of North America to do similar work with llamas .

He was interested in the project because the breeding of llamas as domesticated livestock is relatively new to the United States, Leipold said.

"This area of veterinary medicine is in its infancy," he said. "We didn't know what diseases were involved."

The most common genetic defects found were facial defects, including cleft palate and choanal atresia, an abnormality of the passageway between the nose and mouth.

Crias, or baby llamas, born with choanal atresia cannot breath or nurse normally, Leipold said.

He concluded that most genetic abnormalities in the North American llama population were due to inbreeding.

In the 19th Century South America exported llamas as zoo animals, but approximately 60 years ago, the Andean countries banded together to cease legal exportation.

He suspected that the countries did not want to lose their monopoly on the animals, Leipold said.

The United States may have also restricted llama importation to protect native livestock from dangerous livestock diseases such as foot-and-mouth disease, he said.

As a result, the current llama population, more than 50,000, consists of animals that descend from a few animals imported before the ban.

The ban was lifted in the 1980s, and since then llama breeding has become enormously popular in some areas.

Even the experts can not explain this burgeoning industry, Leipold said.

"Ten years ago, people didn't talk about llamas," he said. "But, honestly, it's a very enjoyable type of animal to have — very interesting and lovable."

Dr. Neil Anderson, professor of clinical sciences and small ruminant clinician, described llamas as regal, haughty animals valuable in the United States as pack animals on trails.

They are also effective guardian animals for sheep and goats, Anderson said.

The new interest in breeding llamas has created the need to study llamas and their genetic traits. His research is aimed at helping people make wise breeding choices, he said.

Leipold is the only scientist in the country focusing on this area of llama medicine, Anderson said.

"He's done an incredible job in a very short time in describing and helping us to understand genetic abnormalities in llamas," he said.

Leipold has been honored for his work on congenital defects and diseases in domestic animals by the Brown Swiss Cattle Breeders' Association and in the Veterinary Clinics of North America: Food Animal Practice, a quarterly trade publication, which dedicated its March 1993 issue on congenital abnormalities to him.

Leipold is originally from Muhlhausen, Germany. He received his doctorate of veterinary medicine from the University of Geissen in Germany.

He came to K-State as a graduate student and received master's degrees in genetics and pathology.

His decision to remain at K-State for the next 20 years was based on the number of people who shared his interests and the support he has received from the College of Veterinary Medicine, Leipold said.

"We don't want to show off, but we have been very successful," Leipold said.

Psychologist teaches stress relief, control

Athletes improve game, beat tension

LISA STAAB
Collegian

The Cat basketball team, which started fall conditioning on Aug. 30, is learning how to enhance its game performances through a biofeedback class.

"I want the athletes to learn how to regulate and reduce stress so they have more voluntary control over their systems," he said. "I don't want them to get too anxious before a game, because they won't perform well."

Newton tests the athletes' stress levels with various methods. One method is a probe that is taped to the fingertip to determine skin temperature.

"When learning to deal with one's own level of activation, machines can give immediate feedback to make an adjustment in the stress level," he said.

If a person's hands are warm, it indicates the person is relaxed because there is blood in the fingertips. However, when the individual is tense, blood flows away from the fingertips," Newton said.

"When the athlete learns to warm his hands, he can see what he needs to change in his mind."

A galvanic skin response test, or GSR, is a method used to determine moisture on the hands. Other tests include the measurement of muscle tension, brain activity or heart rate, Newton said.

Through performance enhancement, athletes work on self-regulation.

"They push buttons in their own minds to help themselves relax or to get more excited," he said. "Once they learn the method, they know how to react in similar situations later."

Newton said he tells the athletes each fall to concentrate, activate and motivate to tap into their desires.

"I tell the player that if he goes into the situation with equal physical attributes, then I can teach him the edge to prepare mentally because a good basketball player learns to focus and learns the mental of self-control," Newton said.

Brian Henson, junior in journalism and mass communications and Cats' guard, said he was skeptical at first but feels the class improved his self-control during the game.

"In the class, I learned self-control about getting mad, calming down and getting back into the game," Henson said. "I think the class helped every player in learning different ways to self-motivate and self-control."

Patsy Brandt, academic counselor for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said she believes the class was a positive experience for the team.

"The players learned about stress management and biofeedback. I think it was an interesting course of study. I support anything that enlightens them and turns them on to studying or reading," she said. "The class included parallels with other courses including psychology, sociology and small group communication."

FRED NEWTON
DIRECTOR OF UNIVERSITY COUNSELING

In addition to biofeedback, Newton works on goal setting with the players. He encourages them to design a program to meet their goals and reach their results.

"A goal must be something like 'I want to shoot effectively with my offhand and shoot consistently,'" Newton said. "The result is making it to the all-American First Team."

He works with the athletes twice a week because the results are consistent that way, he said.

"Mental training is just like any practice," Newton said. "The results will be achieved with effort. The athletes cannot change their mental habits unless they put in consistent mental practice."

The team attained several of its goals last season. The Cats set out to be noticed for their defense, their positive attitude and to be a top rebounding team, he said.

In addition, they wanted to beat Oklahoma State and Kansas as well as win 20 games.

The Cats' won 19 games and beat every team in the Big Eight, including OSU and KU.

"They reached further than people expected and within what they wanted to do," Newton said.

The biofeedback class is not limited to athletics. Newton said he feels the course is just as useful to enhance classroom performance.

Fatherhood is a full-time job

Dads improve relationships through seminars

RENEE MARTIN

He can bring his work home from the office without his wife getting angry.

Ken Canfield, president and founder of the National Center for Fathering, works during the day to help men become better fathers before returning home to fulfill the role himself. As the father of five children ranging in ages from 3 to 13, Canfield practices the techniques his center teaches.

"My basic belief is that fathering is one of the most important tasks I can commit myself to," he said. "If I can't do it, then I ought not to be speaking about it."

Canfield, who is pursuing a doctoral degree in education, founded the center at 217 Southwind Place in 1990 after becoming concerned with statistics showing an upward trend in substance abuse and violent crime.

"I was alarmed that general societal problems weren't decreasing, but increasing. These problems are undercutting the family," Canfield said. "It struck a chord in me that many times teenagers with problems have no fathers. A father's absence brings vulnerability to children.

"Statistics show that they are more likely to be subject to poverty and score lower on tests than children in a father-filled home."

The goal of the non-profit organization is to help men turn their hearts to their children, Canfield said. With the help of four staff members, Canfield publishes Today's Father, a free bi-monthly newsletter. He also delivers a daily radio broadcast used by more than 200 radio stations across the nation. To reach men more directly, the center has trained 27 national representatives from various states to deliver seminars.

"We provide the curriculum and the speaker, but the seminars are hosted by a group," Randy Mallon, director of seminars, said. "Last year we gave over 50 seminars. I expect we'll give more than 100 seminars this year. I estimate that we've reached more than 2,000 men, and that number is growing."

Canfield said the seminars help men explore the relationships they have with their own fathers. The men are then taught methods to improve their fathering skills.

"I think one of the hindrances of fathering is a lack of know-how," he said. "We help them identify healthy father mentors, set goals for themselves, and find ways to meet them."

Kurt Moldrup, the father of six children younger than 8, said attending a seminar helped him evaluate his relationship with his own father and identify the characteristics he was passing on to his children.

"The seminar made me realize everything my dad did for me. I know that I'm taking on the same characteristics my father has, but now I can recognize the weaknesses and strengths," Moldrup said. "What I do for my children now is going to affect how they father their own children. If I'm a good father, my six children can pass this on, and then there will be six good families for the next generation."

Moldrup said he also benefited from reading the book, "The Seven Secrets of Effective Fathers," which Canfield published in September 1992. Canfield's second book, "Beside Every Great Dad," was published in May 1993 and targeted a female audience.

"I think women are more in tune with the needs of the family. Women are more progressive and look for outside resources to help strengthen their family," Canfield said. "Writing the book for women was as effective as writing another book for men."

Moldrup's wife, Sue, read the book and said it has helped her to be more supportive of her husband.

"The biggest change for me was in my expectations," she said. "Instead of criticizing him, I now allow him more freedom. The book tells what you can do to make an atmosphere that is more helpful for husbands to be good fathers."

The center has been so successful in providing resources on fatherhood that Canfield is opening one in Overland Park, on Oct. 1. The new center will focus on inner-city fathers.

"People thought this is a good idea whose time has come. I want to make fathering culturally relevant and culturally attractive," he said. "We have never had so many men wanting to be involved in raising their kids, but at the same time there are a lot of dads who don't care. I tell the good fathers to faithfully father their own children and then reach out to one fatherless kid."

Canfield said he recognizes the growing challenge of not only getting men to take responsibility for their children but also to become actively involved in raising them.

"The federal deficit doesn't compare to the fatherless deficit," he said. "I'd like to work myself out of business."

Union involved in food fight

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment notified the K-State Union that its policy allowing multicultural groups to serve homemade food in the Union was a violation of health regulations, Malley Sisson, director of Union Food Service, said.

The Union Governing Board passed the policy in the spring in order to attract more multicultural events to the Union, Jack Sills, director of the Union, said.

However, KDHE regulations state that a licensed facility such as the Union must serve food made in a licensed kitchen.

"The Union wanted to make this happen, and we think we can make it happen, but now we are faced with how, logistically, we can make this policy work," Sisson said.

The issue was raised when a multicultural group asked Student Senate to appropriate money for a rental fee so the group could pay for an off-campus event, Sills said.

Sisson said part of the problem is the student groups want to prepare their own food.

"We can't make German food like a German can," she said. "Everyone makes a recipe different, and there are special techniques and spices in some of the foods we are not familiar with," Sisson said.

"Food is a big part of culture."

JUAN VERA
JUNIOR IN ACCOUNTING, PRESIDENT OF HALO

Juan Vera, junior in accounting and president of the Hispanic American Leadership Organization, said his organization would like to use the Union for events but has been held back by the food problem.

HALO has used the kitchen and facilities in the Ecumenical Campus Ministry building, but Vera said the rooms were too small.

Sisson said allowing the students to prepare food in the Union kitchen was a consideration, but it might result in the Union being liable if someone was injured.

A representative from the KDHE told Sisson the Union's license would not be revoked if they allowed the current policy to stand, but the Union could be liable if anyone gets sick from the food.

A letter was sent from the University attorney's office to the KDHE Aug. 31 in an attempt to confirm the legal ramifications of the policy. The Union is waiting for a reply.

"We are not going to put ourselves in a situation where we might be liable," Sills said. "We are playing a waiting game until we hear from the KDHE."

Senate opposes GPA requirement

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

A proposal to dismiss any student who earns less than a 1.0 semester grade point average after the first semester at K-State was opposed by Student Senate Thursday night.

The proposal, which was submitted for Senate consideration by Faculty Senate, addresses the handling of low academic achievers.

Steffany Carrel, student representative to Faculty Senate, said the rationale behind the proposal was to find the best way to utilize human and financial resources at K-State.

"They are basically saying that there needs to be another academic cutoff," Carrel said.

Carrel said while the rationale was unanimously supported by Faculty Senate, the means of implementing it was not.

"The proposal for first semester dismissal was a bone of contention," she said.

Ed Skoog, student body president and senior in English, said he could see why.

"This is a fairly radical change in the dismissal policy," Skoog said. "It is anti-student."

Dan Lewerenz, multicultural affairs director on Skoog's cabinet, said the proposal is especially unfair to minority groups.

"Under-represented student groups tend to have a greater difficulty adjusting to college life," he said.

Phil Anderson, Faculty Senate representative to the Senate, said he was having a hard time adjusting to the proposal.

"There is no specification as to how many hours a student must take in order to qualify for dismissal," Anderson said. "If it is not tied to a specific number of credit hours it may not be workable and it may not be fair. Theoretically, a student could take one credit hour, get a bad GPA and get kicked out of school."

In response to such concern, a resolution was passed stating that Student Senate will support the Faculty Senate proposal if it is amended to read that a student who earns less than a 1.0 cumulative GPA after his or her first 24 credit hours at K-State will be dismissed.

Carrel said this amendment will allow most students to have more than one semester to pull up their GPA.

The proposal for low academic achievers, including the Student Senate amendment, will be voted on Wednesday by Faculty Senate.

FACULTY SENATE POLICY CONCERNING DISMISSAL

1. Any student (freshman or transfer) who earns less than a 1.0 semester grade point average in his or her first semester at K-State will be dismissed.*
2. Any continuing student enrolled at K-State not dismissed by University academic standards policies who earns less than a 1.0 semester grade point average will have registration for the next term withheld subject to review by the academic dean or the dean's representative(s).
3. Students who have been dismissed or have had their registration withheld will receive a letter providing a contact person and information about reinstatement or registration procedures.
4. Dismissed students must normally wait at least two semesters before being reinstated.

* Student Senate Thursday decided this proposal is acceptable if the first portion is changed so that a student who earns less than a 1.0 cumulative grade point average after his or her first 24 credit hours at K-State will be dismissed.

Faculty and students debate diversity class

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

K-State faculty members are still debating over the proposed diversity overlay requirement.

The overlay would require a student to choose a two- or three-hour course from a list of classes that focus on issues concerning cultural similarities and differences.

A handful of students and faculty voiced their opinions and concerns at an open forum Thursday in Leasure 13 about the possible addition of an extra course requirement.

Harriett Ottenheimer, professor in social anthropology and social work and co-chairman of the Diversity Ad Hoc Committee, moderated the forum.

The forum was scheduled to include students and encourage discussion, she said.

"There is a growing diversity among our domestic population," Dan Lewerenz, director of multicultural affairs of student government, said.

There is a need for students to have this course to get along in today's job market, he said.

Hermann Donnert, professor in nuclear engineering and representative of the College of Engineering, said the principal problem is not the issue of diversity overlay, but that there is not a complete listing of courses that would fill that requirement.

"For my committee to give approval, there needs to be a complete list," Donnert said. "It's like giving a blank check to another committee to set guidelines for the College of Engineering."

The ad hoc committee is at odds with the rest of the faculty if it provides a tentative course listing for the requirement, and it is also at odds if it does not, Ottenheimer said.

"We provided a tentative list of classes, but people started picking," Ottenheimer said.

Doug Benson, associate professor in modern languages and committee member, said there will be problems if a course listing is presented before the diversity overlay is passed in Faculty Senate.

"Everyone would ask, 'Why isn't my class on the list.' Then we couldn't have a rational discussion," Benson said.

Ed Skoog, student body president, said the University is hurting the students by not incorporating a diversity overlay into the curriculum.

"I think we need to have it to keep the University as a legitimate university," Skoog said.

Ottenheimer said there are universities across the United States that have moved to require multicultural courses in their curriculum.

The University of California at Berkley has had success with its multicultural requirement in the two or three years it has been implemented, she said.

"We need to phase into it," Ottenheimer said. "Requiring students to do things they may not want to do is our biggest opposition."

Fair worker dies after jumping off catwalk

HUTCHINSON (AP) — A Royal American Shows worker who jumped from a catwalk about 40 feet to his death Thursday was apparently goofing around and died accidentally, police said.

William Godwin, 32, died as rides and attractions were being set up for the Kansas State Fair. He was apparently trying to land on an awning after he jumped, said Hutchinson Detective F.K. Owston.

Police originally were investigating Godwin's death as a suicide but found no indication that he was depressed or had any reason to take his life, Owston said.

Witnesses said the man yelled, "Geronimo," before jumping at about 1 a.m., police Lt. William Peterman said.

Godwin struck an entrance awning before hitting the pavement. He was alert and able to speak with emergency workers, but he died at Hutchinson Hospital about 4:45 a.m.

Other workers told police the man had been barred from setting up midway rides for two days because he had been drinking, Peterman said. Police had no indication of whether he was drinking before he jumped.

Kansas women affected by lawsuit

WICHITA (AP) — A lawyer who helped negotiate the $4.75-billion proposed settlement agreement of silicone breast implant cases said the arrangement could affect about 350 Kansas victims.

Dow Corning Inc. said Thursday that the settlement is being discussed by plaintiffs and defendants in the cases.

As part of the proposal, industry participants, including manufacturers, raw material suppliers, insurance carriers, physicians and other health-care providers would pay into a fund that would serve as an insurance policy for women with breast implants.

Alzheimer's patients benefit from new drug

WASHINGTON(AP) — The government gave its approval Thursday to the first drug that offers help to patients robbed of their memories and mental capacity by Alzheimer's disease.

The Food and Drug Administration said the medicine, tacrine, provides a small but clinically meaningful benefit for some patients with mild to moderate Alzheimer's disease.

Roth said the drug could give some Alzheimer's patients the attention span to watch a television show for a few hours — and give their care-givers a much-needed break.

Abortion pill should be approved, experts say

WASHINGTON (AP) — A pill that has been used widely in Europe for abortion may also be an important drug in the treatment of breast cancer, brain tumors and for some female reproductive disorders, a panel of experts said.

In a study released Wednesday by the National Academy of Sciences, the experts said RU-486, an abortion pill that has been used by more than 60,000 women in Europe, should be approved quickly for the same use in the United States.

The study said the European experience suggests that there is no need for extensive American clinical trials before the Food and Drug Administration evaluates the drug for U.S. marketing.

But the committee said the drug also shows promise for a number of physical disorders.

Chemicals may have affected veterans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chemical warfare agents could have caused debilitating illnesses affecting thousands of Persian Gulf War veterans, a senator said in a report issued Thursday.

The report, compiled by the staff of Sen. Donald W. Riegle, D-Mich., said there was a strong possibility the Iraqis launched at least two missiles with chemical toxin warheads at U.S. forces in Saudi Arabia.

It said 85 of 110 members of the Army 644th Ordinance Company, a unit based near one of those attacks, have since reported symptoms common to those with "Persian Gulf Syndrome."

Riegle is seeking an amendment to the 1994 Defense Department authorization bill providing $5.7 million for research studies into the causes of Gulf War Syndrome. More than 4,000 veterans have reported symptoms such as memory loss, skin rashes, chronic fatigue, heart and intestinal problems and joint pain.

Senate debates U.S. presence in Somalia

WASHINGTON (AP) — A deeply divided Senate is debating whether to push President Clinton to end U.S. military involvement in Somalia.

Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W. Va., argued that the humanitarian effort was complete and U.S. interests were not at stake in restoring order to Somalia, where a lengthy civil war bred lawlessness and widespread starvation.

But senator after senator, while stressing they shared Byrd's concerns, rose to express misgivings about the prospects of the United States abandoning the U.N. operation.

American adult literacy level low

WASHINGTON (AP) — A shocking number of American adults read, write and compute too poorly to perform simple, everyday tasks. They also can't function in jobs that demand skilled workers able to decipher complex information, according to a nationwide survey.

The survey results, released Wednesday by the Education Department, show that 90 million Americans — 47 percent of the nation's adult population — possess only rudimentary literacy skills.

■ As many as 40 million of the nation's 191 million adults have only the lowest level of skills, meaning they can total an entry on a bank deposit slip or identify a piece of specific information in a brief news article. Many respondents were unable to complete even those tasks.

JFK Jr. and Daryl, will they or won't they?

Reality is running a poor second to rumor these days on the eastern end of Long Island, where the buzz is that the hunky Kennedy will exchange vows with lovely actress Hannah on Saturday.

The circumstantial evidence pointing to a wedding: Kennedy and Hannah just returned from a trip abroad. John's aunt, Lee Radziwill, owns an ocean-front home perfect for a late summer wedding. The couple — maybe — picked up a California marriage license in July.

The reality: The only people who do know aren't saying. Which hasn't stopped everybody else in town from talking.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.

But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $172,109* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $219 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

Compeer ends loneliness

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

In a society that prizes body and mental perfection, the mentally ill are sometimes shunned.

Some K-State students are making sure the mentally ill residents of Manhattan aren't treated that way:

Eleven students are participating in the Compeer program, a service of Pawnee Mental Health Services Inc., which matches volunteers with individuals who are suffering from mental illnesses. Compeer means equal or companion.

Volunteers make a one-year commitment to spend one hour a week being a friend to individuals with illnesses such as schizophrenia, manic depression or severe depression.

"They may go bowling, fishing, attend sporting events, anything you'd do with any friend," Mary Alice Schlesener, Compeer program coordinator, said.

The Manhattan chapter of Compeer was established in 1989 after the managers of the community-support program realized their clients were lonely, Schlesener said.

"They may go bowling, fishing, attend sporting events, anything you'd do with any friend."

MARY ALICE SCHLESENER
COMPEER PROGRAM COORDINATOR

"The mentally ill have lots of time on their hands. This is something worthwhile that benefits them," Schlesener said.

"They have a friend to talk to, to look forward to doing activities with, to do the activities with — and then they have the memories."

Volunteers must be at least 18 and have a valid driver's license and two references to participate in the program.

Clients are matched with volunteers according to mutual interests, gender and availability.

Cindy Jones, junior in psychology, decided to become a Compeer volunteer six months ago after seeing an ad for volunteers in the newspaper.

"I realized the mentally ill needed friends, and I thought it might teach me something," Jones said. "This experience has taught me patience, not to be judgmental, to take life more openly and not to worry about things in life that don't matter."

Christopher Horsley, senior in psychology and Compeer volunteer, spends one to two hours a week with his friend. They play pool, bowl, watch movies or go fishing.

Horsley said he enjoys Compeer because he can help someone by being himself, even though he is not an expert on mental illness.

There are 10 women and 11 men waiting to be matched with Compeer volunteers.

For clients to enter the Compeer program, they must be on steady treatment, their case must be approved by a case manager or therapist, and they must be ready to re-enter the community, Schlesener said.

"The Compeer program is a volunteer program that is really worthwhile. It's more than just stuffing envelopes," Schlesener said. "Volunteers change two lives — their own and the lives of their friend."

Program defeats language barrier

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

The most difficult part of college for many of K-State's international students is overcoming the language barrier.

K-State's English Language Program, or ELP, exists to equip students with the knowledge of the English language necessary to overcome that barrier.

Ninety-one students are enrolled in the program this year, representing 10 native languages ranging from Swahili to Russian, Enid Cocke, director of ELP, said.

ELP was established seven years ago at K-State in an attempt to qualify more students for admissions, Cocke said.

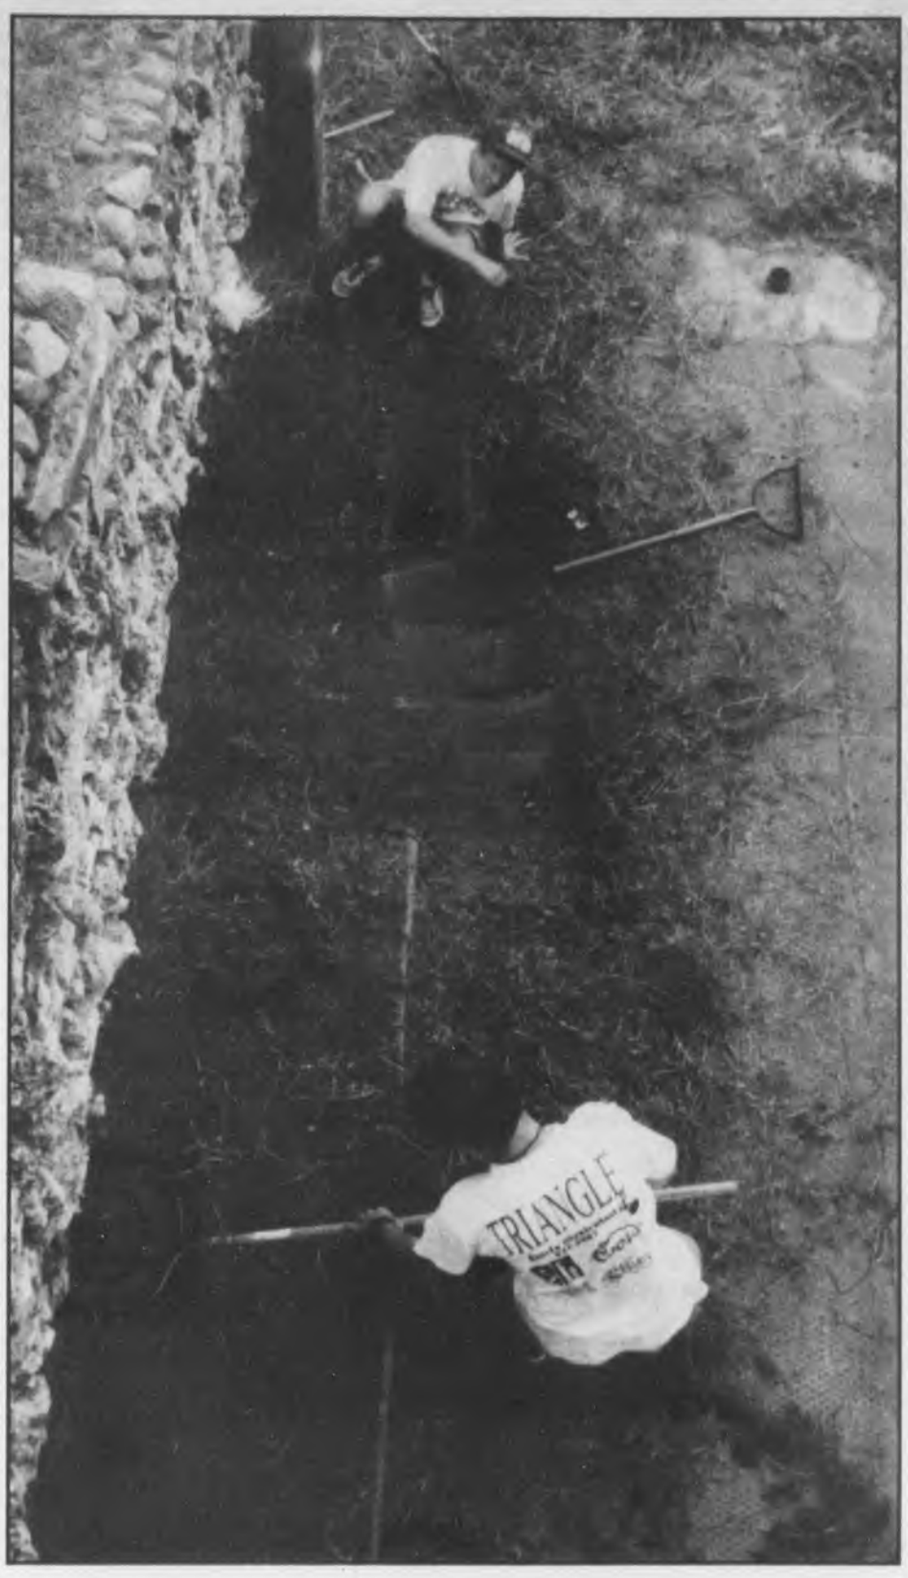
"The University would say, 'Go somewhere else and get your language proficiency,' then the students would stay at that institution," she said. "We were losing good students."

Students must take the Test of English as a Foreign Language and get a score of 550 to qualify for admissions to K-State. Students who are enrolled in ELP can be recommended to enter the University if the instructors of the program say they have sufficient language proficiency and their scores on the TOESFL are high enough.

Classes are taught completely in English and are divided according to four levels of ability. Three sections exist in each level, including grammar and writing, reading and a combination of speaking and listening.

Each section of the course is taught by a different instructor. Instructors have their master's in either linguistics or teaching English as a second language. Many instructors have taught English at other universities or in other countries.

Mary Wood, instructor and assistant director of ELP, has taught English at K-State for seven years.



"It's nicest when students come back and say, 'I'm graduating. I'm going home.' It feels wonderful," Wood said.

Students attend class five hours a day, five days a week for a semester. They receive 15 hours of credit for their work, but the hours do not count toward a degree.

Alfred Haryono, freshman in industrial engineering and a native of Indonesia, said he enrolled in the program to qualify for admissions.

Haryono said the courses helped him improve his pronunciation and also prepared him for University courses.

"We had lots of homework, and this helped me get ready for University classes," he said, "It also helped me make more international friends."

Small college makes large policy for couples

A small liberal-arts college in Ohio has instituted a campus sexual-harassment policy it hopes will propel the world to be more sexually conscious.

A student can't decide to have sex because of the look in his or her partner's eyes. Verbal consent is mandatory for a simple kiss to take place.

Each time a new level of physical intimacy is considered, the idea must be posed, verbally, by one of the participants and OK'd by the other.

This all seems very practical, and, in fact, there have been no reported incidents since the policy was started last January.

But what if there had been any reported?

Antioch has not truly tested the rules it has set forth. What will they do when the rules are broken?

At a small college of 700 students, such policies might be possible, but how would they fare at large university such as K-State?

Surveillance cameras and audio recorders to monitor every room, every parking lot, every square foot of campus where sex could occur is a bit outrageous and an invasion of privacy.

The same would be the case if sex police were hired to police dorm rooms and question sex participants as to whether the proper consent was obtained.

To make the process simpler, the University would eventually issue official written consent forms for sex.

Sex permission would have to be applied for 24 hours before the planned encounter for the proper forms to be issued. Afterward, they would be filed with the office of the dean of students.

Does it seem practical that an institution resort to consent forms? No.

VICTIMS OF IGNORANCE

BUT THE MAIN DIFFERENCE IS THAT, IN MOST OF THESE OTHER CASES, BIOLOGICAL FAMILIES ARE KEPT TOGETHER. THAT IS, UNLESS YOU'RE GAY. THEN IT'S OPEN SEASON ON THE FAMILY UNIT.

"It would so confuse the child that he would be unable to distinguish between male and female." — Judge Buford Parsons

Well, I was beginning to despair about finding a topic for this week's column.

Then Buford Parsons handed down the ruling that Sharon Bottoms could not regain custody of her 2-year-old child because she was a lesbian. My faith in the deep reaches of ignorance in this great country was restored.

It made my entire week.

Hell, why didn't he just drive her out of town under cover of darkness while he was at it?

How dare she try to live with the woman she loves and still expect to keep her biological child with her. It's so clear he should be taught by society to hate and fear his mother for having the ability to love who she does.

How dare she expect that, because she gave birth to this child, the law would respect her rights as a parent just as it respects the rights of the parents who wear white hoods and burn crosses.

Well, that clinches it then.

Everyone in this country deserves protection from discrimination. And that includes homosexuals.

But following a 1985 Virginia State Supreme Court decision in a custody case and following the great wisdom that abounds in each area of this country, Buford Parsons decided to remand custody to the grandmother.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

That custody case stated that the father's homosexuality placed an "intolerable burden" on the child.

On the child?

Well, I can see that. Sure. Just as say, being forced to return to an abusive home, or being left alone in a house while your parents go to, oh, let's say Mexico, would put an "intolerable strain" on a child.

But the main difference is that, in most of these other cases, biological families are kept together.

That is, unless you're gay. Then it's open season on the family unit.

But I keep going back to the "intolerable strain" thing.

Just who would it be an intolerable strain on? The child or the society that promotes hatred more easily than it promotes love?

The "intolerable strain" is on a child now, at this very moment, who happens to only be 2 years old. The strain is on his mother, her lover and every other homosexual person in this country.

They have to be wondering just when their children are going to be taken from them on the whim of an ignorant judge. Wondering just when someone will decide that they are "unfit" because of who they love.

To say your sexual orientation makes you a bad parent and a corrupting influence is a lie. It could never be a bad thing to teach tolerance of difference.

One would think that, in a society that protects the rights of certain groups to raise their children to die in a compound in Texas, or the rights of parents who beat the crap out of their children to remain a single family, it would also allow parents to raise a child in an environment of love.

But it doesn't, and it leaves the decision-making to men named Buford, who wonder how the child will grow up knowing the difference between men and women. And that is the "intolerable strain."

Reader appreciates Hart's voice of reason, hopes he continues

Editor,

In response to the column written by John Hart in the Sept. 9 Collegian, I would like to express my gratitude toward him for not being ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, knowing that it is the power of God for salvation to everyone who believes (Romans 1:16).

I have been encouraged by Hart in his ability "to make a defense to everyone who asks (Him) to give an account for the hope that is in (Him), yet with gentleness and reverence" (1 Peter 3:15).

I have been encouraged in the past and would also like to encourage Hart and others like him to "be diligent to present yourself approved to God as a workman who does not need to be ashamed, handling accurately the world of truth. But avoid worldly and empty chatter, for it will lead to further ungodliness" (2 Timothy 2:15-16).

It is important for us to realize the Bible states we will not all accept what it has to say.

"The word of the cross is to those who are perishing foolishness, but to us who are being saved it is the power of God" (1 Cor. 1:18).

I would like to urge Hart to continue to be a voice for Christ at K-State.

Many need to hear of God's love, compassion and mercy.

And as long as His word gets out, He will do with it what he intends: "So shall My word be which goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to me empty, without accomplishing what I desire, and without succeeding in the matter for which I sent it" (Isaiah 55:11).

Cyclist willing to meet pedestrians halfway to avoid collisions

Editor,

I'm writing this letter in response to Susan Hattburg's article on campus cycle regulations.

After reading the article, I saw that once again another facet of "the cycle on the sidewalk" affair went unaddressed — the pedestrians.

Being a cyclist, I ride to each of my classes.

I understand the need for cycle regulations, and I obey them at all times.

You can imagine how maddening it is to have to dodge and slow down for pedestrians on the bike lanes.

I checked with Parking Services concerning this problem and was not surprised to find there are no regulations to stop this.

Therefore, my only recourse is to write this letter and strike a deal with the pedestrians: I'll stay off the sidewalks if you stay off the bike lanes.

Oh, and while I'm at it, please watch out for us bikers on the street.

Hey, we're watching out for you. Thanks.

Triathlon canceled because of flooding

DERYL CUNNINGHAM
Collegian

Because of a production error in Thursday's Collegian this article is being reprinted. The Collegian regrets the error.

The Wildcat Triathlon on Sept. 11 has been canceled because of summer flood waters.

The triathlon is a race that has three events: swimming, biking and running. The swimming event was to be .3 miles, biking 9.9 miles and the final event, running, 3.1 miles.

"We were expecting over 200 entries from all over the country," Alberto Delgado, associate professor in mathematics, said.

Contestants usually range in age from 16-60 years old. Most contestants complete the race between an hour and an hour and 40 minutes.

"It is a good race for people to participate in," he said.

Delgado was in the race six years ago.

"We were really looking forward to it this year," Tracy Anderson, K-State graduate, said.

The Tuttle Creek river pond area and the swimming pond no longer exist because of flooding this summer. The triathalon's events were to take place in these areas.

"We tried looking for an alternate location for the race at CiCo park, but the swim would have been shortened," Anderson said. "The triathlon club was also thinking about changing the race to a biathlon but did not think the event would be as good."

Contestants who entered the race will be refunded any money they had paid, Delgado said.

The Wildcat Triathlon Club was sponsoring the event this year and also sponsored the event last year. In past years, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex sponsored the triathlon.

Delgado said he estimated losses at $500 due to the cancellation.

Losses included money spent for equipment, sanctioning, mailing cost and licensing fee, he said.

"It will be a loss, but hey, next year we will be back," Delgado said.

The United Way of Riley County kicked off its 1993 fund-raising campaign Thursday morning in the K-State Union Ballroom.

Ailleen Cray, executive director United Way of Riley County, announced the theme of the campaign will be "Make the Connection."

"This year we saw the uncontrolled power of nature, and we also saw the power of the human spirit at its best when everyone in this community felt connected to one another," Cray said.

United Way agencies are playing a vital role in ongoing flood-relief efforts in the Manhattan area, she said.

The United Way of Riley County supports 13 local agencies, Cray said. About 99 percent of the donated money is used in Riley county.

"The goal for this year's campaign is to raise $452,000," said Cia Verschelden, chair of United Way coordinating committee.

Another goal for the 1993 campaign is to increase the involvement of K-State faculty and staff in the fund-raising campaign, Verschelden said.

"In the past several years, only about 25 percent of the faculty and staff participated," she said. "We hope to increase that dramatically this year."

K-State student involvement also needs to be improved, said Derek Kreifels, student government association representative for United Way.

Planned fund-raising activities aimed at students include coin drops on each floor of the residence halls and in the fraternities and sororities, Kreifels said.

A table where students can drop off donations will also be set up in the Union on Oct. 4, 5 and 6, he said.

"Our goal is to get every student to contribute at least $1," Kreifels said. "We feel that this is a reasonable goal."

Fire destroys planes at Forbes

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

The K-State Flying Club lost two airplanes in a fire this July, costing an estimated $65,000 to $70,000.

A Cessna 152 and Cessna 172 belonging to the flying club were among 22 other airplanes that were transported from Manhattan Municipal Airport to Topeka's Forbes Field to avoid flooding, said Ed Hill, chief pilot at the Kansas Air Center of Manhattan's airport.

The two Cessnas had been used by club members for flight instruction and private use. The flying club does not receive funds from campus, and insurance companies are covering the loss.

Fourteen of the transported planes, including the Cessnas, were destroyed in a fire at Forbes Field. The hangar where they were stored caught fire during repairs to the roof.

"They were reheating tar to seal the roof. The tar caught on fire and burned through the rafters," said Brian Pitman, senior in mechanical engineering and a member of the K-State Flying Club. "It was an old World War II hangar made out of wood, and it didn't stand a chance.

"Every plane in that hangar was totally destroyed. You couldn't even tell that there had been airplanes in there," he said.

"The whole structure was engulfed in flames. Fuel tanks were exploding. There wasn't anything to do but watch it burn," Hill said.

"Everything melted down. There were about three inches of metal on the floor afterward. Crank cases and engine blocks were the only things you could make out. You could tell where the planes had been by the location of the blocks."

Damage to all 14 airplanes was estimated at $28 million, Hill said.

The flying club has been a part of K-State tradition for almost 40 years.

"The club has been around since the 1950s. K-State is one of the few colleges to have a flying club," Sam Knipp, vice president of the club, said.

"We help teach people how to fly. Students pay the instructors for flight instructions. The club is open to anyone affiliated with K-State — faculty, staff and students. After they become licensed pilots, the students can use the club's planes for private use."

The club currently has about 67 members and four planes. Knipp said they hope to have five planes soon. The flying club has purchased another Cessna 152. The replacement for the Cessna 172 has been difficult to locate because they are no longer made.

Hilltoppers next on Cats' list

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

A win over Western Kentucky for the K-State football team would be all right.

But a victory wouldn't affect the Wildcats' postseason aspirations because Western Kentucky is a Division I-AA program, while K-State is a Division I-A school.

Even though the Cats are a level above the Hilltoppers, Coach Bill Snyder said the defense has to play well against the Hilltoppers' option-offense if K-State is to win.

"It's a good match-up for us," Snyder said of the football game, which starts at 1:10 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium. "Western Kentucky has very prominent skilled players — meaning the three backs, the quarterback and the wide receiver all run well and are capable players.

"They will test our defense's ability to run. They can stretch the field so you have to run from sideline to sideline. This is a good Division I-AA program."

Western Kentucky ranked second in rushing last year with 287 yards a game and gained 224 yards on the ground against No. 8 Division I-AA Eastern Kentucky on Sept. 2.

Snyder said the use of the three running backs is unique.

"When they line-up, they are a three-back option football team that lines up behind the quarterback like a true I-formation," he said. "That's a little different than what we see, and they can do a few things with it. They run a variety of options."

"Their backs are very talented," Leavitt said. "They could play at any Division I-A school."

The offense for the Hilltoppers begins with quarterback Eddie Thompson. Last year, Thompson broke the NCAA single-game rushing record by a quarterback when he ran for 309 yards. Snyder said the defense will try to limit Thompson's ability to run.

"There is a real concern about how to keeping the ball out of Thompson's hands," Snyder said. "They can throw the football or run the option out of that or run the quarterback draw with Thompson, which is a concern to me based on the last snap of the first half against New Mexico State.

"He is very talented and has a lot of quickness," he said. "He is like a waterbug. Our players have to stay with him, or they will miss him."

Snyder said another concern is the play-action pass the Hilltoppers use.

"What is frightening about any option football team is that it makes a player stay in a certain place in order to cover his responsibilities," he said. "A player can be lulled into that responsibility until what looks like an option becomes a play-action pass, and your guy that should be covering the pass is covering his responsibility."

While K-State is concerned about the option offense, Western Kentucky coach Jack Harbaugh said he is thinking about the physical size and the number of players K-State will use Saturday.

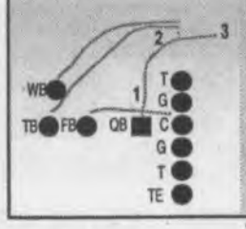
"We're going to be outmanned and outsized," said Harbaugh, whose school hasn't won a game against a Division I-A school in nine tries. "But our young men played with a lot of heart and character at Eastern last week. I expect that kind of effort again, regardless of the competition.

"It'll be a difficult chore to win this game, but I believe our players will be there giving it everything they've got for all 60 minutes."

Snyder said people should not think this will be an easy win.

"This is a team that we should beat," he said, "but that is what we said against Indiana State. (K-State won that game on William Price's defensive extra-point interception that was returned 102 yards to give the Cats a 26-25 win).

"We can't take things for granted."



OPTION OFFENSE

K-State's defense will face Western Kentucky's offensive option package tomorrow.

Option 1: Quarterback hands off to fullback.

Option 2: Quarterback tosses to tailback while wingback blocks for tailback.

Option 3: Quarterback keeps the ball.

Track facilities should reflect program

BOB LEHMAN

Last weekend, most of us Wildcat football fans got our first look at the new press box and indoor practice facility.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics financed these projects by initiating a large scale fund-raising drive. The results are quite impressive and should serve as an excellent foundation to propel K-State football into the big-time.

There was another price that had to be paid, though. That price being the sacrifice of R.V. Christian track.

Historically, R.V. Christian has not been in good condition. Problems such as disoriented throwing rings, shoddy tartan surfacing in the javelin and high-jump areas, and a lack of permanent screening in the discus area have made for a lousy and dangerous situation. The construction process, though, has made things worse.

Now, in addition to all its other problems, the oval has a "missing" 10-yard section in a turn; the infield grass is torn up, and the shot-put pit is a patch of weeds.

These are hardly the conditions one would expect to see at a Division 1-A university that consistently produces Big Eight champions, national champions and all-Americans.

Several of these conditions are emergency situations and are going to be taken care of within the next couple of weeks, track coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Most of the shoddy tartan has been removed and is waiting to be replaced, as is the large missing section of the oval. The entire track also is going to receive a face-lift in the form of a fresh coat of specialized paint and re-marking (the present markings are incorrect and have been since at least 1985). There is also a new long, triple jump pit already constructed.

These repairs improve the situation to the point where our track team can practice and have meets without the worry of putting athletes in a dangerous situation. There is still much room for improvement, though.

I fully understand the benefits a successful football program can bring to a university. The program here is speeding down the runway, and its landing gear is leaving the ground, but it will be several years before K-State football is established in the big-time.

In large part, K-State track is already big-time. The track facilities should reflect the success that our track program has had. They have earned the right to be financially supported to maintain the quality they have worked so hard to achieve.

So I ask the question: If our athletic department can raise funds in excess of $5 million to help get a budding sport off the ground and into the big-time, shouldn't they be able to raise considerably less money to help maintain a sport that is already there?

I think so.

This season figures to be an exciting one for K-State golf, if last year was any indication.

Last year, the men's team qualified for the NCAA central regional for the first time in the team's history, while the women have a roster loaded with experience.

She will team with senior Denise Pottle to lead an experienced group of golfers — a group which has an upper division finish in the Big Eight championship as its goal, golf coach Mark Elliott said.

"We're going into this season with pretty much the same people as last year," Elliott said. "But this year, I think we are a little stronger. Last year, we were up and down, but I expect this year's team to be more consistent."

The women's team will have an opportunity to showcase that consistency this weekend at the Diet Coke Invitational at New Mexico State. Pottle said she believes a good performance there could set the tone for a successful season.

"Last year, we were up and down, but I expect this year's team to be more consistent."
MARK ELLIOTT
GOLF COACH

"It would be good for us to get off on the right foot this weekend," Pottle said. "A good performance at the invitational would definitely be a confidence booster for the rest of the season."

The early challenge for the men will be replacing top players from a year ago, Richard Laing and Jim Brenneman. Their scores will be missed, but more importantly, so will the leadership qualities that they demonstrated, Elliot said.

"I think we can replace their scores," he said. "But we need to replace their leadership and consistency."

The two players expected to replace them are Brett Waldman and Chad Judd.

Waldman spent last year in the third position behind Laing and Brenneman and has the ability to shoot in the mid-60s.

Last season, Waldman won the Iowa State Invitational with a two-round score of 143.

Judd saw action in both the Big Eight championship and the NCAA central regional. He said he recognizes his responsibility as a senior to be a leader.

"My attitude on the golf course is a lot better," Judd said.

"I'm more steady and mature out there knowing that the younger guys are looking up to me and depending on me to shoot low scores."

The three seniors — Sean Robertson, Will Siebert and Judd — will also be expected to contribute since they all saw post-season action either in the Big-Eight championship or in the NCAA central regional.

Other home games include UNLV, Sept. 25, Kansas, Oct. 9; Colorado, Oct. 23, Oklahoma, Oct. 30 and Missouri, Nov. 13.

▶MORRISON-BENT BOUT NEXT MONTH

The fight was organized only after the Tulsa Oilers of the fledgling Central Hockey League agreed to give up the city's 9,000-seat convention center for their season opener, promoters said Thursday.

Morrison (38-1) is guaranteed $1.5 million, his biggest purse. Bent (10-1), a former Golden Gloves champion from Queens, N.Y., will earn $135,000.

"I've always felt a closeness and a warmness to the Oklahoma people," said Morrison, who grew up in Jay, about 70 miles east of Tulsa. "I've always wanted to come back here and give the people an opportunity to see what I'm all about."

Professors impressed by self-motivation

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Although students may know who their professors are, chances are their professors can hardly distinguish one student out of the hundreds they deal with.

So, what makes a striking impression?

"I am impressed with somebody that takes responsibility for their own learning," Debra Duncan, graduate teaching assistant of Sexuality & Health, said.

"I like students who have a balance to their life. A person who isn't totally into their books or into their social life," Duncan said. "I like to see a strong balance."

Duncan said she also enjoys seeing personal gains in her students.

"It's always a real buzz if you can see that you've contributed to someone having real growth in their life," she said. "Students will learn a lot more if they take interest in how the knowledge will apply to their own life."

Other professors said they are impressed by different student qualities.

David Procter, associate professor of speech and interim head of the speech department, said a student who shows eye contact with the professor and other students is most likely a successful student.

"Sometimes, first impressions are deceiving. This can be based on how they dress or where they sit in the class," he said. "The nice thing about my classes is that I get to know my students. And I'm later surprised that someone I thought wasn't serious really is committed to the class."

Kissing up to the teacher does not impress Procter, he said.

"I had a student one time, in the middle of class, suggest that all of the articles I have published should be required reading. That was pretty bad," Procter said.

Other student attributes do not impress professors.

"Students can fall out of my good grace by consistently violating rules of the classroom, such as they don't come to class, they aren't prepared, they miss tests and quizzes, or they're rude," Procter said.

"We have students who are in debate, theater or speech. They break one of these rules. Later, they realize they need to get back into the good grace of the professor. So, they start being in class, being prepared, and they take a lead in the class lectures," he said.

Dr. Alan Brightman, professor of veterinary medicine, said he has found his most successful students are self-motivated.

"I see a student as successful if they are actively seeking out the knowledge of the subject. They aren't just doing the minimum to get by," Brightman said.

"Any type of dishonesty immediately gets a student on my bad side. The only way to get back is for them is to confront the problem and remedy the situation. But, they don't get too many chances with this guy," Brightman said.

Brightman said he likes students to say what is really on their minds.

"Disagreement is the root of academic discussion," Brightman said.

"The best way for any student to get off to a good start is with an enthusiastic approach to the subject," he said.

SHOOTING

Violence shocks future teachers

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

A recent shooting in the Junction City High School cafeteria reminded many education majors of the violence creeping into high-school classrooms.

"I guess it scares me to think as a future teacher that a student could confront me with a gun," Shea McKee, junior in elementary education, said. "Schools have been seen as an extension of the home, and if schools aren't safe anymore, where are kids going to find security?"

"My initial reaction was fear as a teacher and apprehension. You're always like, Do I want to go into this field realizing I'm going to have a challenging job to get past the discipline problems so my students can learn?" McGee said.

Denis Payne, junior in secondary education and history, said he feels the current and future teachers need to be better educated about gangs and violence.

"It scares me what schools are going to," Payne said. "They (K-State) need to cover it (violence) and have an awareness class and educate current teachers."

Scott Phillips, senior in secondary education, said because of what he has learned about violence in the classroom, he was not surprised to hear about the shooting, although it was shocking because it occurred so close to Manhattan.

Phillips said he's ready to face the challenges that await him.

"When I get closer and closer to actually being throttled into my career instead of just learning about it in a classroom, it actually makes me excited because of the challenge or challenges, one of which is violence," Phillips said.

Phillips is debating whether he wants to teach in an inner-city school, where violence is more likely to take place.

"I've considered it. Right now I'm kind of iffy. You never think it's going to actually happen in your classroom," he said.

Because of the violence teachers are facing, some students questioned whether teaching was the career for them.

"I considered it (not becoming a teacher), but I feel we need good teachers in there to tackle the hard problems," McGee said. "It's going to be hard to make sure that my classroom is a positive learning experience."

Finney attends first day of conference

BOB FLEENER

Gov. Joan Finney was at K-State for a conference Thursday, less than a week after announcing she would not seek re-election.

Finney, who made the announcement last Friday, attended the first day of the Governor's Conference on Waste Reduction and Market Development for Kansas.

She said she appreciated K-State and the Manhattan community's efforts toward waste reduction.

"If you have not seen this campus, take a look around," President Jon Wefald said in his introduction of Finney.

"It is as clean if not cleaner than Disney World. We take great pride in that there is no graffiti and trash. We have six to seven people, and that's their job, to look for trash all day," Wefald said.

Finney said she appreciated the resources that K-State has to offer.

"Kansas State University is neat in many ways," Finney said. "In the 16 months ahead, I intend to take advantage of the intellectual resources offered by Kansas State University.

"Many industries in the state have taken the lead and are producing products made from post-consumer waste. Leadership in this area now will maintain the quality of life for Kansans in the future," Finney said.

Finney presented two awards for "The Great Aluminum Can Roundup Scout Council Challenge" to the Konza Boy Scout Council and the Jayhawk Area Council's Cub Scout Pack 93 during the conference.

Finney said this commitment to reducing waste has attracted attention from national businesses.

"Wal-Mart chose Kansas as the pioneer project for their recycled asphalt parking lots and their recycled plastic signs," she said.

Secretary of the Kansas Department of Commerce and Housing Bob Knight emphasized the importance of solid waste management. He spoke about his experience in waste management as the mayor of Wichita.

"Wichita produced 600,000 tons of trash a year," Knight said. "That works out to about seven to eight pounds per person, per day. You extend this out, and you know the significance."

SPACECRAFT

Engineers make light of Mars Observer debacle

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PASADENA, Calif. — A milk carton taped to a wall in the Mars Observer mission office has a picture of the vanished spacecraft instead of a missing child ad. The caption reads: "Have You Seen Me?"

Three weeks after Mars Observer disappeared, engineers with humor and hope — as well as determination and new computer commands — still are struggling to save the $980 million mission, even though NASA's management is investigating its apparent demise.

"They're doing an autopsy, and we think possibly the victim is still kicking," said Leigh Torgerson, deputy chief of the spacecraft team. "You don't quit doing CPR until the doctor shows up and tells you the patient is flatlined."

Controllers lost touch with Mars Observer on Aug. 21, only three days before the spacecraft was supposed to fire its thrusters, enter Martian orbit and start the first U.S. exploration of the Red Planet in 17 years. The spacecraft, launched from Florida last year, remained silent Thursday.

Gloom has descended on NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, where Mars Observer workers are suffering the disappearance of a decade's work, face some layoffs and feel anxiety and exhaustion. Colleagues constantly approach them to offer support.

"It's sort of like you lost somebody in your family — the condolences you get," Suzanne Dodd, chief of the mission planning team, said.

Nevertheless, Mars Observer offices are adorned with editorial cartoons lampooning the spacecraft's troubles. Workers recount the latest jokes from David Letterman, who this week quipped that NASA was launching a bloodhound with a jetpack to hunt down Mars Observer.

"If you take it too seriously, you'd be so depressed you'd be in bad mental state," Dodd said. "Humor helps relieve the tension."

Mars Observer's disappearance has revived criticism of NASA and renewed emphasis on the agency's failures.

"The thing that's bothered me most is that some people have given up hope — NASA, JPL management and the public," said mission manager Sam Dallas.

Dallas and other engineers insist real hope exists that Mars Observer didn't suffer an irreversible failure, but instead was silenced by a malfunction that might be fixed by radioing new computer command.

PLO, Israel end decades of war with agreements

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUNIS, Tunisia — The PLO and Israel have reached agreement on mutual recognition, ending decades of official hostility and providing the first major achievement in the Middle East peace process.

Officials on both sides said Israel and the PLO had reached accord on a final draft of a mutual recognition document.

An Israeli government official in Jerusalem said the accord could be initialed tonight.

Mutual recognition would clear the way for the signing of a peace plan that would give autonomy to Palestinians in the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho.

That could eventually lead to a more comprehensive autonomy agreement.

"We have reached an agreement in Paris today," PLO official Hassan Asfour, who helped negotiate the accord, said in a telephone interview with the Associated Press in Jerusalem.

He said unspecified steps still had to be taken before the two sides formally announced the agreement.

Asfour is a close aide to Mahmoud Abbas, or Abu Mazen, the No. 2 official in the Palestine Liberation Organization after Yasser Arafat.

The Israeli official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Norway's foreign minister, Johan Joergen Holst, was en route to Tunis from Paris with the final version of the document.

The official said the next step was for the two sides to sign the agreement, perhaps in Tunis and Jerusalem tonight.

But he said there was a possibility that Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Israel would wait to present the document to his Cabinet for formal approval on Sunday.

In Tunis, a senior PLO official said on condition of anonymity that a final sticking point was ironed out in telephone calls to Paris, where the Norwegians had PLO officials in Tunis and Israeli officials in Jerusalem on separate telephone lines at the same time.

Arafat and two other top PLO officials participated in the telephone negotiations from Tunis.

The PLO's ruling Executive Committee discussed the plan for 4-1/2 hours earlier Thursday, and Arafat appeared to have the necessary majority approval from nine of the 13 committee members present.

Cat Jam '93 to rock Triangle Park

FRANK SERENO

At 3 p.m. Saturday, Triangle Park will transform from a relaxed getaway into a groovin' party.

Cat Jam '93, sponsored by KSDB-FM 91.9 and Varney's Book Store, will be a four-hour Aggieville concert aimed at promoting K-State.

"It's going to be an afternoon of fun," Judd Annis, Cat Jam '93 event coordinator, said.

"Because the concert is free, we expect a record attendance," Annis said.

The fourth annual event will feature four regional groups performing about an hour each: Sufferbus, AZ-1, Brother Jeb Bolan and Baghdad Jones.

CAT JAM '93
WHEN: Saturday Sept. 11, 3 p.m.
WHERE: Triangle Park
COST: Free

Manhattan's Sufferbus will bring their own style of alternative rock, while AZ-1 will perform reggae. Baghdad Jones will cover the rhythm-and-blues spectrum, and Brother Jeb Bolan will enlighten and entertain between sets with classic folk-rock.

Annis said the style of bands represented at Cat Jam '93 is a strong feature.

"We do it because the station, itself, is diverse," he said.

Joe Montgomery, DB92 Station Manager, said the diversity of Cat Jam '93 will provide an opportunity for mass appeal.

"That way, you don't shut out people who might like other kinds of music," Montgomery said.

DB92 will also be giving away T-shirts, bumper stickers, tapes and compact discs.

Gourmands in search of new BBQ restaurant

Dear Cassandra,

Recently, a friend and I experienced one of the worst tragedies a person can imagine. For years we have been enjoying the culinary delights of our favorite artery-clogging, sauce-up-to-your-elbows, eat-until-you-bloat, then-eat-a-little-more BBQ restaurant.

Of course I'm referring to the local BBQ shrine known as Corky's Smokehouse. Their philosophy was simple: "Make a lot of good BBQ and let them eat as much as they want."

Now for unknown reasons, Corky's is gone.

We are desperately searching for a place to fill the void in our hearts and stomachs. We have tried the usual Manhattan eateries, but none have measured up.

Cassandra, you of all people will know what we mean.

Please help us before our cholesterol level falls!!

Signed,
Hogs in search of a trough

Dear Trough-seekers,

Geez! Your letter was even dripping with grease.

I can see your woeful eyes now, and I'm terribly sorry. Corky's will sorely be missed by over-indulgers everywhere in Northeast Kansas. Have you tried the Lone Star Cafe? (I guess it's the Texas Star Cafe now.) Last Chance? Chubby's Bar BQ or the Hickory Inn Bar BQ — both in Junction City?

If those places aren't up to par, then I suggest going to Food-4-Less and just buying lard in the institutional size barrels. That should tide you over until you kick the bucket next Tuesday.

Brannen's music genuine

Country album features original approach

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Singer and songwriter John Brannen is sailing into the open, uncharted waters of country music.

With the release of his self-titled, debut album on Mercury records, Brannen is trying to break new ground.

His video "Moonlight and Magnolias" has been on VH-1 and the Nashville Network, and a new dance-version of "Lonesome Side of Midnight" will be released soon.

However, Brannen said he doesn't feel his mission in life has been achieved.

"I want to reach as many people as possible to share my music with them," he said. "It's the study of life with my fellow man."

Brannen said he enjoys the crowd as much as they enjoy him.

"If I can move them with emotions, (the audience) can share something with me," he said. "The audience is a two-way thing. They are the show for me."

In a recent interview, Brannen talked about his new album, his live shows and the reason he continues to make music.

"The songwriting of music in country is the real thing," he said. "I feel I've had so much life experience."

Raised in Charleston, S.C., Brannen was influenced by several forms of music: gospel, country, blues and rock 'n' roll.

He said his spirit for adventure took him to Hawaii and the Caribbean, but eventually his hometown drew him back. Brannen said he then first heard Waylon Jennings.

Brannen said Jennings became an important influence because of his honest approach to songwriting.

He said sincerity is crucial in his songwriting.

"Honesty, to me, is so important," he said.

Natural songwriting comes easily to Brannen. Yet, he said his music tends to be as genuine and good as possible.

Since the music is original, he said, it makes the songwriting process slower.

He said that's what makes him stand apart from other country musicians.

"I kind of always am writing. It may take a few weeks, but it's an ongoing process," Brannen said. "As a singer, I've always been different. It has to be a very genuine thing, or I would lose respect for myself."

JOHN BRANNEN

As original as he may be, critics continue to compare and relate his brand of music to other musicians.

Brannen said he is trying to make his new music as good as he can.

"When people try to compare, I usually have respect for the musicians they choose," he said. "It's complimentary and flattering.

"I think the best part of the the album is that it takes the best of the old and the new."

'Cliffhanger' captivates audience with action, suspense

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

Blood, sweat and fear characterize almost any film starring Sylvester Stallone. But "Cliffhanger" is not just any Sly Stallone flick.

It's naturally an action-packed adventure about a resilient hero whose efforts to save those in trouble and himself produce a gory, bloody, violent film. In addition, "Cliffhanger" is entertaining.

Stallone plays Gabe Walker, a professional mountain climber who alienates himself from the sport and his friends after he loses his best friend's girlfriend in a climbing accident. However, he returns to his friends after a lengthy absence and reluctantly becomes involved in a dangerous "rescue" mission.

The mission turns disastrous for Gabe and the rest of the Rocky Mountain Rescue team. The innocent victims turn out to be skyjacking terrorists whose unsuccessful attempt to transport $100 million to their plane leaves them in a bit of a bind. There are three cases of money scattered somewhere throughout the mountains.

Luckily for the terrorists, the regional rescuers will make fine captives who can help with the search. Certainly, their familiarity with the treacherous terrain can be put to use.

SHOW TIMES
■ "Cliffhanger" is showing at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. today and Saturday in the K-State Union Forum Hall. Tickets are $1.75 with a student ID.

"Cliffhanger" is a showcase for sweeping cinematography and well-directed action scenes. The sound and visual effects are magnificently powerful. The stunts are terrifying, and they are sure to amaze even the most cynical of viewers.

John Lithgow and Janine Turner also star. Lithgow plays ruthless terrorist Eric Qualen. In a very satisfying performance, Lithgow craftily manages to exude an air of confident tranquility while still maintaining potential to become wicked.

Turner, as well, does a fine job. Her charm and performing talent make the transition from television's "Northern Exposure" to the big screen smooth and welcome.

The villains in the film are decidedly sinister, devious and wicked. The heroes are very moral and compassionate.

This is not a complicated cast of characters. In fact, it is a very dichotomous group. Yet "Cliffhanger" has an ambitious intensity about it. The storyline is somewhat predictable, and, as in most action films, the ending finale promotes a cheer or two for the main character in combat. Even with its flaws, however, "Cliffhanger" never loses its edge.

Planet Party comes to the Sandstone stage

Alternative music festival features 5 bands

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

Call it a mini-Lollapalooza.

The Planet Party will end its two-show tour Sunday night at the New Sandstone Amphitheatre in Kansas City.

The Planet Party, an alternative five-artist musical barrage, is targeted to those with a broad spectrum of tastes for the alternative sound.

The concert, which begins at 5 p.m., will feature the two-man band They Might Be Giants, the back-to-roots rock 'n' roll of Dramarama, the pop alchemy of Matthew Sweet and the Dublin sound of Hothouse Flowers.

Australian band Midnight Oil will be the headliner for the lineup, which has a bit of something for everyone.

New West productions in Kansas City came up with the idea for this musical compilation. Steve Mills of New West said the Planet Party concert is following a concept which is recently becoming popular again. The idea, he said, is to put together a group of bands which appeal to a specific musical taste while still retaining a variation in the sound between the bands.

"The Planet Party is specifically tailored to appeal to those with alternative musical tastes, and the broad lineup is sure to deliver," Mills said.

PLANET PARTY
TIME: Sunday Sept. 12, 5 p.m.
PLACE: Sandstone Ampitheatre, Kansas City, KS.
COST: Lawn tickets $10.95
Reserved seats $12.95
PERFORMING BANDS: Midnight Oil
They Might Be Giants
Dramarama
Matthew Sweet
Hothouse Flowers

Mills said the concert will be a rare musical opportunity because many bands in the Planet Party lineup don't have a large enough following in the area to play at a place like Sandstone.

Mills also said that, because of Sandstone's newly designed sound system, people on the lawn will be able to enjoy the concert as much as those in the seats.

Tickets for the lawn cost $10.95, and reserved seats start at $12.95. Tickets are available through Ticketmaster or at the front gate.

The Planet Party's other performance will take place at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Riverpoint in St. Louis.

Broken pump closes 8-lane pool

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Swimmers at the Natatorium are doing their daily laps in a smaller pool than usual. The large eight-lane pool has been closed for repairs since early August.

Contractors are in the process of replacing a filter tank, said Raydon Robel, director of recreational services.

The pool repairs were scheduled to be completed by the time the students returned for the fall semester, he said.

The delay in fixing the eight-lane pool is due to a missing part for a water pump.

"The part has been ordered, and we hope that it will get here soon," Robel said.

Swimmers can still get some exercise because the two other pools in the Natatorium, the six-lane and the diving pool, are still open for swimming as usual, he said.

"I've been surprised the pool hasn't been as crowded as I thought it would be," Philip Kirmser, professor emeritus in civil engineering, said.

"I think that many people quit coming," he said. "If the normal crowd came, it would be impossible to swim."

Kirmser is a member of a group of regular swimmers who call themselves the "golden pond group." They swim at the Natatorium at least five times a week.

"We are all disappointed that it is taking so long to fix the pool," he said.

Normally, all three pools are drained each August for inspection, cleaning, and repairs, Robel said.

This year, in addition to replacing the filter tank, the chemical storage room was moved, and several other changes were made at the recommendation of a safety consultant, he said.

"These pools are about 20 years old," Robel said. "It was time for these changes to be made."

Without the eight-lane pool, the intramural swim meet, scheduled for Sept. 13, 14, and 16, could be seriously affected, said Steve Martini, intramural activities director.

Approximately 500 people are expected to compete in the event, he said.

"We're still hoping for the part to be here by Monday," Martini said. "If it doesn't arrive, the swim meet will be quite a bit different."

If necessary, the meet will be switched to the six-lane pool, he said.

"There will be tighter quarters all around if we have to switch," Martini said. "Obviously there will be two fewer lanes available, and there are no starting blocks on the six-lane pool so swimmers will have to start from the side."

Spectators will also have to be in a smaller area that is further away from the action, Martini said.

Administrating the event will also be more difficult for the organizers because of reduced space, he said.

"Our patrons' frustrations about the pool being closed are no greater than our own," Robel said.

MUSIC

Elevator-style covers hasten grunge's death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Daniel House says it's time for grunge rock to die.

He's sick of seeing New York designers rip off the working-class boots and flannel affected by pioneer Seattle grunge musicians. He's sick of reading and hearing about grunge and running into people who think the only music coming out of Seattle is low, loud and raw.

"It's time to nail the final nail in the coffin," the head of C/Z Records said, touting the new C/Z release, "Grunge Lite," a collection of Muzak-style covers of popular grunge songs.

"If this doesn't formally end the phenomenon, then nothing will," House said.

The release is mainly for fun. That's what they still have at C/Z, where the staff works in T-shirts and jeans on desks plastered with band stickers and such pronouncements as "I Hate Your Band," and "I Buy Music for Minors."

House, who with his nearly buzzed hair, shorts and blue sneakers looks like he could be getting ready to go onstage with his former band, Skin Yard, runs a loose but extremely busy shop.

The label, which 2-1/2 years ago consisted of House and a one-person staff using one computer, one phone and a fax machine, now has 10 employees, six computers on a network and two or three releases each month. The label still signs mostly northwest bands, but is now considering bands in New York, Chicago and San Francisco, House said.

"We'd like to think we're cementing a solid place for ourselves in indie (independent music label) America," House said. "We're getting respect from a lot of people out there in the scene."

The label had its beginnings in 1986, with a release called "Deep Six," featuring the first recordings by Skin Yard, Green River, The Melvins, Malfunkshun and Soundgarden.

CAN YOU help? I am a sophomore veterinary student, who just lost a mortgage application decision (simply because I moved here from out of state). I also have three dogs (each less than 15 pounds) who are now out of a home. The four of us desperately need a place to live together. If you can be of assistance in providing or recommending a place for us to live in the Manhattan area, please call Jim Laessig at 539-4247. The important thing is living with my dogs, if possible; so where and/ or with whom I live is relatively unimportant.

COME FLY with us, K-State Flying Club has four airplanes. For best prices call Sam Knipp, 539-6193 after 5:30p.m.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Bug spray hospitalizes children

Children fall ill after termite extermination

KIM DILLON
Collegian

Three children were overcome by pesticide fumes Thursday afternoon at K-State's Hoeflin Stone House, a childcare center.

Due to a miscommunication, the center was being spot-sprayed for termites while the children were still on the premises, campus officials said.

An area in the basement near the air exchange was part of the area sprayed that appeared to cause the problems.

Workers requested the spraying when they found live termites in the kitchen Thursday morning. The center had been sprayed once during the weekend, Randy Slover, director of facilities maintenance, said.

Galen Hageman, carpenter shop supervisor, said he informed University officials that the kitchen needed spraying when his crew found the termites.

He also said he told them they needed to set up a proper time to do the spraying.

The three children were apparently sleeping near an air vent which was circulating the pesticide.

The children later started showing symptoms such as vomiting, diarrhea and headaches, said Steven Galitzer, industrial hygienist for K-State's Department of Public Safety.

Two of the children in the center were taken to local hospitals, said John Murray, head of the Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

"The physicians think they should be fine by morning," Murray said.

Children not already showing symptoms are unlikely to develop them, Murray said.

The doctors said there should be no long-term effects,but he does need to watched for the next 12 to 24 hours, Hageman said.

Spraying is not normally done when people are in the building, Galitzer said.

About 1 p.m., spot-spraying was done in the basement and in the center's kitchen, which is being renovated due to extensive termite damage, Galitzer said.

The damage was found last week, and it was determined the floor, walls and the stairway in the kitchen would have to be torn out. Facilities maintenance and the employees of the center have blocked the entrance to the kitchen so the center can continue functioning.

The pesticide used was Dursban, an organophosphate pesticide that is short-lived. It inhibits the enzyme in the bloodstream that breaks down the neurotransmitters that control responses, Galitzer said.

Galitzer said all of the parents were called.

The center will be aired out as much as possible before children arrive Friday, and there should be no problems with fumes.

"What we have is an unfortunate accident," Galitzer said.

Fallfest falls FLAT

Concert keeps within tradition of dismal attendance

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

The Welcome Back Concerts have traditionally been sparsely attended and featured headline performers that fail to entertain.

FallFest '93, which replaced the Welcome Back series this year, proved true to this tradition Saturday afternoon.

In addition to giving the concert a new name, the K-

REVIEW

State Union Program Council moved the event from the Old Stadium to the Recreation Complex west lawns. What used to be strictly music was expanded into a mini-festival, featuring two bands, a speaker and a comedian.

Truck Stop Love opened the show with a 50-minute set featuring almost all new material. Afterwards, Ron Alexander entertained the dwindling crowd with some group games. Omaha's The Fishheads closed the show, with comedian David Naster entertaining the crowd between sets.

The change in venue and moniker still was not enough. This festival was confused about its identity. A grunge band welded with silly games, a comedian and a headlining cover band just was too bizarre.

Proving themselves to be the only good thing FallFest had going, Truck Stop Love managed to bash out new material, including songs from their first album, which is to be released Tuesday.

Though an incredible band, TSL was just out of place in the barbecue atmosphere. Truck Stop is a band to be savored in some dark bar, not used as a backdrop to burgers and potato chips. The strange atmosphere did not stop the band's faithful fans, who still danced and sang along, unaffected.

The other musical act featured was an Omaha-based band, The Fishheads. They failed to distinguish themselves from the lame acts of Welcome Back Concerts past such as an almost comatose Billy Squire and a soulless Dread Zeppelin.

Fresh from playing before troops stationed in Saudi Arabia, The Fishheads' vocalist R.J. Hadley claimed the band's music to be "Island Party Alternative." Unfortunately, the band's music could only be described as cheesy covers. The Fishheads simply failed to deliver anything more artistic than a Holiday Inn lounge band could.

Concern must be expressed for the future of such concerts. Low attendance and mediocre performances from headliners appear to have been the rule for the Welcome Back/FallFest series. UPC could better use its resources on an event that the entire campus would attend.

Conference discusses waste, energy

Recycling goal to reduce landfill accumulations

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Concerns about recycling and the environment brought 320 business representatives, government officials and concerned citizens to the third annual Governor's Conference on Waste Reduction, Recycling and Market Development for Kansas.

Kevin Carr, a representative of the Kansas Technology Enterprise Corp., focused on the growth of manufacturing.

The goals of KTEC are to stimulate new product development and promote technical education, Carr said.

KTEC is working on projects to promote efficiency in industries.

Teresa Hodge, from the pollution prevention office in Topeka, said she wanted to hear about the new innovations of KTEC and how businesses and the environment can grow together.

Re-using and recycling plastic products was a concern for those in attendance.

"We need more finished products," Warren Manner of Knotwood Plastics Production said. "Once there is more demand, the landfill problem will improve."

"In January the EPA will launch a campaign called Waste Wise to initiate the re-use and recycling of office waste among major companies," Dickinson said.

Dickinson said the EPA has dedicated itself to making 100-percent recycled paper purchases by the end of 1995.

Representatives of the Solid Waste Association of North America spoke about plans for controlling solid waste problems.

SWANA operates on grants to offer numerous training programs about waste screening and ground-water monitoring, Eileen Crowe, manager of chapter programs, said.

Crowe said they also plan to have specific conferences on recycling waste to energy.

Emily Moore, director of the Environmental Defense Fund's Public Service Department, talked about the importance of educating people about recycling.

Moore described advertisements the EDF and the Ad Council had released to the media, including magazine and TV ads with the slogan, "If you're not recycling, you're throwing it all away."

"We are trying to make our solutions based on economics," Moore said.

Other speakers at the two-day conference addressed financing environmental projects, landfill programs and environmental education directed toward children.

"The conference has improved greatly," Dell said. "Attendance has improved, and the quality of exhibitions is extremely better."

Campus recycling profits with cans

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Editor's note: This is the first in a two-part series about recycling. Today's story focuses on campus recycling efforts.

Al Seely, manager of campus Custodial Services, said there are presently eight drop-off sites on campus that take newsprint, bond paper, computer paper and aluminum.

Aluminum is the only recycled item that provides revenue for the campus. All other items are an expense, Seely said.

"K-State could increase revenue of recycled goods if individual departments didn't have their own aluminum-recycling programs," Seely said.

Harv Dahl, director of Printing Services, said recycling costs more then the products can generate in revenue.

"I'd like to see a good recycling program at the University, but it's expensive, and who is going to pay for it?" Dahl said.

Recycling is no longer about trees, Dahl said. Paper mills plant more trees then they use. Recycling is about reducing the landfills, he said.

Last year, 115,942 pounds of material was recycled at the drop-off sites on campus. The net loss was $7,562.71 for the year.

RECYCLING

Ackert Hall	Nichols Hall
Anderson Hall	Seaton Hall
Bluemont Hall	Umberger Hall
Cardwell Hall	Willard Hall

"We've continued to lose money," Seely said.

K-State gets paid by the pound for aluminum products. Recycled items are transported to Howie's Recycling, 626 South 10th St.

Wagoner said there should be a place on campus where paper printed on one side can be taken for use as scratch paper for students.

A system of piling and storing paper and arranging for companies to transport the paper to be recycled is a possible solution to the recycling problem on campus, Wagoner said.

"It's what's good for the Earth and world," Wagoner said. "If we recycle, we're not using as much natural resources."

An average of 250,000 8-1/2 by 11 inch sheets of paper a month are recycled through the duplication center alone, Wagoner said.

K-State-Salina aviation gets $7.7 million grant

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

K-State–Salina has received a much-anticipated $7.7 million grant for its aeronautics department.

The aeronautic department did not receive the grant without a struggle.

The grant was part of a 1992 $270-billion defense bill that received some congressional opposition. Congress eventually approved the bill, but the grant was down-sized by the Department of Defense. The department had been trying to eliminate the grant and others like it. However, on March 31, the Defense Department approved the entire grant.

"The grant had been approved by Congress three times before it made it. It's been a long, hard road, almost three years," Barnard said.

About $5.2 million of the grant is going toward plane purchases, Ken Barnard, head of the aeronautics department, said.

"We have 30 planes currently and will be adding about 25 planes," Barnard said.

About 10 to 12 used planes and 11 new planes will be bought from Beech Aircraft Corporation, including two Beech Barons that will be delivered within the next few weeks. The rest of the planes should arrive by December.

"We have 30 planes currently and will be adding about 25 planes."

KEN BARNARD
HEAD OF THE AERONAUTICS DEPARTMENT

The remainder of the funds are being used to purchase new equipment such as flight simulators, avionics stations, turbine engines, electronic equipment and computers.

"We're dedicating money to the new technology program to be used for a composite lab and a non-destructive test lab," Barnard said.

Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, said equipment has been purchased to help strengthen all three areas of the aeronautics

Housing Secretary endorses Clinton plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration's plan to fix what's broken in U.S. government has its first happy endorser in Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros, who runs perhaps the most broken of all federal agencies.

Cisneros has spent his year trying to pull the Department of Housing and Urban Development out of a bureaucratic sinkhole that seems to widen with each tug toward progress on behalf of America's suffering inner cities.

Enter the Clinton White House and its plan to revamp government, based on suggestions from Vice President Gore — just what Cisneros needs.

One of Gore's suggestion for HUD would free local managers to run public housing projects as they see fit. Another would erase HUD's regional offices and funnel their powers to the front lines. A third would allow tenants who receive federal rent aid to choose where they want to live.

Peace in Bosnia would require U.S. forces

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — U.S. military planners believe that roughly 50,000 peacekeepers would be needed to implement a possible Bosnia peace accord, and about half the troops would be American, Defense Secretary Les Aspin said Sunday.

In remarks at a defense conference in Brussels, Aspin said that no final decisions had been made and he predicted it would be hard to get Congress to approve U.S. participation if the allies didn't contribute at least half the force.

President Clinton sounded a cautionary note in an interview published in Monday editions of The Washington Post. Should American troops be deployed to Bosnia, he said, he thinks there ought to be a limit as to how long the U.S. or anyone else would be there before someone else comes forward to take over the peacekeeping duties.

Aspin's comments were the most specific to date on the size and makeup of a U.N.-sanctioned multinational force that might be asked to enforce an accord in Bosnia.

He at first said it was too sensitive to discuss in public when asked about planning for implementing a possible peace agreement that would divide Bosnia among the Croats, Serbs and Muslims.

Aspin said President Clinton was not ready to officially commit the United States to participating in a Bosnia peacekeeping force.

PLO-Israel pact causes fighting in Israel

GAZA CITY, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — Three Israeli soldiers were killed in an ambush Sunday, and Muslim militants claimed responsibility, saying it was a gift for Yasser Arafat, the peace accord and all the traitors.

In the Rafah refugee camp, a member of an anti-Arafat Palestinian group was killed when a grenade he was carrying in his hand exploded as he was fleeing from soldiers, Israeli and Arab sources said. Two Palestinian bystanders were wounded.

In southern Lebanon, a roadside bomb exploded Sunday as an Israeli army unit patrolled on foot in Israel's self-styled security zone.

The Islamic Resistance, the guerrilla wing of the Muslim fundamentalist Hezbollah movement, claimed responsibility. A Hezbollah statement in Beirut said the bomb wiped out an enemy patrol in retaliation for the pact of treason between the Palestine Liberation Organization and Israel.

Fighting reaches capital of Croatia

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Rockets struck suburban towns near Zagreb early Sunday as fighting between government forces and rebel Serbs reached the doorstep of Croatia's capital.

Five rockets from a multi-barrel launcher landed in Jastrebarsko, about 18 miles southwest of central Zagreb, officials there said. They reported two people injured. Four similar rockets also landed at about the same time — 8 a.m. — in Samobor, 12 miles west of Zagreb, injuring one person.

Late Saturday, several people were injured by flying glass after two Luna rockets exploded in the residential suburb of Lucko, six miles south of the city center, defense officials said.

Discovery takes off after 5 delays

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery soared into orbit Sunday with five astronauts on a long-overdue mission to deliver a pair of satellites and practice spacewalking.

The 4.5 million-pound shuttle rose promptly from its seaside pad into a hazy sky at 7:45 a.m.It was NASA's fourth launch attempt for the mission in two months.

The mission had been delayed five times since mid-July for engine trouble, booster trouble, pad trouble, payload concerns and even a meteor shower. This was the fourth countdown; the third ended last month with an engine shutdown three seconds before liftoff.

Mexican pundits make a presidential guess

The candidate of the Institutional Revolutionary Party has won the job ever since the PRI was founded in 1929 and doubtless will again, but the process may be complicated by the pending North American Free Trade Agreement.

As they do every six years, political cartoons depict a little man with a white cloth over his head signifying El Tapado, the PRI candidate yet to be unveiled.

Columnists wonder in print whether the anointed will be Manuel Camacho Solis, mayor of Mexico City; Luis Donaldo Colosio, the social development secretary; Treasury Secretary Pedro Aspe Armella, or one of several dark horses.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari will not run in the election, scheduled for Aug. 21 of next year, because the constitution limits a president to one six-year term. The sitting president customarily chooses his successor.

Aristide supporter killed at Catholic mass

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP)— A prominent supporter of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide was dragged from a Catholic Mass in front of human-rights observers and assassinated outside the church Saturday.

Another person was killed, and one was stabbed and wounded in the attack.

A Roman Catholic priest said the assassins of businessman Antoine Izmery were plain-clothes police.

Carnival serves as recruiter for clubs

KIM DILLON
Collegian

One-hundred-eleven organizations set up booths Sunday in the K-State Union for the Union Program Council Activities Carnival.

"The main purpose of the activities carnival is a membership drive for all of the organizations," said Tracey Reyna, senior in public relations, promotions chairperson of UPC and co-coordinator of the Activities Carnival.

There are various ways for students to get involved with campus activities if they did not attend the Activities Carnival.

"SGA would probably be the most direct way," said Sherry Sperman, senior in sociology, women's studies and American ethnic studies and president of Women's Studies Society.

Sperman said if students are interested in an organization that has been announced in class, one of the best ways to get involved is to speak to the person who made the announcement immediately after class.

"Pay attention to the Collegian — most groups put announcements in the bulletins," said Robert Wilson, senior in marketing and president of Rainforest Action Group.

The Student Governing Association has revamped this year, and it is easier to get information from them than in the past, Wilson said. SGA has a list of campus organizations and contact people.

Crowd dances to Cat Jam tune

Triangle Park event features variety of music

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Gusty winds couldn't keep the heat away as Cat Jam '93 blazed Saturday afternoon.

Triangle Park resembled a mini-festival when several kinds of music were performed. Featured styles included reggae, alternative, blues, soul, folk rock and jazz.

Manhattan's own Sufferbus opened with a 13-song, one-hour set before a crowd of 50 people. The band played originals, such as "Lizard Girl From Mars," "Fever Flower," "Half A Mind" and "Metamorphine," that showed how far the band has come since forming last spring.

Sufferbus approached the show from the pop side of rock music, yet they factored in a twist of complexity. Their beat was easily followed, but the organization of the guitar and percussion was complicated.

The crowd, hooked with catchy refrains and simple bass patterns, bobbed their heads in time with the music.

Ken Pingleton's percussion was crisp and precise during the show. Mitchell Leggs' guitar chords were elaborate but hard to hear over the constant repetition of Brian Harris' bass. The vocals from Leggs and Harris were occasionally in tune, but at other times they were strained.

These were the only drawbacks to the band's performance.

AZ-ONE, from Kansas City, Mo., began the second set with reggae music and performed strongly as a four-piece group. The band had leanings toward soul and world music and performed tunes such as "Earthquake, Fire And Brimstone," "Cultural Bandit," and a cover of the Staple Singers' "I'll Take You There."

The set began slowly, but soon audience members were dancing in front of the makeshift stage. Guitarist Gregg Wright was impressive when allowed to roam through the repetitive style of reggae.

His mysterious yet harmonic chords flowed gently above the beat and provided additional life for the band. It was nice to hear elaborate notes complement the recurring music from his bandmates.

Buffy Barton, lead vocalist, was clear and precise. Previous performances had regularly left her sultry voice scratchy and worn, but her strength and emotion came through perfectly. Her performance at Cat Jam '93 was exceptional.

The band has progressed immensely since its first appearance in Manhattan some two years ago. It shouldn't be long before the group is recognized as a leader of the Kansas rhythm-and-blues scene.

Judging by its final crowd size of more than 125 people, Cat Jam '93 turned out to be more successful than previous years.

Campus assault calls for better camera system

University campuses are becoming as violent as our society is. The recent confrontation between a female K-State student and a male attacker has shown the need for up-grading K-State's security-camera system.

The camera system is composed of 12 units mounted in several locations across campus, all of them linked to the police headquarters in East Stadium.

By having only one recording device for all 12 cameras, the police are only able to record one still-frame every 12 seconds from each camera. The recording device automatically switches from camera to camera every 12 seconds, which leaves 132 seconds that don't get taped while the recording device is taping the other 11 cameras.

K-State Police is considering purchasing up to four new cameras and two more recorders. The ratio of cameras to recorder should ideally be 4-to-1.

Every time a new recording device is added, it cuts the time of the 132 unrecorded seconds in half.

The cost of one new camera, similar to the ones being used, is about $2,500 plus installation, depending on the location where it is to be installed. The cost of one new recording device is about $2,000.

This leads us to the questions of how to pay for these improvements and to what extent these improvements should go.

If there is strong student support for improving the camera system, the money could be raised several ways. First, raising the price of parking tickets, which would have to be authorized by the parking council. Second, an addition to student fees, which could be done by an act of Student Senate. Finally, the vice president of financing could budget the money for the new cameras.

The second question is the quality of the new cameras. If the system is going to be updated, it should be done right, with color frames and better-quality pictures.

If these improvements are made, they must be completely assuring our security while on campus. We will still have to watch out for trouble, but at least we will be a bit safer.

Diversity overlay: Indoctrination 101

A diversity-overlay requirement may soon be a reality at K-State. Harriet Ottenheimer, professor of anthropology and director of American ethnic studies and co-chair of the diversity-requirement committee, said it is possible the requirement may be implemented next fall. The diversity-requirement committee wants to encourage debate on this issue.

I agree.

The purpose of the diversity requirement, according to the committee's draft proposal, is this: "The world, the nation, the state of Kansas and Kansas State University are changing. The global economy and its demands, our evolving multicultural society, continual changes in roles and status in both public and private spheres, and increasingly integrated study and work environments demand a new kind of citizenry for the next century. To fulfill its mission, K-State must prepare our students to be successful in a world where people from different backgrounds (age, class, ethnicity, race, gender, nationality, physical and mental ability, heritage, religion, and sexual orientation) must interact effectively with each other."

The first problem with the overlay is that its purpose is way too broad. If the committee wants to improve relations in a multicultural society then they should focus on cultural-specific variables such as ethnicity and race instead of non-cultural variables, like sexual orientation.

The larger problem with the proposal, however, is that it will make K-State and our nation less cohesive. As a political science major, I've consistently observed that multicultural societies, where people are keenly aware of diversity, have a greater propensity for conflict.

Bosnia is a prime example. Although the world rejoiced when communist rule ended in Eastern Europe, little did we know that a free Yugoslavia, with a renewed consciousness of the cultural differences between Serbs, Croats and Muslims, would soon erupt in a bloody civil war. Many of the former Soviet republics provide similar examples.

JOHN HART

As our nation becomes increasingly diversified, it is now more important than ever to find common ground to unite us under a common culture.

We need to allow America to be a melting pot again, where differences are incorporated into a common mixture; not a raw casserole where strongly diverse ingredients are supposed to co-exist harmoniously. The new kind of citizenry for the next century should be one where Americans are Americans; not European Americans, Asian Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans or African Americans.

America hasn't always been a confederation of countless segregated micro-nations. For most of our history, America's culture has been grounded in the Judeo-Christian ethic. As liberal social engineers have systematically dismantled that culture, America has become less unified and more violent (riots of '68, recent L.A. riots). Indeed, their work has been marked by progressive digression.

This proposal is indoctrination in the sense that many of the professors who will teach the courses that will qualify for the requirement will probably argue that the path to a harmonious America is paved by secular-humanist, moral-relativist doctrines. All the while, they will wear the halo of tolerance while promoting their personal ideology.

This proposal is not all bad, though. I strongly agree that people from different ethnic backgrounds should get to know each other in a color-blind, not color-illuminating, fashion. When people from diverse backgrounds discover similarities between one another, it becomes much more difficult to discriminate, or even hate. Once that unity or cohesion is established, and irrational fears or prejudices have been subdued, a discussion of cultural differences can be an exciting, enlighting and fruitful experience.

If the diversity-overlay requirement is passed in its present form, it will probably have little effect on students. Regardless, it represents one step in the wrong direction for the University, the state of Kansas and our nation.

39: A no passing zone with memories strewn along its shoulders

Last April as I was returning to Manhattan from Council Grove, I passed a 39-mile marker and, just a few yards later, a No Passing Zone sign. I chuckled to myself and thought "I'll be turning 40 in September. I wonder if I'll feel like I don't want to pass 39 then."

Now it is September. Today is my 40th birthday. Nothing earth-shattering about that. Except it is a milestone of sorts. I've heard all the sayings associated with that age. "Lordy, lordy, look who's 40." "Over the hill." "Old fart." "It took me 40 years to look this good." "Life begins at 40."

The last two sayings sound OK to me. I can't believe anyone thought of the "over-the-hill" one. I mean, I feel as young as I did when I was 20. So what if I have some gray hair and a few wrinkles now?

I look at the college students in my class and those who work on the Collegian. It doesn't seem so long ago that I was their age. When I began working at Student Publications in 1983, I was old enough to be my students' older sister. Now I'm old enough to be their mother. I was a senior at K-State when my nephew was born. Now he's a freshman up here. How can that be?

Where did the years go? I was in the Peace Corps in Ecuador. I worked on newspapers in Costa Rica and Kansas. I got my master's degree in business administration. My husband and I bought an old wreck of a house and re-did it — roof, walls, floors, you name it.

We found out I was pregnant in December 1985. The day after Christmas he had a stroke from which he never regained consciousness. He died five weeks later, five months before our daughter Mariya was born.

My second husband and I met in August 1987; we married in July 1988. We traveled to Europe four summers in a row. Our daughter Katie was born last Nov. 24.

I feel that my life has been full of triumphs and tragedies already. What awaits me over the next few decades of my life? Will I live to see my daughters' marriages and children? Will I be around to see my daughters turn 40? Will I live another 40 years?

Over the Labor Day weekend, my husband and I discovered in a couple of old trunks at my parents' farm some items that had belonged to my dad's family. Among the treasures were photos of my grandparents, their homes and their pets; my great-grandfather's wallet with his name handwritten on it; my great-great grandparents' obituaries; pieces of quilts; a cross-stitch project with the pink thread still in the needle; and letters dated in the 1850s from my great-great-great grandparents to their daughter and son-in-law.

The discoveries in the family trunks intrigue me. I have so many questions about those who went before me.

What was my grandmother really like? Was she the one working on the cross-stitch? Did she have other boyfriends before she met my grandfather? How did she handle the death of her mother when she was only 5 years old? I remember her as a kind, petite, somewhat frail person who embroidered and kept an immaculate house.

GLORIA FREELAND
GUEST COLUMNIST

I know my grandfather had several girlfriends before he married Grandma because among the items we found were pictures of him with different young women. Did my grandfather have a good sense of humor? He must have because I saw a photo of him and several other guys posing with silly grins dressed up in women's clothes. What were they doing? Were they going to be in a play? Were they playing practical jokes on their mothers?

I remember Grandpa as being somewhat bossy, but he always let me play "office" with pens, ledgers and paper he kept in the bottom drawer of his desk just for me and my sister.

What did my grandparents and other ancestors feel about their lives when they turned 40? Were they happy with what they'd done up to that point in their lives?

My great-grandfather joined the westward movement and had lived in four states by that age. My great-great-great grandfather had lived in two countries and would come to live in a third and had seen the births of 11 of his 14 children. Only three of his children would even reach the age of 40.

When I told a friend about my discoveries and my questions, she said, "We are all just loose ends." She's right. No matter how old or young we are, there will be unfinished work, unsung songs, unwritten stories, unanswered questions.

So how do I feel now that I'm passing 39 and entering the decade of my 40s? I wouldn't change anything that I had any control over. I've experienced many interesting things. I've had challenging, rewarding jobs. I've lived and traveled in other countries. I've been in love. I've had children.

But just as the passing of September signals the coming of fall and then winter, passing 39 makes me more aware of where I've been and where I might yet go.

And somehow I find myself almost desperately wanting to capture things in my life to pass down to my daughters; to know where I fit into the timeline of life; to try to tie up the loose ends of the past, the present and the future.

Editor,

We are writing to inform the student body about a heinous injustice. Last year, many students complained about the tuition increase due to new fees for the athletic department. Some students supported this increase, believing that some of the money would go to increase funding for club sports.

Well, as members of the Soccer Club, we would like to inform you that our funds have been cut.

In the past, our money came from SGA, money that you were already paying as part of your tuition. You would think that since there is now more money available, our budget would increase, yet that is not the case.

Because each player already pays club dues, our reduced budget creates a financial burden, limiting what we can do as a team. You see, it costs us money to enter tournaments like the Big Eight, which we have won the past two years; the Laszlo Tournament, where last year we were the first team from Kansas to win, and the Mardi Gras Invitational and the Ed Chartrand Memorial Tournament, both of which we finished second place in.

We also have to pay for referees and field rental for all of our home games, transportation to away games, uniforms and other equipment. We would like to keep winning these tournaments for K-State, but with the support we are getting, what we can do in the future is very limited.

Where's all your money going, anyway — any ideas?

Keep in mind that African-Americans aren't only minority

Editor,

I am proud to go to K-State, and I am pleased that K-State was ranked within the top 100 schools for black students. I am also very glad that K-State is interested in the needs of students, and in those of minority students in particular.

The key word here is "minority" students. Throughout the article on the front page of the Sept. 8 Collegian, it was implied that black students were the only minority at K-State.

For example: "Having more minority faculty was key to recruiting more black students." The truth is "Having more black faculty was key to recruiting more black students;" or, "Having more minority faculty was key to recruiting more minority students." The article continues to talk about diversity and minorities, but the only minority group it considers are blacks.

The article claimed to be about diversity, but it was only about a single minority.

K-State does have a very diverse student body. There are Asians, Hispanics, American Indians (I don't have to say Native American because I am one, and I can call them whatever I want), Middle Easterners, homosexuals, Jews, Muslims and Hindus, among others. When the administration considers ways to promote diversity and the needs of minority students, I hope they will not forget all of the other minorities.

Brannen's short show still swings

Country musician wows audience after difficult start; performance worth attendance

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Country star John Brannen revealed he can perform quite well despite having a limited audience to work with during his performance at 7 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

Before his introduction, technical difficulties brought a nervous tension that prevailed for much of the show. Brannen's guitar didn't work for two minutes, and the show's opening excitement was dampened.

Some of the tunes played in the 10-song, 50-minute set included "Strangers An Hour Ago," "As Far As My Eyes Can See," "Moonlight & Magnolias," "Lonesome Side Of Midnight," "Heart Broken Down" and a cover of Steve Earle's "The Devil's Right Hand".

The first part of the performance was rigid and somewhat forced, yet Brannen's experienced band played well.

With a percussion section, rhythm guitar, electric dulcimer and bass backing his every move, Brannen let the troubled mood slip away toward the end of his performance.

Brannen, dressed in a sleeveless white shirt, black jeans and boots, took command of the stage and occasionally frolicked in the audience, much to the delight of his female fans.

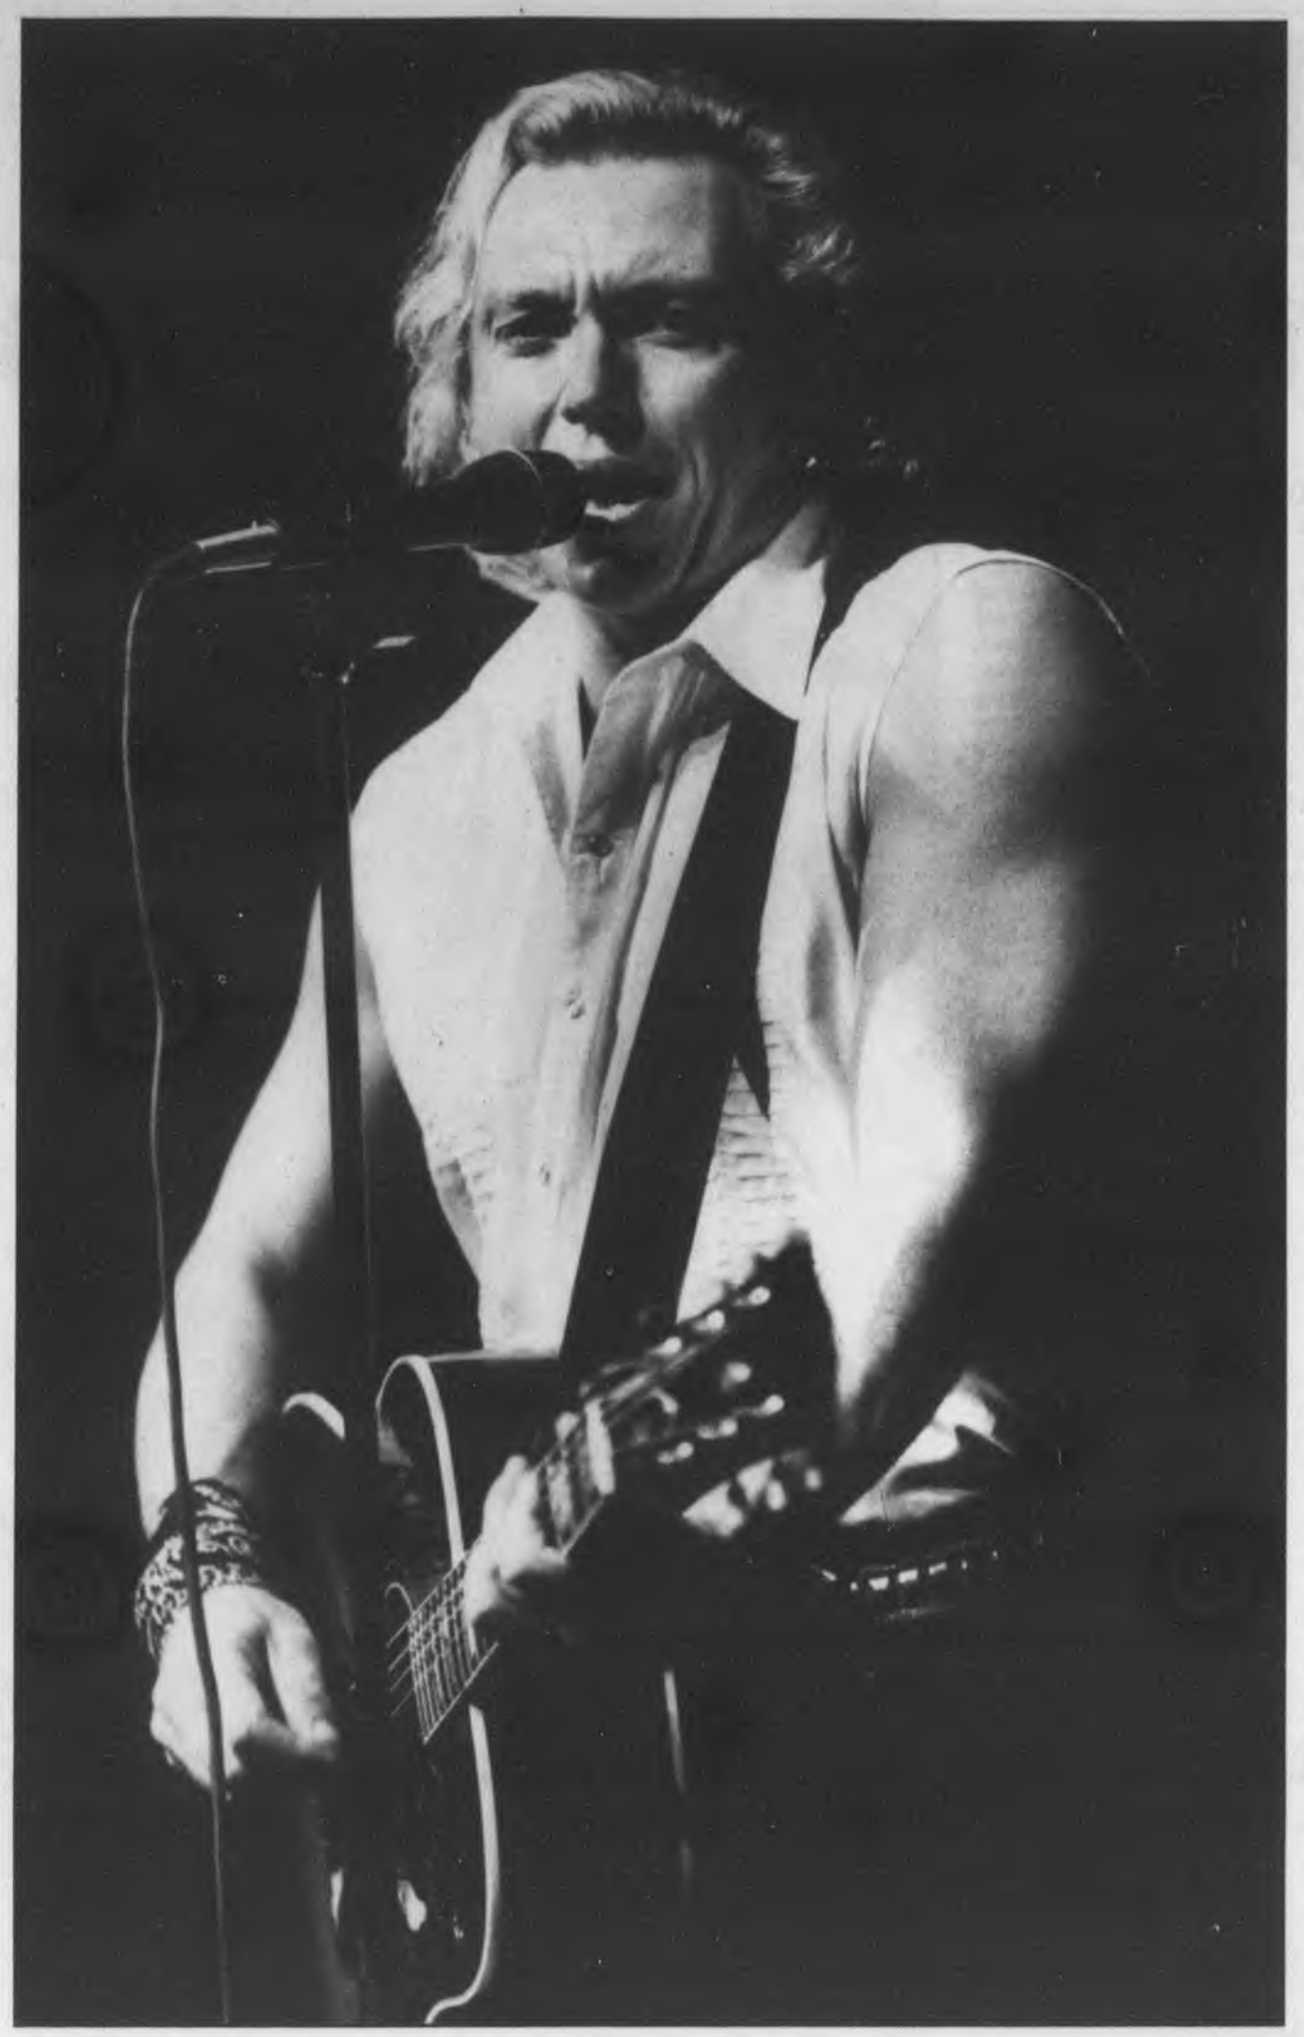
He started to play the beginning chords of Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Have You Ever Seen The Rain." Later in the show he brought out a harmonica to accompany his acoustic playing.

At times similar to Elvis Presley, Brannen injected soul and gospel into his vocals while the crowd responded by clapping in time with the songs.



It was a shame 35 minutes passed before the band really started cooking.

Brannen let his fellow musicians show off toward the end of the set, and they truly turned up the heat. Providing the rock edge found in today's country music, the performance took on a lively, upbeat mood.

Brannen's rhythm guitarist, "The Rattler", paved the way for some impressive blues-rock sounds. It was too short, though, because he was only given a few moments in the limelight.

Perhaps if the crowd had been larger, and the equipment difficulties had been prevented, the entire set would have come off better.

Either way, the performance was fun and enjoyable.

8 K-State shutterbugs rank tops in contest

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

K-State's photojournalists have continued a tradition of excellence by placing eight photographers in the top 20 of the 1992-93 Collegiate Clip Contest.

Three K-State photojournalists swept the top honors in the 1992-93 Region 7 Clip Contest.

Craig Hacker, a former K-State student; David Mayes, senior in history; and Shane Keyser, senior in journalism and mass communications; placed first, second and third, respectively.

The contest is sponsored by the National Press Photographers Association.

Region 7 includes universities from Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Arkansas.

"We consistently defeat other universities with photojournalism departments in this contest. That's a wonderful credit to the students we have," Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc., said.

Johnson said two of the main reasons K-State photojournalism is strong is because of the hands-on experience and alumni support.

"We do not have an academic photojournalism program, yet we produce some of the best photojournalists in the country," Johnson said. "The reasons why are the hands-on experience at the Collegian and the Royal Purple.

"Another reason is the alumni support. K-State photojournalism alumni are probably more supportive, critical and demanding than any alumni group I've seen.

"K-State photographers in general work hard and push each other more so than at some of the other schools," Keyser said. "We get three to four years experience. Other schools are more classroom-oriented, whereas we get a lot more practical experience."

As long as Mayes has been here, K-State has placed five photographers in the top 10 of this contest, he said.

"Obviously I'm happy to place that high, because the old guys that were here were ungodfully good," he said.

Cats turn it on in 2nd half for 38-13 win

K-State converts narrow 14-13 lead at half into rout to go 2-0 on the season

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Quarterback Chad May completed eight passes in eight tries for 159 yards in the second half to help K-State pull away from Western Kentucky and finish with a 38-13 win Saturday at KSU Stadium.

The win was the eighth consecutive victory at home and marked the fourth straight season K-State has started a season 2-0.

Western Kentucky coach Jack Harbaugh said May played well against his team, especially in the third quarter.

"I thought he did a tremendous job," Harbaugh said. "I thought May grew up today, and that will help them as they go through the season."

K-State started the second half with a narrow 14-13 lead. The Cats punted after four plays to open the second half, and the Hilltoppers were moving when cornerback Thomas Randolph intercepted a pass from quarterback J.J. Jewell at K-State's eight-yard line.

After the interception, K-State scored three consecutive touchdowns. May said once they scored, they were able to shut down Western Kentucky.

"After we started scoring and had a good drive, I think that took the wind completely out of it," said May, who contributed to K-State's 424 yards in total offense.

The last time K-State racked up 400 yards of offense was against Temple last year when the Cats had 405 yards of offense.

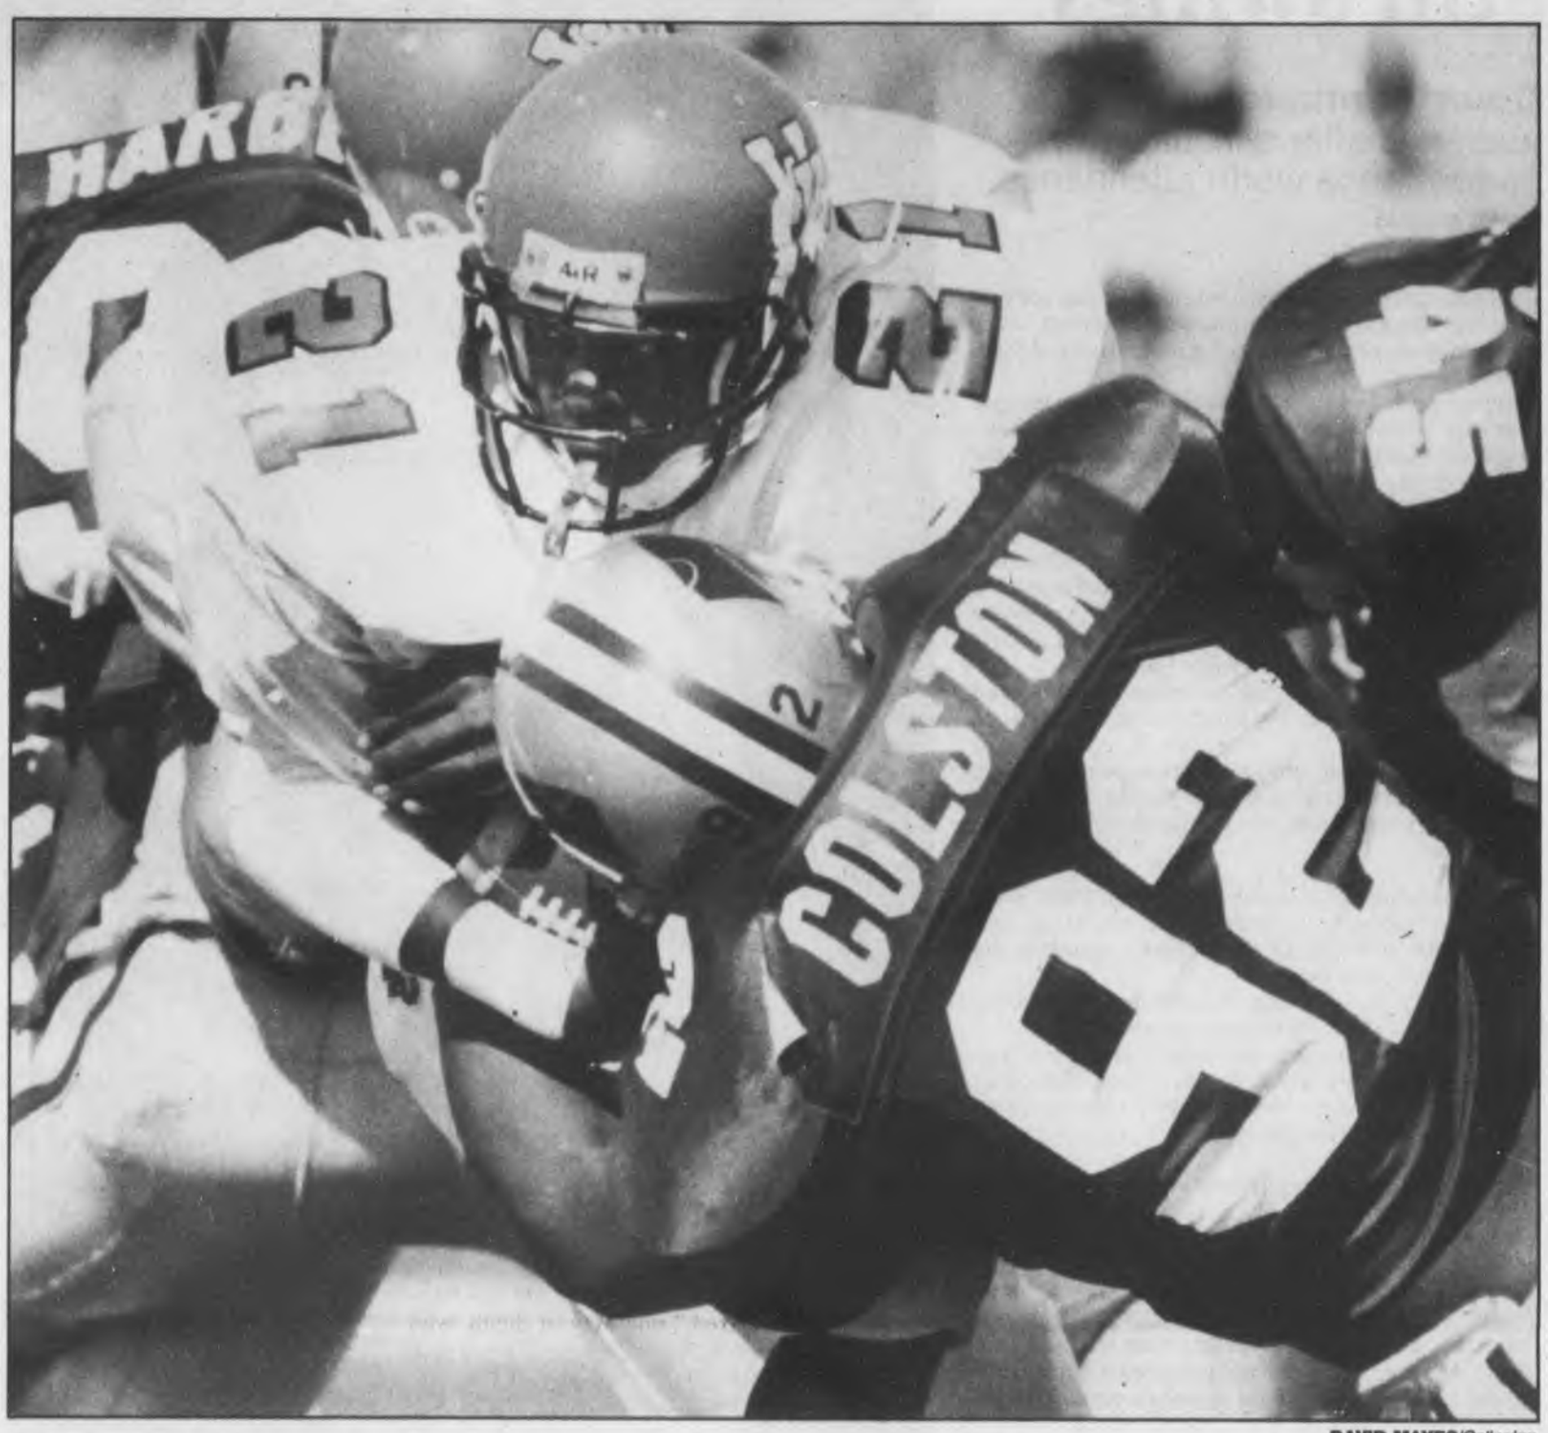
The touchdown drive went 92 yards and included a 40-yard pass from May to wide receiver Mitch Running on third down. A 10-yard run by fullback Rod Schiller led to a 33-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Kevin Lockett from May.

In the next K-State scoring drive, May completed four passes for 45 yards and scored from one yard away to give K-State a 28-13 lead.

The last scoring drive went 50 yards in four plays with May connecting to wide receiver Andre Coleman from 21 yards out for the score. Coleman said his and the team's performance didn't improve.

"Overall, just a repeat of last week," said Coleman, who caught four passes for 67 yards and returned three punts for 37 yards. "As far as performance, I feel just like I did last week as an individual and as a team."

K-State's burst of offense in the second half was a repeat of last week as the unit stuttered in the opening period. Coach Bill Snyder said the offense was shooting itself in the foot.



"We found a lot of ways in which we could stop ourselves," he said. "We missed opportunities, had several penalties, and our throwing and catching the ball is not good.

"I can take responsibility for not having our ballteam emotionally prepared for this ballgame," Snyder said. "We played poorly in the first half. I think we are not mature enough to handle playing a team that we are much better than."

May said running back J.J. Smith helped the Cats move the ball in the first half.

"We had some passes dropped, and then J.J. scored and kind of

Game Notes: K-STATE VS. WESTERN KENTUCKY

—For four consecutive seasons the Cats have won their first two games of the season — the first time since 1924.

— K-State increased its home winning streak to eight games, dating back to the 32-0 win over Missouri in the seventh game of the 1991 campaign.

— Senior free safety Jaime Mendez set a single-game personal best for tackles with 16. His previous best was 14 tackles against the University of Washington in 1991.

— K-State's special-teams unit has blocked nine punts in Bill Snyder's tenure. The unit has also blocked four field goals and two PAT's in 46 games.

— Running back J.J. Smith's 33-yard touchdown run in the first quarter was his second of the season. It was the second-longest run of his career, falling behind his 72-yard jaunt against Idaho State in 1991 — the first carry of his career at K-State.

— Place-kicker Tate Wright now ranks fifth in all-time scoring at K-State after kicking a 24-yard field goal and five PAT's Saturday.

Throughout his K-State career, cornerback Thomas Randolph has been known for making big plays.

Last season Randolph had two blocked punts, including one that led to a touchdown and an eventual 22-13 win against Iowa State on ESPN at KSU Stadium.

He also blocked a field goal against Oklahoma State to preserve the Cats' 10-0 victory. Randolph was named most valuable player on the defense against Oklahoma. In that game he had five tackles, one interception and broke up one pass.

Thomas Randolph

In his freshman season, he blocked a punt against New Mexico State and scurried 36 yards for a touchdown.

Randolph once again showed his big play ability this weekend in the Wildcats' 38-13 victory over Western Kentucky.

Trailing by just one point at halftime, 14-13, Western Kentucky came out on its first possession of the second half and mounted a drive using a three-back option attack.

The Hilltoppers had a first down at the K-State 35 yard line, when Western Kentucky quarterback J. J. Jewell ran right on what seemed to be another option play. Jewell then dropped back to pass to Joey Johnson. Randolph, who was covering Johnson on the play, stepped in front of the pass for his fifth career interception to halt the Hilltoppers' scoring threat.

"The interception took the wind out of our sails," Western Kentucky coach Jack Harbaugh said. "He made as fine of an interception as I have ever seen since I have been coaching. He played the ball and accelerated on it to make a great play."

"I'm still trying to figure out how he got to it," Hilltopper quarterback J.J. Jewell said. "He broke on the ball good."

Coach Bill Snyder also said Randolph's interception came at a key moment in the game for the Cats.

"Thomas did a nice job on the play," Snyder said. "It came at an important time in the game."

Randolph said he expected Western Kentucky to pass in the second half.

"I knew that they would try the play action off the option fake against us," Randolph said. "They didn't run it the whole first half, and I was expecting it."

Randolph's interception seemed to give the Cats the spark they needed, as the offense marched 92 yards in five plays for a touchdown that broke open the game.

"The interception gave our offense some momentum," Randolph said. "They came out playing well and scored right away."

On the next Hilltopper drive, Randolph made an open-field tackle on an option play to prevent Western Kentucky from getting a first down.

He also recovered a fumble in the first half to stop another Western Kentucky drive.

"I knew that I had to stop him," Randolph said. "It was key to stop them in three downs right after we scored and get them off of the field."

INTRAMURAL SWIMMING

Annual swim meet begins competition for championship

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Competitive swimmers and dog paddlers will compete side by side at the 1993 Intramural Swim Meet at 8 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Thursday at the Natatorium.

"We get all kinds of swimmers at this meet," Bryan Skinner, assistant intramural director, said. "Some competed at their high schools, and others are just there to earn intramural points for their organization."

Brent Demmitt, senior in economics, will be competing in the event for the fifth year.

"The whole area around the pool is filled with people going crazy, and that really gets me pumped up," he said.

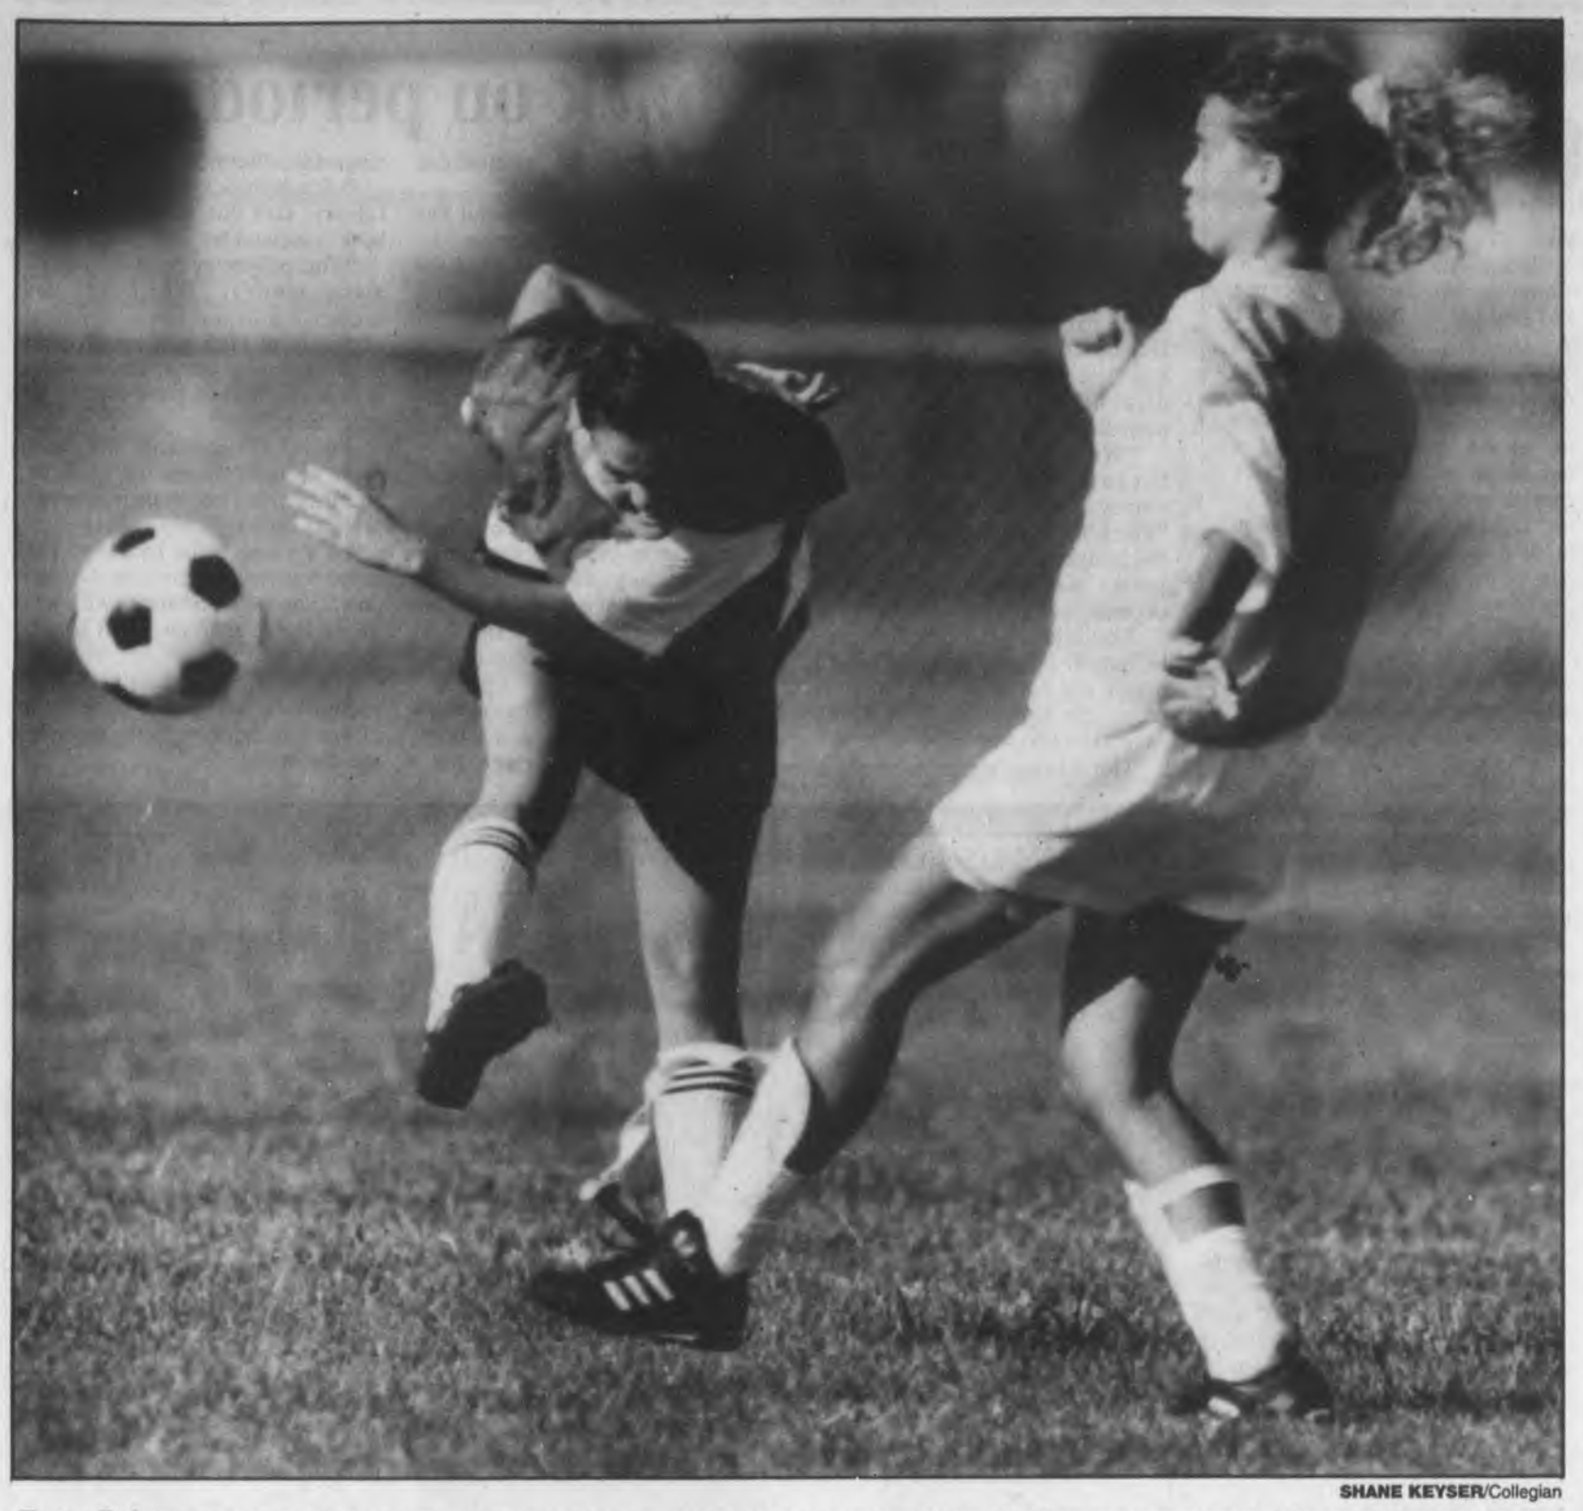
Demmitt has won both the 50-meter freestyle and the 50-meter butterfly titles in each of the past four years, in addition to victories in the 100-meter individual medley and 200-meter medley relay.

"I'm starting to get older now, and I may be slowing down," Demmitt said. "Some freshman may come along and kill me."

In claiming those titles, Demmitt had to defeat swimmers from fraternities, residence halls and off-campus housing.

"This is one of the more popular events every year," Steve Martini, associate director of Recreational Services, said. "It appeals mainly to kids who were on swimming teams in high school, but everyone still seems to show up."

Skinner said rec services tries to offer events for all students who want to compete.



"We give students who aren't good enough to play a varsity sport a chance to remain competitive," Skinner said. "We don't want to leave anybody out, so we try to cover every sport imaginable."

T-shirts will be awarded to the winners of each individual event as well as members of the team with the most points, proclaiming them intramural champion.

Martini said the event has been a success. It will continue as long as there is an interest among the students, he said.

"It has really turned into a social event as opposed to a competitive one, and that makes it a lot of fun to watch," Skinner said.

INTRAMURAL SOCCER

Newly formed women's league begins season

CHAD HARRIS
Collegian

Friday marked the season opener for the intramural soccer season and the newly formed women's soccer league.

Assistant Intramural Director Bryan Skinner said this year will be the start of something different for intramural soccer.

"This is the first year the women have had a league of their own," Skinner said.

"Until recently, women and men could play coed soccer, but now there is a men's league and a women's league."

The decision to establish a separate women's soccer league was made primarily because of the rising interest in the sport.

"The interest in women's soccer was definitely there.

"Much of this stems to the sport's increasing popularity in many high schools," Skinner said.

The season will be a four-game round robin, and the team with the best record will take first place.

There are five teams in the women's league: Chi-Omega, Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Chi Omega, Pi Beta Phi and the Forerunners.

In one contest Friday, Chi-Omega shut out Alpha Delta Pi 8-0. In the other game, the Forerunners forfeited to give Pi Beta Phi the win.

"I played soccer for two years in high school, so I'm glad I didn't have to give it up by coming to college."
SHANNON BOCK
SOCCER PLAYER

Shannon Bock, freshman in graphic design and elementary education and a member of the Forerunners, said she is glad that soccer is available at K-State.

"I played soccer for two years in high school, so I'm glad I didn't have to give it up totally by coming to college," Bock said.

"I love it because it is such an intense sport."

In men's action on Friday, Phi Delta Theta defeated Delta Sigma Phi 6-0, and Alpha Tau Omega edged Delta Tau Delta for a 1-0 victory.

Skinner said he hopes the enthusiasm for the new league will grow.

"We're hoping to add another league next year," Skinner said.

"I think there are some quality women soccer players, so we will encourage all of those interested wholeheartedly."

"Even though we've only played one game and lost, playing soccer is great," Dixon said.

"We don't have many games left to play, but I'm sure we'll improve and have a lot of fun on the way," she said.

NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE

Montana-less Chiefs drop game to Oilers

With the Chiefs (1-1) grounded by the loss of Montana with an injured wrist, the Oilers' defense went after backup Dave Krieg for a 30-0 victory.

The Oilers (1-1) stuffed the Chiefs' running game, holding it to 46 yards, caused five turnovers and sacked Krieg four times. Oiler defensive end William Fuller batted down four of Krieg's passes.

Cris Dishman took the ball away from tight end Mike Dyal and ran 58 yards for a touchdown with 5:34 left in the game. Then Lorenzo White scored from the 1-yard line after Marcus Robertson's second interception to finish off the rout.

It was the first time Kansas City was shut out in the regular season since 1987 and the Oilers' first shutout since last Sept. 27.

The Oilers' run-and-shoot turned to ball control for the first drive of the game. Houston held the ball for 11:40 on the drive and took the lead as Warren Moon completed all nine passes in the drive, ending with a 2-yard pass to Curtis Duncan, who snatched the ball behind Jay Taylor.

A 13-yard pass to Webster Slaughter was the longest play of the 80-yard, 19-play drive.

The game turned into a series of errors for the rest of the half, and the Oilers defense started taking control.

Al Del Greco kicked third-quarter field goals of 25 and 22 yards. His 22-yarder was set up by Robertson's 47-yard interception return to the Chiefs' 10.

Kansas City got its only first-half scoring chance on an improbable 45-yard pass from Krieg to Willie Davis that hit two Oilers before Davis grabbed it at the Houston 29.

Dishman dived in front of Davis and batted the ball into the air. Darryl Lewis then tipped the ball and spun Davis around, but the receiver grabbed the ball as he thudded to the turf.

Krieg fumbled in the second quarter, and Ray Childress recovered at the Kansas City 25 before White fumbled and Neil Smith recovered at the Chiefs' 12. Kansas City reached Houston's 36 with time running out in the first half, but Krieg fumbled again and Glenn Montgomery recovered at the 38.

took the pressure off, and we relaxed," said May of Smith, who got K-State's first touchdown on a 33-yard sprint.

Western Kentucky came back with a 14-play, 84-yard scoring drive on a Robert Jackson six-yard run to tie the game 7-7.

The Hilltoppers recovered a May fumble at K-State's 11-yard line, and then Chris Pino hit a 35-yard field goal to move Western Kentucky ahead 10-7. It marked the first time since the 1991 loss to Colorado that K-State trailed at home.

Snyder said he was looking on how his team would play and didn't like what he saw.

"My concern was not the score but how well we were playing, and we were not playing well," he said. "I don't know if we played down to our competition or what."

K-State scored its second touchdown with a 65-yard, 12-play scoring drive to move back into the lead. The Hilltoppers returned with another 35-yard field goal from Pino as Western Kentucky moved to within one point at 14-13.

"Our kids came back in the locker room and were disappointed," he said. "They understand that they missed some opportunities that could have made the game much different. I'm not happy with our practice habits right now, and if we start practicing better, we will start playing better in the first quarter.

Coleman said Saturday's performance should make K-State practice harder this week for the Minnesota game Saturday, Sept. 18.

"We had to get a wake-up call, and now we go and play a Big Ten team, and we can't be asleep for two quarters," Coleman said.

Royals drill Yanks 10-2 as Gordon records complete game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Opinions varied on how many different kinds of curveballs Tom Gordon threw Sunday. The New York Yankees didn't do much with any of them, though.

The Yankees just couldn't hit Gordon's nasty curve in a 10-2 loss to the Kansas City Royals that dropped them two games back of Toronto in the AL East.

"The thing about (Gordon) was he had three kinds of curveball, and he was able to spot his fastball," manager Hal McRae said. "He had a good breaking ball. He had a hard breaking ball. He had a soft breaking ball. And he had his killer breaking ball."

Catcher Brent Mayne was kept off-balance almost as much as the Yankees' hitters.

"He had three or four different breaking balls," Mayne said. "I don't know what's coming. We have signs for the hard curveball and the soft curveball, but he had more than that. He was coming over the top. He was coming from the side. I can kind of tell what he's going to throw when his arm goes back."

Gordon, who had lost three in a row to the Yankees, had a shutout until Paul O'Neill and Jim Leyritz homered in the ninth. But he had enough for his 10th complete game, second this season.

"I was able to throw it anywhere I wanted to at any point in the count," Gordon said. "I had a lot of confidence in my breaking ball to where I didn't even throw a slider today. I wanted the shutout, but I was really concentrating on a complete game."

The loss sent the Yankees to Milwaukee to finish a nine-game road trip with a three-game series. New York is 1-5 on the trip and has lost five of their last six at a time when Toronto has rebounded from a six-game losing streak.

"We're going to Milwaukee, and we've got to get it going," manager Buck Showalter said. "It concerns me."

New York contributed three errors to Kansas City's nine-hit attack, and all three errors led to runs.

"We didn't play well defensively," Showalter said. "We had quite a few balls rolling around out there for quite awhile. I think it hurts from a standpoint of having a young pitcher out there and needing to make the plays behind him."

Kansas City moved back to within six games of Chicago in the West, with the White Sox coming in Monday for three games.

"We have a little momentum," McRae said. "Over the last three games, the offense has been present. I don't know what it's going to take. I would like to win more than we lose."

The East-leading Blue Jays beat California 4-1 Sunday. The West-leading White Sox lost 6-3 to Detroit.

Yankees rookie Mark Hutton, an emergency starter for the injured Scott Kamieniecki, pitched 4-1/3 innings, giving up five runs — three earned — and five hits. Hutton (1-1) was a replacement for Kamieniecki, who has a pulled right hamstring.

Five of the 10 runs against four Yankees pitchers were unearned.

Brian McRae doubled and tripled to drive in three runs for the Royals. Kevin McReynolds hit a two-run homer, his 11th, off Rich Monteleone in a five-run seventh.

The Royals loaded the bases in a four-run fifth when Hutton threw into the dirt at first on a perfect sacrifice attempt by Chico Lind after Brent Mayne and Gary Gaetti led off with singles.

Rico Rossy grounded out to deep short for one run. Felix Jose singled to drive in Gaetti. Jose stole second on a poor throw from catcher Matt Nokes, and McRae doubled both runners home.

Kansas City put the game away in the seventh, helped along by a three-base error by center fielder Bernie Williams, who appeared to lose Rico Rossy's drive in the sun.

HOME STAND

Good credit starts early

Establishing credit now can prove wise later

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

The college years are an important time to establish good credit.

"Credit card companies love college students," Tracy Hearson, director of the Consumer Relations Board, said.

It is easy for college students to fall into the trap of just paying the minimum amount due each month, he said.

"They love to lure college students in. This may be the easiest time of your life to get credit," he said.

Alicia Muck, freshman in pre-pharmacy, has had several offers for credit cards.

"I've turned them down because I'm afraid I'd just go crazy," she said. "I've seen other people get into debt, and I wouldn't want to be in that situation."

Not all credit cards are the same. Students should shop around for the one best for them, Hearson said.

There are two main considerations in choosing a credit card, he said.

"You want a low annual percentage rate (APR) because this determines how much interest you pay on the borrowed money, and you should be aware of what the annual fees are, if any," Hearson said.

"I found the information in my enrollment packet and applied for my first card," Kelli Osburn, freshman undecided, said.

"It was the best offer I had seen. It doesn't have any fees, and the annual percentage rate is 14 percent," she said.

Osburn said she plans to establish a good credit rating and pay off her balance in full each month.

"I'm going to start my credit rating when the card comes by taking out a cash advance," she said.

"Then I'm going to put the money in my checking account and pay off the balance when I get the bill. This way I can establish good credit right from the beginning."

Hearson said it is a good idea to avoid paying minimum balances because the finance charges accrue so easily.

"The important thing to keep in mind is not how much you pay per month. It's how much you pay overall by the time the item is paid off," he said.

If you use credit cards, you should check your credit file at least once a year, Hearson said.

"It's important to check because problems may arise. You need to be sure there is no false information on file," he said.

"This becomes important later in life when the file will be checked for your credit rating," Hearson said.

"It could mean the difference between getting a mortgage and not."

Library cuts back on periodicals

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

Farrell Library is continuing a process of cutting thousands of dollars worth of periodicals.

Nelda Elders, chairwoman of the Collection Development Department, said a lack of funds has caused the library to discontinue certain types of periodicals.

"We are canceling serials because we don't have enough money to pay for them," she said. "The library is trying to stay within the budget and trying to achieve a better balance between book expenditures and periodicals."

The initial plan of cutting the periodical budget began 18 months ago in the fall of 1992. In the first phase, the library was only able to save $154,000.

The library's goal was to cut $350,000 from its periodical budget.

Elders said this fall, Farrell has begun phase two of the process.

"We are needing to cut $220,000 worth of serials and standing-order subscriptions," she said.

Serial subscriptions are magazines or scientific journals, and standing-order subscriptions are series of books sent to the library until they want them to stop.

The library has asked professors to submit lists of periodicals they would allow to be cut. The library will compile the lists into one. Professors' appeals on books they do not want discontinued will be heard in November, and the final list of periodicals to be cut will be completed in December.

"The faculty has been very cooperative with us, even though they do not want to see their magazines discontinued," she said.

"The only way would be with more money. We have had excessive inflation since 1986. It is currently at 10.5 percent and has been for many years. Universities across the nation have had to do this," he said.

Cutting of periodicals will cause some inconvenience for students, and they must begin their research projects earlier, Elders said.

"It's going to be harder to find information within the library now," she said. "Students will have to use the inter-library loan system more often."

Hobrock said the cutting of periodicals will have more of an effect on undergraduate students and faculty.

Club benefits for students abound

Elizabeth Haynes, senior in social science and women's studies and student volunteer coordinator for PEERS, said one way to get involved with her organization is to call or stop by the Women's Resource Center.

Students can join campus organizations by stopping by group offices or centers on campus.

Laura Howard, junior in advertising and marketing and a member of the UPC promotions committee, said there are many benefits to joining campus organizations, including meeting new people and learning how to find jobs in your field.

By getting involved with the International Club, American students have the opportunity to get to know international students, said Samir Awad, senior in architectural engineering and treasurer for International Club.

Joining campus organizations is a good way for all students to integrate into the University, Ivonne Zaldumbide, sophomore in advertising and member of UPC promotions committee, said.

"The experience you get and the people you meet — it really gets you involved on campus," said Kristen Kampschroeder, senior in marketing and vice president of public relations for Pi Sigma Epsilon.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Letter gets nosy-pants award for uh, advice

Dear Cassandra,

This is really too much. "Cuddle-confusion!" That had been a clear case of betrayal.

And what was your hypocritical advice in "Friend knows too much"? Quite as expected: "Aw, shut up. Nothing (that serious) happened ... " If you can't see this, how could you possibly run an advice column?

Now for "Trying to do the right thing": Yes, do approach David and say: "I happened to see you cheating on Allison the other night. I hope you want to be the first one to tell her, if you care for her. It will make you feel better, anyway. And if you don't feel bad about it, then I would feel even worse if I didn't tell Allison myself. She has the right to know it. You have three days to tell her."

Signed,
Me

Dear Nosy-Pants,

Uhh ... huh, huh. Huh, huh. Beavis and Butt-head say: You didn't read my response. You get the "Poopy-Drawers, Nosy-Pants of the Month" award.

If you had read my response, then you would know I had essentially agreed with your advice. Only I didn't have a cow over it like you did.

If you recall, darling, I said, "I suggest you approach David and tell him you're concerned about Allison because she's your friend ..." Blah, blah, blah and so on.

Just reread yer paper, girlie, and figure it out.

Carlson, whose artwork is on exhibit in the K-State Union gallery until Sept. 22, said she hopes her work will give people pause for reflection.

Carlson, a Manhattan native, earned her bachelor's degree in printmaking from the University of Kansas. She now lives in Lawrence with her husband and teaches at the Lawrence Art Center.

She said she likes the idea of having her artwork on exhibit in her hometown.

"It's like coming full-circle," she said. "You start out in one place, and 10 years later you're back there again."

"You're always influenced by the place you grew up in," she said.

Many of Carlson's works are assemblages, drawings with different components built onto them using wood, paper or, in one case, a mousetrap.

"They sort of push the question of whether the work is two-dimensional or three-dimensional," Carlson said.

Her works usually start out as drawings and turn into assemblages.

"I have this natural inclination to stick stuff on my drawings," she said.

Carlson said a story lies behind each of her works. However, most likely no one will get the same story she put into them. She said everybody will get something different out of each drawing.

She said her work lends itself to narration.

"As people look at (the drawings), their eyes go from one thing to the next like in a story," she said.

She said there was never really a point in her life where she developed an interest in art.

"People have this misconception that somehow (artists) develop this interest," she said. "Speaking for myself, I was just born that way."

She said she sees art as "a certain way of seeing things."

Pakistan Day celebrated

Art and culture theme remembers independence day

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Customs, traditions and the joy of independence were shared this weekend during a celebration of Pakistan Day.

August 14 marked the official day of independence for the country of Pakistan. The Pakistan Student Association waited until Saturday to celebrate with faculty, students, friends and family at Manhattan's Senior Center.

The evening began with an exhibition of Pakistani arts and crafts.

"The people of Pakistan bring art into everything," Shazia Aqeel, junior in chemical engineering, said.

Displays included cotton and silk shawls with intricate embroidery. The different designs are symbolic of the four provinces within Pakistan, said Bilal Mahmud, president of the association and a senior in electrical engineering.

One design, called mirroring, is representative of the Sindhi province. Mirroring is done by cutting mirrors into tiny circles and sewing them to the cloth. The effect is stunning, as the mirrors reflect the light and the colors of the fabric.

"The people of Pakistan bring art into everything."
SHAZIA AQEEL

The metal plates have words from the Koran, said Aqeel. There were also wood carvings with words from the holy book.

Other crafts included bowls and glasses made from green onyx marble that is very abundant in Pakistan.

Shakil Ur-Rehman Farooqi was the host for the evening, and he led the 60 guests in the national anthem of Pakistan.

The dress show began with clothing from rural areas. The outfits made of silk and cotton were baggy and very light.

The women's jewelry was big, and they wore 12 colorful bangles made of glass. Long cotton shirts and free-flowing pants are common dress for the men.

Draping silk skirts, pants and delicate shawls made up the women's wardrobe. These outfits were symbolic of the regions.

They also showed the clothing of the people who live in the cities.

"The dress still has traditional style," Irfan Sohail, senior in business, said. "But it is a bit simpler in decoration and not as baggy."

Guests were also shown a slide show, which highlighted Pakistan's beaches and towering mountain ranges.

Dinner consisted of traditional Pakistani food.

K-State–Salina to buy planes

"Planes and simulators have been bought for the professional pilot training as well as some new lab equipment for the aviation maintenance training and aircraft radio and navigation equipment for the avionics training," Reagan said.

Without the grant, the aeronautics department would have had limited growth, said Jack Henry, dean of K-State–Salina

"We were maxed-out with students. There weren't enough airplanes. Now we have the chance to buy enough planes and with it a chance to increase enrollment. Currently, there are about 100 students in the aeronautics program — the future is double that," Henry said.

"The grant has opened the door for us to be the nation's best flying college. We had outstanding faculty and facilities before, but there was a missing link, and that was outstanding equipment and more planes. There won't be a better flying program," Henry said.

Israel, PLO to sign historic document

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Yasser Arafat left Tunis,Tunisia, on a flight to Washington D.C. for the signing of a historic pact that gives Palestinians limited autonomy in the occupied territories.

Israel's Cabinet, meanwhile, unanimously approved the mutual recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Israel army radio said Sunday.

The vote took place at the weekly cabinet meeting in advance of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's trip Sunday to the White House.

Rabin said Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and Mahmoud Abbas, the number-two official in the PLO, would sign the plan for instituting Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho.

The PLO has said Arafat would sign the agreement only if Rabin does. Diplomatic protocol usually requires that political leaders of equal stature sign an accord.

The PLO-Israeli accord, made possible by the adversaries' mutual recognition after decades of warfare, is expected to lead to similar peace agreements between the Jewish state and Syria, Jordan and Lebanon.

But Arafat's departing remark that Jerusalem would become the capital of an independent Palestine was bound to irritate Israelis.

It seemed to be yet another effort by Arafat to placate Palestinians who say he has made too many concessions to the Jewish state in his quest for a state.

Some have even called for his death, saying he has betrayed the Palestinian cause.

"We're living in truly revolutionary times," President Clinton said Saturday as he prepared to host the first public meeting between an Israeli head of government and the chief of the organization that was sworn to dismantle the Jewish state.

Arafat and his delegation are expected to spend three days in Washington for talks with senior U.S. officials on the Middle East peace process that was launched nearly two years ago in Madrid, Abed-Rabbo said.

Tunisian police provided tight security for Arafat, whose travels are seldom revealed in advance. Dogs trained to detect explosives sniffed the luggage of journalists who accompanied Arafat and other top officials of the PLO on the Boeing 707.

A crew member, speaking on condition of anonymity, said plans called for the jet to fly directly to Washington D.C. The plane took off at 5:05 a.m. EDT.

In the occupied West Bank, a protest against the accord escalated into violent clashes Saturday as Israeli soldiers killed two Palestinian youths and wounded eight others.

At Sunday's Cabinet meeting, Interior Minister Aryeh Deri resigned, raising some doubts about whether his six-member Shas party would vote for the autonomy agreement when it is brought before the 120-seat parliament.

The resignation could lead the ultra-religious Shas party to quit the government coalition, leaving Rabin with a minority government and without a Jewish majority in Parliament.

Education Minister Amnon Rubinstein told the army radio that he was convinced the agreement will win parliament approval.

Bacchus, Perot oppose NAFTA

Free trade with Mexico, Canada discourged

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Rep. Jim Bacchus, D-Fla., won by just 4,000 votes last year. So he took seriously this recent delivery from Ross Perot supporters: 2,000 signatures of constituents urging him to vote against the free trade agreement with Mexico and Canada.

"They could well be the swing voters," Bacchus, said of Perot's followers in his conservative Florida district.

The late August meeting with Bacchus was one of dozens between Perot supporters and members of Congress, all part of Perot's hardball strategy to defeat the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"What we tell people is simple: We can definitely have an impact on their re-election," said Roger Henson, who is heading the anti-NAFTA drive for Perot in Texas.

Such blunt talk, echoed by others in Perot's United We Stand America organization, suggests Perot forces are ready to make NAFTA the first test of their pledge to become the critical swing voting bloc in hundreds of congressional districts.

"It will without question be a litmus test for candidates next year," said Steve Bost, the United We Stand executive director in Maine who also serves as regional director for New England.

"What we are saying to our congressmen is that we are keeping score for '94", Pat Muth, the United We Stand director in Florida, said.

Rep. Martin Frost, D-Texas, who represents Perot's home base of Dallas, said the Perot supporters weren't so direct in his recent meeting. But they made their point.

"There was no conversation implying any threat, but they made it very clear they are strongly opposed to it, and Mr. Perot certainly has a significant following in my district," said Frost, who, like Bacchus, hasn't decided how he will vote on NAFTA.

Such aggressive support from his state leaders gives Perot added muscle as he takes on President Clinton and the Republican Party leadership in a political fight that has created a number of similarly odd alliances. For example, Perot's allies in opposing NAFTA include liberal Jesse Jackson and conservative Pat Buchanan.

Yet the battle is not without risks for Perot.

In his home state of Texas, for example, the trade agreement has broad political support because of the economic benefits border states see in expanded trade with Mexico.

Republican pollster David Hill said public opinion in the state was roughly 2-to-1 in favor of NAFTA, and predicted Perot would have little success changing it.

"He is taken more seriously outside Texas," Hill said. "We learned not to take him too seriously a long time ago."

Some political strategists also argue that Perot is making a mistake investing so much in an issue that is not the rallying cry of his core supporters.

"These voters aren't supporting Ross Perot to take on NAFTA, they support him because they want to clean up the system," said White House pollster Stanley Greenberg. "NAFTA could prove a distraction that muddies the image of what he stands for politically."

And for all Perot's talk about the deep opposition to the trade deal among his supporters, there is evidence suggesting many Perot backers are nearly as ambivalent and confused about NAFTA as the public at large.

A recent survey in Michigan, for example, found that 40 percent of United We Stand members in that state supported NAFTA, compared to 36 percent who opposed it, numbers that corresponded with the larger sample of all Michigan voters. Among those who said they voted for Perot last November, 45 percent opposed NAFTA and 35 percent favored it, the survey found.

Some state Perot leaders are reluctant to join the virulent anti-NAFTA chorus, at least until they have a chance to survey their state members. None of a dozen state United We Stand leaders contacted this week said that had been done.

"We have to be careful and find out how our people feel about this before we get racing too far down the road," said Frank White, the United We Stand director in Colorado. "If 95 percent oppose it, then we can hit hard. But if it's more like a 60-40 break, then that should influence the kind of activities we get into."

But White's view was the exception — the other United We Stand state leaders were eager to follow Perot's lead in the NAFTA fight.

As Clinton begins his push for NAFTA this week, Perot is intensifying his effort against it, keeping a busy travel schedule that includes a Saturday rally in Michigan with labor and Democratic Sen. Donald Riegle.

Somalia warlord evades capture

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — He's wanted by the United Nations for crimes against humanity. There's a price on his head, and he's in hiding.

The fugitive warlord has largely bottled up 15,000 of the U.N.'s 25,000 peacekeepers behind fortified positions in this seaside capital and created sharp differences among their ranks.

He has eluded capture for nearly three months, despite a high-tech effort by the United States to bring him to heel using sophisticated electronic eavesdropping gear and airborne cameras known as "Eyes Over Mogadishu."

His aim, U.N. officials concede, is to peel away support for the costly multinational humanitarian mission in Somalia through an urban guerrilla war.

In one of the deadliest clashes, U.S. helicopter gunships fired machine guns and rockets Thursday at Somalis who ambushed Pakistani troops and American engineers. Aidid supporters said at least 125 men, women and children were killed.

Congress already is questioning American involvement. Italy, Saudia Arabia and other nations have accused the United Nations of losing sight of its original mission in an attempt to punish Aidid.

"He thinks he's winning," said an African diplomat who played a key role in brokering a peace agreement among all of Somalia's major clans in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, earlier this year.

A Western official, who like the African diplomat spoke on condition of anonymity, said Aidid's people claim the warlord is ebullient.

Somalian refugees tell of rape, mistreatment

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LIBOI, Kenya — Thousands of Somali women who fled war, looting, starvation and chaos now must recover from rape, another horror of their country's turmoil.

"We have only three options: Commit suicide, go and live far away or become prostitutes," Yurub Mohammed Barre, 35, said of herself and the other victims.

Early this year, the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees proposed a $2-million program to teach rape victims such trades as sewing and soap-making so they will have some means of support. Only half of the money has been raised.

Panos Moumtzis, the U.N. refugee agency spokesman in Nairobi, said relatively little could be done for the women, whose predominantly Muslim society would forever treat them as outcasts.

Perhaps as many as one in 10 Somali women were assaulted on the road as they fled their country or in camps in Kenya, refugee officials say. Of the 385,000 Somali refugees in Kenya, about 81,000 are women.

In the first eight months of this year, 179 women reported being raped, 20 of them within five days in June, Moumtzis said. Their ages ranged from 13 to 45.

Fawzia Musse, a consultant hired to determine the true number of rape victims, said most cases go unreported because of the social stigma, but that the total could be 10 percent of all women refugees.

Some women, like Barre, the only victim interviewed who gave her real name, were raped in Somalia as dictator Mohammed Siad Barre's rule collapsed in January 1991.

"Rebels first shot my husband in our sitting room and then raped me right there," she said.

A woman who gave the name Habiba said she was raped in Liboi, one of several unfenced, poorly patrolled camps along the Somali border in eastern Kenya.

"I screamed as loudly as I could, but nobody came to help me," said the woman, who is 40 and has three children.

"People are afraid of the bandits."

"I lost respect in the community," she said.

Habiba had to move to another part of the refugee camp as a result of the rape.

Bandits is how people refer to the groups of armed men who terrorize Kenya's arid east. They rob, kill and rape private citizens and loot international relief convoys.

Some victims claimed their rapists were members of Kenya's security forces, but Musse said that could not be confirmed.

Relief workers and human rights organizations, including the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights in New York, also have implicated security forces.

clan lines, as did the fighting that destroyed Somalia and created a deadly famine. War and hunger killed an estimated 350,000 people last year and, in two years, made refugees of more than a million Somalis.

An 18-year-old woman who would identify herself only as Sahara said the men who raped her in the Somali border town of Dif first asked her clan's name.

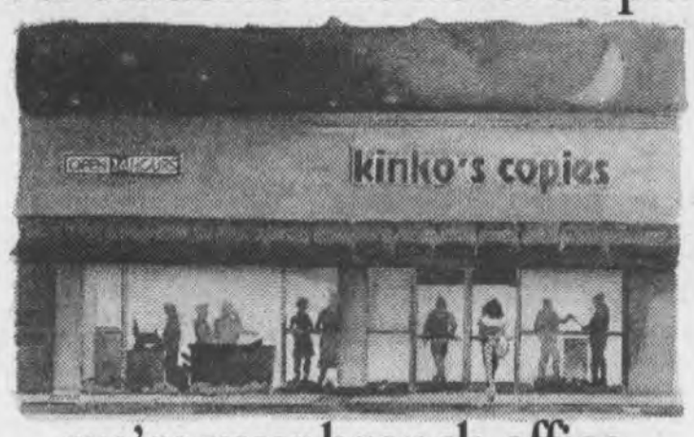
When she said Ogaden, they dragged her into the bush, beat her senseless and raped her.

So far, the U.N. agency has provided minimal assistance to the rape victims, ranging from medical treatment to counseling.

It has moved victims to other camps and replaced personal belongings stolen by the rapists.

Resettlement to other countries is another option, but is impractical for many of the women, who are poor, unskilled and nomadic.

Barre has decided to try it and will go to Australia.



"I want to go far away from any Somali men," she said.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Eric Cooper, sophomore in architectural engineering, looks at Grandma Layton's artwork, which is being displayed at Commerce Bank and Trust, 727 Poyntz Ave., until Sept. 22. Layton, a native Kansas, got her start in art when she took a class in 1977. She learned to do blind contour drawing, a technique in which the artists rarely look at the paper while drawing what is before them.

Artist's genius shown through self-portraits

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

Artist Elizabeth "Grandma" Layton's work is on display at Commerce Bank on Poyntz until Sept. 22.

Layton's use of graphite and colored pencil, crayon, metallic paint and white ink have been called startling and moving. Some describe the resulting art as works of genius.

Layton chose self-portraits for the majority of her work. She is depicted as a woman with a bun of white hair, silver glasses, enlarged green eyes, a wrinkled neck, sagging arms and wrinkled, age-spotted hands.

Don Lambert, K-State graduate, discovered and began to promote Layton's work.

"She may be the closest many of us will come to knowing a true artist, defined here simply as someone who must create art," Lambert wrote. "And she has created art with little conscious thought of line, form, color, composition and all those other things one learns in art school."

"Thanksgiving" is a drawing that was done in 1977. A happy, slightly bemused Layton is pictured at the Thanksgiving table.

"I hate to cook, so this is my Thanksgiving, because we have Kentucky Fried Chicken and Oreo cookies, and I didn't have to work at all...The turkey is outside there, strutting because he didn't get killed. It's better for everybody," Layton wrote.

"This is my grave," she wrote. "It doesn't make any difference after you're dead what color your skin is ... so I drew my skin black — people of other colored skins have the same feelings. I think we all have the same feelings."

"The idea was that your body is a cage but your spirit is free — maybe you're old — you don't have to be in a wheelchair — maybe you can't get your thoughts out, just living is a handicap because you are caged in its particular body whether you like it or not. You just as well should learn to like it."

John Biggs, executive director of the Manhattan Arts Council, said there are a number of attractive features about Grandma Layton's art.

"Her work and the themes present in her art affects people very deeply," he said.

"Since the work has been here, we've had a large number of people in to see it. I know there have also been a number of school children down to see it."

The collection was brought to Manhattan by the Manhattan Arts Council, which is composed of several local supporters.

It is the second half of a two-part show. The first half was shown in October. The combination of the two collections was shown in Washington, D.C.

"That was the exhibition that had such an impression on so many people," Biggs said.

"She has been described as a genius. She's an original," he said. "Her stories are inspiring, and her art is great."

Layton's art was personal therapy

PAULA MURPHY

Elizabeth "Grandma" Layton, from Wellsville, took her first art lesson at age 68.

In 1977, with the help of instructor Paul Wright at Ottawa (Kan.) University, she learned the technique called blind contour. This is a method of drawing in which the artist looks primarily at the subject.

The artist looks at the page only for points of reference.

Using this technique, Layton chose to do self-portraits for the majority of her work.

"As you look inside yourself, you see that special person inside you, and you become acquainted with that person, and you realize who she is and what she is. What I see is not an especially intelligent or unintelligent person. It's a simple person. It's OK. It's a simple soul."

Layton battled depression for much of her life. She used art as a type of therapy. In "You Gotta Have Art," Layton and her husband, Glenn, are surrounded by works of art.

"Art does so much for me I want everyone to try it," she wrote.

Her drawing titled "Gold Star Mother" is a somber scene punctuated by a rainbow bursting from the background. "When something gets too hopeless, I put a rainbow in — there is always hope."

"The thing I find most remarkable is that without the whole laborious development most artists go through, she seemed almost immediately able to communicate her feelings and view of the world to her audience — Layton's example suggested, 'There's still time. It's never too late. You can indeed, through sheer character, find a way,'" Elizabeth Broun, director, said about Layton's life in a Kansas City Star article.

Former enemies sign agreement

- For stories on reconstruction in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and on Jericho's end to military rule.

WASHINGTON — Enemies without mercy for a generation, Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization signed an accord Monday promising self-government for Palestinians. The White House ceremony marked a momentous step toward peace in the Middle East.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat stood with President Clinton in brilliant sunshine as aides signed the agreement. Arafat extended his hand to Rabin, and after a moment's hesitation, Rabin shook it.

An invited audience of 3,000 — former Presidents Jimmy Carter and George Bush included — watched on the South Lawn as the deal was sealed. Half a world away, Palestinians flocked to the streets of the Biblical city of Jericho in anticipation of the pen strokes that would deliver self-rule.

"Enough of blood and tears. Enough," Rabin said to the Palestinians. "Ladies and gentlemen, the time for peace has come."

Yet, in a somber tone, he said that the ceremony came too late for the families of the victims of Palestinian violence, terror whose pain will never heal.

Following Rabin to the podium, Arafat said: "My people are hoping that this agreement marks the beginning of the end of a chapter of pain and suffering which has lasted throughout the century."

He expressed the hope that the agreement would usher in an age of peaceful coexistence and equal rights, and appealed to the United States to help implement it.

Clinton opened the ceremony. "Welcome to this great occasion of history and hope," he said. "The peace of the brave is within our reach."

The ceremony came off without a hitch, although an administration source said last-minute negotiations this morning resulted in changing one word in the agreement. At a Blue Room reception just before the signing ceremony, the word "Palestinian" was changed to "PLO" in the preamble of the agreement, at the request of the PLO, said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

There was no public mention of last-minute maneuvering as Clinton escorted Rabin and Arafat from the Successful relationships begin with a giving attitude, creativity and being yourself, said Rusty Wright, an author and traveling lecturer whose three-day lecture series at K-State began Monday night.

Wright, who lives in Southern California, spoke to about 75 people in the Union Forum Hall. His topic, "The Dating Game," focused on practical advice in dating and relationships.

Sponsored by the K-State chapter of Campus Crusade for Christ, Wright has been a representative for the national organization since 1971, and he lectures to universities across the nation. He has spoken to more than 120,000 students and faculty members on more than 150 campuses in 42 states.

Wright said he feels his message is important to young men and women because college is the point in their lives where young people are forming relationships.

"I want to help men and women on campuses across the nation to work on bettering their skills that are needed to form lasting relationships," he said.

Wright said he speaks from a perspective not all students are familiar with.

"My main purpose for speaking tonight is to get you to think. I speak from a Christian or Biblical perspective. Some of you may agree with what I have to say and some of you may totally disagree. I didn't come here tonight to force my views down your throat. I just want to get you to think," he said.

"Be devoted to one another in love. Ask yourself what can I give, not what I can take," he said.

Wright said he encourages people to be creative in what they do on a date. He said there are two categories in dating.

"There are two categories in dating activities. One is things you both observe as spectators. It can be fun, but it keeps you from getting to know each other," he said.

The second category of dating, he said, is participation. There are several things to participate in on a date, such as bowling, hockey and miniature golf.

Wright said another technique for a successful relationship is to learn to communicate and listen. He encourages people to learn to listen and develop the art of conversation, beyond what is your name, where are you from, and what is your major.

"This is the reason why so many couples today are having problems," he said.

"Don't just focus the conversation on yourself, but learn to listen and really be interested in what the other person has to say. An almost guarantee to an unsuccessful relationships is to never communicate."

Wright also said he encourages people to be themselves.

"If you learn to be yourself, your life will be a lot easier. Learn to be yourself in relationships," he said.

Raymond Burr dies due to liver cancer

(AP) — Raymond Burr, the portly actor who menaced James Stewart in "Rear Window" and became a courtroom hero in the long-running "Perry Mason" TV series, died Sunday night at his Northern California ranch. He was 76.

Burr died at his vineyard and farm in the Sonoma County community of Dry Creek, Calif. Burr's friend Charles Macaulay said Burr's physician, Paul Margulio, gave the cause of death as metastatic cancer of the liver.

Besides his role as the murder-solving lawyer, Burr starred for eight years as the crusty, wheelchair-using San Francisco detective in the NBC series "Ironside," which ran from 1967 to 1975. Toward the end of his life, his illness forced him to use a wheelchair for real.

Among his memorable roles: as the prosecutor of Montgomery Clift in "A Place in the Sun"; the stalker of Natalie Wood in "A Cry in the Night"; the murderer Stewart sees from his apartment in "Rear Window."

There will be no funeral, and Burr's body will be cremated, said George Faber, a longtime friend. Faber said a memorial service would be planned.

Hurricane threatens Southern California

CABO SAN LUCAS, Mexico (AP) — Hurricane Lidia churned toward the tip of the Baja California peninsula Sunday evening, packing heavy rains and winds of up to 105 mph.

Hurricane warnings were in effect on the southern tip of the peninsula south of the resort city of La Paz and for coastal cities on the Mexican mainland along the Gulf of California.

But as 10 p.m. EDT approached, the storm had not hit the peninsula and appeared to be heading toward the Gulf of California.

"It was raining, but it's not raining now. We have all services, electricity, everything," she said. "We're hoping it will pass us by."

On the mainland, in Los Mochis, 400 miles south of the Arizona border, authorities were preparing for the hurricane.

Shelters were being set up, and volunteers were on standby, he said.

Hussein survives assassination attempt

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iraqi opposition group claimed Sunday that Saddam Hussein narrowly escaped an assassination attempt in August that killed 25 people.

According to sources inside Iraq, about 20 people tried to kill the Iraqi leader Aug. 25 when he was near his home village of Takrit, 100 miles northwest of Baghdad.

A report said 120 suspects in the foiled assassination have been executed, including members of Hussein's own Takrit clan.

The report came in a fax to the Associated Press in Nicosia from the Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution in Iraq, an Iraqi opposition group based in Iran. There was no way to confirm it independently.

It was the second alleged attempt at a coup. In early August, 10 military officers reportedly tried to kill Hussein in Baghdad, near his presidential palace. As many as two dozen army officers and civilian collaborators were executed, Western diplomats say.

In the latest attempt, the opposition group said Hussein escaped miraculously after a gun battle between his guards and attackers that claimed 25 lives.

Shevardnadze to ask for emergency rule

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Eduard Shevardnadze, facing an insurrection in western Georgia by supporters of ex-President Zviad Gamsakhurdia, threatened Sunday to impose emergency rule.

A presidential spokesman said Shevardnadze planned to ask the Georgian Parliament this week to declare a national emergency and impose a curfew.

At a cabinet meeting Saturday, Shevardnadze announced he was assuming the powerful post of interior minister, giving him control of all police forces.

If parliament goes along with the state of emergency, police may be given temporary authority to conduct searches without warrants and hold suspects without court approval.

The most important effect of the declaration, however, could be psychological: it would help convince Georgia's 5.4 million people that Shevardnadze is determined to restore order.

Armed gangs now roam Tbilisi's streets, and bandits prey on travelers in the countryside. Government forces have been battling two separatist rebellions as well as frequent attacks from Gamsakhurdia followers.

U.S. soldiers wounded in battle with warlord

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — U.N. troops battled Somali gunmen on the streets of Mogadishu for nearly three hours today, and a U.N. spokesman said three U.S. soldiers were wounded.

U.N. spokesman David Stockwell said there was no truth to a report of 12 American deaths — a report made by a spokesman for fugitive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

Somalis employed by Western news organizations had said they saw the bodies of three Americans while the battle was raging about a quarter-mile from the U.N. headquarters.

But Stockwell told AP Network News that no U.N. or U.S. soldiers were killed.

"Three American soldiers were wounded. They are in the hospital now on the Embassy compound grounds in stable condition. Their wounds are not life-threatening," he said.

Aidid's spokesman said as many as 60 Somalis may have died, including civilians caught in the crossfire.

NAFTA lobby prepares to fight Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration was preparing a high-profile start Monday to its fall lobbying campaign on behalf of a free-trade agreement linking the United States, Mexico and Canada.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen confidently predicted the administration will be able to overcome formidable congressional opposition.

One day after presiding at the signing of a Middle East peace agreement, President Clinton was to sign environmental and labor side pacts to the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement on Tuesday with former presidents George Bush, Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford looking on.

Peter Garret, lead singer for Australia's Midnight Oil, pauses from his on-stage dancing, but only for a second, to belt out slower lyrics. Midnight Oil headlined Sunday's Planet Party at the New Sandstone Amphitheater. In addition to being the frontman for Midnight Oil, Garret is a lawyer and has been active in environmental issues.

REVIEW

Planet Party a pure pleasure

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

Planet Party packed alternative punch.

The sun shined bright and fell to a star-filled sky, creating the perfect atmosphere for the second and last performance of the Planet Party concert Sunday night at the New Sandstone Amphitheater. The line-up included Dramarama, They Might Be Giants, Matthew Sweet, Hothouse Flowers and Midnight Oil.

The concert played to a three-quarter full house mixed with old and young, hippies and neo-yuppies.

Dramarama, an up-and-coming band from Los Angeles, had an incredible sound reminiscent of pure rock 'n' roll, which is rare these days.

Although lead singer John Easdale said he was proud to be the "soundcheck band," his band started the day by proving it had just as much right to be on stage as the other big names.

They Might Be Giants gave the ultimate injection, getting the party started. Concert-goers moshed on the lawn and danced in the aisles to the accordion-guitar playing duo.

The band was backed up by sax, trombone, trumpet and glockenspiel, creating the unnameable sound that can only be done by TMBG. Songs included such favorites as "Particle Man" and "The Guitar." Also, the Brooklyn-based group gave the audience the special opportunity to listen to its new single, "The Sun."

Matthew Sweet's set started with hits from his new "Altered Beast" album such as "Dinosaur" and "The Ugly Truth." Sweet jumped between "Altered Beast" and his previous album, "Girlfriend." Followers of both albums must have been worked up with Sweet's lively performance.

Sweet showed his mastery of the guitar and finished his explosive set with Neil Young and Crazy Horses's "Don't Cry No Tears." The audience was definitely sad to see him go.

Dublin's Hothouse Flowers was a surprising change from the previous hard-hitting guitar-based bands onstage earlier.

Hothouse Flowers, a group capable of packing Wembley Arena, has yet to be appreciated in the United States. Members of the audience who were capable of mellowing into the mature lyrics and strong Irish voice of lead singer/keyboardist Liam O'Maonlai were captivated.

Hothouse Flowers' deep and moving performance was outstanding.

However, it was far from fitting to put them in such a hard-rocking lineup where they probably didn't get the recognition they deserved.

Australian band Midnight Oil headlined the night with a two-hour set, including a little something from each of Oil's nine albums.

Lead singer Peter Garrett and his environmentally conscious band couldn't be on stage without preaching to the audience the dangers of nuclear power and the Wolf Creek power plant.

To prove its point, Oil had set up a metal cylinder on stage that billowed smoke, symbolizing nuclear reactors.

Garrett said reactors were unsafe and needed to be shut down. His protest song of choice was titled "Gloria."

Overall, Oil's performance was full of powerful sound, and a playful light show put the audience into an incredible frenzy when Garrett wasn't philosophizing or lecturing them.

The most frustrating part of the concert was each band, except for Midnight Oil, had less than an hour for its set.

As soon as the audience was really getting into the rhythms, it was time for the band to leave the stage.

Take a minute–

to have a prostate exam.
It could be worth your life.

This year 132,000 American men will learn that they have prostate cancer. About 34,000 will die of it this year.

Every man age 50 and over is at risk. One out of every 11 will get prostate cancer; one in nine for black Americans. Many men don't know they have prostate cancer because it can occur and spread without any symptoms. A simple one-minute exam can lead to early diagnosis and effective treatment.

The Good News
Prostate cancer can be cured if diagnosed early. More than 80 percent of all patients whose tumors are diagnosed at an early stage are alive five years later. And now, even in advanced cases, the disease can often be effectively treated.

The American Urological Association and the Prostate Cancer Education Council recommend annual prostate exams for all men age 50 and over, and those over 40 who have a family history of prostate cancer or are of African-American descent.

Prostate Cancer Awareness Week
September 20–30, 1993 is Prostate Cancer Awareness Week. Medical centers around the country are offering free exams to men age 50 and over. The test is simple and could be worth your life.

A free prostate exam is available at Memorial Hospital Thursday, September 23 and Friday, September 24 with Fred Freeman, M.D. and John Devine, M.D., Manhattan urologists.

The free prostate exam is available by appointment only to the first 80 men to call.

Call Memorial Hospital's Education Department at 587-4264 on September 16 or 17 to schedule your appointment.

Take a minute to get an exam and ask your doctor about prostate cancer, because timing is the key to successful treatment.

Finney calls it quits and leaves worthy record

Gov. Joan Finney dropped a political bombshell on Sept. 3 when she announced she will not run for governor in 1994.

Whether or not you agree with Finney's politics or style, she must be given credit for the part she played in solving the tremendous problems facing the state during her term of office.

Several state historians said the 1991-92 and 1993-94 legislative terms would be some of the most difficult in the state's 132-year history.

Some of the governor's accomplishments during her tenure in office include dramatically lowering property taxes and finding a new way of financing the public-school system at the same time. A state mill levy that lowered property taxes and ensured school financing would be equal statewide was established.

Finney appointed a special task force to study workers' compensation, which resulted in reform legislation in 1993.

She has also been instrumental in supporting a high school freedom-of-speech press bill and several children's programs.

Closer to home, Finney gave $18 million in state windfall money, which could have been used on any state project, to help supplement the money students raised for the Farrell Library expansion project. Windfall money was also allocated for capital improvements on four other state schools.

No one knows if the governor's last legislative session will be as productive as the past three have been. However, one thing is certain. Her place in history will be secured, not only for being the first woman governor of Kansas, the first Catholic or the oldest.

Finney will also be remembered for having one of the most successful legislative terms in history.

My family: The poster children for the Weird Relatives Association

I heard an ad on the radio this weekend urging me to start my holiday shopping now to avoid the rush.

I wanted to exclaim — like my mom always does — that if they don't watch out we'll have Christmas decorations up year-round.

Or that I have trouble preparing for next week and my brain would undoubtedly implode if I tried to plan that far ahead.

But the chill in the air last week, the football games and seeing finals on my syllabi, reminded me that Christmas will be here before some of us have gotten used to our class schedules.

I love the holidays, and I'm not one to complain about Yuletide decorations before Halloween.

Christmas has the best decorations, and it's my favorite time of the year.

It's just the relatives. They make me wonder if I'm adopted.

Again this year, I will walk into the den of lions boyfriendless. It doesn't bother me, but my relatives crack themselves up pretty good ribbing me.

I play along. "Oh, he had a lot of work to do this weekend, Grandma. You know how medical school is. Maybe next year."

Right.

LAJEAN RAU

This year my siblings will be single, too. I can't wait.

Hanging out with the family is weird enough for me. It must be absolutely frightening for all the boyfriends and girlfriends who've come along.

My relatives are not a bad group on the whole. In fact, most of them are pretty cool. There are only a few eccentrics, which from what my friends tell me is a pretty good ratio.

One great aunt who lives in California has worn a lot of large, oddly placed brooches, feathered shawls and fruit-covered hats for as long as I can remember. She got lost at my cousin's wedding this year.

One calls square dances and makes funny animals out of dish towels. Or is that the same guy? I can't remember.

But the rest are pretty normal. I'm sure I get listed among the crazies in our family, considering they like journalists about as much as they like lawyers.

But even those, who for the 23 years I've known them have seemed relatively sane, have their moments.

He and his wife were, for all of my childhood, the only residents of Mount Vernon, Kan. He never struck me as particularly crazy, aside from the few summers he decided, for no apparent reason, to grow more melons than any small country could put away.

My brothers and sister and I got to sell them for a portion of the profit.

At this particular holiday moment, legalizing drugs somehow came up. I don't know how it happened. Usually we're so careful, and I think we were trying to change the subject when Lou caught on.

Uncle Lou raised his fork, and then his right eyebrow, and announced to the table, "I think they should legalize the stuff! All of it."

I've learned not to talk politics with any of my family members over the age of, say, 60. You're pretty safe with my parents' generation. They may not agree and might shake their heads and hold their tongues in an effort to let us "express ourselves." But with my grandparents' generation, there is no room for error.

Everyone stopped, mid-chew, and looked in Lou's general direction.

"Sure! They ought to legalize it, and the government ought to sell it out of little ATM machines."

I'm thinking to myself, how interesting. What an open-minded, progressive thing to say.

I knew better than to interject anything. As did everyone else. The girlfriends and boyfriends were visibly confused as to what facial expression was appropriate.

We waited for him to go back to his yams. But he went on.

"Then, they could keep track of all the druggies. And after a while, they could just kill them. Shoot them all. That'll solve the problem."

Maybe not.

They say people get depressed during holidays. More suicides, more murders. I guess being surrounded by family, no matter how crazy or eccentric, is better than being alone.

Maybe not.

FALLFEST

Collegian would also have called Woodstock a 'minor jam session'

Editor,

Having read today's edition of the Collegian, I was dismayed by the cover story "FallFest Falls Flat." It was sensationalist, opinionated and out of place.

I attended FallFest after the Western Kentucky game and thought it a really great event. What has UPC done to Andrew Tomb to make him write such an article — shoot his parents?

UPC ran other very successful events over the weekend such as the Activities Carnival. Where is it to be found in the Collegian? On the third page in a much smaller column.

Another article, "Crowd dances to Cat Jam tune," received a very favorable write-up, even though it had a smaller attendance than FallFest. Perhaps your paper couldn't afford to let the sponsors down?

People obviously worked very hard to make FallFest a success, and for your newspaper to run with a poor story like that one is I hope not a sign of things to come!

ANTIOCH AFFAIR

Big old K-State has no business implementing sexual consent policy

Editor,

I am writing in response to your editorial in Thursday's Collegian about Antioch College's sexual-harassment policy. I was a student at Antioch last fall and feel that your editorial was poorly researched.

Antioch differs so much from K-State that most of its policies would not apply here on such a larger mainstream campus, and they were not designed to. Antioch is a private liberal-arts college located in a village. Students there are very liberal and outspoken.

Females are a majority, gays and lesbians are widely accepted, and the campus is 98 percent pro-choice, making it completely culturally different from K-State. I knew almost everyone on that campus. In considering these facts before writing the editorial, the Collegian should have seen that the policy could not work at K-State before even attempting to figure out how K-State could implement it.

Obviously a 24-hour consent form and surveillance cameras, which you have suggested, are impractical on any campus, and such bureaucratic extremes would never even be considered at Antioch. K-State would never implement Antioch's policy, so why scrutinize it when we can write editorials about practical and feasible suggestions on how to prevent sexual harassment on this campus?

The not-so-old story of the plight of the white male

HISTORICAL MEN WORTHY OF HATE

Below is the disrespect guide for six white heterosexual males, all worthy of your contempt for their negative role in history.

1. Any astronaut, especially the victims of the Challenger disaster. Leonard Jeffries, a leader of Afro-American studies, is quoted as saying that the destruction of the Challenger should be applauded because it deterred white men from "spreading their filth throughout the universe."

2. Herman Melville, author of Moby Dick. This guy has been branded as an obvious racist, because he just couldn't resist making Moby Dick a white whale (genetically oppressive to other whales).

3. Thomas Jefferson. Although he penned the Declaration of Independence, Jefferson must be denied any and all respect because he was a slaveowner, a "hypocrite," a "total racist," and a "rapist," according to majors in Harvard's Afro-American Studies Department.

4. Abraham Lincoln. His inherent sexism is evident in the phallocentric wording of the Gettysburg Address ("Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation....dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.").

5. Any married man. Marriage is an "institute of slavery" for the female, and has also been defined as a "legal contract which sactions rape."

6. God. In Genesis, God works in sexist ways by presenting Woman as having been born from Man, rather than the other way around. Worse still, Genesis blames Woman for tempting Man into evil.

SARA SMITH/Collegian

I am a genetically oppressive person of disadvantaged gender.

That is to say, I am a white female. I am lucky. In every period of history, there seems to be a group of people who are sectioned off, their identities stripped, and are branded as evil by the intellectual leadership of their culture.

SARA SMITH

Straight white men, who are one of my favorite groups of people to be around, just can't seem to win any battles anymore. They can't do anything right. Their list of social "don'ts" reads like a manual for social depression.

"Don't ask a woman out on a date" because if the advance is unwanted (how are they supposed to know if they don't ask?), you may be guilty of sexual harassment.

And if you do get to the dating stage of a relationship, "don't open the car door for a woman" because this action implies that women are helpless.

"Don't watch John Wayne movies" because they portray women and Indians in a negative light. (I particularly like this one. I wonder if the feminist lobby has seen "McClintock," in which John Wayne paddles his unruly wife in public.).

Socially, straight white males were supposed to have all the advantages in America until the country achieved Enlightenment. So, instead of trying to raise everyone else up to that level, heterosexual white males are being pounded because of their supposed shared nature, which allegedly includes being inherently racist, sexist and oppressive in general. Simply because of who they are.

As the attack quietly intensifies, other straight white men are attacked, ones that can't defend themselves anymore because they're dead.

According to feminists, you can't even use the term Founding Fathers anymore because it's sexist. Then there is the attack on the men themselves.

They were all racists, it's said, even Abraham Lincoln, and we all know what a terrible influence he had on the plight of slaves in America.

In case you were taught mistakenly in grammar school that anything a white man did was good, refer to the chart to the left. It should clear things up and revise history for you if you still subscribe to the mainstream view of Western culture.

Chimp's death will aid research

KIMBERLY HEFLING

Sunset Zoological Park's youngest chimpanzee, Moja, died Sept. 6.

Severe enteritis, or inflammation of the gut, has been linked to his death, said Dr. James W. Carpenter, head of exotic-animal, wildlife and zoo-animal medicine service.

Since birth, 3-year-old Moja has had various health problems, prompting studies by veterinarians, doctors, research institutions and zoo officials.

"Moja did not develop as quickly as our other chimp babies, and our veterinarians and medical consultants have been trying to determine why," Don Wixom, zoo director, said.

Videotapes of Moja and test results from both visual and physical examinations of Moja during his life have been shared with other chimpanzee researchers throughout the country.

Zoo officials were studying the possibility of Down's Syndrome, Spina Bifida or other genetic diseases as the cause of death.

Further tests suggest Moja did not suffer from Spina Bifida. The K-State Veterinary Medical Center is studying the other diseases Moja suffered from, Carpenter said.

A study of Moja's life and death may benefit other zoos in chimpanzee research.

"We do not want Moja's life or death to have been in vain," Wixom said.

"We plan to share the information with other zoos and research institutions to benefit the future health and care of all chimpanzees," he said.

Schanee Johnson, curator of education at Sunset Zoological Park, said she hopes determining the cause of Moja's death will enable other zoos to recognize similar characteristics in their chimpanzees.

Recycling options available in city

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Recycling has been a popular topic in Manhattan, as well as the rest of the United States, for years.

Test programs have been set up, and studies have shown citizens support a city-wide program, yet no such program is available.

The main reason there is no city-run recycling program is a lack of funds.

A curbside recycling pilot program was conducted between May 1990 and June 1991 that studied 1,040 families.

The program studied the feasibility of continuing recycling efforts through a city program, said Monty Weedle, planning and special project director for Riley County.

"The curbside program was too expensive to continue," Weedle said.

The cost would be approximately $3 per household each month to make the program work, Weedle said.

If the public is willing to accept the cost of a curbside program, the city would continue efforts to recycle, Weedle said. Surveys showed support and willingness from residents to pay for recycling, he said.

A survey of the area that participated in the curbside program indicated 93 percent of the households thought the program should be city-wide.

Weedle said the city has no incentive to implement the program now. Such an incentive will have to come from the efforts and financial support of the citizens.

During the 14-month program, more than 288,000 pounds of waste were diverted from the landfills.

The recyclable items were transported to Howie's Recycling for sale, processing and marketing, Weedle said.

The city is promoting drop-off recycling at various locations in the city, Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said.

The city provides a yard-waste processing facility to residents that takes grass clippings and brush. Wood chips are sold to the public for the price of producing them, Weedle said.

Christmas tree recycling is located at Wild Life Park at Tuttle Creek Reservoir after the holidays, Weedle said.

Block and Bridle serves campus, community

Animal science club open to all interested students

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

Block and Bridle is a big club with big plans.

This 175-member organization is active on campus, in the community and on regional and national levels.

Sharilyn Maechtlen, senior in elementary education and club president, said the group was established more than 50 years ago.

"We are a chapter of a national organization," she said. "Missouri, the University of Nebraska, Iowa State and Kansas State were the four founding chapters of Block and Bridle."

One reason Maechtlen joined the club four years ago was because agriculture was not involved in her classwork.

"Block and Bridle is an animal-science club. But to be a member, you simply have to have an interest in or appreciation of animal science and industry or agriculture," she said.

"We're a social club, but we also provide services to the department," she said.

"That's just when we provide food for a group," Maechtlen said. "It's good PR for us and a fun way to meet people."

Recent feeds have included an Ag Alumni Round-up and an Ag Career Day.

"We also provide community service. Two years ago, we sponsored a bone-marrow drive for a student here at K-State," Maechtlen said.

The K-State chapter will be host to the North Central regional conference Oct. 15-16.

Ten to 12 other chapters have been invited.

"They'll come in on Friday, and we'll have activities for them," Maechtlen said. "We'll show them our facilities, have speakers and also have some dances."

"We're a real strong chapter," Maechtlen said. "I think that shows in our regional representation."

Spring activities will include the Little American Royal. Block and Bridle and the Dairy Science Club are hosts to the event.

"It fit in with my major, and I thought it would be a great chance to meet people," she said.

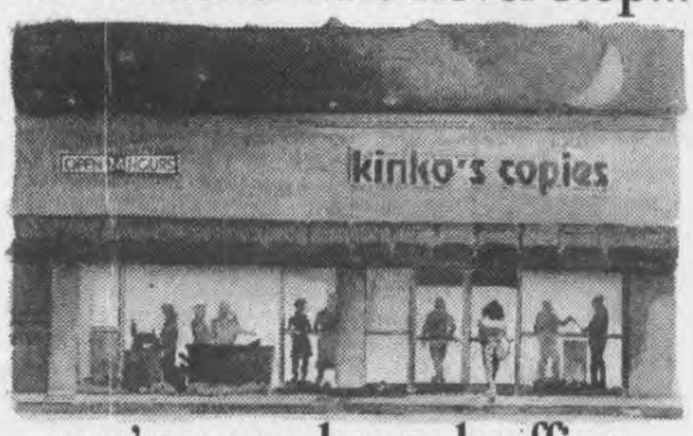
"I had a really good time. I met people from the other Block and Bridle chapters, and I also got to know the people from our chapter better," she said.

Shannon said there are many benefits to being in Block and Bridle.



"You get to know people in the same field. These are the people you'll graduate and possibly work with. They are connections for the future."

Big 8 off to best start since 1975

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Improbable as it seems, every team in the Big Eight could be better than last year.

No. 12 Oklahoma, No. 8 Nebraska, No. 7 Colorado and K-State are all unbeaten in their first two games. Oklahoma State and Missouri both won their season openers Saturday as the Big Eight ran its non-conference log to 12-3, its best run since 1975 when it posted back-to-back 8-0 weekends.

Bill McCartney

Iowa State (1-1), although it lost by three points Saturday to Iowa, is expected to be improved as well. Only KU (1-2), which opened against top-ranked Florida State in the Kickoff Classic and is crippled by injuries, seems not to be playing above its level of last season, when the Jayhawks won their first bowl in 30 years.

With the possible exception of KU, is it possible every team in the Big Eight has improved?

"It is a distinct possibility," Colorado coach Bill McCartney, whose Buffs have steamrolled Southwest Conference powers Texas and Baylor by a combined 81-35 score, said during a conference call Monday with Big Eight coaches.

"And Kansas ... probably will be better by the time the Big Eight season rolls around," he said.

"The rest of the teams are better at this point in time. You could see it coming."

One reason for the surge is at quarterback. Every Big Eight school but KU and K-State have established signal-callers, and, boding well for next year as well, Oklahoma's Cale Gundy is the only senior.

In addition, a bevy of young and talented players are making immediate effects everywhere in the league. James Allen is the first true freshman to start at running back for Oklahoma in the modern era, for one example.

"We're playing a bunch of first- or second-year freshmen. You could tell we were inexperienced," Oklahoma State's Pat Jones said. "But you could tell they're going to be good players. This is the best group of legitimately talented young guys we've had here in a long time."

Missouri, which opened with a 31-3 thumping of Illinois, thought its young players were coming of age when the Tigers beat KU and K-State at the close of last year.

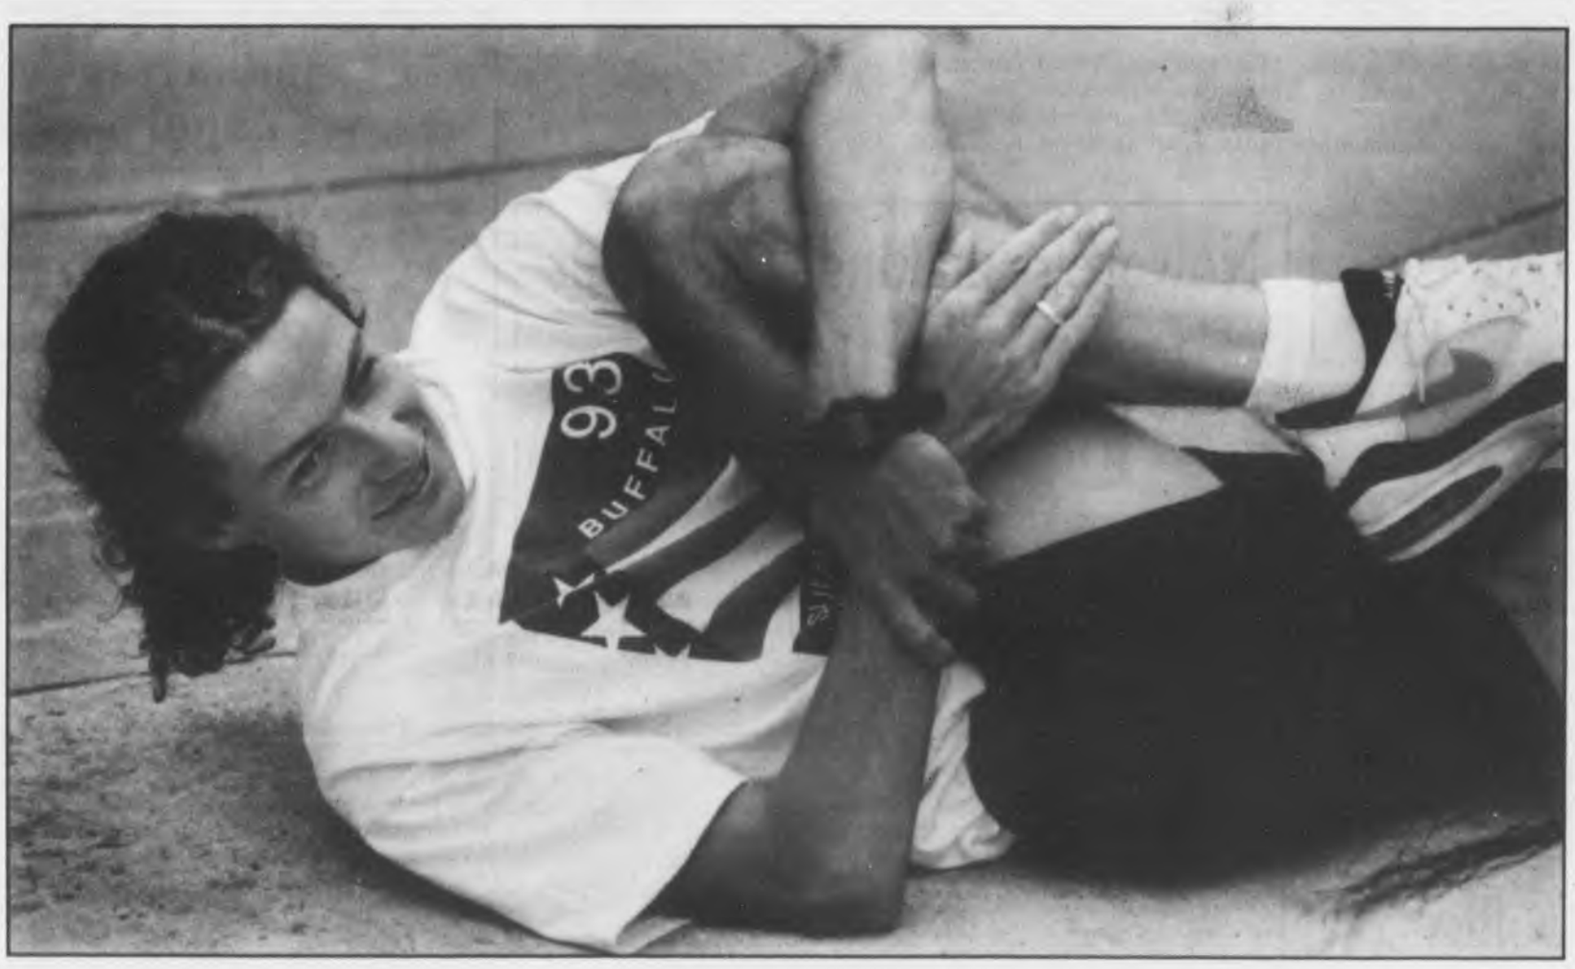
"We still have a ways to go, but we're moving in that direction," fifth-year coach Bob Stull said. "We had young players two years ago who weren't ready to play. Now, they've starting to get a feel for what it's all about."

"I've said all along that for the last couple of years, the Big Eight was improving a good deal," said Nebraska's Tom Osborne, the dean of Big Eight coaches.

"Teams like Iowa State, Missouri, Oklahoma are obviously much stronger than they were. Kansas had trouble Saturday. But overall, I think most of our programs from top to bottom are getting stronger. Colorado looks great.



"It should be a very, very competitive year in the Big Eight this season."

McCartney points to one factor in this across-the-board improvement.There hasn't been a coaching change in the Big Eight in five years.

"You can directly attribute it to the tenure of coaches," he said.

"The fact we haven't had any shuffling. Where there is continuity, there is going to be progress. I don't remember another conference doing this for the same reasons."

Cross country team short one member

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The K-States men's cross country team returns with a new coach and a proven team that is one man short.

With Francis O'Neill and Ryan Clivesmith returning for K-State, first-year coach Terry Drake said the team has one of the most potent first and second runners in the Big Eight Conference.

"Francis is an outstanding runner with a good shot to become an all-American this year," Drake said.

O'Neill, a senior from Long Beach Community College, finished ninth in the Big Eight last year and fifth at the district meet, a finish that qualified him for the national meet. The team also qualified for the national meet last year with a top-three finish.

"I haven't seen enough of the team in the short time that I have been here to predict how they will perform," Drake said. "I will know more after the first meet."

At many cross-country meets, team points are given according to the place in which the runner finishes. The team with the fewest points is the winner. A full team is seven runners; K-State has only six.

"I'm not sure about our team situation in the conference, but we will compete at every meet we are scheduled to," Drake said.

Further diminishing the Wildcats' stable of runners is the situation involving David Haskell. He was charged in August with battery of a law-enforcement officer and obstruction of the legal process.

"He had a little problem," track coach Cliff Rovelto said. "He is currently on probation and will not be allowed to run in the first meet. That is significant because the team only has five meets all year."

The team, minus Haskell, will travel to Lincoln, Neb., this Saturday for the Nebraska Invitational.

"I'm training the team more slowly than they are probably used to," Drake said.

"I will change their workout every four to five weeks, and hopefully they will run their best races at the end of the year."

A typical workout is to warm up for two miles, then go on a nine-mile run and return to cool down with two more miles — a total of 13 miles.

"That sounds like a lot of miles, but it is actually easier to do that than to have them run repeat half-miles and miles," Drake said.

Slow start for duck season

This weekend, I showed up at the site of the old duck blind, a.k.a. "old faithful."

Approaching along the winding gravel road, I said to my buddy, "Man, the water was clear up here during the flood." The bad part about this is we were still a couple of miles from where I usually parked.

Not willing to give the exact coordinates of this secret spot (just because a few of my hunting partners would skin me alive), I will simply tell you it is around Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

TAD MUSSELWHITE

Early teal season opened Saturday and will close Sept. 19.

Hunters may find the early season to be somewhat uneventful.

Before planning to hunt a spot around Tuttle that may have been fruitful for you in the past, I suggest scouting the area to make sure the water level, still some 20 feet above pool, is low enough to set up on. The spot I was anxious to hunt on was completely under the water, and there wasn't a good spot to set up a blind or the decoys without a boat.

I spoke to a game warden, who said the best spots in the area for teal are around the Olsburg area.

The best results in hunting early teal will be accomplished by going out in the evening and sitting in a spot where you have a good view of the shoreline and can see the birds moving from the water to their nesting sites.

I have not spoken to any hunters who have hunted the Tuttle area this weekend, but I have heard of other spots throughout the state. The best spot, I heard, was Cheyenne Bottoms in central Kansas, near Great Bend.

A hunting friend of mine said his brother-in-law limited on teal (four) in the first half hour of hunting there.

The regulations for waterfowl are the same this year as last.

Hunters are required to have both state and federal stamps, which cost $3.25 for the state and $15 for the federal. State stamps are available over the counter. Federal stamps are available at the U.S. post office. The stamps must be signed by the hunter across the face of the stamps.

All waterfowl in Kansas must be hunted using steel shot only — this includes all public and private land.

The enforcement of the steel shot is somewhat confusing.

It is legal to hunt most public land with lead shot as long as you are not hunting waterfowl. However, if you go out to get both teal and dove, you must be careful not to carry lead shot on your person if you have any ducks in your game pouch.

Most wardens will give the hunter the benefit of the doubt, but in order to avoid conflicts, always take any game that is in your pouch to your vehicle before moving on to hunt another.

Some areas are steel-shot-only areas. This includes Cheyenne Bottoms, Isabel Wetlands, Jamestown, Marais des Cygnes, Neosho, Texas Lanke and Slate Creek wildlife areas and Flint Hills, Kirwin and Quivira national wildlife refuges. I would suggest not to bring lead shot shells with you if you plan to hunt one of these areas.

Snipe and rail seasons are also open this time of year.

I have never hunted snipe or rail, but it is also required that they be taken using steel shot. State and federal stamps are not required for these birds.

Whatever you may be hunting, just be sure to check regulations. In order to increase your chances for success, talk to someone familiar with the area or go out and scout it. Good luck.

VOLLEYBALL

McKee, Liester make all-tournament team

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Despite the volleyball team's 0-3 record at the Iowa Invitational this past weekend, two seniors made the all-tournament team.

Angie McKee, a middle blocker, recorded 34 kills in the three matches, including a .689 hitting percentage with 21 kills and one error against Wright State.

The Wildcats, now 2-5, opened the invitational against the Iowa Hawkeyes in Iowa City Friday night.

In the first game, the Hawkeyes won 15-12. After that, Iowa went on to sweep the Cats with scores of 15-4 and 15-8.

The Cats were led by McKee, who had 8 kills, and Liester, who had 8 digs. Jill Dugan also had 10 digs on the match.

Against Pac-10 Conference team Washington State, the Cats did not win a game. The Cats were close in the first contest, losing 15-11.

Then, in the second game, the Cougars dealt the Cats a 15-5 defeat. In the final game, WSU topped K-State 15-4.

Liester had nine kills for the match. Kate DeClerk followed with seven kills. Co-captain Heather Zoerner only played in one game of the match. She totaled only two digs.

Wright State was the last team the Cats had to face in the invitational.

After losing the first game with a score of 15-5, the Cats battled back and took game two, 16-14.

Wright State then went on to win the last two games, both with a score of 16-14.

"We played well together the first game of every match," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said.

"The kids decided to go out there and play well early. We were taking some risks late in the games, and it cost us."

Dau was sidelined before the opening tournament of the season because of a heart condition.

Against Wright State she recorded 55 assists; against Iowa she had eight, and she had 23 against Washington State.

Snow, not rain, cancels game

DENVER (AP) — It's snowing in September. Welcome to baseball in Colorado.

Heavy, wet snowflakes swirled through Mile High Stadium on Monday. Just 24 hours earlier it was 92 degrees.

Snow had fallen since morning, and in an hour-and-one-half the Rockies were supposed to open a four-game homestand against Houston.

General manager Bob Gebhardt tested the grounds, walking from the clubhouse to center field. He talked to Astros manager Art Howe, then signaled to the media there would be no game. The game was rescheduled for a Tuesday doubleheader at 5:05 p.m. EDT.

It was the Rockies' second cancellation because of snow during their inaugural year — the first was April 12 against New York.

Robert Koopmeiners, a forecaster for the National Weather Service's Denver office, said the late-summer snowstorm, which deposited 5.3 inches in Denver Monday, was rare even by Colorado standards.

"It's not like record proportions, but it's fairly early," he said, noting Denver had a 4.2-inch snowfall Sept. 3, 1961.

Of the 5.3 inches that fell, only an inch remained because the ground still was warm from Sunday's balmy weather, when the Denver Broncos played at home.

Monday's low temperature of 33 degrees was a record for Sept. 13, falling a degree lower than the 34-degree mark reported in 1989. The high of 50 was a degree shy of the record chilly high temperature of 49 for Sept. 13.

Koopmeiner said there have been snowier Septembers in Denver — 17.2 inches in 1971. But he said the 5.3 inches Monday made this September already the city's eighth snowiest.

College builds housing

BOB MACHA
Collegian

A military base turned college campus is getting a facelift.

In an effort to make K-State–Salina look more like a college, several capital improvements are underway.

A residence hall is currently under construction, a project that will cost $1.9 million.

Jack Henry, Dean of the College of Technology, said the residence hall is being built as part of the improvements being made to the infrastructure on the Salina campus.

The administration is trying to make the campus more traditional-looking, Henry said.

The residence hall will contain 50 two-person rooms and will be the model style for the construction of future Salina residence halls, he said.

One million dollars of the funding will come from bonds, and the other $900,000 has been provided from a sales-tax agreement with the city of Salina, he said.

When the College of Technology merged with the Manhattan campus, the city of Salina agreed to place a half-cent sales tax to help fund the college, Henry said.

"It was done because the city wanted to do its part to make the merger a success," he said.

The duration of the agreement was for two years and raised $5.3 million in tax revenue, which is being used to improve the college, Henry said.

A new campus center is being constructed, as well as an addition that is being built to double the library space.

Work has also begun on a new technology center, Henry said.

Health is focus of new club

ANGELA YOUNG

"We target all minority students in health-related areas. Of course, anyone is welcome. We're non-specific about majors because people could be in physics, but decide to go pre-med," Edie Yourse, junior in pre-pharmacy and MASH president, said.

MASH started at K-State in 1987 as a satellite program of the University of Kansas' Healthcare Pathways Program.

Iantha Williams, junior in biology and pre-medicine, said getting new members is a definite goal of the group this year.

There are now four members of MASH.

Yourse said she agreed.

"I'd like to see our number grow to 15. That might seem small to other organizations, but that would be incredible for MASH," Yourse said.

Personal invitations were sent to every minority student in a health-related major, and Yourse said informational flyers have been posted on campus.

MASH provides students with social and networking opportunities, along with information on professional tests such as the MCAT, Yourse said.

The MCAT is a pre-professional test students must take before they can apply for medical school.

"It helps them stay on track as far as their timetable for courses and tests before they apply to professional schools. They have an actual path to follow," she said.

Williams said she joined MASH because minorities are under-represented.

"It offers them a network with other minorities," Yourse said. "That might not seem like much, but they might not feel comfortable being the minority with another group."

Besides the social aspect, Yourse said MASH meetings also offer speakers and study groups.

Body Art

Forms of self-expression

For Sara Ruby, nose piercing and multiple earrings, along with body piercing, have become a popular way of remembering special people. Some of her rings have been given to her by friends as forget-me-nots.

A 14-gauge hollow, bubble-ended needle pierces through a nostril, leaving a surgical steel hoop. Steady hands, a close eye and a constant drilling sound create the end result, on a man's arm, of a woman attached to a skull.

For some people, the best way to express a part of themselves is to decorate it. Body piercing and tattoos have become popular methods.

"I feel like a tattoo is the same thing as a Harley. You put on it what you want on it," Mark Salay, junior in anthropology, said.

Salay said he got his first tattoo, the lettering of "Harley Davidson Motor Cycles," from his wife 12 years ago. She used Indian ink, thread and a needle.

Salay said he decided to finish his tattoo 10 years later with the Harley Davidson wings. The tattooist also touched up his wife's lettering.

Tattoos are personal, Salay said.

Fine Line Tattoo artist Teddie Fischer said she has been tattooing for five years and apprenticed under her father, Jon, the owner of the Topeka and Junction City parlors.

"Most people spend between $20 to $40 for their first tattoo, and they normally get something small," Fischer said.

She said the popular location for college women's tattoos this year has been on the hip. Last year the ankle was the spot.

Fine Line Tattoo takes all the health precautions needed, Fischer said. Surgical gloves, individual disposable pigment cups and an autoclave, which sterilizes the needles and tubes at high temperatures, are all part of the operation.

Teddie Fischer, a Topeka tattoo artist, fills in details of a tattoo being done in her family's studio. She has been tattooing at Fine Line Tattoo for five years.

Tattooing is a simple procedure, Fischer said. Pigment is drawn into the tube, and the needle pushes it in 1/32 of an inch into the skin. There the body forms a cyst that allows the color to stay.

Fischer said tattoos are a form of self expression, like jewelry, but permanent.

"Most people that get one will get another," Fischer said.

Salay said although it seems tattoos are in fashion and more accepted today, he got his tattoo 10 years ago because of peer pressure.

Fischer said her customers must be 18 years old and not under the influence of drugs or alcohol when they get their tattoos.

A less common body art fashion today is body piercing.

Nipples, noses and ears are only a few of the places piercings are being done.

Sara Ruby, a student at University of Wisconsin in Madison, was recently interviewed while at K-State selling posters. She has five holes in her ears, a nose ring and a piercing elsewhere.

"It was really satisfying to have something so intense like that without any foreign chemicals in my body," Ruby said. "I think that's why a lot of people get several tattoos or get several piercings. It's to explore the pain that goes much further than decoration."

Piercing means different things to people. Mostly it's for decoration, she said, but there can be traditional, tribalistic and ritualistic meaning for some people.

Ruby said she has a lot of friends who explore pain from a spiritual or an emotional point of view. Piercing different places can bring people to different spiritual levels, she said.

"When I had my other body part pierced it wasn't even painful at all, but at the same time it was really interesting to see where the pain took me," Ruby said. "It wasn't pain like someone hit me, or drew blood or gave me a shot. I could feel every ounce of me tingling."

Ruby said the body-piercing process was a natural high for her.

Ear piercing can be done with a gun, but body piercing should only be done with special sterilized needles, Ruby said.

Belly buttons are probably one of the most unsafe places to get pierced, Ruby said. It takes a minimum of a year to heal because of the type of skin and its direct route to the insides.

Ruby said she got her nose pierced in a hairdressing place for $10. She had another body part pierced by a friend.

New Beginnings, 1107 N. Third St., Manhattan, specializes in multiple ear piercing. Body-piercing salons are found in larger cities.

The Gauntlet Body Manipulations in San Francisco has been piercing for years and is probably the first business exclusively for body piercing, Ruby said. The shop makes all its jewelry from expensive metals.

"You really have to know who's doing the piercing because it's a fad, and a lot of people will act like they know what they are doing, and they won't," Ruby said.

Tattoos are rising in popularity, ranging from small symbols to intricate peices of artwork spanning the full range of the body. Prices of tattoos vary in size and detail. The one above is the size of a man's upper arm — cost: $105.

'Man Without a Face' is a two-hour sermon

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

"The Man Without a Face" is basic and mediocre. It obviously struggles to be the big social-consciousness movie of the year, but for all its good intentions, it's just another two-hour sermon.

Mel Gibson, who directed, stars as Justin McLeod, a severely disfigured recluse and former military man whose mysterious history has become a rumored legend in 1968 Boston.

Newcomer Nick Stahl plays preteen Chuck Norstadt, whose desire to attend military school and follow in the footsteps of his dead father eventually leads him to McLeod, the one adult in town who understands and accepts him.

Coincidentally, McLeod is a former teacher. So, in the tradition of better mentor-student films, such as "The Karate Kid," "Dead Poets Society" and "Scent of a Woman," McLeod and Chuck become friends as McLeod prepares Chuck for the upcoming exam he must pass in order to be admitted to military school.

"The Man Without a Face" tries to make everything bigger than it is. It attempts to pique the viewer's curiosity as characters speculate about the cause of McLeod's massive scarring, only to solve the mystery halfway into the film.

It also overemphasizes the need for today's society to become more compassionate. In one scene, after she is shunned and ridiculed by her brother's friends, Chuck's younger sister and amateur philosopher complains, "What a stupid world!"

"The Man Without a Face" is full of self-righteous messages and forced dramatic catharses.

SHOWTIMES

■ "The Man Without a Face" is showing at Westloop Cinema 6 at 7 and 10 p.m.

The performances are not, by any means, completely without merit. As a whole, though, they are nonetheless contrived.

This film doesn't teach us anything we don't already know. In fact, that is what is so disappointing about it. There is nothing unique here.

Surely, it was once innovative to preach to the audience.

In fact, the current trend in message movies is to be more subtle with the sermons.

That's why "The Man Without a Face" is nothing special. Although the film is far from a complete disaster, it is undoubtedly not the film it could have been.

'True Romance' bombs with too much violence

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

"True Romance" uses the old standard formula of guy meets girl, guy falls in love with girl and guy marries girl. However, this movie takes the premise to a violent extreme.

Set in Detroit, "True Romance" is about a comic book store clerk named Clarence, played by Christian Slater, and a call girl named Alabama, played by Patricia Arquette.

Clarence is an Elvis fanatic. He is so deep into his fanaticism that he not only hears the King but sees Elvis in his bathroom and carries on a conversation with him.

Alabama is a misguided Southern belle who declares she "ain't no white trash." She has ventured to Detroit to start a new life. Unfortunately, she gets mixed up with the wrong kind of people.

Considering the script and direction given were lackluster at best, the audience can't blame Slater and Arquette for their adequate performances.

The film had a star-studded supporting cast: Bronson Pinchot, Dennis Hopper, Val Kilmer, Gary Oldman, Chris Penn, Brad Pitt and Christopher Walken. With this kind of talent, director Tony Scott's film should have been a gem.

Instead, Scott must have been blinded by the star power and unable to capitalize on his Hollywood line-up. His filming of "True Romance" was like casting pearls before swine.

The only enjoyable performance throughout the entire film was given by Brad Pitt. He plays Floyd, the burnt-out, detached drug-user who watches television all day and uses a honey-bear bottle as a bong.

The violence and bloodletting in "True Romance" brings the film up to the level of shoot-'em-up action flicks. With a combination of racial and ethnic discrimination, gratuitous violence against women, and a total disregard for the law, "True Romance" is an uninspired mix that does not produce an entertaining film.

"True Romance" is a true waste of talent, money and time.

Peace a possiblity due to signing

White House to the podium where the signing took place. The Israeli leader was unsmiling; Arafat beamed and waved to the crowd.

Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and Arafat's aide, Mahmoud Abbas, signed the agreements, the Israeli first and the Palestinian official second.

"We are sincere. We mean business. We do not seek to shape your life or determine your destiny," Peres said.

"Peaceful cooperation and coexistence are the only means for reaching understanding and for realizing the hopes of the Palestinians and the Israelis," Abbas said.

Both looked ahead with hope toward peace between Israel and all its Arab neighbors.

When the ceremony ended — 30 minutes late — Clinton led Arafat and Rabin over to many of the dignitaries for a last, lingering round of handshakes and smiles.

Arafat departed the White House immediately afterward. Clinton met privately with Rabin and Peres in a gesture that reflected Israel's long-standing alliance with the United States.

Outside the gates of the White House, police arrested more than 20 Jewish activists demonstrating against the accords. Police say the protesters were arrested for failure to move their protest.

The Israeli-PLO accord provides for mutual recognition, PLO control over the Gaza and the West Bank, regions that Israeli forces seized during a six-day war in 1967.

Clinton was gracious toward his predecessors, acknowledging Carter's role in forging the Israeli-Egypt peace agreement in 1979, and Bush's efforts to inaugurate an international peace conference in Madrid in 1991.

He quoted the Prophet Isaiah: "The cry violence shall no longer be heard in your land," and ended with words of peace in three languages: "Shalom, Salaam, Peace."

Looking to the future, Clinton said, "I pledge the active support of the United States of America to the difficult work that lies ahead."

Clinton was the hopeful host for this latest installment in history, pledging the United States would assist in implementing the agreements, and expressing optimism that Jordan, Lebanon and Syria also would negotiate successfully with Israel.

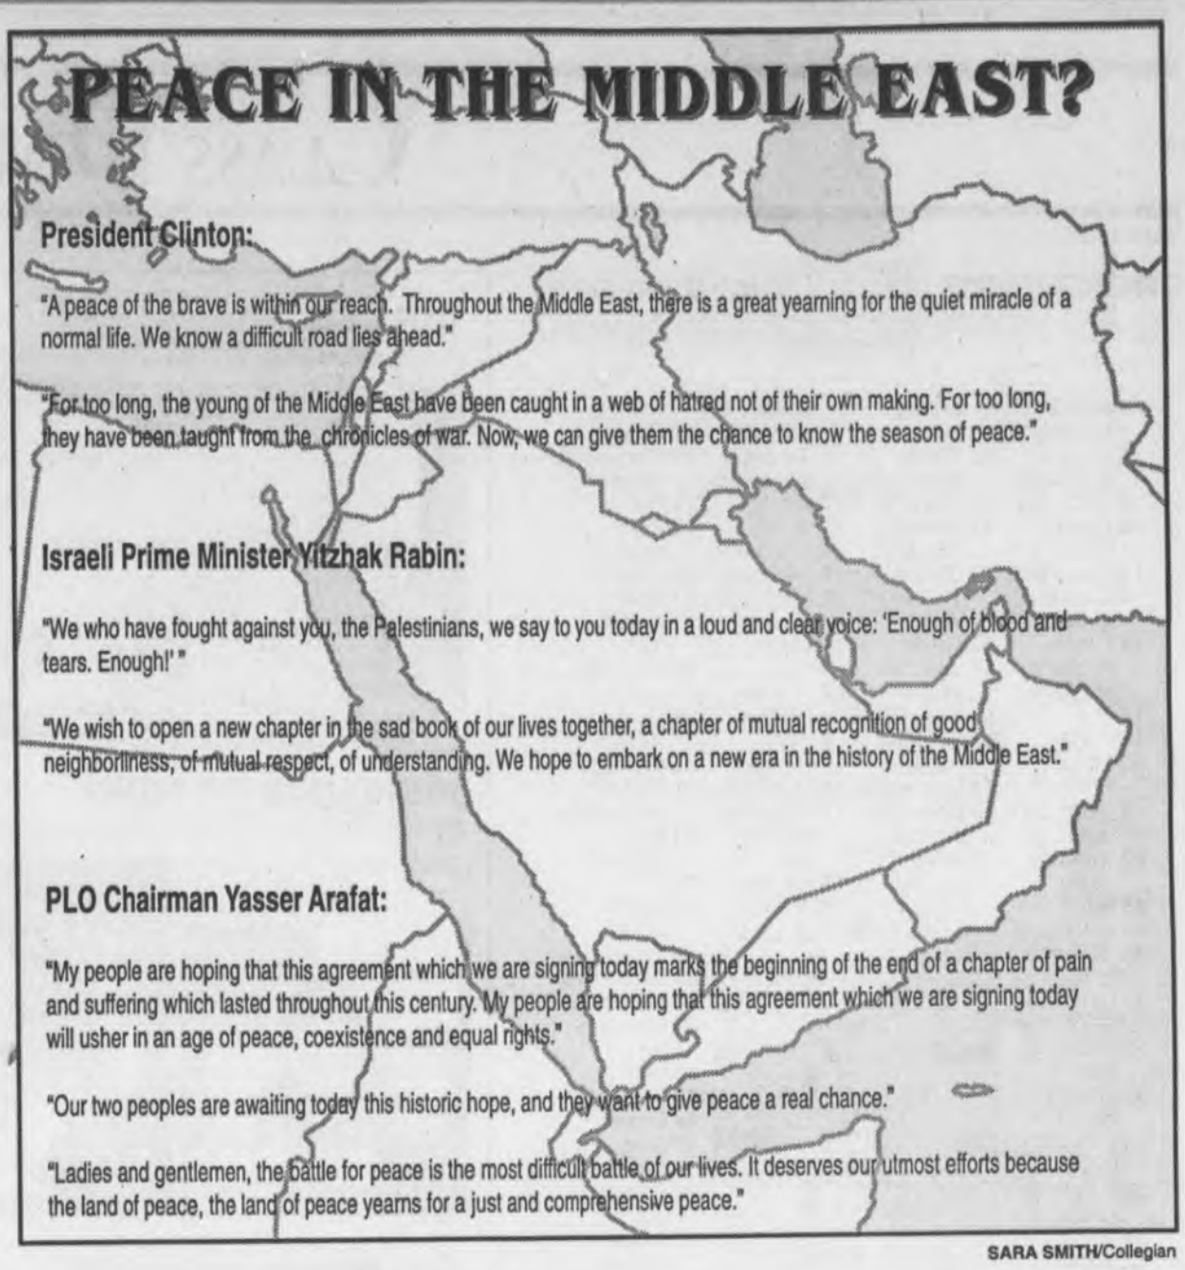
The White House South Lawn was transformed into a historical stage, from the 3,000 folding chairs set up on the South Lawn to accommodate a glittering guest list to the specially constructed stage and the 124-year-old table where Peres and Abbas were signing the accords.

More than an hour before the appointed hour for signing, diplomatic dignitaries began arriving at the White House. Arafat was the first of the principals to arrive.

By prearrangement, Rabin's limousine rolled up to the White House door three minutes later.

There was some optimism the peace movement was gaining momentum. Israeli and Jordanian officials met at the State Department on Sunday working over final details of a document that could serve as the framework for a peace treaty between them. Peres said an announcement was possible on Tuesday.

But the agreements leave numerous issues unresolved, and stops well short of creating a Palestinian state, the overall goal for the PLO.



Not everyone was pleased.

Jewish opponents of the accords demonstrated today on the White House sidewalk, chanting Hasidic songs and holding aloft signs of protest. "The state of Israel is in danger," read one.

From the Middle East came a reminder of Palestinian opposition. Militants launched an attack on Sunday in Gaza City, killing four Israelis.

On the eve of their signing ceremony, Arafat and Rabin underscored the enormity of their agreement and the gulf that divides them still.

Arafat said in an interview he hoped the agreement would build a future for the generations to come.

Arafat faces economic hardship

International aid needed to build new infra-structure

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUNIS, Tunisia — When the fanfare over today's PLO-Israeli peace accord subsides, Yasser Arafat will find himself sitting on a powder keg that could shatter his historic achievement — economic blight in the land Israel has occupied for 26 years.

Arafat is gambling on rapid reconstruction to help smother opposition among the 1.8 million Palestinians in the impoverished West Bank and Gaza Strip, where the first phase of self-rule will begin.

His most pressing priority is the 140-square-mile strip on the Mediterranean where 800,000 Palestinians are jammed into squalid refugee camps.

In addition to being a hotbed of anti-Israeli sentiment the Jewish state is only too happy to relinquish, the Gaza Strip is a stronghold of Arafat's main rival, the Muslim fundamentalist Hamas movement.

Palestine Liberation Organization officials say many Gazans were pushed into the laps of Hamas not out of political conviction, but financial desperation.

Leila Shahid, the PLO representative in Paris, said only by rebuilding the occupied territories can Arafat justify the concessions made to Israel in the eyes of the Palestinians.

"We must create jobs, build hospitals, roads," she said Friday. "If we don't succeed, it will look like capitulation."

That means massive international aid.

The World Bank warned in a new report that the territories face severe hardship without at least $3 billion in aid over the next decade to improve schools and other services.

But the PLO itself is bankrupt and Israel, which has a vested interest in helping a Palestinian entity develop, also has economic woes.

Europe, the United States, the Nordic countries and the World Bank all have offered to help, but so far their contributions far short of the $11 billion Arafat envisages he will need.

Of that, about $2 billion is needed immediately for roads, utilities, hospitals and schools.

The PLO expects as much as $750 million from wealthy Palestinian expatriates and is contemplating increasing a 5 percent tax on salaries of Palestinians working in the oil-rich Persian Gulf states.

The PLO is also banking on these states to help out.

But the gulf rulers, financially chastened by the 1991 Gulf War, have yet to restore the aid they cut off to Arafat for siding with Iraq.

In the negotiations on Palestinian self-rule, the PLO is expected to push Israel to open its markets for laborers from Gaza, where unemployment has swelled to 60 percent of the working population.

Easing the Gazans' burdens — and mollifying them with handsome handouts, an old Arafat tactic — could regain some of the support the PLO has lost to Hamas.

There is no shortage of Palestinian technocrats to formulate an economic blueprint for recovery. The Palestinians have a higher proportion of university graduates than any Arab nation.

But some PLO officials, already uneasy about how much the Israelis are really prepared to relinquish, worry themovement's entrenchedbureaucracy could stifle the new technocrats.

"We must create jobs, build hospitals, roads. If we don't succeed, it will look like capitulation."

LEILA SHAHID
PLO REPRESENTATIVE IN PARIS

These officials are concerned that Arafat will carry on the autocratic, elitist style of leadership that has characterized his three decades at the helm of the PLO and spawned corruption and mismanagement.

For years, Arafat's critics have been demanding democratic reforms within the organization and more accountability by the leadership.

Pressure for change could intensify if Arafat does not bend.

"Ideally, we want to build the nucleus of a modern state that can survive in the 21st century," one senior PLO official said.

"But the question is will the present leadership step aside to allow the skills that we have available to be constructively applied?"

Jericho celebrates Palestinian rule

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERICHO, Occupied West Bank — With their once-banned flag flying overhead, hundreds of Palestinians danced arm-in-arm Monday celebrating the prospect of shedding a quarter-century of Israeli military rule.

"Today we are celebrating our state from Jericho to Gaza," said Jamal Safi, a local leader. "Today we are holding our heads up proudly."

Instead of soldiers, the streets were patrolled by about 200 activists from Fida, a moderate pro-PLO party, who were wearing brand new khaki uniforms with small Palestinian flags under their epaulets.

Jericho, a biblical city by the banks of the Jordan river, is the focal point of Palestinian festivities for the accord. The city of 15,000 is expected to be Arafat's headquarters after Israeli troops pull back.

About three dozen men were dancing the debka, a traditional Palestinian circle dance. Others were waving palm leaves. The beating of drums filled the air.

Pictures of Yasser Arafat and the red, white, green and black Palestinian flags decorated the town's main square where Palestinians marched and shouted pro-Arafat slogans. A billboard-sized portrait of Arafat was painted on the town hall.

A week ago, Israeli soldiers would likely have chased celebrants across the square and ordered them to take down the flags. But the rules of the game have changed overnight.

"I just love to see all those flags going up," said Nancy Qunbar, an 18-year-old student. "I only hope we will have a nation one day. We want to live in peace like everyone else."

Other taboos were falling, as well.

With Israeli soldiers noticeably absent, the joyous flag-waving crowd boldly rallied outside the fenced-in police headquarters and called out the name of the top local Israeli security official who was once a feared enemy.

"People of the West Bank cannot be broken," the demonstrators shouted, raising portraits of Arafat. The Israeli official sat on the ledge of the police station roof and smiled good

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Left: Chuck Kipp, senior in education, takes a defensive posture to block a throw during the K-State Ultimate disc club's practice last Thursday. The game consists of two teams of seven throwing the disc downfield towards a goal. Players are not allowed to run with the disc.

Ultimate members call own fouls

Association rules maintain the spirit of the disc game

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

The Flying Dorothys have started practice for the upcoming season.

The Dorothys, the K-State Ultimate flying disc (Frisbee™) team, have been at K-State for 12 years. The team, known formerly as Purple Haze, changed its name because Northwestern University Ultimate was also using the former name.

Ultimate players follow specific guideline determined by Ultimate Players Association (UPA), the governing body of Ultimate. Ultimate is a worldwide sport with men's and women's teams.

The preface of UPA rules states that the integrity of Ultimate depends on each player's responsibility to uphold the spirit of the game, and this responsibility should not be taken lightly.

Ultimate is played on an official-size soccer field. Teams have a kickoff similar to a football game. Players cannot run with the disc. To score, a player passes the disc to a teammate positioned within the end zone. The winner is determined when a team reaches 21 goals with a margin victory of at least two goals.

"The thing that sets Ultimate apart from other sports is that the game is governed by players themselves — no other sport makes their own calls," Bruce Broce, senior in anthropology and team captain, said.

There are no referees in the game. If players get fouled, they yell foul, he said.

If players on the other team disagree with the call, they can contest it.

"The spirit of the game is the underlying principle of Ultimate. Everyone is laid back and out to enjoy themselves," David Fisher, junior in English and team member, said.

The team travels to many open tournaments around the United States. Last year, K-State was seventh at regionals and was 33rd out of 102 teams at nationals.

The team applies for club status like all other clubs on campus and has received funds for regionals in the past through special allocations. All other expenses are paid for by individual team members.

"Ultimate draws from a pool of 35 players, and about 18 people come out to practice," Broce said.

When the team travels, it takes about 14 players — enough to make up two teams.

"There is still spirit left in this game," Gary Ringle, senior in food science and team member, said. "With most other sports, all the fun is lost, but the key aspect of Ultimate is the enjoyment of the game."

Regents search for new director

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The search committee for a new executive director for the Kansas Board of Regents has a ream of applications to review, said Ed Skoog, student body president and a member of the search committee.

About 70 to 80 applications have been received by the committee thus far.

Skoog said he expected the committee will have a total of 100 applications to review.

The committee established the criteria for reviewing the applications at a July meeting.

"We know what we are looking for," Skoog said.

Skoog said the committee is not just filling a position. They are looking for someone who will shape where the regents will go in the next decade, he said.

"We are looking for someone with a lot of campus experience and who is aware of student issues," Skoog said.

Skoog is the only student representative on the committee. Skoog and two others joined the original board after concerns were expressed that there were no students, faculty or minority representatives on the committee.

The committee hopes to have a new director hired by Jan. 1, Skoog said.

In the interim, Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, will fill the executive position. Corman said he would keep the ball rolling until a new director is found.

One of Corman's first challenges will be to find funding to repair the damage done by the Anderson Hall fire in late August, he said.

The board is scheduled to hear a report on the fire during their meeting on Thursday.

The board is also scheduled to hear a report on the viability of Washburn University as a regents school in November.

Sickness closes day-care center

16 children ill; county officials investigate cause

KIM DILLON
Collegian

At least 16 children who attend Hoeflin Stone House Child Care Center north of campus have become ill since last Thursday.

Stone House has closed its doors voluntarily and is not expected to open until the results of testing come back, Mary DeLuccie, director of early childhood program, said.

It was originally believed three children from the center were ill because of termite spraying that occurred last Thursday.

Since then, at least 13 more children from the center have become ill, raising questions as to the cause of their illness.

John Murray, head of the Department of Human Development and Family Studies, said Riley County health officials have ruled out food-borne illness.

The time frame of children becoming ill is puzzling to officials because the first three children became ill Thursday afternoon, and the rest became sick over the weekend, Murray said.

A short-lived pesticide called Dursban was used, said Steven Galitzer, industrial hygienist for K-State's Department of Public Safety.

Dursban is a nervous-system poison, Don Cress, extension pesticide coordinator, said. He said the symptoms that are showing up could be from the emulsifiers or solvents that are mixed in with the Dursban.

Murray said cleaning is being done to remove pesticides from all surfaces and the air ducts.

A sample of the pesticide from the surfaces in the center and the pesticide can was sent to Topeka to be tested and to make sure the pesticide can actually contained Dursban, Murray said.

The Kansas Board of Agriculture will monitor the air in the center, Galitzer said. He said the results of the monitoring will be used to decide when it is safe to reopen the center.

The Kansas Board of Agriculture will do the testing Thursday or Friday after the cleaning is completed, Murray said.

Sharon Wolff, child care licensing evaluator for the state with the Riley County Health Department, said everything is being looked into.

DeLuccie said the primary concern is the health and safety of the children and staff.

Officials are not sure what has caused the illnesses in the children and adults at the center.

Wolff said health histories of the children from the center are being put together to help determine the number of children who are ill from the problem at the center.

"We're still in the process of putting things together," Wolff said.

Center changes name but goal of helping students remains same

Editor's note: This is the first in a three-part series about campus services for students trying to find jobs and for students trying to decide on a career.

Students looking for direction in their academic and career lives now have a place designed to cater to them.

"ACIC was developed to meet the needs of the increasing numbers of students entering as undecided," she said.

"Research shows that only one in five students graduate in their first declared field," she said. "There is a definite need for the services we provide."

The purpose of ACIC, formerly the Career Planning and Placement Center, is to provide information and assistance to individuals involved with the educational- and career-planning process, Fraser said.

"We use DISCOVER to help identify skills, interests, values, experience and abilities which have an influence on possible education and career pathways," Fraser said.

The center has 23 career specialists — students who have been trained to help guide others in their search.

"They've been very helpful, and it seems like the DISCOVER program will give me specific and productive results," Nabeeha Mujeeb Kazi, sophomore undecided, said.

"I was expecting something totally different, like just walking in and being told to read something," she said.

Other sources of assistance at ACIC include files with details on more than 500 occupations and every academic program at K-State, a computerized graduate-school selection program and geographic information from the Department of Labor outlining various areas of job demand, Fraser said.

"There is a lot of information on a lot of different career choices, even ones not offered at K-State," Angie Stoller, sophomore undecided, said. "The best part is that everything is in a central location."

"They were very eager to help me decide and show me what's available," she said.

"Our center is very customer-service based," Sara Doornbos, assistant coordinator at ACIC, said. "Everyone is greeted at the front door, and we sit down with them one-on-one to learn their individual needs."

If ACIC counselors cannot help students in their office, they locate the information or make appropriate referrals, Fraser said.

"Deciding on a major or career takes more than a session with us. We have the information to start the process, but students should utilize all the services available to them," Doornbos said.

"The services we provide vary with each student. Some may come in knowing exactly what they want and just need to use the library, while others may need more extensive services such as DISCOVER," Jana Eaton, sophomore in chemistry and a career specialist for ACIC, said.

Turnpike perks discussion postponed

TOPEKA (AP) — A discussion by the state ethics commission about the legality of perks provided to legislators by the Kansas Turnpike Authority has been postponed.

The Commission on Governmental Standards and Conduct received a request for a legal opinion two weeks ago from Rep. Rocky Nichols, D-Topeka. The decision was expected for discussion of the issue at its regular monthly meeting Tuesday.

However, Carol Williams, the commission's executive director, said attorney Dennis Prater is still researching the opinion. He is trying to determine whether there is a legal precedent to view the authority as a state agency, she said.

"To answer his question, we need to know if it's a state agency," Williams said.

Nichols wants to know whether the perks — such as free toll passes — violate a state law that prohibits any lobbyist or other person with a special interest from giving a legislator more than $40 in gifts annually. If the authority is legally a state agency, it could have a special interest before the Kansas Legislature.

The authority provides toll passes to the five members of its board, as well as expense-paid trips to conferences.

Currently, three legislators serve on the board — Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Longton, and Sens. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, and Dick Rock, D-Arkansas City. Another, Rep. Herman Dillon, D-Kansas City, was a member in 1991-92.

Although lawmakers serve on the authority's board, the full Legislature has no direct control over its operations. Forty years ago, the Legislature set it up as a separate entity, independent of state government.

Mother Teresa admitted into hospital

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Mother Teresa was admitted to a Calcutta hospital after she developed a fever, according to news reports Tuesday.

The Roman Catholic nun, who was recently treated for malaria, was in stable condition at the B.N. Birla Heart Research Institute, news agencies quoted doctors as saying.

The 83-year-old nun, who won the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize for helping the world's most destitute people, was undergoing a thorough checkup, said a representative for Press Trust of India.

No official hospital statement was released on Mother Teresa, who was admitted to the Calcutta hospital late Monday.

Tourists shot, wounded in Florida

MONTICELLO, Fla. (AP) — A British tourist was shot to death Tuesday, and a second was wounded in a botched robbery attempt at a highway rest stop.

It was the second such attack on a international visitor in less than a week in Florida.

Details were sketchy, but the couple from Yorkshire, England, were attacked early Tuesday at the rest stop on Interstate 10, Jefferson County, Sheriff Ken Fortune said.

They were sleeping in their car when approached by two men who asked for money, Fortune said.

"They woke up and tried to back out, and that's when they were shot," he said.

The man was shot in the neck and was dead at the scene, and the woman was grazed in the chest by a bullet and was in good condition at Tallahassee Regional Medical Center, hospital representative Warren Jones said.

There were no arrests.

The shooting site is about 25 miles east of Tallahassee in the northern part of the state. It is more than 400 miles from Miami, where last Wednesday a German tourist, Uwe Wilhelm Rakebrand, was shot to death in his rental car. Three people have been arrested in that case.

The death of the Briton brings to at least nine the number of international tourists killed in Florida in the past year.

Ford, union discussing 6-year contract

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Negotiators for Ford Motor Co. and the United Auto Workers were said to be discussing an extraordinary six-year contract today instead of the usual three-year agreement.

Ford and UAW representatives expressed optimism a contract would be reached by midnight, when the current agreement expires. Without a settlement, the union could call a strike at Ford, but a contract extension appeared more likely.

The new contract is expected to serve as the pattern for the other Big Three automakers.

Palestinian man shot in wake of celebration

JERUSALEM — Soldiers shot to death a Palestinian man who lunged at an Israeli trooper with a knife in the occupied Gaza Strip on Tuesday, the army said.

The soldier was slightly injured, military sources said.

Arab reports said the incident took place near Gaza City's main square when an Arab in his early 20s climbed up to an army rooftop position. The army removed the body, and his identity was not immediately known.

MacArthur will not return this time

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A statue of U.S. Gen. Douglas MacArthur overlooking the site of the amphibious landing that turned the tide of the Korean War may be relocated because MacArthur is a foreigner, an official said Tuesday.

A statue of a Korean independence fighter may be put in MacArthur's place, the official said.

"Some people now feel that a statue of a foreigner in Inchon's foremost park is inappropriate and shows a lack of pride," said the city official, who declined to be identified.

Wednesday is the 43rd anniversary of the 1950 Inchon landing, the largest and one of the most famous landings in American military history.

MacArthur proposed landing troops at the western port against the advice of most of the military establishment. He saw it as a way to decisively break the stalemate and push back troops that had overrun most of the peninsula.

Some 13,000 Marines went ashore and suffered 174 casualties. Within six days, 50,000 American troops were marching toward Seoul.

The site commands the best view from land of Wolmi Island, the first target of the amphibious operation, and the Flying Fish Channel, the deep-water channel warships had to navigate at high tide.

Those favoring relocation want the statue moved to the Inchon Landing Memorial Hall, built in 1983 in Inchon as a museum.

"Such a relocation would certainly be reflected in the eyes of the people all over the world as an act of ingratitude and betrayal," wrote Kim Byong-kuk in today's Korea Times, a national English-language daily.

REVIEW

Resturant offers taste of China

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

An old Chinese proverb says three things should be remembered when preparing a dish. It must look pleasing, have an appealing aroma and taste delicious.

The Hunam Chinese Restaurant in the Westloop shopping center has kept all three in mind. The menu offers a wide variety of dishes.

The entree was presented on a plate with a bowl of fried rice. The portion was large enough to make a meal for two or provide lunch for the next day.

The beef and vegetables were covered in a spicy brown sauce. The spice was hot enough to add good flavor without overpowering the meat and vegetables.

On the milder side, Pork Lo Mein is an option. A light brown sauce covered the pork and soft noodles, mushrooms, onions and bean sprouts rounded out the dish.

Many of the entrees have a large amount of vegetables in them. For those who would rather do without meat, vegetarian dishes are available. A large bowl of fried rice comes with most of the dishes.

Hunam's also offers a lunch buffet giving customers a chance to sample several different dishes in addition to soup and appetizers.

Customers can choose from chicken, pork, beef or shrimp. The crab rangoon and wontons were good but a little greasy.

The buffet is also open on Friday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

Service was friendly and prompt. A request for seating was met almost immediately.

The waitress readily answered questions about items on the menu and offered suggestions. The meal was ready quickly. Servers were attentive and checked often to see if anything was needed.

Diners have the option of smoking or non-smoking sections.

However, most of the seating is in one open room that provides no barriers to keep smoke out.

The atmosphere is casual and unpretentious. Oriental lamps and pictures make up a decor typical of many Chinese restaurants.

Salina ordinance to restrict hand gun laws for minors

Police chief asks city to take action, keep children safe

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALINA — Six gun-related incidents at the city's schools in the past two years are too many, said police chief Jim Hill.

Hill said he wants to stop children from bringing guns to school, so he asked the Salina City Commission Monday to consider an ordinance that would make it a crime for gun owners to store guns in a negligent manner.

The proposal also would restrict minors from having guns in their possession except in a few cases, such as when hunting or when receiving training for the safe use of guns.

"The potential for tragedy for young people is the same, whether they willfully acquire and bring guns to school intending harm or whether they simply discover them in the home," he said.

It's time for the city to take some action.

"The papers the last few years are filled with tragedy," Hill said.

"It's unbelievable what we're seeing."

Ordinances might prevent problems, such as the recent incident when one carload of young people pulled up to another car and wanted to drag race. When one driver refused the challenge, a gun was pointed at him.

Commissioners will consider the ordinance at a Sept. 27 meeting.

The ordinance should not be confused with gun control, Hill said.

"This is certainly not gun control," Hill said.

"All we're doing is telling supposedly responsible adults to control your guns. Don't let them fall into the hands of someone that is not responsible enough to make good decisions with firearms."

City Manager Dennis Kissinger said the city did not plan to lobby for gun-control measures.

"We don't care how many weapons you have in the house if you've got them locked in the gun cabinet or you've got the trigger guard on," Kissinger said.

The ordinances also would include a penalty of up to six months in prison or a $1,000 fine for violations.

The weapon then would be confiscated and destroyed.

Faculty Senate goes below belt with GPA bill

Well, they did it.

Thanks for letting us know how much you care.

It's possible Faculty Senate thought they were helping students who might not be ready for college. Or perhaps they were trying to help keep themselves from being overworked.

Whatever the case, this bill is definitely anti-student.

While it may be true that some students sometimes fall behind and don't apply themselves in their first semester, ending up with a low GPA, it also may be equally true that the first semester for many students is the worst. This time of transition challenges anyone's will.

And for those students who are not traditionally overachievers, this policy may expel students and inhibit them from giving college another try.

K-State graduates only 58 percent of the students who attend here. That percentage will become smaller with this policy.

Anderson Hall and K-State may try to put on a happy face, with pictures of the nation's No. 1 debate team and green, grassy lawns, but Faculty Senate has shown us the true message of the nation's first land-grant college: If you can't hack it, please leave. We don't want you. Stay away.

The truth of the matter is this policy will not affect the majority of students. It will affect just the handful, the minority of students who cannot achieve a 1.0 GPA in their first semester.

Or else they are sitting on their big Ph.D.'s and forgetting from whence they came.

It certainly would be appropriate if some pro-student faculty senator would bring this proposal up again for reconsideration.

At least he or she would go against the grain and put the students first, unlike the colleagues who put them second.

Diversity is key to strength

I was barely 6 years old when I got called a nigger for the first time. It sung out of the mouth of our paper boy as he whizzed by me on his bicycle. The sound of an ace-of-spades wedged in his front tire spokes flapping round and round almost drowned it out completely, but I heard it.

It was not the first time that he had called me names. "Half breed," "oreo" and "monkey" had been thrown at me before. It had started to become almost a tradition between the two of us to exchange insults as he delivered the weekly paper to my front porch. I didn't think anything of it. Mostly because I didn't understand what those words meant at the time. And partly because in the small Iowa town where we, the only interracial family in the area, were words like that got bandied about all the time.

I may not have understood the words, but I understood the look the paper boy sent with them and the voice he said them in. And it always made me angry. I remember I told him that he ate his own boogers and those of his mother as coldly as I could every time. I thought we were pretty even. Maybe because my insult had more words in it.

But this time was different. I knew what nigger meant. I knew people got killed for and because of that word. I knew it was one of the "Intolerable" words my mother told me I should never take, like being called a "chick" or being called "kike."

But what I did not understand was how he could say such a word to me when he didn't know anything about who I was or what that word meant to me.

My mother told me when she found me crying on the front porch that people like the paper boy and his parents, and the society that taught him the word and gave him an atmosphere to use it, had never been taught the beauty of the differences in human beings. They had never been taught that those cultural, religious, racial and physical differences, while they may cause confusion and misunderstandings, should be learned. And if they cannot be understood, at least they deserve to be respected.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Only then will we be able to have peace among all people. Only then will we truly be one race.

I thought about that when I heard K-State may be implementing a diversity-overlay requirement next fall in an effort to prepare students "to be successful in a world where people from different backgrounds ... must interact effectively with each other." In a country where people have been treated like second-class citizens because of their religion or subjected to slavery or systematic genocide because of their race, it seems a lofty goal to assume that one requirement will make any difference in the way people treat one another.

It seems a rather idealistic hope that one requirement will transform a society that is too ignorant and lazy to explore beyond differences into one that is more concerned with our similarities to one another.

But at least the University is making an effort to educate. They are doing as they should: Providing students with the tools and an atmosphere to test their beliefs.

Unlike many other institutions that have systematically dismantled our society by believing that we can exist as "one Nation under God" without understanding where we have come from and what brought us together in the first place, K-State knows better. For once. The University understands that we cannot exist as we did 200 years ago, color-blind to all but white, land-owning males over the age of 21.

It is that color blindness and inability to accept our differences that has brought us to the divided points that we have now. We have to make an effort, however idealistic and hopeful, to learn our cultural differences. And if we cannot understand them, at least respect them. At the very least, respect them.

BUT THIS TIME WAS DIFFERENT. I KNEW WHAT NIGGER MEANT. I KNEW PEOPLE GOT KILLED FOR AND BECAUSE OF THAT WORD.

Don't bother us with details of when concert time best for students

Editor,

Maybe I'm just missing the boat, or maybe I'm bringing up a point discussed long ago. If that's true, then just ignore me. But I never could understand why the Union Program Council got away from having the Welcome Back Concert on the weekend before classes started.

It's now held weeks into the semester when there is no need for a "welcome back" concert. In fact, much of the excitement of beginning school once again is gone and replaced with first-exam anxiety.

When I was a freshman in 1983, the concerts were great. They didn't need to have big-name acts or contests. They were just fun, and we had time to kill. But now I'm getting tired of the griping about poor attendance that accompanies each year's event. I almost wish UPC would just get rid of it altogether.

If it's not practical to have it before classes start, then perhaps steps should be taken to change that. I wouldn't guarantee a return to what the concert was like 10 years ago, but I'd bet half my meager checking account that it would be an improvement over the current situation.

▶ FALLFEST

It may not have been Woodstock, but it sure beat cash giveaway

Editor,

Andy Tomb, when you did the review on UPC's FallFest for the Sept. 13 Collegian, you were a very good journalist. For example, you did not comment on things that you did not witness. I watched Truck Stop Love along with you and about 100 other people. At the end of TSL's set, I saw much of the crowd leave. Luckily, you were not one of these people. You stayed until you had to go to work and got to watch the Fishheads perform a couple of cover songs.

You did not get to see the great comedy show put on by David Naster or the 200 people that busted their guts laughing. One would not normally believe that someone who has been on "Evening at the Improv" would come to Manhattan. Even fewer comedians balance 55-gallon drums on their chins or can play the drum solo to "Inna-gadda-da-vidda." It's a good thing you did not see him, or you may have given him a bad review, too.

You say the attendance was dismal, but what were you trying to compare it to? KU's Day on the Hill? If we had about $50,000 more to blow, you probably could. For the funds spent and the minimal publicity, I think UPC did pretty well.

Andy, I don't mean for this to be a nastygram, but this University is blessed with great diversity in people and what they enjoy. The only event you could have that the entire campus would attend would be a cash giveaway. But I prefer free rock 'n' roll.

▶ CAT JAM

KSDB 92 was main sponsor that made whole show possible

Editor,

I am writing in regard to the review of Cat Jam '93 in Monday's edition of the Collegian. Although the review of Cat Jam was generous, it omits the fact that Cat Jam '93 was a KSDB event, sponsored with the help of Varney's Bookstore, along with support from Vital Vinyl, Rick's Music Shop, Patricia's Undercover, On the Wild Side, Lucky BrewGrille and Charlie's Neighborhood Bar. The individuals from KSDB who helped organize Cat Jam deserve to at least have the station mentioned as the main sponsor if nothing else. A correction or notice of omission would be greatly appreciated.

▶ SOCCER CLUB

Maybe you should do research, tell SCGS before you call foul

Editor,

We are writing in response to the Men's Soccer Club's letter to the editor in the Sept. 13 Collegian. In the letter, two members suggest their group was underfunded and misled by the Sports Club Governing Council.

In actuality, Men's Soccer Club was funded for a majority of what they requested. As to travel, men's soccer, like every other sports club, received funding for their highest priority trip. Other trips could be funded through special allocations depending on availability of funds and the necessity of the trip.

In regard to officials, no funds were requested.

The equipment allocations for all clubs will be done on a special allocation basis to insure the proper bids, and so sports clubs can get the best price possible.

In reference to field rental, no funds were requested. However, Memorial Stadium and the Recreational Complex are available for matches at no charge.

We would appreciate in the future that when criticizing the process, the facts are considered carefully and the governing council is contacted so your concerns are dealt with directly. The Sports Club Governing Council is in its first year and has made every effort to inform the student body of its activities. We have also tried to be conservative with student money while at the same time funding many very worthwhile projects.

Music for non-majors

Singing demands time management skills and dedication

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

The K-State Singers do more than just sing.

"We are performing and acting things out," said Laura Kelly, third-year member and senior in apparel and textile marketing. "We learn to improvise."

Sarah Frank, sophomore in human development and family studies, and first-year singer, said she agrees.

"We are entertainers," Frank said. "It's nice to be able to express the music that we sing."

The Singers provide that entertainment by combining singing, dancing and instrumental skills into a variety of jazz, soft-rock and folk-music routines. Then they take those routines on the road to schools, clubs and civic organizations throughout Kansas.

First-year member Jim Demaree, junior in journalism and mass communications, said because their performances are so choreographically detailed, much practice is required.

"The week before school started we practiced for about seven hours a day," Demaree said.

Percussionist Kevin Clark, sophomore in history education, said since school has started the amount of practice time has decreased — a little bit.

"The first two weeks of school we had two practices a day that totaled four and a half hours," Clark said. "Now we practice for two hours, four days a week."

"You learn to take your homework on bus trips."

LAURA KELLY
K-STATE SINGERS MEMBER

First-year member Stan Stadig, junior in pre-physical therapy, said the demand on time will pick up when the Singers take their show on the road.

"This fall we will have about 10 performances," Stadig said. "Once spring comes around we have approximately 30."

Group director Gerald Polich, associate professor of music, said he is continually impressed by the students' commitment.

Kelly said because there is so much work involved, prioritizing academics and activities is essential.

"At first you're kind of overwhelmed, but if you learn how to work around it, it's not that bad," Kelly said.

Polich said despite the extensive time commitment, competition for the 12 vocal positions, percussionist, bass-guitarist and sound-technician spots is keen.

"We have had as high as 125 applicants, although we usually get between 75 and 100," Polich said. "To make the selections we have a preliminary and final audition. For the final audition we have a panel of former Singers judge the applicants and pick the group."

Kelly said the group is restricted to non-music majors because of the extensive singing requirements already placed on music majors.

"The fact that we're all non-music majors kind of sets us apart," Kelly said.

Demaree said even though there are no music majors in the group, everyone has a musical background.

Frank said she wouldn't mind making music a career.

"I majored in something to pay the bills. But if music works out I'm sure I'd jump into it," she said.

Polich said it is important that such enthusiasm and dedication be apparent in every performance, for both professional and financial reasons.

"We are not funded by the University," Polich said. "Whatever funds we need we make through our performances."

Clark said in addition to performing he enjoys the opportunity to interact with organizations, clubs and schools from throughout the state.

"It's a lot of fun," Clark said. "You meet a lot of interesting people and make new friends."

Kelly said such interaction is of benefit not only to the group, but to all of K-State.

"It's important that we get out and meet students and alumni," Kelly said. "When we do, we are a good public-relations tool."

Frank said there may even be an opportunity to represent the University outside of the state.

"In April we may get to go to Chicago and perform in a show choir festival," Frank said.

Frank said the group's first few weeks together was a special bonding time.

"We do a lot of things together. It's sort of like having a family," she said.

Demaree said he expects the group to become even closer.

"It's been explained to me that they will be my best friends by the end of the year," he said.

Skoog says smoking in, tuition up

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Rising tuition was one of many concerns raised by students during a Student Senate panel discussion Tuesday in the K-State Union Courtyard.

Twenty students attended a question-and-answer discussion about computers, parking, smoking in the Union and the diversity-overlay requirement.

K-State Student Body President Ed Skoog said the Kansas Board of Regents and student body presidents from each of the regent universities have reached a compromise on the tuition increases.

Skoog said the compromise is a 5-percent tuition increase. He said if the board adds in 3 percent, tuition will only increase by 4 percent as opposed to 9 percent.

"We had some success, but tuition is still going to jump," Skoog said.

Skoog said he and the regents do not share the belief that there is a direct correlation between tuition dollars and the number of students.

Student Senate chair DeLoss Jahnke said students want to know what the increase in tuition is being used for.

"Call your representatives and senators and tell them you want more responsible spending," Jahnke said.

Computer systems on campus were also discussed.

Derek Kreifels, business senator, said more than $17,000 in tuition funds go toward the computer systems on campus. He said out of the eight computer systems, the students get to use two.

There are computers in the Office of Student Activities and Services for student groups to use, Skoog said.

"We've been saving for a long time for things such as computers," he said.

On another issue, SGA hired Bharath Vellanki, graduate student in civil engineering, to study the parking problem and propose solutions.

Skoog said one of the solutions is to provide a private shuttle system. Students would park at Bramlage Coliseum, and three buses would take students to campus.

"With construction of the art museum and on the library, it will be important to park on campus," Skoog said. "The shuttle is the only economical and feasible way."

Buses may be in place next fall, Skoog said.

Trent LeDoux, student government internship coordinator, said a group of marketing students are doing a survey on student and faculty opinions about smoking in the Union.

Skoog said he feels the policy banning smoking in the Union was not done by student initiative.

"The girl of my dreams wobbled into my shoe store with tears in her eyes. 'I hope you just broke up with your boyfriend,' I said. 'No,' she replied, 'these heels are killing me.' So I slipped a Birkenstock® onto her perfect foot.
She was drying the tears when I realized Birkenstocks were beautiful.
I explained how the cork footbed absorbs shock and how the molded heelcup evenly distributes body weight. Then, she smiled and said, 'You sure know how to make a girl feel good.'"

Swim meet continues; Way sets record on first day

Karen Way, Alpha Delta Pi, highlighted the preliminary round of the intramural swim meet Monday night at the Natatorium by setting a record in the 50-yard breast stroke.

"I just jumped in the water and swam it," Way said. "I wasn't planning on breaking any records."

Way swam competitively last year at Trinity University in San Antonio. She also swam at Shawnee Mission North High School, where she qualified for the state meet four years.

Way will compete for the intramural championship in the 50-yard breast stroke as well as the 100-yard breast stroke at 8 p.m. Thursday.

Elizabeth King, Kappa Delta who placed second in the 50-yard butterfly, swam competitively for 10 years and gives lessons in her spare time.

"I have been out of competitive swimming for two years, and my time was bad, but I saw this meet as another chance to compete," King said.

Despite being an intramural event, the competition was excellent and intense, the swimmers said.

"I didn't think the girls would be so intense," Kelly Eakin, Gamma Phi Beta, said.

Eakin finished third in the 100-yard backstroke and will swim Thursday in the 100-meter butterfly.

In the lead for the team title is the Pi Beta Phi house. Erin Parkinson and Nikki Wunder took home individual championships in the 50-yard butterfly and the 100-yard backstroke.

Teammate Nancy Miller qualified for the finals in the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard backstroke.

"I am already nervous about Thursday night, but I am also excited because I think I can do well," Eakin said.

Preliminary races for men will be tonight, and finals will also take place on Thursday night.

COLUMN

Saturday a big step for Wildcats

During the five years that Bill Snyder has been coaching at K-State, he has tried to schedule non-conference opponents that the Wildcats would have a chance for victory against. Along those lines, he also tried to keep those games in Manhattan.

Saturday marks a big step for the program that Snyder has tried to build at K-State. The Wildcats face a Big Ten opponent in Minnesota — at the Metrodome.

TROY COVERDALE

Are the formerly Not-Ready-To-Compete-In-Division-I-Football Wildcats ready to take the next step?

Question 1: Which Chad May will show up?

Will it be the May who went 8-for-8 passing in the second half Saturday against Western Kentucky, or will it be the May who only completed 7-of-21 in the first half?

Question 2: Can the "Three Amigos" — Andre Coleman, Mitch Running, and Kevin Lockett — handle more of May's passes?

I know Coleman was extremely upset at himself after dropping the first two passes thrown his way in week one, but to miss a couple more in week two like he did has me wondering if maybe the passes thrown by May have a lot of zing to them.

Question 3: Is the defensive line solidifying after the secondary has made more tackles in the first two weeks?

And there's the clincher — the Wildcats will have to put two halves together to equal a win this weekend at Minnesota.

If there is a team in the Big Ten that offers K-State a chance to compete, it looks like the Gophers. They, like the Wildcats, have been a tough team to judge.

Minnesota was picked to finish anywhere from seventh to 11th in the Big Ten (Eleven?), while K-State was picked to finish somewhere between fourth and eighth in the Big Eight.

Jim Wacker's team is known for their passing this year — witness what quarterback Tim Schade did against Penn State. The Wildcats are known as a passing team. That's why Chad May transferred here instead of staying at Cal State-Fullerton to be an option quarterback.

The biggest factor, though, is the history of K-State football. The Wildcats have not won a non-conference road game in 14 years. In other words, K-State has gone since the last time the country had a Democratic president to now without picking up that road "W."

K-State hasn't beaten a Big Ten team since 1961— just one of two wins that year, and it was in Manhattan, at Memorial Stadium. That's ... oh, forget it! You get the idea.

I will say this. After five years, Snyder obviously feels like it is time for his team to compete against the next level of team. He might not be happy that the game is on the road, but the time is right in his mind, and I can't argue with that.

In scheduling this game, Snyder found a team that matches up well with K-State, rather than becoming a sacrificial lamb at the hands of a more talented team, like KU against Michigan State.

This will be a very telling weekend for the Wildcat football program. A win shows they're ready to play with the "big boys" in the conference. A close loss shows the same. A blowout renders this "experiment" a failure, and Snyder will have to boost morale by reminding the Cats that five years ago, he wouldn't have even allowed them to play a game like this because the talent wasn't there.

In other words, the weekend will end up as a step forward or two steps back.

FOOTBALL

K-State to play in dome for 3rd time in history

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Domes have not been kind to the K-State football team.

In the team's 100 year history, K-State has not won a game in a dome. On the other hand, they have only played indoors twice.

One opportunity came last season when the Wildcats lost to Nebraska 38-24 in the Tokyo Dome, and the other chance came in 1988. That season, the Cats lost against Tulane in the Superdome 20-16, but K-State will get another opportunity to break that barrier this weekend. The Cats will play at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome to take on the University of Minnesota at 7 p.m. Saturday.

"Last year's experience in Tokyo last season will help us prepare this game in the Metrodome," Coach Bill Snyder said.

"It was great practice last season," Randolph said. "The air is a lot stiller, and that makes it a lot harder to play in."

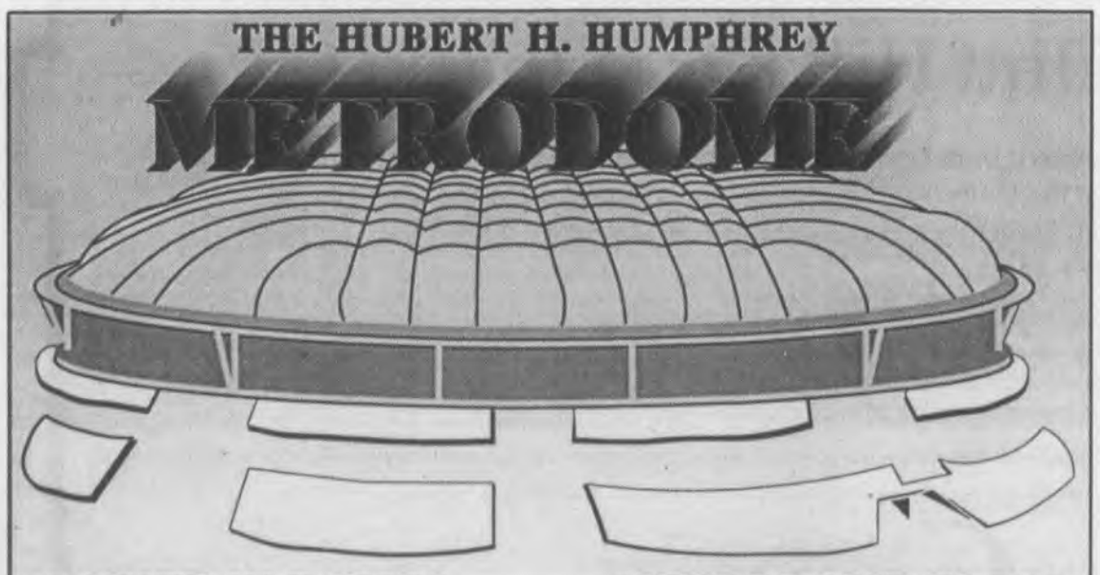
When the Wildcats travel to Minneapolis, they will play in the only stadium to have hosted the NFL Super Bowl, the NCAA Final Four Tournament, two World Series and Major League Baseball's All-Star Game, according to the Metrodome Facility Commission. The Metrodome is also host to the Minnesota Vikings, Minnesota Timberwolves and Minnesota Twins.

"It's an enjoyable place to play in, and it's an excellent facility," Snyder said.

The Cats have an advantage over the other two teams that have played in a dome. For the first time ever, the Cats are practicing in an indoor practice facility instead of Brandeberry Indoor Complex. The new indoor facility features a full-length football field that allows the team to practice in a similar environment to a dome.

"Our indoor facility allows us, from a surface standpoint, to practice on a similar surface," Snyder said. "We will practice every day this week inside."

In some domes, such as the Superdome in New Orleans, the crowd noise can be a problem for the visiting team.



"In the Metrodome, the noise shouldn't be too much of a problem," Snyder said. "They accumulate their student body in the left end zone. It is expanded enough, because of the baseball field, that it has never been a real factor.

"We always played up there when I was at Iowa in front of a packed house, because the two states adjoined each other. It was going to be as loud as it could get and I can't recall that we had any problems at all."

An advantage to playing inside a dome is that you don't have to deal with the outdoor elements.

"I don't mind playing inside," Snyder said. "It takes away the elements. I have always said that I do like playing in the elements, but the players would probably say that they don't mind not playing outside.

"Everything is usually calm inside a dome," Snyder said. "There is a breeze that runs though the Metrodome that you don't usually find."

K-STATE IN DOMES

- K-State suffered a 1988 loss to Tulane in the Superdome.
- Last season the Cats lost to Nebraska in the Tokyo Dome.
- The Cats will face the University of Minnesota at 7 p.m., Sat., Sept. 18.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Sox down Royals 8-3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Gene Lamont made one of those decisions Tuesday night that make managers look smart. He decided not to pinch hit George Bell for Ivan Calderon.

After deciding Calderon might fare better than Bell against Kansas City starter Mike Magnante, the Chicago manager watched Calderon smack a tie-breaking, bases-loaded double in an 8-3 victory over Kansas City.

The victory, coupled with Texas' loss to Cleveland, hiked Chicago's AL West lead to 3 1/2 games over the Rangers and six over the Royals.

"I had a dream last night (Calderon) was going to hit a triple down the line," grinned Lamont, whose White Sox had won only two of seven before Tuesday night. "Actually, I didn't think George matched up real well with Magnante. I remember last year George had a hard time with Magnante. Ivan hits off-speed stuff pretty well."

Calderon doubled and scored in the second as the White Sox took a 2-0 lead. Then in the seventh with the score tied at 3 and the bases full, Calderon pulled reliever Stan Belinda's first pitch down the left-field line for a three-run double.

"I kept looking over there thinking they were going to pinch hit for me," Calderon said. "I was happy to see that they were going to let me hit. I was thinking he might throw me a fastball inside, and he did. It feels good to contribute."

"We pretty much knew we couldn't win the thing," said center fielder Brian McRae. "We knew it's pretty much a done deal that we can't contend. But that doesn't change the way we play day in and day out. We still want to win every game and get a hit every time up there."

Jason Bere (9-5), who struck out 13 against Boston in his last start, gave up six hits and four walks while striking out five.

He was lifted in favor of Jose DeLeon after walking Greg Gagne leading off the seventh.

The Royals scored three in the fourth to take a 3-2 lead, but Frank Thomas' one-out double launched Chicago's seventh-inning rally.

After Hipolito Pichardo (6-8) walked Ellis Burks and Warren Newsom singled off Pichardo's hand, reliever Billy Brewer issued a bases-loaded walk to Kevin Ventura before Calderon cleared the bases.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶YOUNG'S MISERY ENDS

NEW YORK (AP) — Anthony Young's miserable season has finally come to an end.

The New York Mets pitcher, who set the Major League record for straight losses, has torn a ligament in his left thumb and will undergo surgery on Thursday.

The Mets said Tuesday that Young will be operated on by Dr. Richard Eaton, who will repair a torn medial collateral ligament. Young injured the thumb Sept. 5 at Chicago while diving for a ball hit by Dwight Smith.

Young ended his record 27-game losing streak on July 28 against the Florida Marlins. He is the third Met scheduled for surgery this week. Outfielder Bobby Bonilla had arthroscopic surgery Monday on his left shoulder, and infielder Tim Bogar is scheduled for surgery Wednesday.

In addition, the Mets said Tuesday that pitcher Josias Manzanillo will have his right foot placed in a brace-cast for two weeks because of a sprained ligament in his right foot. Manzanillo probably won't play again this season.

▶DUVA MAY FILE COMPLAINT

NEW YORK (AP) — Pernell Whitaker's promoter, believing a ringside judge exceeded his powers, says his fighter should be made the winner of last week's World Boxing Council welterweight title bout with Julio Cesar Chavez.

Dan Duva has asked the Texas Department of Licensing and Regulation, which oversees boxing in the state, to take such action regarding Friday night's draw in San Antonio.

A department representative said no action could be taken until a formal complaint is filed.

The controversy concerns the sixth round when Whitaker threw a low body punch. Referee Joe Cortez stopped the bout for 30 to 45 seconds to allow Chavez to recover but did not deduct a point, obviously considering the low blow unintentional.

James Lawton, writing in the Daily Express in London, reported Vann said "The referee didn't take off a point, but I thought it had to be done."

Resources available for gay people

Dear Cassandra,

I am writing to you in response to your letter to "Closet bisexual male" in last Wednesday's Collegian.

I applaud you for your sensitivity to his issues. Being openly homosexual or bisexual does not mean that one must be politically active or shouting from the street corners. It takes a special kind of person to be "politically out," and most gay people are not that way.

I do want to let you know about a couple of other resources lesbian, bisexual and gay individuals have in the Manhattan area. The Flint Hills Alliance Inc. is a non-profit corporation, separate from the Bisexual & Gay & Lesbian Society, and not affiliated with KSU.

The Alliance offers an educational and informational resource center for lesbian, bisexual and gay individuals, where they can come for information and support.

We have an office on the second floor of 1221 Thurston St. (UFM), which is open Thursday evenings, Saturdays and Sundays.

"Closet bisexual male" can also anonymously call the Gay and Lesbian information line at 587-0016 if he needs to talk to someone about lesbian and gay issues. He doesn't have to tell us his name if he needs to talk.

Just to keep you informed of what is available in the Manhattan area. Thanks for your good work!

Signed,

President of the Flint Hills Alliance Inc.

Dear Prez,

Thank you so much for writing. I only wish I had known about your organization sooner. I hope "Closet bisexual male" and anyone in need of support will read your letter.

'Late Night' replacement premieres

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A jittery, gum-chewing Conan O'Brien, television's tallest unknown late-night comedian, succeeded David Letterman as host of the network's "Late Night" franchise Monday night.

"Something's wrong! Something's really wrong!" said O'Brien, answering his opening applause with a feigned, nauseated, panic attack.

He raced to the rear curtain but collected himself.

"No. I'm fine, really! I'm fine!" he said. The audience recovered, too, and continued its applause.

"Well, I've been in show business 45 seconds," he said, "and this is the nicest reception I've ever had."

O'Brien said he'd always wanted to be a talk-show host, even as a teenager.

Back then, of course, one skeptic said, "O'Brien, the day that you get your talk show is the day there's peace in the Middle East."

He walked to his desk on the new "Late Night" set, a simulated New York City study, and introduced comedian Andy Richter as a friend, some might even say a sidekick.

"Calm yourself!" he said to Richter. "We've got to be professional. We can't act like guys who are too young to be on TV!"

He also introduced Max Weinberg, longtime drummer for Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band, and now the drummer for "Late Night's" band, the Max Weinberg Seven.

In one, the fine print of a funeral director's ad promised, "We will make the death of your loved one the most frightening and disturbing experience you've ever endured."

Study to examine TV violence

Professors seek $250,000 grant for group conference

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

America has a new-found commitment to eliminating the harmful effects of television on its young, steady viewers. In October, three local professionals will test the truth in that commitment.

Dr. Roy Menninger, chairman of the Menninger Foundation in Topeka; Tom Grimes, professor of journalism and mass communications; and John Murray, professor and department head of human development and family studies, will submit an application to the National Institute of Mental Health requesting $250,000-$300,000 to fund a new type of conference.

Grimes said this most recent application for a four-group conference was at the recommendation of NIMH, which allocates money according to funding priority. The new application is a modification of the original, which called for a single conference.

He said the newest proposal calls for a multi-faceted conference that would bring together experts in different fields. Social and medical scientists, cultural-studies experts and lawyers would meet to discuss and predict problems associated with TV violence and the regulations against it.

Ultimately, Grimes said, he hopes the new plan will give the proposal a higher funding priority in the eyes of NIMH and will guarantee him, Murray and Menninger the money to carry it through.

Rather than run another series of experiments, Grimes said this conference would evaluate the severity of the effects of TV violence, based on results from past surveys and lab experiments.

Menninger said studies prove TV violence increases the probability that viewers themselves will engage in violent acts.

"Fundamentally, problems won't change until there is a broader understanding," Menninger said.

The three said they are all in accordance that TV has some sort of influence on people.

"It is naive to think that television has not influenced society," Grimes said.

Grimes said the remaining question is if television, being too violent, negatively affects people by promoting long-term, anti-social behavior. He said there are certain populations with whom such correlations are more likely to be found: latch-key kids and the mentally ill.

Murray said TV violence affects viewers in three ways. First, it is linked with short-term and long-term aggressive behavior. Secondly, it develops the "Mean World Syndrome" in viewers, which causes the viewer to believe real-life is just as violent as TV life. Finally, it desensitizes.

He mentioned a study by colleague Dr. Aletha Huston. Murray said Huston performed a classic study in which each third of 100 preschool children was assigned a different TV diet. One third steadily watched "Batman" and "Superman" cartoons. Another watched "Mr. Rogers." The final group was assigned travelogues containing no violence or pro-social messages.

The results came out on the school playground, he said. The cartoon viewers were found to be more aggressive, and the "Mr. Rogers" viewers were more cooperative.

Murray said the travelogue group was confused.

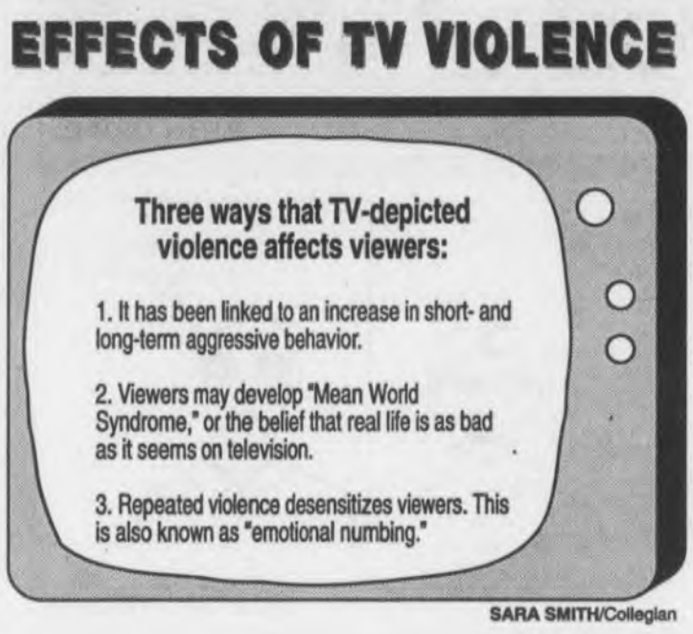
"They were puzzled why they were beaten up by one group and consoled by another," he said.

Murray also said studies show there are only five violent acts in every hour of prime-time TV, but there are 25 violent acts per hour of Saturday morning programs. He suggested cartoons trivialize violence.

"The worry is that cartoon violence appeals to a young audience, and it's supposed to be laughed at," he said.

Murray and Grimes mentioned several other sources of what they considered to be trivializations of violence. They included "teenage-slasher films" — specifically "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre" — MTV videos that are both erotic and aggressive, and the made-for-TV movie "The Burning Bed."

"The fear is that violence mixed with sex fosters a less objectionable attitude toward rape," Grimes said.



He said a steady diet of such programming may create long-term effects.

The three should learn by spring 1994 if NIMH will fund the proposed project. Grimes said they will proceed, at that point, unbiased.

"Violent television, despite our expectations, may have no long-lasting or important effect on its viewers, except for the mentally ill and other special populations," he said. "But for those we think of as normal, it may have no impact. We are prepared to find that to be the case."

He said this conference would be different from other social and medical science work because of its objectivity.

"Most people who are in this discipline expect to find a problem, and that expectancy can indeed create a conclusion that is unwarranted," Grimes said.

Skunks choose K-State as home

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

The number of campus skunk sightings has grown this year, K-State Police chief Charles Beckom said.

"There has been a slight increase in the number of sightings — a lot of that is attributed to the weather. We had a mild winter, which makes it more conducive to reproduce," Beckom said.

He said with warmer winters, there is a better supply of food, which makes it easier for small animals to live.

Skunks live around humans because there is food around, Deborah Briggs, director of K-State's rabies lab, said. Skunks also eat grubs and mice.

Ford Hall is one of the areas on campus that has had problems with skunks.

"The animals like to roam around the Derby Complex," Dedra Woydziak, senior in animal science, said. "I haven't seen any this year, but I've smelled them between the Ford and Haymaker parking lots. I could tell they had been there."

"When a complaint has been lodged, we go out and set up a trap in the general location of where the skunk was spotted," Dwain Archer, manager of parking services, said. "The trap is a cage. We do not kill the skunks. We give them to the vet-med department."

There is a danger with some of these skunks.

Skunks are the number-one animal that carries rabies in Kansas, Archer said.

"Last year, we had 335 positive skunks," he said. "This year, there have been 50 positive skunks reported to this date.

"We have three rabid skunks and one rabid bat in our lab," he said.

"I don't think they should be totally eliminated — I think they should be left alone unless they cause a problem," Briggs said.

▶KU to emphasize improved writing

LAWRENCE — Once upon a time, college students majoring in such number-intensive fields as accounting could get away with minimal demands on their writing skills.

This is changing. At the University of Kansas, the emphasis on improving students' writing is such that even the accounting faculty is working the subject into course work.

"My discipline tends to be associated with numbers," Bruce Bublitz, associate professor of business, said. "The fact of the matter is, accounting today deals as much with communication as number-crunching."

The risk of irritating students with something they'd rather avoid — the rules of grammar — is one that must be taken as their general facility with the language seems to decline, Bublitz and others say.

Many professors believe too many students are unable to pull material together into a coherent argument, said Jim Hartman, director of the university's Writing Center. They need to learn to write with clarity and accuracy, he said.

"There is a gap between performance and expectations," he said.

But he cautioned against generalizing that universities are full of stone illiterates.

Mideast peace treaty not acceptable to Palestinian hard-liners

BRIEFLY

■ Two PLO factions are considering quitting the movement and joining forces with others, possibly to form an alternative PLO.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Lurking in the shadows as Yasser Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin exchanged handshakes over their historic peace treaty are extremists on both sides who feel betrayed and have vowed to wreck the agreement.

Whether they will be able to is not yet clear. But many insiders fear the long hoped for era of co-existence between Arab and Jew will, at the very least, be ushered in by inter-Palestinian bloodshed.

The Arab hard-liners could also launch a new wave of terrorism against Israel, the United States and countries that pump economic aid into Arafat's mini-state in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho.

Arafat's aides, swept up in the euphoria of events, are scoffing — publicly at least — at threats by his radical rivals and firebrand Muslim fundamentalists to destroy the peace agreement and assassinate the PLO chief.

The bewildering speed with which events have unfolded since Arafat's secret negotiations with Israel were disclosed Aug. 28 has left his opponents little time to organize a coherent counterstrategy beyond noisy street protests.

But Arafat faces not just traditional Palestinian hard-liners opposed to any dealings with Israel, but close, longtime comrades who believe he has sold out the Palestinian struggle.

Two of the PLO's biggest factions, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Marxist Democratic Front, are considering quitting the movement and joining forces with the fundamentalist Hamas, possibly to form an alternative PLO to give coherence to the anti-Arafat opposition.

Many Palestinians in Jordan believe that a power struggle and bloody in-fighting will erupt when Arafat takes control of Gaza and Jericho. Gaza, a Hamas stronghold, is likely to be a flashpoint.

"It's going to be a bloodbath. Many people don't like what's happening," said political analyst Jamal Shaer, a former Cabinet minister. "The radicals and fundamentalists will fight him, maybe attempt to overthrow him and take over."

Labib Kamhawi, a political science professor at Jordan University, said, "Violence can be expected if Arafat curbs these people.

"He's more inclined to use force than the opposition, just to confirm his authority. But he'll face a lot of difficulty containing acts of violence."

Thousands of armed Israeli settlers in the territories have also sworn to fight the peace plan and could be joined by their hard-line countrymen, many of them army veterans, if Arafat fails to keep the lid on.

Palestinian hawks say the nearly 6-year-old Palestinian uprising in the occupied territories will go on, despite Arafat's agreement to halt it.

They could provoke an Israeli backlash by terrorist attacks on the Jewish state or the settlements.

"If Arafat goes by the agreement — calls for protecting Israel from any violence, thatwill lead to direct conflict with Palestinians who don't want to surrender their arms. Fighting Israel is an act of freedom for them," Kamhawi said.

The slaying Sunday of three Israeli soldiers in Gaza underlined the potency of that threat.

Theoretically, Arafat has the firepower to tackle any Palestinian insurrection against him — and could even find himself backed by the Israelis, although that could inflame even the moderates.

The Palestine Liberation Organization has about 10,000 fighters being trained as a police force in the autonomous areas.

PLO sources say 20,000 men from the widely dispersed Palestine Liberation Army are being mobilized as a security force to support the self-rule authority.

Arafat's aides do not believe there will be a Palestinian civil war.

They argue that the international backing he is winning will boost his influence and prestige in the occupied territories.

He is betting on large amounts of money pouring into the territories to lure back those who have defected to Hamas in recent years out of financial desperation and political frustration.

Although Arafat's Arab partners in the peace process — Syria, Jordan and Lebanon — are miffed at being outmaneuvered by him, they are unlikely to support his opponents.

The Iranians have thrown their weight behind the rejectionists — including Hamas; the Palestinian guerrilla faction under radical commander Ahmed Jibril; and Lebanon's fundamentalist Hezbollah — and could stir trouble.

Iraq, thirsting for revenge but isolated, remains a wild card.

Wichita State fills AD position

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — An experienced fundraiser now serving as a league commissioner was named athletic director at Wichita State University on Tuesday.

Belknap didn't attend Hughes' news conference on the WSU campus. He was at home in Plano, Texas, recuperating from recent prostate cancer surgery.

In a written statement issued to reporters, Belknap said he was looking forward to being back in a university setting.

He said facilities are a primary concern.

"I would like to see all of our athletic facilities match the quality of our tennis and baseball facilities," Belknap said.

WSU has a showcase baseball stadium and recently dedicated a new tennis complex. Both were financed primarily by private donations.

Belknap will be responsible for raising the money for a proposed $11.6 million building near Levitt Arena that would include offices, locker rooms, training facilities and an indoor practice area.

Before becoming Southland Conference commissioner in 1991, Belknap was director of development at the University of Idaho from February 1989 to March 1991 and Idaho athletic director from 1978 to 1988. He was associate athletic director at the University of Arizona from December 1974 to January 1978. From 1965 through 1974 he held various coaching jobs in the Arizona football program.

Belknap and his wife, Donna, have a son and daughter who live in Moscow, Idaho.

Other finalists for the WSU job included Victor Cegles, an assistant athletic director at Arizona State; Barry Dowd, senior associate athletic director at Oklahoma State; and Richard McDuffie, athletic director at Southeast Missouri State.

Wichita State has been without an athletic director since Gary Hunter resigned in early June, less than a year after being hired to replace Tom Shupe.

Belknap worked with Hunter at Idaho.

Belknap was a U.S. Army artillery officer in the early 1960s. He graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., in 1961 and received a master's degree from the University of Arizona in 1971.

▶BOSNIA UNDER NEW CEASE FIRE

GENEVA — The presidents of Croatia and the Muslim-led Bosnian government signed a cease-fire for Bosnia on Tuesday and pledged to open routes for aid convoys. They also agreed to close all prisoner camps.

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman and Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic agreed fighting should stop immediately and no later than Saturday.

Several previous agreements between the two sides have failed to stop the battles for territory that have raged for much of the summer in central and southern Bosnia.

Bosnian state radio reported heavy clashes on Tuesday between Croat and government forces in the central town of Gomji Vakuf.

Tudjman said he expects Bosnian Croat leader Mate Boban to keep to the latest accord.

Slattery near decision on governor's race

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery should finally admit he's in the governor's race on Wednesday.

Slattery plans to make stops in Overland Park, Kansas City, Kan., Wichita and Topeka, to make what his staff has billed as an announcement about his future. All indications have been for the past 11 days that he'll seek the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

The 2nd District congressman already has announced he won't seek another term in the U.S. House and has appointed a treasurer for a gubernatorial campaign.

Slattery has been considered a candidate and the likely front-runner in the race since Democratic Gov. Joan Finney announced Sept. 3 that she would not run for a second four-year term.

The two other declared candidates for the nomination have treated Slattery as a candidate since then. They are former state House Speaker Marvin Barkis of Louisburg and state Rep. Joan Wagnon of Topeka.

"So this is a big surprise, huh?" Wagnon said. "I think this is a wide-open race and Jim Slattery is welcome to jump in."

The Barkis and Wagnon campaigns have tried to portray Slattery as a Washington insider, out-of-touch with Kansas and unfamiliar with issues affecting state government.

"Certainly, its going to now be very interesting, and we can start talking about the issues specific to Kansas," said Kay Coles, campaign manager for Barkis. "And I think what we'll look forward to is a real comparison of how they solve problems in Kansas and how they've been addressed in Washington."

Slattery toyed with the idea of running for governor in 1990, but decided against it to allow former Gov. John Carlin to run.

Mobster breaks 'code of silence'

Men want protection from death threats

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — A top-ranking Mafia defector with a neanderthal nickname is betraying a few long-buried secrets.

Convicted of racketeering and fearing fellow mobsters, mob boss Anthony "Tumac" Accetturo — nicknamed after a caveman in a 1940s movie — and an associate are telling what they know about the mob's workings.

Information from Accetturo's associate already has led investigators to the unmarked grave of a numbers runner and have them digging for more.

Authorities are hoping the defectors can put an end to the Lucchese family's decades-long control over organized crime in New Jersey, from murder and illegal gambling to racketeering and money laundering.

They might even provide evidence against New York's powerful Gambino and Genovese crime families and about mob operations across the nation, said Robert Winter, until recently chief of the state Division of Criminal Justice.

Their attorneys say the men are breaking the code of silence of La Cosa Nostra — the American Mafia — because they want protection from death threats by fellow mobsters trying to take over the Lucchese family. One of the men also wants his freedom.

The Lucchese mob is one of the five major New York City-based Mafia families. Its boss, Vittorio Amuso, was convicted of murder and racketeering in New York last summer.

Accetturo, identified by authorities as the Lucchese boss in New Jersey, was convicted Aug. 13 of racketeering and heading a crime ring.

Lucchese soldier Thomas Ricciardi was convicted of racketeering and of murder in the 1984 golf-club beating death of a Jersey shore-area businessman.

Facing possible life sentences, both are said to be negotiating with state and federal authorities.

"Mr. Accetturo was betrayed by his own people, so why should he be loyal to them? Under those circumstances, I don't think that my client is betraying any loyalty," Accetturo's attorney, B. Dennis O'Connor, said this week.

Last week, Ricciardi led officials to a shallow grave near a country club's seventh hole fairway, containing a man's torso with limbs stacked on top, said Robert Buccino, deputy chief investigator in the state Division of Criminal Justice.

The body was identified as reputed numbers runner John "Johnnie Red" Redman, missing for several years, he said. It was one of at least a dozen slayings attributed to the Lucchese's New Jersey branch.

Ricciardi also provided information on a second body found in pieces in Newark seven years ago, and has officials digging, as yet unsuccessfully, for a third body in woods near his Dover Township horse farm, not far from the shore, authorities said.

State law-enforcement officials won't go into details about their talks with Accetturo and Ricciardi. Attorneys on both sides say no deals have been finalized.

Federal authorities have already promised Ricciardi immunity for his role in nine other slayings and placement in the federal witness protection program, according to court records.

Under state law, Ricciardi must serve at least 30 years for the murder. His attorney, Nola Trustan, said all he wants is federal protection for his family in exchange for telling the truth.

Accetturo wants nothing less than his freedom, his attorney said. Accetturo has tried bargaining for release before — he testified before a grand jury in 1991, but authorities said he didn't talk nearly enough.

Authorities have been after Accetturo for decades. He once evaded prosecution on race-fixing charges by claiming to have Alzheimer's disease. Years later he fell in a shower at a federal prison hospital where he was being evaluated and claimed he was suddenly cured.

Dylan wants to be known as working musician

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Forget the tributes, drop the hero worship: Bob Dylan just wants to be known as a working musician.

"It's all about a livelihood. It's all about going out and playing," he said, his blue eyes sparkling. "That's what every musician who has ever crossed my path strives for."

He sits down in a chair, leans back and plucks the hat off his head, propping it on his knee where it rests for nearly an hour.

Dylan, who rarely gives interviews, is clearly uncomfortable at first, not divulging much and giving terse replies.

But it doesn't take long for him to shed his elusive façade, exhibiting annoyance at today's music, bashfulness about his own achievements and fervor about taking his guitar and harmonica on the road again.

"To me it's a dream come true," he says. "What could be bad about traveling places, seeing different things, moving? It keeps you alive."

It was Dylan who inspired Santana back in the 1960s with such classics as "Blowin' in the Wind" and "Like a Rolling Stone" — songs that helped bring social consciousness to rock 'n' roll.

"Life to me is like light, and you're the projector, man. If you don't like what you're showing just change the light. He (Dylan) made me aware of that," Santana said.

"With most bands, as soon as you unplug the amplifier it's over. Not with his music, not with my music. When people go home, men or women, they feel pregnant with his consciousness. And they go home and they want to cook something delicious or they want to write poetry because it's very infectious."

Meeting Wildcat football greats

Last weekend, I traveled back 40 years in K-State football history — or at least as close as I could get.

The year was 1953. K-State football was in one of its worst slumps ever, casting a 4-54 record over the previous seven seasons. The Cats hadn't had a winning season since the 1936 campaign, spanning over 16 years.

But things were about to change.

Bill Meek had taken over the reigns as K-State football coach in 1951 and insisted his players play on both sides of the ball, which was a rarity in college football. K-State didn't win a game that year and won just one game in 1952, defeating Bradley in the first game of the season 21-7. People probably questioned Meek's coaching methods, but he said he felt some of his better athletes on offense couldn't be sacrificed to sit out on defense.

DEREK SIMMONS

"We were the only school in the United States to go both ways," Meek said at an interview during the 1950s reunion last weekend. "We only had so many good athletes. Corky Taylor, Veryl Switzer and other guys were such good defenders that we had to use them on both sides of the ball."

But what people around the country didn't know, and maybe not even Meek, was that college football was heading in that direction. This would soon give the Cats a much-needed edge on their competition.

"In 1953, the rules committee made the one platoon (playing on both sides of the ball) a rule," Meek said. "My guys probably thought I was a genius."

In a way, he was. One of the worst programs in the nation was about to be transformed into a force to be reckoned with, all in one short year.

While every other team in college football spent the 1953 season adapting to the recent rule change, K-State had spent the last two seasons experimenting with players who could play both sides of the ball.

Meek's preparation paid off that year, as the Cats went 6-3-1, tied for second in the Big Seven Conference, and even beat Nebraska at home 27-0. It was

Former players tour new facilities

Athletes from the 1950s like the new complex

DEREK SIMMONS

The wonders of technology are simply amazing.

Just ask one of the 77 or more former K-State football players who toured the renovated football facilities last weekend.

"We didn't even have weights in school," said Cecil "Corky" Taylor, a halfback during the 1953-54 seasons.

"If we wanted to get bigger, we would take an ordinary bar and put concrete buckets on the end, or get bigger during our summer jobs," he said.

Practice facilities weren't the greatest either.

"I can remember practicing in Ahearn with a cloud of dust from the red clay, and the thunder and roar was tremendous," said Ed Meyer, who played tackle from 1951-53.

"It was a place for us to practice in inclement weather, but wasn't very good. They don't have that excuse now," Meyer said.

Bill Meek, coach of the Wildcats from 1951-54, said that when he was appointed to the helm, K-State didn't even have a practice field.

My, how things change.

The group toured the newest football facilities last Friday, including the $3.3-million, five-level press box and $2.2 million full-size indoor practice field. Saturday night after the 38-13 win over Western Kentucky, they gathered at the Ramada Inn.

Several former players said they were impressed with the additions K-State football has made to its facilities.

"It was pretty impressive," said Meyer, who now resides in Osage City. "The enthusiasm created here is great, and I think it's not over with. They have a combination of winning and integrity within the program that should recreate support.

"It was pretty bare-bones around here, so this should help recruit people too. It's awesome," Meyer said.

"They were just fantastic," Ed Linta said of the facilities. "You knew it had to be done since we're in a conference like the Big Eight. I'm really pleased with everything that is going on, and I'm happy for the current players."

About 77 former K-State football players and their wives returned to K-State last weekend for a 1950s reunion.

The reunion was arranged by former Athletic Director Dick Towers and K-State Associate Athletic Director Veryl Switzer, who was a first-team, all-America halfback in the 1953 season.

COURTESTY OF SPORTS INFORMATION

Former K-State football coach Bill Meek hands Veryl Switzer and Tom O'Boyle the Big Seven pens after both players earned first-team all-confernce honors in 1953 as K-State went 6-3-1. Players from the 1950s returned to Manhattan last week for a reunion.

"Dick and Veryl put it all together, kind of like a decade team," said Taylor, who later played for the Los Angeles Rams from 1955-57. "There are probably 150 people here, maybe more than that."

That unit went 6-3-1 under Meek, including a 4-2 mark in the league, but lost its bid to go to the Orange Bowl when Oklahoma captured the conference title.

"To me, it's a rekindling of the spirit we had back in those days," said Taylor, who was recruited from Kansas City, Mo., and now lives in Tucson, Ariz. "It brought back a bunch of young kids. It's inspiring and almost overwhelming. Some of these guys I haven't seen in 40 years."

"I can remember practicing in Ahearn with a cloud of dust from the red clay, and the thunder and roar was tremendous."
ED MEYER
1951-53 TACKLE

Meek was the coach at K-State for four seasons, compiling a 14-24-1 record, before moving on to the University of Houston. In his last two seasons, 1953-54, he guided the Cats to a 13-6-1 record.

"It's really fantastic. There is no way to really describe it," said Meek of the reunion. "I watched them grow up, and they built it. We started a bunch of freshmen then and at one time lettered 18 of them. I just threw them in and let them play.

"You can see the respect they have for each other. They fought their battles, and they won. It's a feeling you can't get unless you've been there, and they have been there."

Linta, a tight end and defensive end during the 1951-54 seasons, is now on the selection committee for the Weiser Lock Copper Bowl, which will take the fourth-place finisher from the Big Eight to compete in this year's postseason contest.

"The response has been great," said Linta, who now resides in Tucson, Ariz. "I think we realize how much it meant for us to get together. It's kind of scary because we didn't miss a beat over 40 years. We were a very close team, and we're still close."

"What we've done has really been unusual," said Ron Marciniak, who is now a regional scout for the Cleveland Browns and was K-State's captain in 1954. "No matter what we were doing in work, family matters or whatever, we set it aside — it's genuine."

Marciniak had a chance to stop by Aggieville during his stay in Manhattan and said he was affected by the younger people and students.

"I was really impressed with the young people and the students when I went to Aggieville," said Marciniak, who earned six letters while at K-State — four in football and two in wrestling. "They were all so wholesome, and as I got to talking with some of them, they were supportive of the football program, which is really important.

"We still believe in purple and white. It's a sincere pride that runs deep," Marciniak said.

In Meek's tenure, he told his teams that leading the league in individual categories wasn't as important as doing the same as a team.

He said he sees some of the same versatility with this year's program.

"I told my teams we won't lead the league in rushing or passing, but we might in total offense," Meek said. "I was impressed with this team's versatility, overall team speed and total offense.

"I think they are in a position to challenge anybody," Meek said. "With all the new facilities, they will be able to compete with the recruiting, and that is the name of the game."

BIG 8 ROUNDUP

COLORADO AT STANFORD

FAST FACTS: 5:45 p.m., Stanford Stadium, Palo Alto, Calif. Live on ESPN.

ABOUT THE BUFFALOES: No. 10-ranked Colorado has passed the test against two Southwest Conference opponents in the past two weeks — Texas, by a 34-14 score, and Baylor, 45-21. The Buffaloes have averaged 532 yards a game, which puts the offense second in the league behind Nebraska. Tailback Lamont Warren is tied for rushing yards in the Big Eight with 170 yards, while quarterback Kordell Stewart's average of 272 yards of total offense is second in the league.

The Buffaloes are last in total defense, giving up an average of 438 yards per game. They rank sixth in rushing defense and fifth in passing defense in the league.

ABOUT THE CARDINALS: Stanford has been struggling early this season with losses at Washington and surviving a 31-28 scare against San Jose State. Coach Bill Walsh returned to Stanford after taking the San Francisco 49ers to three Super Bowls. Last year, Walsh went 10-3, including a 24-3 victory over Penn State in the Blockbuster Bowl. The offense has six returning starters, including quarterback Steve Stenstrom. The Cardinals have won both games against Colorado in Stanford Stadium — the last game was a 28-21 victory in 1991 — and they were 5-1 last season at home.

MISSOURI AT TEXAS A&M

RECORDS: Missouri (1-0) and Texas A&M (1-1)

ABOUT THE TIGERS: Missouri opened the eyes of many people last Saturday when the team beat Illinois, 31-3. Quarterback Jeff Handy is the Tigers' offense. He completed 21 of 33 passes for 294 yards against Illinois — the rest of the team compiled 71 yards. For his effort last week, Handy was named Big Eight Offense Player of the Week. The Tigers ranked second in total defense after one game, giving up 255 yards.

ABOUT THE AGGIES: Texas A&M was hammered by Oklahoma last week in Norman, Okla., by a 14-44 score. But the Aggies have history on their side. They are 3-0 against the Tigers, including last year's 26-13 victory at Columbia, Mo. In that game, the Tigers had a 10-3 halftime lead but forced Missouri to turn over the ball three times in the second half. Running back Greg Hill returns after compiling 1,339 yards of rushing and 15 touchdowns last year, including two touchdowns against Missouri.

NEBRASKA AT UCLA

FAST FACTS: 2:30 p.m., Rose Bowl, Pasadena, Calif. Live on ABC.

RECORDS: Nebraska (2-0) and UCLA (0-1)

ABOUT THE CORNHUSKERS: Once again, No. 9 Nebraska tops the rushing chart in the Big Eight with 338 yards a contest. I-back Damon Benning, a redshirt freshman, has taken up the slack from the injuries of teammate Calvin Jones and quarterback Tommie Frazier as he leads the league in rushing with 104 yards per game. Last weekend, Nebraska beat Texas Tech 50-27.

The Cornhuskers are in fifth place in total defense, allowing 308 yards a game. The defense is led by linebacker Trev Alberts, who was the Big Eight Defensive Player of the Week.

ABOUT THE BRUINS: UCLA was idle last week after losing to intra-state rival California two weeks ago, 25-27. The Bruins have split the series with the Cornhuskers by winning four of eight games, including a 41-28 victory in Pasadena the last time the squads faced off in 1988, but UCLA coach Tom Donahue is 1-3 against Nebraska. Receiver J.J. Stokes returns for the Bruins after catching 41 passes for 728 yards and seven touchdown receptions, while running back Daron Washington averaged 4.7 yards a carry.

LINE	The K-State's line has held its opponents to 160 yards rushing a game to rank fifth in the Big Eight. Defensive tackle Tim Colston leads all linemen with 12 tackles. Minnesota gives up 217 yards of rushing to its opponents. Defensive tackle Edward Hawthorne tops all linemen with 12 stops.	✔
LINEBACKERS	The trio of Kirby Hocutt, Laird Veatch and Percell Gaskins have helped put K-State in the No.4 position in total defense in the league as the Cats give up 287 yards a game. Minnesota's defense has given up an average of 335 yards in its two contest, but starters Russ Heath and Todd Wolkow are questionable because of injuries.	✔
SECONDARY	Ranked 21st in pass efficiency defense in nation, the K-State defensive backs are still showing that they are one of the best units in the country. Although Jaime Mendez didn't get an interception against Western Kentucky, he had the most tackles for the Cats with 16 stops. The Golphers' secondary has one interceptiion, but opposing teams have thrown just 335 yards and have completed half of their passes against them (25-51).	✔

OFFENSE

POSITION
LINE	Minesota has become one of the nation's top offenses as it ranks fourth in the total offense with 557 yards a game. Six of the nine linemen weighs over 300 pounds — the lightest is Todd Jeswitz at 278 pounds. K-State is averaging 398 yards of total offense a game, which puts them on pace the break the school record of 4,231 yards set by the 1991 team. Last year, the offense finished with 2440 yards of total offense.		✔
WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS	The passing attack has allowed is hauls in 238 yards a contest to rank third in the Big Eight and 34th in the nation. Kevin Lockett averages 13 yards a catch and is place him second in the league in reception per game Each of the four starting receivers for the Gophers average 11 yards a catch with Tony Levine getting 20 yards a catch.		✔
RUNNING BACKS	The duo of Rod Schiller and J.J. Smith are avering 4.2 yards a rush in two games. I f they can stay above 4 yard a rush mark, they will be the first team since 1954 to average over that mark. Schiller has ran for 171 yards in the two games. Minnesota backs average 126 yards a game and 4.2 yards a carry, but leading rusher Chris Darkins has only 90 yards.	✔
QUARTERBACKS	Tom Schades ranks first in the nation in passing offense with 430 yards a game, although he has been intercepted six times in two games. Schades threw for 478 yards against Penn State two weeks ago. Wildcat quarterback Chad May has thrown for 461 yards in two games and no interceptions to rank eighth in the conference. He has completed 32 passes out of 59 attempts. May has a quality back-up in Brian Kavanaugh, who has completed a pass in three tries.	✔	✔

POSITION
PUNTING	Chad Romano is getting 37 yards per punt, but has a net average of 36.7 yards in rank 41st in the nation. Gopher punter Ron Holty is kicking the ball over 38 yards a punt against Penn State and Indiana State.	✔
PLACE KICKING	Tate Wright is three out of five in field goals and is nine for nine in extra-point attempts. He has leads the team in scoring with 18 points. Omar Salas and Mike Chalberg share duties in extra-point attempts. Salas has made one out of three attempts while Chalberg made his only one.	✔
RETURN	Andre Coleman ranks fourth in the nation in punt returns with an average of 23.7 yards a return for 166 yardsto help K-State place first in the nation in the same category. Aaron Osterman and Lewis Garrison have been back to catch the punts. Garrison has the better average with a return of 16 yards while Osterman averages 12.8 yards a return.	✔

AREA
MOMENTUM	K-State has won three of its past four games and looks to start the season 3-0 for the third consecutive season. To reach that mark, the Cats will have to break a 14-year drought of beating non-conference team on their turf. Plus, a win would be the first dome win by K-State. Minnesota needs to prove they can beat a quality team after beating Division I-AA Indiana State last week.	✔	✔
COACHING	Bill Snyder's record is 20-26 in his fifth year at K-State. Since his 1-10 mark in 1989, Snyder and K-State is 19-16. Snyder's 20 wins are the sixth-most by a Wildcat coach. Minnesota coach Jack Wacker is in his 23rd year as a head coach with a record of 147-103-3. He spent nine years at Texas Christian before going to Minnesota. Wacker 's nephew is Tim Schade, who is the Golden Gophers quarterback.	✔
THE EDGE	K-State should overcome Minnesota's passing attack. Schade is a junior who hasn't played before. He will be throwing against one of the best secondaries in the country with K-State, but Schade could have as many as four receivers to thrown. K-State has to overcome to playing in a dome, where the noise can be distracting, especially the Metrodome. Remember the 1987 and 1991 World Series?	✔	✔

WILDCAT WATCH

UPDATE

The transition game for former linebacker

DAVID EUGENE FRESE
Collegian

Number 44 is wearing new shoes.

Brooks Barta, last year's record-setting Wildcat linebacker, is getting on with life. He is teaching math at Abilene High School and assistant coaching the Cowboys, currently 1-1.

"This is what I wanted," he says in his empty-desked classroom on a sunny Sunday afternoon. "A 4A school close to K-State — a smaller town, close to a city, with a tradition in athletics and a good school."

He also has the opportunity to work on a cutting-edge educational project called an integrated technology lab.

The lab uses subjects such as math, science, English and technology all at the same time to produce an outcomes-based education for students.

"It's a freshman class where we spend two hours a day for a semester in a module setting where kids will spend two weeks working at a setting and then move on to other subjects," Barta says. "We got a grant for this, so a lot of people are going to be coming in looking at it."

Which is pretty impressive for a former college football player from Smith Center. Barta is also teaching pre-algebra and applied mathematics, and he says he is pretty excited about it.

"The kids are pretty good," he says. "I work with freshmen a lot. They're kind of jumpy, and they're trying to make the transition from middle school to high school. It's an opportunity to see kids grow up a lot."

Barta spent five years at K-State. Five years of education. Five years of football.

Redshirted his first year, Barta began playing the first of Bill Snyder's seasons at K-State. Barta led the Wildcats in tackles for a record-setting four consecutive seasons and finished his senior season with 142 tackles. His career grand total for tackles: 436.

He says he misses the game. Quite a bit to hear him tell it. He has attended K-State's first two games this season. It wasn't easy.

"The game was something that I'd worked for all my life, and for the last five years it's really been the center of my life," he says. "You spend 30 to 40 hours a week to try to prepare yourself mentally and physically for the game. And then it's all over. It's kind of like part of the motivation for your life is gone."

Though it's fun to go back and see all the guys and hang out like they are still players and reminisce, it's still tough. Barta says the first game was the worst.

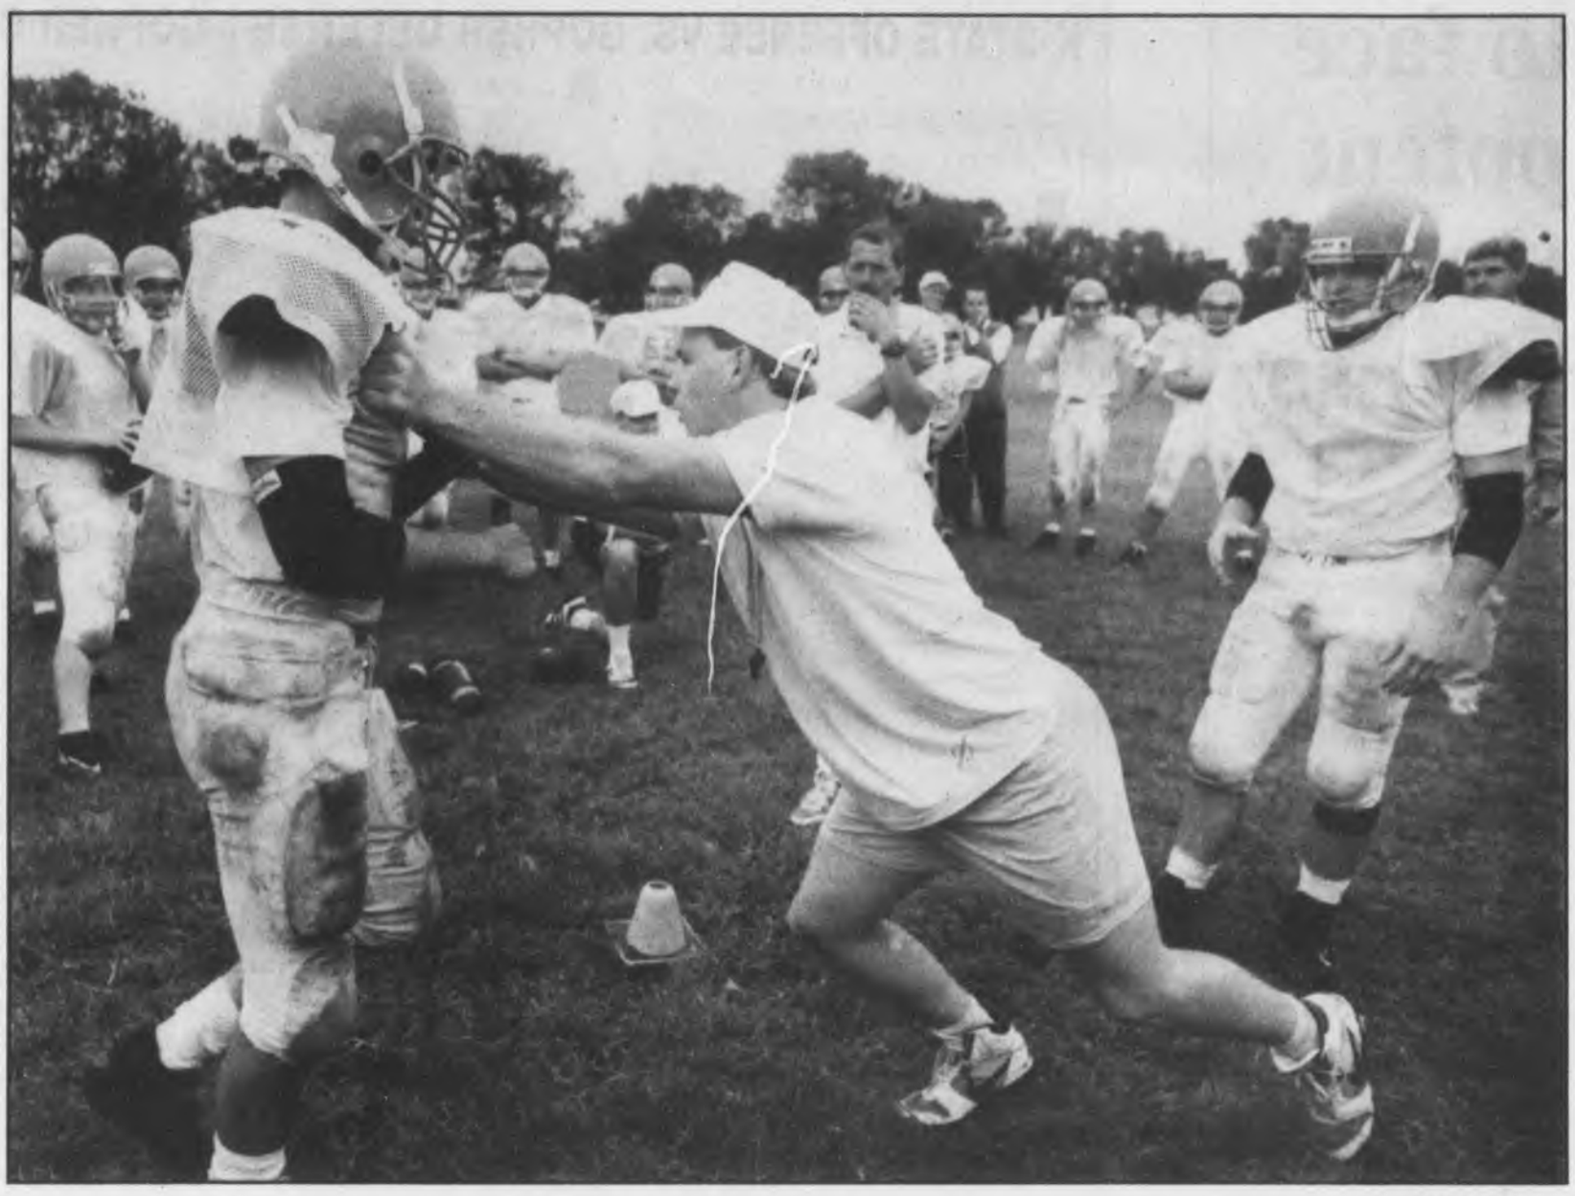
"The first 15 minutes of the first game was really hard on me emotionally," he says. "When they came out and the crowd came up and just the first few minutes of the game — the emotion and the excitement and the electricity in the air. That's what I miss most."

But he is making the transition. Going from the purple and white to a necktie and penny loafers isn't easy. But Brooks Barta, formerly No. 44, now Mr. Barta, is coping.

Some kids, he says, come up and say "Hey, I saw you play a couple years ago." Some others expect a 6'3", 240-pound hulk. And some, remembering the name "Brooks Barta" said over the KSU Stadium loudspeakers nearly every single time a tackle was made, are surprised he is a teacher in Abilene and not playing Monday Night Football.

"That wasn't up to me," he says of not going pro. "That was up to the NFL. They put the time clock on me, and they decided I wasn't fast enough and/or big enough. There was a difference between what they look for and what I've got."

Not a lot of people get the chance to play professional ball, Barta says. He says he was pretty realistic that it was going to be a longshot.



For now, he says, he is content. It's fun for him to help coach the Abilene Cowboys. It's exciting to be trying new educational experiments. And it's an experience to be a teacher.

"While it was physically exhausting to be a football player, now it's mentally exhausting being a teacher and trying to motivate kids eight or nine hours a day," he says. "It's not something that a lot of people get a chance to do."

But the game.

"You know," he says, "when you go through something that's so hard, there's an incredible emotional attachment to the people around you.

"You're not going through those two-a-day practices and summer weight training and hurting with a group of people," he says. "And it's real hard to look back and see that they still have that, and you've been put on the outer edge of the circle. There's an attachment there that you really can't get anywhere else."

Defense to face potent Gopher offense

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

The K-State secondary might face its toughest battle this week when it takes on Minnesota quarterback Tim Schade.

Schade leads the top-ranked passing offense in the nation (430.5 yards per game) against a K-State secondary that is ranked 21st in pass-efficiency defense. Schade threw for 345 yards against Indiana State last week and 478 yards against Penn State two weeks ago.

While Coach Bill Snyder described the secondary as being highly motivated, he was quick to point out the secondary won't face just any offense.

"We're going into this game with a different preparation because it's a type of offense that we don't see much of."
BILL SNYDER
HEAD COACH

"We're going into this game with a different preparation because it's a type of offense that we don't see much of," Snyder said. "Our success will depend on how well we prepare, but that may not tell the full story in regard to all the talent we do have."

Four of Minnesota's receivers have collected more than 100 yards receiving this season, including one of Schade's prime targets, senior slot back Omar Douglas, who had 11 catches for 193 yards and a touchdown pass during last week's victory over Indiana State.

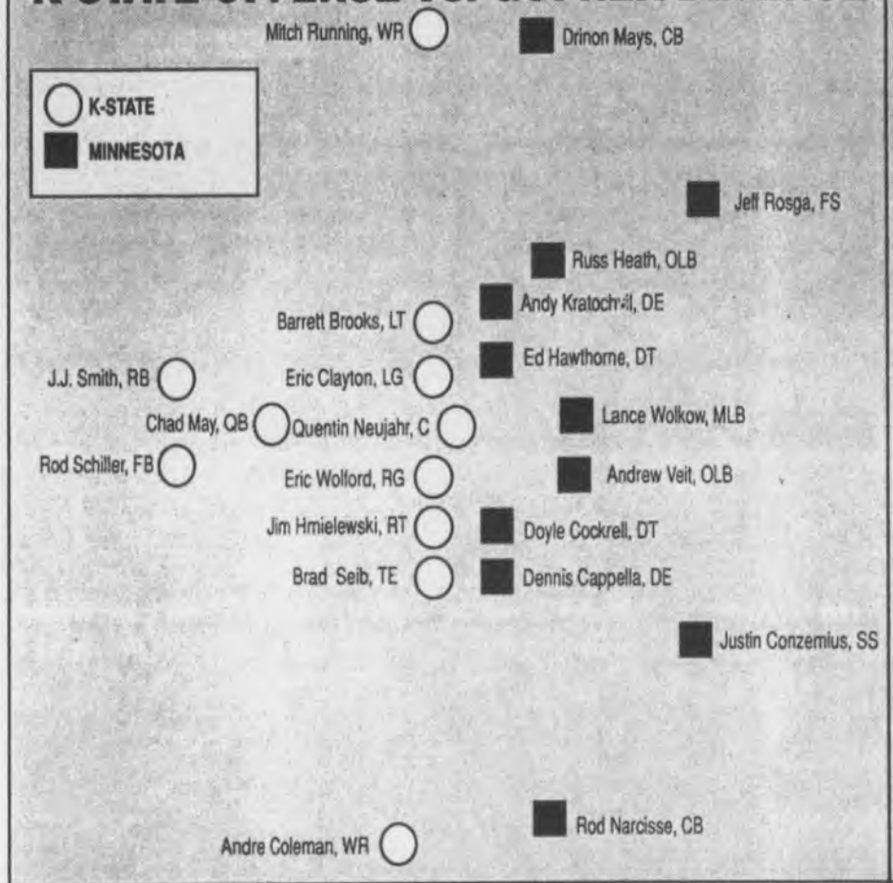
"I expect them to pass it about 60 times, but I hope they pass it every down," said senior cornerback Kenny McEntyre. "We just need a good rush up the middle and good coverage in the secondary."

However, Snyder said the defense won't necessarily focus on one particular receiver, despite Douglas' 4.32 speed.

"(Schade) likes the one that's open," Snyder said. "He makes good decisions and has the ability to get the ball to the receiver who can break free."

Snyder said he plans to use a variation of tactics to disrupt the passing attack, including altering line formations, but he said the team can't afford to get away from the fundamentals.

"We've got four players up front that better have a good pass rush, and we've got seven players that better be able to cover the pass," he said.



"Basically, every individual has to have good match-ups.

"(Minnesota) is going to try to get us deep in the backfield, and they'll try to pass for over 400 yards," senior cornerback Thomas Randolph said. "Yeah, it's going to be our real first test."

Through the first two games of the season, the K-State defensive secondary has held opposing offenses without a passing touchdown.

ABOVE: Running back J.J. Smith is pulled out of bounds by Western Kentucky cornerback Drane Scrivner. Smith led all rushers in the game with 99 yards. LEFT: Quarterback Chad May throws downfield to receiver Andre Coleman. May was 15 of 29 passing in the game. May and Coleman teamed up for 67 of the Wildcats 249 yards passing. BELOW: Percell Gaskins chases down a Western Kentucky fumble during the first quarter.

May completes eight out of eight passes in 2nd half

Quarterback Chad May completed eight passes in eight tries for 159 yards in the second half to help K-State pull away from Western Kentucky and finish with a 38-13 win Saturday at KSU Stadium.

The win was the eighth consecutive victory at home and marked the fourth straight season K-State has started a season 2-0.

Western Kentucky coach Jack Harbaugh said May played well against his team, especially in the third quarter.

"I thought he did a tremendous job," Harbaugh said. "I thought May grew up today, and that will help them as they go through the season."

K-State started the second half with a narrow 14-13 lead. The Cats punted after four plays to open the second half, and the Hilltoppers were moving when cornerback Thomas Randolph intercepted a pass from quarterback J.J. Jewell at K-State's eight-yard line.

After the interception, K-State scored three consecutive touchdowns. May said once they scored, they were able to set down Western Kentucky.

"After we started scoring and had a good drive, I think that took the wind completely out of it," said May, who contributed to K-State's 424 yards in total offense.

The last time K-State racked up 400 yards of offense was against Temple last year when the Cats had 405 yards of offense.

The touchdown drive went 92 yards and included a 40-yard pass from May to wide receiver Mitch Running on third down. A 10-yard run by fullback Rod Schiller led to a 33-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Kevin Lockett from May.

In the next K-State scoring drive, May completed four passes for 45 yards and scored from one yard away to give K-State a 28-13 lead.

The last scoring drive went 50 yards in four plays with May connecting to wide receiver Andre Coleman from 21 yards out for the score. Coleman said his and the team's performance didn't improve.

"Overall, just a repeat of last week," said Coleman, who caught four passes for 67 yards and returned three punts for 37 yards. "As far as performance, I feel just like I did last week as an individual and as a team."

K-State's burst of offense in the second half was a repeat of last week, as the unit stuttered in the opening period. Coach Bill Snyder said the offense was shooting itself in the foot.

"We found a lot of ways in which we could stop ourselves," he said. "We missed opportunities, had several penalties, and our throwing and catching the ball is not good.

"I can take responsibility for not having our ballteam emotionally prepared for this ballgame," Snyder said. "We played poorly in the first half. I think we are not mature enough to handle playing a team that we are much better than."

May said running back J.J. Smith helped the Cats move the ball in the first half.

"We had some passes dropped, and then J.J. scored and kind of took the pressure off, and we relaxed," said May of Smith, who got K-State's first touchdown on a 33-yard sprint.

Western Kentucky came back with a 14-play, 84-yard scoring drive on a Robert Jackson six-yard run to tie the game 7-7.

The Hilltoppers recovered a May fumble at K-State's 11-yard line, and then Chris Pino hit a 35-yard field goal to move Western Kentucky ahead 10-7. It marked the first time since the 1991 loss to Colorado that K-State trailed at home.

Snyder said he was looking on how his team would play and didn't like what he saw.

"My concern was not the score but how well we were playing, and we were not playing well," he said. "I don't know if we played down to our competition or what."

K-State scored its second touchdown with a 65-yard, 12-play scoring drive to move the Cats back into the lead. May threw for 56 yards as K-State moved down the field and ended with a 10-yard run by Schiller to give K-State a 14-10 lead.

The Hilltoppers returned with another 35-yard field goal from Pino as Western Kentucky moved to within one point at 14-13.

"Our kids came back in the locker room and were disappointed," he said. "They understand that they missed some opportunities that could have made the game much different. I'm not happy with our practice habits right now, and if we start practicing better, we will start playing better in the first quarter.

Coleman said Saturday's performance should make K-State practice harder this week for the Minnesota game Saturday, Sept. 18.

"We had to get a wake-up call, and now we go and play a Big Ten team, and we can't be asleep for two quarters," Coleman said. "We have to play four quarters, or we'll get beat."

This season figures to be an exciting one for K-State golf, if last year was any indication.

Last year, the men's team qualified for the NCAA central regional for the first time in the team's history, while the women have a roster loaded with experience.

She will team with senior Denise Pottle to lead an experienced group of golfers, a group that has an upper-division finish in the Big Eight championship as its goal, Coach Mark Elliott said.

"We're going into this season with pretty much the same people as last year," Elliott said. "But this year, I think we are a little stronger. Last year, we were up and down, but I expect this year's team to be more consistent."

Pottle said she believes a good performance there could set the tone for a successful season.

truly a memorable year for K-State football. The Cats had won more games in one season than the last eight seasons combined.

"I think that (the new rule change) was as responsible for the turnaround as anything was," Meek said. "Everybody had a year up on the rest of the teams. They paid their dues for two years.

"They had been in the battles, and the last two years we had great winning seasons."

"In the beginning of the 1950s, K-State was the doormat of football," said halfback Cecil "Corky" Taylor, who played for the Los Angeles Rams from 1955-57.

"In 1953 and 1954 the team had changed to one in contention for the Orange Bowl. Those were probably the best two back-to-back seasons in K-State history."

Earl Meyer, who was converted from fullback to an offensive lineman, said the 27-0 shutout of Nebraska at home in 1953 left most people somewhat stunned.

"I remember that it was so electrifying, that people just didn't leave the stands for awhile — it was a tremendous feeling," he said.

The win marked the first time the Wildcats had beaten Nebraska since 1941, and one of only eight victories over the Cornhuskers in 81 years.

"As far as I'm concerned, and I might be prejudiced, but I feel it was the best team since the early 1930s," Meyer said. "The mold and the cast had been dyed for the next couple of years."

Tight end/defensive end Ed Linta, who was a senior in 1954, said the wins over Nebraska at Lincoln and Kansas at Lawrence were two games that stood out in his career.

"When we beat Nebraska and KU down there on television, those were the most memorable," Linta said. "The biggest disappointment was not going to the Orange Bowl when Colorado upset us in Boulder, but it was great to be in the running."

For two consecutive seasons, K-State football fans had something to cheer about.

Those two straight winning seasons were K-State's last. The 7-3 record in 1954 has been the best effort by a Wildcat team since 1934, when K-State went 7-2-1. The 1991 team (7-4) and the 1953 unit (6-3-1) are the only ones even close.

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., talks during a press conference after announcing his candidacy for the Kansas governorship Wednesday afternoon in the Jayhawk Towers, Topeka. He also made stops in Wichita and Kansas City before visiting Topeka.

Slattery declares gubernatorial hopes

WADE SISSON
Collegian

TOPEKA — U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., confirmed expectations Wednesday when he announced his candidacy for the Kansas governorship.

The announcement comes just one week after Slattery said he would not seek re-election to his Second District seat in the U.S. House.

Slattery's candidacy has been expected since Gov. Joan Finney's announcement Sept. 3 that she would not seek re-election.

About 400 people gathered in the Florentine Room of Jayhawk Tower to hear Slattery, who had made similar stops in Overland Park, Kansas City and Wichita.

"I have no illusions about the road ahead," Slattery said. "I know that I face a tough challenge, but I believe we must all be willing to take the risk of leadership.

"I am ready to fight for my party's nomination, and with your help, I will win it, and I will win the general election."

Slattery stressed the importance of faith in God, education, hard work, honesty and living within one's means.

"These are the bedrock Kansas values that we must never compromise," he said. "It is on this foundation that the future of Kansas must be built."

Slattery said he is running for governor because he believes he has the experience to lead Kansas through the 1990s.

"Growing up on a Kansas farm taught me the importance of agriculture in Kansas," he said. "My experience starting a business taught me about taking risks and creating jobs and meeting a payroll."

"We must make our communities safe. We must stand together against this insane violence that threatens us all. We must not rest until our streets and our schools are safe once again."

JIM SLATTERY
GUBERNATORIAL CANDIDATE

Citing his experience in the Kansas Legislature and the U.S. Congress, Slattery said he has learned the importance of government for the people.

"I've fought two presidents, countless special interests an most of the congressional leadership to stop production of the wasteful B-2 bomber," Slattery said.

"It took me three years, but I won that fight and saved the taxpayers $50 billion."

Slattery said he is prepared to focus his energies on leading the state of Kansas.

"We must make sure that we're doing everything possible to create new jobs in Kansas so our children don't have to leave in search of opportunity."

Slattery also addressed the need for affordable health care and safer streets.

"We must make our communities safe. We must stand together against this insane violence that threatens us all. We must not rest until our streets and our schools are safe once again," he said.

Ruth Schrum, Manhattan resident and friend of Gov. Finney, said she will do everything she can to support Slattery.

"I feel sad that she didn't feel she could go on, but those things are personal. I know Jim Slattery, and I know he'll do as good a job. He is conscientious, and he really works hard for people."

"I was really about to cry," she said. "That is the future of Kansas there. There's the next governor of the state of Kansas."

Smith said other Slattery supporters who followed him through the day told her the Topeka address was indeed the most emotional, for the candidate and the audience.

"He addressed all the issues he needed to," Veronica Nelson, junior at Manhattan High School, said. "He made you proud to be a Kansan."

During a post-announcement press conference, Slattery said he has not chosen a running mate.

The Slattery campaign will soon make a swing through western Kansas, where the candidate said he expects to do well.

Slattery said a focus on taking his message to the people will distinguish his campaign from those of his opponents.

Clarifying his position on abortion, Slattery said he supports a woman's right to choose as defined by Kansas law, although he doesn't think taxpayers should pay for abortions, except to save the mother's life or in cases of rape or incest.

Though he has not taken a stance about the North American Free Trade Agreement, Slattery

1.0 GPA to result in early dismissal

A survey was conducted in 1988 of 352 K-State freshmen earning below a 1.0 GPA. These students were tracked the next three years, and only 13 percent, or 44 students, remained at the University.

These surveys resulted in the new policy, said Larry Erpelding, chair of an ad hoc Committee of Faculty Senate's Academic Affairs.

"The new policy is designed to help students who have severe problems academically," Erpelding said. "If we were to allow students to continue to make 1.0, they can dig a large academic hole, which is very difficult or impossible to recover from."

Proponents of the new policy argued that accumulating student loans burdens the student further. Erpelding said the new policy was designed to intervene before this happens.

The current policy does not dismiss students until they've completed 30 hours and fall below a 1.75 GPA. Also, the current policy places students on academic probation for a semester instead of dismissing the student automatically.

"I think the past policy gives students a false sense of security, because they feel they have two semesters to establish themselves academically," Bill Schapaugh, professor of agronomy and chair of Academic Affairs, said.

The policy was designed to detect academic problems early and not to discourage students, Schapaugh said.

"We hope that the policy passed will help motivate some students," Schapaugh said.

Faculty Senate representative Steffany Carrel said Student Senate was trying to protect those students whose GPAs bounce back after the first semester.

"Why do we need to give students another hurdle to jump over? We should be reaching out to them and helping them," Carrel said.

Erpelding said there are a few exceptions.

"There is a possiblity that a 4.0 student could have a bad semester and get a 1.0. Obviously, there is a problem somewhere — drugs, a death in the family or some other problem that wouldn't allow a student to concentrate."

Senate considering money for ag teams

Allocation would ease personal costs

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Student Senate will consider a proposal to allocate $7,000 to K-State agricultural competition teams at its Thursday meeting.

The money, which was recommended by Senate Finance Committee, will be used to offset entry fees and travel costs incurred by participating students.

"The competition teams are budgeted at over $48,000," Riley said. "This will not cover all of the costs, but it will be a welcome addition."

Students and their pocket books will be the biggest beneficiary of the money, Riley said.

"This money will alleviate some of the personal costs to the students participating," he said. "Some students told us it costs the equivalent of a semester's tuition to participate on a competition team."

Riley said money for agricultural competition teams has potential to benefit all students, despite the agricultural implications of the teams.

"Agricultural competition teams are open to any student in the University," he said. "There are no restrictions as to majors."

Senate will also consider a request to fund travel expenses for the ethnic dancing team, Puerto Rico Baila.

"They have been a real factor in getting Hispanic students here on campus because of their perspective," he said. "They have a big influence on students."

"In the past, they've never asked student government for money."

DAN LEWERENZ
MULTICULTURAL AFFAIRS DIRECTOR

The dancers do not request any more money than they need, Lewerenz said.

"In the past, they've never asked student government for money," he said. "They are putting as much effort as they can to take care of their own expenses through fundraising."

Another allocation before Senate is a request to fund $150 to the Women's Resource Center. The money would be used to partially offset costs of a sexual violence awareness week.

In other business, Senate will approve its 1993-94 student interns and review amendments to the constitution and by-laws.

Taiwan donates money for Kansas flood relief

TOPEKA (AP) — Taiwan Province's government donated $100,000 to Kansas for flood relief on Wednesday, with a representative calling it partial repayment for U.S. aid when the Republic of China became a nation four decades ago.

Gov. Joan Finney said she would establish a new fund with the money, to provide aid to victims of disasters who do not qualify for federal assistance. She said she expects additional private contributions to be made to the fund.

Kuang-Ming Cheng, Taiwan's consul general in Kansas City and director of its Coordination Council for North American Affairs, presented a check to Finney in her office during a brief ceremony.

He said Taiwan Province, whose capital is Nantou, was giving the money to Kansas as a gesture of compassion and brotherly love, and in return for economic aid the U.S. provided the Republic of China when it was established 40 years ago after Communists drove Chinese Nationalists from the mainland.

"We made use of the aid and were successful economically," Cheng told Finney. "We owe a great deal to our great friend, the United States. Our people heard of the flood problems of the Kansas people. We want to be a humble partner in the effort to help you recover from this disaster."

Americans warned not to travel to Somalia

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Somali gunmen wounded 11 United Nations peacekeepers Wednesday in an unusually bold daylight mortar attack on their capital compound, a U.N. representative said.

Two Italian peacekeepers, meanwhile, were shot dead while jogging in Mogadishu's port area, Italy's Defense Ministry said from Rome.

Mortar attacks by Somalis also killed a Somali child and wounded 17 other Somalis, U.N. peacekeepers said. And in a separate encounter, helicopter-borne American forces killed two Somali militiamen.

But Maj. David Stockwell, a U.N. representative, said the daylight mortar attacks could signal a new phase of the assault on U.N. peacekeepers. He noted that mortars have often been fired at the U.N. headquarters, but only at night.

The State Department warned Americans not to travel in the country after receiving reports that Somali warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid has ordered his militia to take U.S. citizens hostage if he is captured.

Stockwell said the attackers who fired on the U.N. compound Wednesday were believed to be followers of Aidid. They are blamed for previous attacks that have killed 48 peacekeepers and wounded more than 175.

Astronauts rehearse for Hubble repair

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Two astronauts, about to make their first spacewalk, checked and double-checked the wrenches, ratchets and other Hubble Space Telescope repair tools they will test outside Thursday.

"The equipment looks real good, and the people involved are ready to go," Discovery commander Frank Culbertson Jr. said Wednesday.

Thursday morning's six-hour excursion by James Newman and Carl Walz is considered a dress rehearsal for the all-important Hubble repair mission by another shuttle crew in December.

It will be NASA's third and last practice spacewalk this year to get ready for the mission to correct Hubble's vision and replace failed gyroscopes, wobbly solar panels and other telescope components. Five to seven spacewalks are planned during the 11-day repair flight.

Kitchings enters court again on same charge

Kitchings, former K-State student and former Black Student Union president, appeared in court to retain a lawyer and discuss bond in a judgment of a case the assistant county attorney said is rare.

Kitchings, who was arrested Aug. 9, 1992, for unlawful use of a telephone to arrange the sale of a controlled substance, was arrested a second time Sept. 9. He was later released on $2,000 bond.

He was found guilty of the initial charges by a jury and later appealed this decision. His appeal failed, however, and during the appeal proceeding, the judge filed an arrest of judgment when the county attorney's office was not specific enough in filing paperwork.

Gabrielle Thompson, assistant county attorney, said an arrest of judgment means the trial will be discontinued until the county attorney's office files more specific paperwork.

"They are not saying so much that the information is wrong, only that it is unclear," Thompson said.

Thompson said this particular judgment is not a frequent occurrence.

"It's actually a fairly rare occurrence," she said.

"In the nine years that I have been practicing in criminal trials, this is the first time that I have seen it," Thompson said. "Most others are on the basis of lack of evidence or a typographical error. Basically this is a 'Play it Again Sam' scenario."

Kitchings, who has an unlisted phone number in Wyandotte County, could not be reached for comment. He will go before the judge during a preliminary hearing at 10:30 a.m. on Sept. 27.

Hijackers take plane from Russia to Norway

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Hijackers, brandishing grenades and explosives, forced a Russian jetliner with 52 people aboard to land in Norway on Wednesday. Police said the air pirates, believed to be Iranians, then asked for political asylum.

The Tupolev-134 jet was en route from Azerbaijan when it was seized over southern Russia. It was forced to land near Kiev to take on fuel and an English-speaking Ukrainian navigator before flying to Norway.

The pilot, Capt. Mikhail Osavin, said the hijackers threatened the crew with hand grenades and explosives, Alexei Zakharov, a Russian security representative, said.

After the plane landed at the sealed-off and darkened Gardermoen charter airport, one man left the jet and was driven to the control tower in a Civil Aviation Board car, the national news agency NTB reported. He was driven back in five minutes and reboarded.

No demands preceded the asylum request, he said.

Ukrainian and Azerbaijani officials said the hijackers were Iranians, linked to the radical Shiite Muslim Hezbollah militia of Lebanon, but no government representatives could confirm that.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $172,109* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $219 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research put TIAA-CREF at the top of their list for retirement planning. Why not join them?

Call today and learn how simple it is to build a secure tomorrow when you have time and TIAA-CREF working on your side.

Start planning your future. Call our Enrollment Hotline 1 800 842-2888.

CAMPUS

Equipment allows disabled to exercise

KIM DILLON
Collegian

K-State is making progress toward a physically disabled accessible campus by listening and responding to students' needs.

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex has bought equipment with disabled students in mind.

"We felt this was a need that wasn't being met as well as it could be," Raydon Robel, director of recreational services, said.

Equipment bought this year include the Bug Roller and Power Trainers, he said.

The Bug Roller is essentially a treadmill for people in wheelchairs. It works on distance and speed, Robel said.

Power Trainers can be used by anybody, Robel said. Both the upper and lower body can be worked at the same time. They can be adapted for use with a wheelchair by removing the seat. People with limited leg use can exercise their legs by attaching a leg boot and using their arms.

Both the Rec Complex and the Natatorium are accessible to disabled students, faculty and staff.

Jeff Peterson, senior in animal science and industry, was in a car accident his freshman year in high school, leaving him paralyzed from the waist down.

Peterson used the Power Trainer while doing rehabilitation at the HCA Wesley Medical Center in Wichita after his accident.

He also said a treadmill is better to exercise on than a track because it does not emphasize one arm.

The expansion will be nice for everybody, and there will be less crowding at the Rec Complex, Peterson said.

Peterson has gotten involved in wheelchair basketball and plays with a team in Topeka. He said he has not found enough people who are interested in starting a team in Manhattan.

Basketball courts are a little more difficult to get since all of the students have come back, but Peterson said he goes out most nights to practice with friends.

Disabled Student Services is also an organization for disabled students on campus. It was started in 1980.

The service is designed to provide academic accommodations to disabled students so they have an equal opportunity to obtain an education, Holden said.

She said about 100 learning-disabled students and 80 physically disabled students have identified themselves to her office.

Peterson said Gretchen Holden, director of Disabled Student Services, does an efficient job scheduling classes.

When school starts, he has a revised schedule of where his classes meet.

Classes not accessible to disabled students are moved to areas that are accessible, Holden said.

K-State is still making improvements in the accessibility of buildings, Peterson said.

With low vision, Brunner said using microfilm in Farrell Library is difficult. She said if K-State had the money, an electronic journal system would help her be able to use journals and would be of benefit to all students on campus.

Brunner was a member of the American Disabilities Act Committee for the City of Manhattan. This was a one-year task to examine the ADA in regard to Manhattan.

"I was honored to serve," Brunner said.

She is a also a member of the Kansas Association for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

Students for Disability Awareness does not meet regularly, but it does meet when problems arise.

The group also meets if anyone feels there is a potential problem, Brunner said.

One of her problems with campus is bicyclists on sidewalks who do not realize there are some students on campus who can't see them coming, she said.

Changing campus facilities is not the only way to accommodate disabled students.

"I think it's the human aspect that can go a long ways even if the facilities aren't perfect," Peterson said.

Trumpeter to present flamboyant jazz music

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

McCain Auditorium will begin its 1993 concert season by presenting one of the jazz world's most flamboyant artists.

Lester Bowie, trumpet player, band leader, arranger and composer, will don his trademark white lab coat and appear along with his ten-piece backup band, Brass Fantasy, on Friday Sept. 17, at 8 p.m.

The white lab coat? Bowie wears the coat to signify the importance of science and precision in music. He uses the stage as his experimental laboratory.

"Lester Bowie is one of the most creative jazz performers. He's taking brass to new heights," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said.

Unlike other bands, listeners will hear no woodwinds, no strings and no saxophones. The only instruments in Bowie's band are brass instruments.

Brass Fantasy's musical direction has been called humorous and playful. Bowie himself has been referred to as a "quirky madman" and a "musical pugilist" in the 1993 issue of Jazzlines magazine by Don Glasgo, the director of the Barbary Coast Jazz Ensemble.

"He's more than just a re-creator. He's burning with a mission," Martin said.

Music is as deeply rooted in Bowie as jazz is in New Orleans.

According to his biographical information, Bowie began playing the trumpet at age 5 under the direction of his father, a high-school band director in St. Louis. By the time he was 15, Bowie had his own band.

In 30 years of performing, Bowie has played with Miles Davis, David Bowie, Chaka Kahn and Wynton Marsalis. One of his better known compositions is the theme music for the 1990 fall season of "The Cosby Show."

"Even if you don't know anything about jazz, go. Our goal is to provide a spectrum of entertainment that will enlighten, stimulate and entertain. That's the whole point," Martin said.

Tickets for Lester Bowie's Brass Fantasy are available at the McCain box office for $15 to the general public, $13 for senior citizens and $7.50 for students and children.

Everybody knows he's innocent; why is he still in jail?

Today, American Indian activist Leonard Peltier is celebrating his 49th birthday in a cell in Leavenworth Federal Penitentiary. His story is perhaps one of the most tragic in the history of the American justice system.

On June 26, 1975, a gunfight broke out on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, leaving two FBI agents and one Native American dead. Bob Robideau and Darelle Butler were tried for the murders of the agents in Cedar Rapids. Peltier escaped and was later tried in Fargo after being extradited from Canada.

Butler and Robideau were acquitted, and the judge severely reprimanded the FBI and U.S. attorneys for tampering with evidence. But in Fargo, N.D., the same prosecutors were allowed to use the same fraudulent evidence to get a conviction. On June 1, 1977, Peltier was sentenced to two consecutive life terms.

Since then, through the Freedom of Information Act, Peltier's attorneys have found the government withheld crucial ballistics evidence from the defense. To date, the government continues to withhold over 6,000 documents relating to the case for "national security" reasons.

On Nov. 9, 1992, Prosecutor Lynn Crooks admitted to the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals that the government has no idea who killed their agents.

Though the judges noted this is "quite significant," they rejected the appeal.

Peltier has maintained his innocence throughout, and the international community has shown its support with over 14 million signatures calling for his release. In 1986, he was awarded the International Human Rights Prize and was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 1992.

Yet he remains in prison.

What is done cannot be undone. The agents can't be brought back to life, and Peltier can't relive the years he has lost. But justice can at least be approached by releasing a man who is innocent.

We want justice.

Free Leonard Peltier.

Elements of Sex: Part I

Compared to people from other countries, Americans have a severe fixation on sex. Not a day goes by without hearing or seeing something related to sex.

And I believe I know why: We don't know the first thing about sex.

So, in the interests of public health and national security, I am going to explain everything you need to know, and did not know, about (drum roll please): SEX.

The History of Sex

Sex actually first began in the back seat of the Garden of Eden. It wasn't talked about much then, primarily because Adam and Eve did not have cable television or a videocassette recorder. But one day God decided it was time to stop all the fooling around and explain some of the facts of life in explicit detail. So, He said: "Come hither Ye naked, foolish children, and let Me give thee thy first lesson in sex."

Then, God said (with great harking of angels): "Be fruitful and multiply. End of lesson."

And then Adam said to Eve: "How do you like that! We haven't even started addition or subtraction, and He's already covering multiplication."

And we have been confused about sex ever since.

"Having Sex"

This is the most common term used for indicating participation in the sexual act. It can be used in mixed company as well as in private.

However, it is not used on the phone.

Hubert: "Hello, Larry? Say, I do hope I am not interrupting anything, but I needed to ask you a few important questions about septic tanks."

Larry (who is having sex): "Uh, er, well ... (tremendous commotion) ... no problem Hubert. Linda and I were just ... picking ticks off the dog. Nothing important, go right ahead."

For example, it is 11:30 at night, the kids are in bed, the television is on, and you and your spouse are having extraordinary (translated: "vocal") sex when suddenly (and with great fanfare) little Bobby bursts through the bedroom door announcing his presence and demanding to know what-the-Captain-Kangaroo is going on.

You: "Your mother and I were, uh ... just watching television before we turned in."

Little Bobby: "But I could hear someone, or maybe something ... well, it sounded like that old Janis Joplin record you and Mom always used to listen to. Or was it Tina Turner?"

You: "She was, I mean, the TV show was, was ... one of those old Japanese Godzilla movies. You know how Godzilla use to go 'Aieeeeeeeeee!' Well that is what you heard. Now you get to bed young man."

Sexual Positions

I am not going to comment much on this subject other than to say just about any position will work if you can draw it out on an Etcha-Sketch before attempting it.

This highly detailed drawing will then give you some idea of the gymnastics (translated: "medical bills") involved and also give you plenty of opportunity to build up enough frustration to have excellent sex by the time you finish the sketch, sometime in the year 2347.

BRAD SEABOURN

And one other interesting "sex fact" (in the event you end up on the "Jeopardy" show some day): One position named after Missionaries was indeed started a 100 years ago by Missionaries with large families who did not believe in using contraception and relied solely on prayer to prevent pregnancy.

Contraception

This brings us to a fundamental rule of contraception: Prayer does not work. A contraceptive term that recently has taken hold in society is the word "condom." It has become so common it can be heard on radio and television, frequently interspersed between advertisements for Blue Bunny ice cream and Sonny what's-his-name used cars.

None the less, a condom is a reasonably effective method for preventing pregnancy.

Many years ago, condoms were made of sheep intestines, but now they are made of latex rubber.

How they ever got sheep to stand still long enough to make them, I don't know.

But it wasn't until after The Great Sheep Rebellion of 1477 that they began making them out of heavy rubber.

Condoms served a dual purpose then and were used as galoshes during the winter months. It wasn't until the late 19th century, when a young scientist/balloonist invented and tested the first hot air balloon made of latex, that the effectiveness of the latex rubber condom was first proven.

This Polish scientist and his wife, known as The Flying Pudinskis, simultaneously showed that during initial test flight that pregnancy could also be prevented (with 100-percent effectiveness) by an abrupt stop.

I hope this clears up any confusion you may have had about sex. If you have any further questions on the subject, please direct them to me, Brad Seabourn, father of four ... and holding.

Let's all moon Pat Robertson

The thing is this: You got to have fun while you're fightin' for freedom, 'cause you don't always win.

–Molly Ivins
Journalist, author and hellraiser

This is just too weird. Uncanny even. Dig the scene: I'm doing some research on this here column concerning upcoming Landon Lecturer Pat Robertson. I walk through the rain to get a copy of The Landon Lectures, a collection of the speeches published in 1987 by the Friends of the Libraries.

I turn to the Richard Nixon speech, entitled "It's Time to Stand Up and Be Counted.

The preface reads "... local opponents of Nixon Administration policies saw the lecture as an opportunity to voice ... opposition, which they did by unfurling banners and by heckling during the Nixon speech.

"The President responded by exhorting his audience to 'stand up and be counted.' Their applause and the acoustic assistance of the public address system effectively overpowered the protest."

President Nixon later wrote a letter to then-K-State President James McCain that stated K-State's students had "demonstrated dramatically that the mindless disrupters are not the voice of America's youth," and "... only those who fear the process of reason have cause to shout down those they disagree with."

The irony struck me when I read the date of the speech: Sept. 16, 1970. Twenty-three years ago today. Cool, huh?

Freedom of speech is a wonderful thing. And I welcome Pat Robertson to our campus. I also welcome the chance for students to show Mr. Robertson how they feel about him.

But let me be frank and say I am a registered Republican who attends church when I'm not too sleepy on Sunday morning.

So, I'm not some atheist, liberal, pinko commie, OK?

But to me, the Republican party needs to get away from these old-fart moralizers who want to use political power to tell us how to live.

When old Pat talks politics, I get spooked.

Maybe it is true America needs some sort of moral retraining, but our very powerful and equally inept government is not the place for that retraining to come from.

I don't care how many Lincoln Continentals Mr. Robertson may have bought with purloined offerings or any other sort of scandal he may or may not be involved with.

I just don't think a person of the faith should be a politician, though it is perfectly all right for a politician to have a little faith.

But those are my personal feelings, which are not endorsed by the Collegian, K-State or the Kansas Beef Council.

There are some folks around here planning to protest Mr. Robertson's speech on Oct. 12. A flyer distributed across campus by the Ecumenical Campus Ministry and Manhattan's National Organization for Women chapter advertised a meeting 7:30 p.m. Friday, September 24, at 1021 Denison St. to organize a protest.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

But protests are protests, and any attempt to sit-in or picket or chant will make students and Manhattanites look like a bunch of damn hippies. And hell, nobody wants that.

Besides, most protests are usually things conceived in anger, and anger is never a good thing.

Instead of a protest, I have a better idea that comes from our sisters and brothers in the Lone Star State.

Earlier this year, a bunch of Ku Klux Klan fellers bused themselves in from Waco and staged a rally on the steps of the Texas State Capitol in Austin to show how gosh darn good the ol' Klan is.

Kind of a "This isn't yer Sweet Daddy's racist organization" rally.

Five thousand Texans who were not happy to have the Klannies on the steps of the state capitol gathered to stage a counter-rally, which entailed mooning the Klan members. Which is a very '90s way to protest, I'd say.

Just think of the great fun we can have: There is an inherent beauty of about 2,000 K-Staters showing their naked bottoms to Mr. Robertson in an auditorium full of uppity alumni who paid $125 each to get ol' Pat to speak here.

Think of the look on Pat's face when he's really getting into his speech and looks up to see a whole herd of shiny hineys staring him in the puss.

And so, with the power vested in me, I declare the 12th of October "Moon Pat Robertson Day."

The wise words of Richard Nixon ring true this day. Only those who fear the process of reason have cause to shout down those they disagree with.

We don't have to speak loudly, but we sure can show ol' Pat our butts.

Overlay program to enlighten students to different cultures

Editor,

John Hart says it well. "When people from diverse backgrounds discover similarities between one another, it becomes much more difficult to discriminate, or even hate. Once that unity or cohesion is established, and irrational fears or prejudices have been subdued, a discussion of cultural differences can be an exciting, enlightening and fruitful experience."

The diversity overlay is both about similarities and differences. Some courses may stress one more than the other, but all will provide students with an important knowledge base regarding the dynamics of diversity in the United States.

Lafene's appointment policy doesn't relieve allegy sufferer

Editor,

A portion of my fees goes to Lafene Health Center. This fee gives me the right to get treatment when I need it. However, on Sept. 13, this right was not fulfilled.

I suffer from seasonal allergies.

On Aug. 24, I saw a doctor at Lafene and asked for a prescription. The doctor consented and told me to come back if I needed a refill.

On Sept. 13, I felt worse than I'd ever felt in the past, due to allergies. I went to Lafene at 10:30 a.m. and asked to see a doctor for a prescription refill.

I was fully prepared to have to wait. I was told that I had to make an appointment, because that is the new policy. "It went into effect this summer."

I went to the appointment window and pleaded my case again. I was told that the next available appointment was not until Wednesday. I reiterated that I didn't need an examination, just to tell the doctor I needed a refill. I was then told to call back at 4 p.m. that day and see if there would be any cancellations for the next day. If there were no cancellations, then Wednesday was the earliest I could be seen.

Being denied immediate treatment, I left Lafene extremely angry and sick. I then went to the Saint Mary Hospital and received the same medication that I was asking for at Lafene.

The nurse at the Saint Mary Hospital told me that I was the second student complaining about not getting treatment at Lafene in the last week.

My concern is, why am I and other students paying for services at Lafene and being turned away?

FallFest faithful defend event against negative review

Editor,

We attended FallFest last Saturday and would like to respond to the negative publicity it received. We thoroughly enjoyed the event and thought all of the performers did an excellent job.

Although we were disappointed at the low attendance, we saw people enjoying themselves and have heard many positive comments. Hopefully, one viewpoint won't continue to turn away students from Union Program Council events. That would be a real shame.

Man Without a Face defaced by Collegian A&E reviewer

Editor,

I am writing in response to Trent Frager's review of "The Man Without a Face." I fail to see how someone who looked at the surface without delving deeper into the subtext or true content qualified to review that movie. For instance, Mr. Frager's comments of how disappointed he was on learning the cause of the main characters disfiguration so early in the film lack the insight to look deeper at the meaning.

The reason they did that and other devices in the film was to normalize Gibson's character. The boy eventually says that he can no longer see the scars, only the human being that Gibson was.

What I got out of the movie was that it was all right to characterize the emotion of love between men — even between the teacher and the student, the bond of friendship, not bound by age or social background or even disfiguration.

I strongly recommend the movie, especially for men who aren't afraid to express or experience their emotions.

Dau's short absence creates competition

Co-captain misses first invitational but is ready to move on with season

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Two weekends ago, when the Wildcat volleyball team opened its season at the Kansas State Invitational, the Wildcats opened without their co-captain Chi Dau.

Dau was side-lined for the tournament due to a heart condition. The sophomore setter then returned to the line-up last weekend to record 55 assists against Wright State.

"I really don't want to talk about the situation," Dau said. "It's over now, and I'm ready to move on with the rest of the season."

With senior Wendy Garrett playing at the setter position, the Cats finished third in the Kansas State Invitational with a 2-2 record.

"Naturally, it was hard to sit out after working hard all during preseason and the first two weeks of practice," Dau said. "I learned a lot about our the team's emotions.

"The team played fine without me. We adjusted, and Wendy played great."

Dau said missing the first tournament didn't affect her attitude.

"I knew that the situation was just temporary," Dau said. "That didn't get me worried, and I won't ever hold anything back."

When Dau returned last week at Iowa, the Cats finished with an 0-3 record with losses to Iowa, Washington State, an Wright State.

"Last weekend we played some tough competition," Dau said. " We played the best that we have ever played at some times last weekend. We just need to be more consistent."

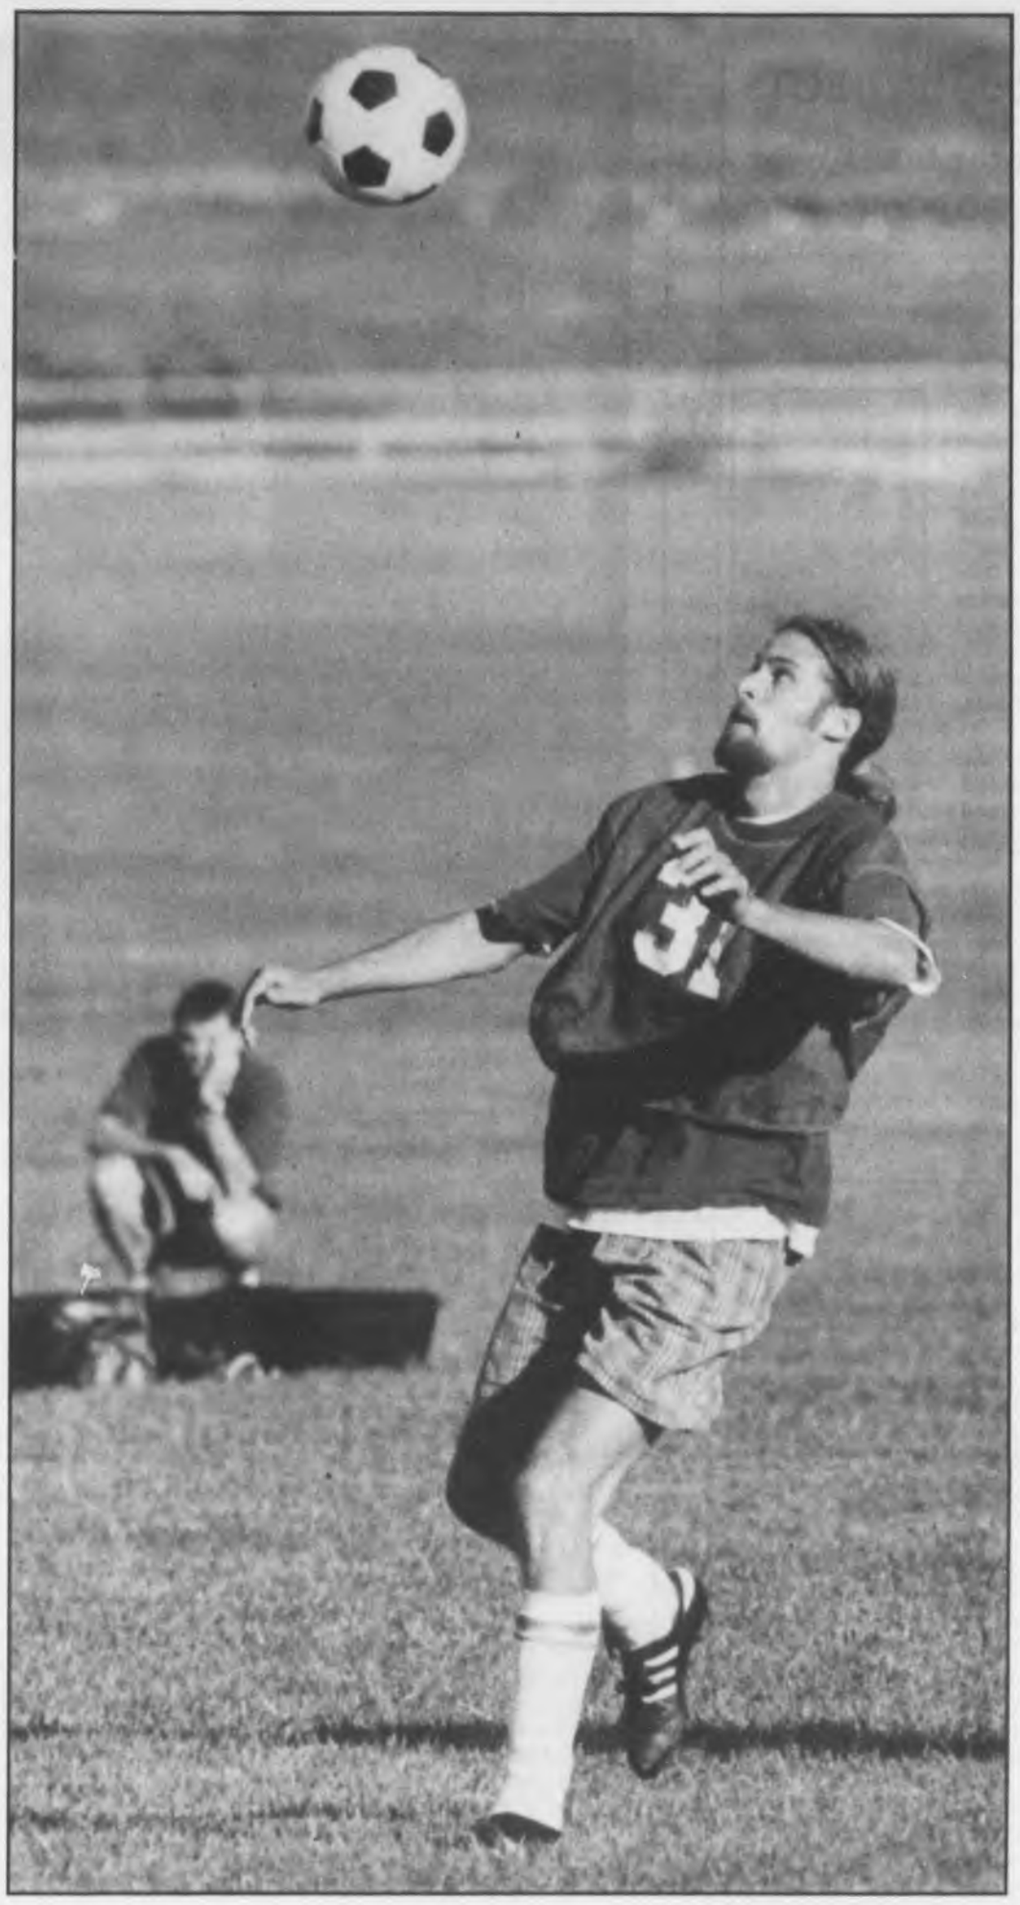
Dau said that even though the team finished winless at Iowa, things were starting to work right for the team.

"We started to gel last weekend. We could start to feel it," she said.

On her performance last weekend, Dau said that she did what Coach Patti Hagemeyer expected from her.

"I did what was expected last weekend in the tournament," Dau said. "I am looking forward to playing this weekend.

"We have practiced hard on transitions this week at practice. We want to come out strong and show up."



With Garrett's performance at the Kansas State Invitational, Dau had competition for the starting position and the school all-time set record. Dau is currently ranked fourth on the all-time list, and Garrett is fifth on the list.

"Wendy pushes me, and I am not comfortable with my position," Dau said. "I think that the competition makes us both better. I really don't think about the breaking the school record. I'm just working on improving over last season."

Operating the Cats' offense can be difficult, Dau said, because it is an audible offense.

"The offense seems overwhelming to an outsider," Dau said. "There are only three offensive calls from the hitters, but you have to know what's going on."

The Cats will play host to the Wildcat Invitational this weekend against Northeast Louisiana, Oral Roberts and Missouri-Kansas City.

Intramural athletes receive the same medical treatment the varsity athletes get because of a program headed by Lanny Leroy, athletic trainer.

Leroy, along with Jeff Kreuser and Rich Petrisko, graduate students in kinesiology, attend all intramural events and are on call from 4 to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"While we are out on the soccer and flag football fields, we have radios that keep us in constant contact in case someone gets hurt inside the Rec Complex," Kreuser said.

Kreuser received his undergraduate degree from Mankato State in Mankato, Minn., and is a certified athletic trainer, as is Petrisko.

Not only do the trainers have contact with the Rec Complex, but they are also directly in contact with Emergency Medical Services.

"We have been lucky so far and haven't had any major injuries, but it is a real relief to know that an ambulance can be contacted immediately should someone be injured seriously," Leroy said.

Leroy said it is a major benefit to the students to have injuries attended to immediately because it decreases the chances of the injury worsening.

"We keep statistics on what injuries occur most often in what sports," Leroy said. "We use the information to understand exactly what to pack in our kit before the event begins."

Preventative measures are available to athletes competing in intramural events. Trainers are available to tape ankles, give a massage or do anything an athlete might need to be ready to play safely.

"The most frequent injury I see are sprained ankles, and many of them could have been prevented if they were taped," Kreuser said.

Steve Martini, associate director of Recreational Services, spearheaded the effort to make the program available to intramural athletes. The program is now in its second vear.

"We tried to get the program started for years, but the funds weren't available until Lafene said they would fund the project for us," Martini said.

Lafene Health Center agreed to pay for the graduate program, and Recreational Services agreed to pay for the necessary supplies.

"This program really took the pressure off of us," Martini said. "We feel real fortunate to have this."

Martini said the program is beneficial to students because they can get the same treatment that a varsity athlete would receive from a certified trainer.

"I want to make students aware that this program is available to them and that they are lucky to have it, because there aren't many schools around that offer this sort of thing," Martini said.

Duke standout signs with Kings

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Duke point guard Bobby Hurley signed a $16.5-million, six-year contract Wednesday with the Sacramento Kings, making the 22-year-old college standout the Kings' second-highest paid player.

The 6-foot, 168-pound Hurley, the NCAA's career leader in assists with 1,060, was the Kings' top pick in the NBA draft and the seventh pick overall. He averaged 17 points and 8.2 assists per game at Duke, where he played on two national championship teams and took three teams into the NCAA title game.

Hurley acknowledged he will be battling Kings veteran Spud Webb for a starting berth. Hurley is the first No. 1 draft pick to sign with the Kings prior to training camp since Lionel Simmons in 1990.

Hurley's contract is second on the team to guard Mitch Richmond, former K-State standout, who is paid $3 million a year.

In announcing Hurley's pact, the Kings also said they waived their rights to unrestricted free-agent forwards Anthony Bonner, Rod Higgins and Kurt Rambis, trimming the team's current roster to 13.

Chi-Sox outlast Royals with 4-run rally

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Lance Johnson had a hitter's delight in the 11th — bases loaded and the infield drawn in.

Johnson delivered a two-run single, and the Chicago White Sox batted around for four runs to beat Kansas City 10-6 Wednesday night, crippling the Royals' pennant hopes while maintaining a 3-1/2 game lead in the AL West.

The White Sox go to Oakland for three and then to California for four before returning home to face second-place Texas.

"We left (Chicago) 31/2 games ahead, and we leave here 31/2 ahead," White Sox manager Gene Lamont said. "(Kevin) Appier beat us that first game, and we were looking at guys like Mike Magnante and David Cone. Magnante's record might not be that good, but he's been tough on us. We're still 31/2 ahead."

Kansas City fell to seven behind with 17 to play and also goes to the West Coast to play Seattle and Oakland.

"The guys battled," Royals manager Hal McRae said. "I'm not disappointed. It's a devastating loss naturally, but it's not over. We threw all we had at them, but it wasn't enough."

Chicago reliever Roberto Hernandez (2-4) got the win, giving up two hits in 2 2-3 innings — his longest outing of the year.

Gubicza walked Frank Thomas to lead off the 11th. Robin Ventura then singled, and Steve Sax bunted the runners to second and third. Ellis Burks was intentionally walked to load the bases, and Johnson followed with a single just past the glove of diving shortstop Greg Gagne. Raines doubled for his fourth hit of the game one out later.

▶SIGMA CHI'S LEAD WAY HEADING INTO FINALS

"We had good turn out this year among the fraternities and sororities," Bryan Skinner, assistant intramural director, said. "They can really make a lot of noise in there, and that makes it fun."

Sigma Chi led the way by finishing first in the preliminaries of both the 200-yard medley and freestyle relays. They also had swimmers qualify for the finals in each of the nine individual races.

Dennis Clock qualified for the finals in both the 50- and 100-yard breast strokes. His teammate Beau Barrows will compete Thursday night in the 50-yard freestyle and is a member of both relay teams that qualified.

"You never know who was holding back in the preliminaries, but as for now, we should have some great races on Thursday," Skinner said.

Brent Demmitt, Sigma Nu, will try to defend his 50-yard freestyle and 100-yard individual medley titles Thursday night.

Demmitt, a senior in economics, was the all-University Champion in the 50-yard freestyle in each of the last four years and won one title in the 100-yard individual medley.

"I'm starting to get older now, and I may be slowing down," he said. "Some freshman may come along and kill me."

The meet will conclude after tonight's competition, which starts at 8 p.m. in the Natatorium.

▶HOUSTON DROPS 3RD STRAIGHT TO ROCKIES

DENVER (AP) — Charlie Hayes hit a club-record three doubles, and Andres Galarraga drove in three runs, rallying the Colorado Rockies to their third straight victory over the Houston Astros, 6-4 Wednesday night.

Luis Gonzalez went 4-for-4 and had two RBI, giving the Astros a 4-2 lead before Colorado scored three runs in the seventh.

Galarraga's grounder produced the first run. With two outs, Hayes hit his third double of the game for a 4-4 tie. Jerald Clark singled up the middle for the go-ahead run.

Colorado, which has won six games in a row at home, is 10-2 against the Astros.

PEOPLE & PROJECTS

■ New director takes over K-State's ROTC program

Major George Stelljes, professor of military science and a 17-year Army veteran, has high regards for the program he took over in July.

George Stelljes

"The program here is an outstanding one, and I don't see any need to make any major changes," Stelljes said. "I do plan to stress academics, training and physical fitness."

Stelljes' career began in 1975 when he enlisted in the Army.

"I had originally wanted to work in the FBI," Stelljes said. "The agent that I talked to told me it would be better if I had military experience first. I joined the Army, liked it and never went into the FBI."

He also graduated from Framingham College in Massachusetts with a bachelor's degree in history.

He received his master's degree in social science from the California University of Pennsylvania, where he was involved in ROTC.

His last assignment at Fort Hood, Texas, was as a testing-and-operations officer of an upgraded version of the M1A2 Abrams tank, a weapon that was featured in the Gulf War.

■ Multicultural activites get new coordinator

The nucleus of K-State's multicultural activities has a new leader.

Laura Grabhorn became the new coordinator of multicultural activities on Sept. 1.

She will be in charge of the multicultural student council and all issues that are important to minority students.

One of her goals at K-State will be emphasizing student service, she said.

"I just want to make as smooth a transition as possible from the last coordinator," Grabhorn said. "We want to serve students as best we can."

A search committee, organized to find the most qualified person to be coordinator of multicultural activities, received many applications but narrowed the field down to three candidates.

The criteria for the position included experience with students and programming.

"Laura seemed to be well prepared," Lewerenz said.

Dorothy Roberts-Arvizu, graduate student adviser to the Native American Student Body, said she hopes Grabhorn will expand on what multicultural groups on campus have achieved already.

"We need to spread awareness that multiculturalism includes everyone," Roberts-Arivizu said.

Grabhorn said she feels recognizing diversity is important.

"This country was built on the contributions of all people," she said. "I want to make an impact on the contributions that students from diverse backgrounds have made to American culture as we know it."

■ Biologist directs wildlife research unit

Philip Gipson, a former biologist with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, became the new unit leader of K-State's Cooperative Fish and Wildlife Research Unit in May.

The Research Unit, established in October 1991, is a division under the Cooperative Research Units Center, which is a part of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Gipson oversees the Research Unit's duties that emphasize graduate training, fish and wildlife research and providing technical assitance to resource managers.

"We conduct research with wildlife and fishery, interact with agriculture," he said. "Our main purpose is to be a source of creditable information about wildlife and fishery resources to all Kansans," he said.

Gipson is also trying to expand the Research Unit's work force.

"We are in the process of hiring two assistants. We are looking for the very best scientists we can bring in," he said. "We hope to be fully staffed by Jan. 1 of the new year."

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Division of Biology and the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks collectively chose Gipson for the position, said Jerry Weis, interim director for the Division of Biology.

"He was my recommendation to take over the leadership of this unit," Weis said.

Marjorie Hancock, professor of elementary education, recently returned from a trip to Ireland, where she researched children's responses to literature.

Professors uses Irish tales to conduct research

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Across the ocean to Ireland, Marjorie Hancock completed a study comparing American and Irish children's response to literature.

Hancock, assistant professor of elementary education, said she began the research to provide a global study of upper-elementary-level children and their responses to literature.

In addition, she wanted to explore the relationship between the prior knowledge and ethnic background of Irish and American children and their responses to two books.

Hancock used the children's book "Under the Hawthorn Tree," which is set in Ireland during the potato famine.

She also used its sequel, "Wildflower Girl," which tells of a girl's struggle to survive famine and travel to Boston to find a better life.

"The children learned a lot about the Irish culture because they could identify with the character in the book," she said.

"The children wrote down their thoughts and feelings from their hearts throughout the story rather than at the end of the book. I believe they expressed more commitment, honesty and feelings."

Several Irish schools were included in the research, including two schools in Dublin, a school in Newbridge County Kildare and a school in County Cork in Skibbereen.

Hancock flew to Dublin, then went by train, bus and foot to find the schools in rural Ireland.

Third, fourth and sixth grades from Council Grove and Amanda Arnold Elementary School in Manhattan also participated in the study, Hancock said.

Hancock emphasized reader responses throughout her research.

Teachers would read one chapter aloud to the children and ask open-ended questions, requiring them to create their own answers, she said.

"Then the students wrote in a journal for five to eight minutes," Hancock said."There were no right or wrong answers."

Hancock said she will continue to study the data she has collected and will write several journal articles to report the research.

She also submitted a proposal to the International Reading Association to speak at the annual convention concerning her research.

Hancock's research will help students she teaches in language-arts methods courses, Jan Wissman, associate dean of the College of Education, said.

"I think any time a faculty member is involved in research the students at K-State benefit," Wissman said. "Dr. Hancock is the epitome of a professor who models teaching, research and service. She is modeling for students and a part of the international community of researchers in education, as well as preparing future educators to teach in a global society."

Hancock began her research in February 1993, after receiving the Kansas State University Small Research Grant.

"I received $1,000 for the purpose of buying books, making phone calls to Irish teachers and mailing expenses to Ireland," Hancock said. "My research started out as a small idea and snowballed into something larger, which was too good to give up."

Hancock was also the recipient of a $1,000 Conoco Undergraduate Teaching Award, which she said helped her with travel expenses to Ireland.

"I couldn't give up the opportunity to travel to Ireland. It brought the children alive to me when I met the personalities of the journals and made the research more real to me," she said. "Valerie Coughlan of the College of Education of the Church of Ireland helped me locate classrooms and made arrangements."

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

Health-care costs are increasing, and many Americans, including college students, are misinformed about health-insurance costs.

Dan Short, dean of business, is using research and his professional accounting experience to analyze several studies of national health-care costs.

Dan Short

He is an accounting expert and a frequent commentator for Forbes and other business publications.

"Because of over-utilization of hospital equipment, many Americans are being over-billed," he said.

A hospital pays for a machine in full because the equipment has a high fixed cost.

After payment of the machine, the only costs remaining to be charged out to patients should be for electricity and the doctor's time, he said.

"It's like an airplane seat — it costs nothing to the airline, and they get money every time it is used, but an empty seat is no loss to the airline," Short said.

Another issue is the shifting of the health-care costs.

An injured person gets treated in an emergency room whether the person has insurance or not, but the costs become liable elsewhere, he said.

"It is like credit cards. People who have them pay higher interest rates for those who don't pay their credit-card debts," Short said.

People who do not have health insurance benefit from people with insurance, he said.

He used as an example the recent case of the Lakeberg Siamese twins.

Kenneth and Reitha "Joey" Lakeberg, the parents of the twins, did not have insurance to cover the hundreds of thousands of dollars in medical costs to separate the twins.

The Indiana Public Aid provided $997 a day to help pay the bills, and the Philadelphia Children's Hospital, where the operation was done, absorbed the rest of the costs.

Health-insurance money is enough to pay for the entire operation of hospitals, but patients are still billed for expenses other than the doctor's time, he said.

"Student health fees pay for all staff salaries and operating costs at Lafene," said Sally Sowell, administrative officer at Lafene Health Center.

"Seventy to 75 percent of Lafene's budget comes from student health fees," Sowell said.

The remaining amount comes from services such as pharmacy and lab costs.

Lafene has a reserve that would allow the center to operate for 10 months if it became low on funds, Sowell said.

"We are not here to make money — we are here to serve the students," she said.

The $80 students pay in health fees may seem like a lot of money, she said, but it would take only two or three visits to a regular hospital to use that money.

One problem facing students is when they need emergency care and Lafene is closed, Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said.

He said he is looking into the possibility of local hospitals adjusting costs for students who need medical attention when Lafene is closed.

"I am discussing the situation with local hospitals to see if some accommodations on costs could be made for students," Zweimiller said.

"This would be only when Lafene is closed after 9 p.m."

ROTC recruiter Kansas native

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Attending college doesn't have to mean thousands of dollars in college loans.

Capt. Ken Wedge, recruiting operations officer for the ROTC program at K-State, said many students aren't aware of the opportunity awaiting them in the U.S. military.

"It can give some people an opportunity to go to college who might not normally have the chance," he said.

Wedge, who took over recruiting operations on Aug. 27, said he finds his job rewarding.

"I would like to see Kansas students get their education in Kansas and remain here," he said.

The money students can obtain from ROTC scholarships stays in Kansas every time the student chooses a Kansas school, Wedge said.

Wedge's Kansas background provides an advantage for recruiting, Capt. Allen West, assistant professor of military science, said.

Wedge, who joined the National Guard in 1971, when he was 17, is a graduate of Chapman High School.

He graduated from Officers Candidate School in Salina in 1982.

Dean to retire but remain active in chemistry

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Retirement does not always mean ending a career.

For Robert Kruh, vice provost of Academic Services and Technology and dean of Continuing Education, it means moving on to new challenges.

He will be retiring this winter after serving K-State for 25 years.

Kruh, who received his doctoral degree from Washington University in St. Louis, plans to return to teaching chemistry next fall. His teaching career began at DePauw University.

Kruh said working directly with the students is something he has missed in his position as vice provost.

"Dr. Kruh loves to teach and show people new things," Bea Wentzel, executive secretary to Kruh, said.

Kruh, a native of St. Louis, came to K-State in 1967 as dean of the Graduate School and professor of chemistry.

Many of the programs and grants Kruh has been a part of have helped strengthen the Graduate School, he said.

"The Graduate School and research makes a university," Kruh said.

He has been an active part in the addition of doctoral programs in civil engineering, sociology and history.

Kruh is president of the KSU Research Foundation. The Research Foundation was added to help deal with patents and marketing of the patents, he said. K-State graduate enrollment grew dramatically during his years at the Research Foundation.

Kruh said he has learned many things about the continuing education program, including the new video and computer systems. Continuing education conducts adult classes, TELENET courses, summer school and intersession classes.

It sends learning resources out into the state, he said.

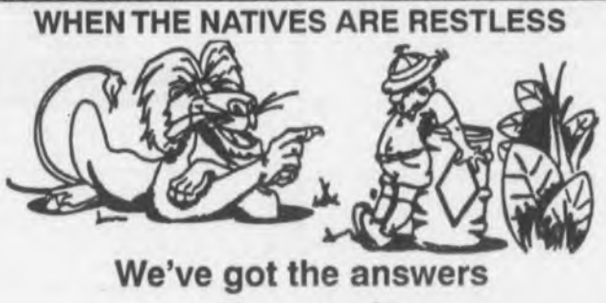
"The educational trend involves a dependence of learning through formal means," Kruh said.

There is a pattern of life-long learning developments in every field that must be kept up, he said.

Kruh juggles many activities and responsibilities.

"He is really good at getting things done — he can be very relaxed yet very effective, and extremely considerate," Viki Horan, administrative assistant to the dean, said.

Kruh coordinated the re-accreditation of K-State by the North Central Association. This accreditation is done every 10 years and is a two-year process that Kruh began in 1990.



Kruh knows how to tackle big assignments and get them done efficiently, Wentzel said.

"He has a genuine interest in the students, education and the University," she said.

Professor shares sculpting passion

CRYSTAL GOERING
Collegian

Michael Mastranardi is the K-State art department's latest addition.

This semester, Mastranardi, assistant professor of art, is teaching basic sculpting classes that use clay and stone, along with instructing students in jewelry making.

However, the art form that he most prefers is steel sculpting.

"It's a very physical form of art. I find it very challenging and stimulating," he said. "As a child, I loved to work with my hands, I was always designing and building things."

Matranardi is teaching the basic sculpting classes, because that is where the department needs his help most, Rex Replogle, associate professor in art and head of sculpture, said.

"We hope he can start teaching the more advanced courses soon," Replogle said.

Mastranardi did not always want to be an artist, he said. In his teens and early 20s, he repaired classic and foreign cars.

"When I was 21 years old, I had a girlfriend who asked me to take a ceramics class with her. I liked working with my hands, so I loved it. The following semester I quit my job and became a full-time art student," Mastranardi said.

He has received two master's degrees in sculpture from the Massachusetts College of Art and Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn.

He taught sculpture and jewelry making at several colleges on the East Coast before coming to K-State.

"I feel like I've come home to K-State. It's so similar to the college I graduated from," Mastranardi said.

After he was hired, Mastranardi went through an orientation and interview process.

"The art department treated me very well. We had a pot-luck dinner and other activities so I could get to know the department faculty."

Replogle said said the art department is glad to have Mastranardi.

"He's doing very well, and his work is strong and interesting."

Mastranardi has given several exhibitions of his work. In the latest showing, he was one of 16 national artists who were chosen by Donald Kuspit, a highly respected art critic.

"Spirituality drives me," Mastranardi said. "I refer to my work as a physical meditation, a personal journey."

Mastranardi said he sees promise in each of his students.

"My goal is to help them successfully express themselves," he said.

Mastranardi said he hopes to start teaching his specialty, steel sculpting, next semester.

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

Hall director joins housing and dining

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

The new assistant director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services said he is glad to be at K-State.

"I love it here — especially the people I work with," Shah Hasan said.

Alex Delgadillo, Residence Hall Life Program coordinator, said it is exciting to work with Hasan.

"He talks about having a vision and is able to articulate what that is," Delgadillo said. "He's kind of like an artist at work."

Hasan's duties include overseeing the residence program. This program is set up to provide the students with a place to belong.

"We don't just have rooms and beds," Hasan said. "We create communities and learning experiences for people in the residence halls."

Hasan said he provides leadership to the hall directors and area coordinators by helping them with their long-term planning.

"My job is to help them do theirs better," he said.

Marketing recruitment is one of his duties that involves getting new people to move into the residence halls and keeping current residents there.

This semester, the residence halls had more students than originally projected, Hasan said.

His goal will be to retain at least 40 percent of those students, he said.

Hasan said he is having a great time in Manhattan and loves the sense of closeness and belonging.

The University and the students have close-knit relationships, Hasan said.

Hasan, born in Bangladesh, spent most of his youth traveling with his parents.

He first visited the United States when he was a child. He returned in 1981 at age 24 to attend college, earning a bachelor's degree at the University of Wooster in Ohio.

From there, Hasan went on to Ohio State, where he earned his master's degree in higher education administration.

Hasan was selected from a national search to fill the position of assistant director of housing and dining services at K-State.

COMMUNITY

Instructors teach skills, hobbies at UFM classes

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

Many members of K-State's faculty share their special interests by teaching classes at UFM.

UFM is a University community-based educational organization that is founded on the philosophy that anyone can teach and anyone can learn, Linda Teener, executive director of UFM, said.

About 15 K-State faculty members teach courses ranging from kayaking to making paper snowflakes.

Leo Schell, professor of elementary education, has been teaching at UFM for six years.

People of all ages attend his Saturday-morning classes that teach the artistic principles of making paper snowflakes and paper airplanes.

The students provide an incentive for him to teach at UFM, Schell said.

"They always have a great spirit and want to be there," he said. "The students make the class."

He became interested in teaching at UFM after taking several of UFM's courses and realizing he had a skill that would fit into its program, Schell said.

Michele Thun, graduate teaching assistant in the modern languages department, said she enjoys teaching German at UFM.

> PROFESSOR OF ELEMENTARY EDUCATION

"It brings lots of people together — people who aren't interested in taking University classes," Thun said. "It's agreat opportunity."

He has been teaching introductory and intermediate kayaking classes for 13 years.

A kayak is similar to a canoe with a few main differences, Replogle said.

A person sits in the kayak in a small opening that is covered by a skirt that keeps out water. Paddles with blades on both ends are used to propel the craft.

Replogle and Schell said it is not difficult to divide their teaching time between K-State and UFM.

"People do things for recreation, and this is recreation on our part and for the students," Replogle said.

It is common for K-State faculty members to teach classes unrelated to their professional field of study, Teener said.

"We have such an interesting mix using Kansas State University staff doing something other than what they would normally do during the day," Teener said.

Most UFM instructors teach on a voluntary basis, she said.

"This program would not exist without volunteers," she said. "It says a lot about them, and about the community, that we can exist for 25 years with volunteer fostering."

Post-punk Cher, Bosom play tonight

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Cher is in town, but don't count on seeing Sonny. Instead, expect some spunky, post-punk weirdness.

Cher, a three-piece alternative rock band from Kansas City, will play tonight at Berlin.

This band has earned the respect of the Kansas City/Lawrence scene, as well as that of Columbia Records subsidiary Red Decible, who recently signed a record deal for Cher.

Cher's live shows of the past have been characterized by raw, sometimes destructive energy and creative stage antics.

Interesting song titles, such as "Janitor in a Drum" and "Kibbles N' Bits," should find their way into Cher's set list.

CONCERT INFO
WHO: Cher and Bosom
WHERE: Berlin, 702 N. 11th
WHEN: Doors open at 8 p.m., show starts at 9 p.m.
COST: $4; must be 18 to enter, 21 to drink

Bosom, a local band that has been a fixture on the Manhattan music scene for more than a year, will open. The group's music tends to mix basement grunge with some creative twang coming from traditional folk/acoustic instruments, such as dulcimer, congas and accordion.

Bosom will have a self-released tape available around Oct. 1.

There is a $4 cover for the show. Doors will open at 8 p.m., and the show will start around 9 p.m. You must be 18 to enter and 21 to drink.

Jeff Mindrep, Berlin's owner, said he hopes to feature live music in his new club on a regular basis.

"We're working on bringing in some great acts here in the next few weeks," he said, "and I hope that we can be an asset to the local scene."

On the front lawn, on the roof, on campus ...

Dear Cassandra,

I hoped it wouldn't have to come to this, but I have an interesting problem I need to share with you. My current lover is insatiable. I think she is a nymphomaniac. When we have sex, everything goes.

I met her at a laundromat, and she needed some detergent. After some small talk, which became sexual in nature, she suggested we go to the bathroom while our laundry dried. We had mad, passionate sex for 45 minutes. That night, she came over again, and we had sex. The next day and night we had sex 11 times.

Cassandra, I had never been so sore in all my life.

It has been six weeks since we first met. After the first day and night, I began keeping track of our "events." There have been 210 different intercourse encounters and 135 oral-sex encounters. When we aren't having sex, we are talking about it.

We've been in cars, pickup beds, closets, kitchens, bathrooms, front yards, rooftops, playground equipment, Bluemont Hill and even three times on campus.

The problem is I love her, and I know she loves me, but I don't want to have this much sex. I've heard of this on TV talk shows. I don't want to discourage her totally, and I don't want to lose her. What should I do?

Signed,
Gave it my ALL at the laundromat

Dear Feel Like Makin' Love (ALL the time),

According to my calculations, you and your "sexually motivated" girlfriend have averaged a sexual encounter 8.28 times a day.

When did you sleep, eat or even find time to fall in love?

Quit having sex. If you indeed love each other, it won't matter.

P.S. Get an AIDS test ASAP.

ACIC specialists help students DISCOVER

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

Because of a production error, this story is being reprinted. The Collegian regrets the error.

Students looking for direction in their academic and career lives now have a place designed to cater to them.

"ACIC was developed to meet the needs of the increasing numbers of students entering as undecided," she said.

"Research shows that only one in five students graduate in their first declared field," she said. "There is a definite need for the services we provide."

The purpose of ACIC is to provide information and assistance to individuals involved with the educational- and career-planning process, Fraser said.

"We use DISCOVER to help identify skills, interests, values, experience and abilities which have an influence on possible education and career pathways," Fraser said.

The center has 23 career specialists — students who have been trained to help guide others in their search.

"They've been very helpful, and it seems like the DISCOVER program will give me specific and productive results," Nabeeha Mujeeb Kazi, sophomore undecided, said.

"I was expecting something totally different, like just walking in and being told to read something," she said.

Other sources of assistance at ACIC include files with details on more than 500 occupations and every academic program at K-State, a computerized graduate-school selection program and geographic information from the Department of Labor outlining various areas of job demand, Fraser said.

"There is a lot of information on a lot of different career choices, even ones not offered at K-State," Angie Stoller, sophomore undecided, said. "The best part is that everything is in a central location."

"They were very eager to help me decide and show me what's available," she said.

"Our center is very customer-service based," Sara Doornbos, assistant coordinator at ACIC, said. "Everyone is greeted at the front door, and we sit down with them one-on-one to learn their individual needs."

If ACIC counselors cannot help students in their office, they locate the information or make appropriate referrals, Fraser said.

"Deciding on a major or career takes more than a session with us. We have the information to start the process, but students should utilize all the services available to them," Doornbos said.

"The services we provide vary with each student. Some may come in knowing exactly what they want and just need to use the library, while others may need more extensive services such as DISCOVER," Jana Eaton, sophomore in chemistry and a career specialist for ACIC, said.

Holtz Hall offers disc program

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

Services available in Holtz Hall provide students and alumni with support during the employment search process.

"We help people refine career goals and offer them support in their efforts to reach those goals," James Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, said.

"We're trying to coordinate career services from the time students enroll until the time of retirement," he said. "September has been designated Job Search Awareness Month to help inform people of the services we offer."

Some of those services include a listing of part-time employment opportunities, internship contacts, mock-interview clinics, resume-critique sessions, cooperative education programs and job search registration on a computer disc, Akin said.

"The new computer program is fantastic. And it's a real bargain for students," he said.

After purchasing the $5 disc in Holtz Hall, individuals can input their resume information on the disc at any IBM-compatible computer on campus, Akin said.

"After the disc is returned to Holtz Hall, employers requesting applicants with your qualifications will receive the full-page format electronically," he said.

"It's a good idea because my resume will be available to a lot more companies," he said.

The center also works directly with alumni who are willing to provide students with assistance at various stages in their job search.

"The alumni serve as an extension of us out there," Akin said.

Career and Employment Services is the new title for what used to be called Career Planning and Placement.

"We changed the name because the word 'placement' implies we have the power to put people in jobs. We don't. We assist people in their search," Akin said.

Lafene offers career counseling

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

Personal career counseling is available to students searching for guidance or looking for help with making life decisions.

"We provide students with a chance to discuss career decisions in a one-on-one relationship with a trained professional," said Carol Jauquet, coordinator of career services at University Counseling Services in Lafene Health Center.

Sometimes students get stuck because of personal factors such as family conflicts, self-esteem and stress, she said.

"We bring all these areas to bear on someone's decision about what to major in and what career path to follow," Jauquet said.

Not every undecided major needs personal counseling, Jauquet said.

"Many students just need information, and that is where the Academic and Career Information Center comes in.

"Because there are three centers providing help, we try hard to work together and have a good referral system, especially between ACIC and Counseling Services," Jauquet said.

"We want students to be in the right place to receive the specific attention they need," she said.

In addition to individual career guidance, the staff also administers interest and ability tests and teaches two classes designed to help students in their career search.

"The tests are designed to provide background on students, their patterns of interest, personality style and work values," Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, said.

The classes are called Career Life Planning and Major Decisions. Major Decisions is through independent study and will be open to enrollment through September.

"We try to help students make decisions, and that's one of the things college is all about," Newton said.

Slattery seeks office said he has read Ross Perot's book on the subject.

Slattery said he supports background checks before allowing handgun or rifle purchases. He said he considers a waiting period to be an ineffective, but popular, solution.

"I approach this campaign with confidence, but I have never taken any opponent in any race for granted," he said.

Former House speaker Marvin Barkis and Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, are also seeking the Democratic nomination.

DARBY WALLACE
Collegian

If you're a hopeless romantic, an English major or someone who just has an itch for poetry, you can satisfy your intellectual hunger at 4 p.m. today in Union 212.

Greg Donovan, director of creative writing at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond, Va., will be reading poems from his first book, "Calling His Children Home."

Donovan, a published poet since 1972, has had many titles and awards. His most recent was on "Calling His Children Home." It won him the distinguished 1993 Devins Award.

As a graduate student, Donovan was taught and influenced by the great writer John Gardner, who has been known for such works as "December Light" and "Gremdle."

"Donovan is very much Missourian in terms of his personality," Jonathan Holden, professor of English, said. "His work is full of colorful local stories and episodes of middle America that are uniquely set in the past."

Although history is a topic Donovan uses throughout his new book, he also has written poems on such topics as religion, racism, photography and parenthood.

"Everyone has their own style or acting mode they present their work in," Steve Heller, professor of English, said. "Some read with a character, some just read."

This will be Donovan's first visit to K-State. He was invited to speak by the English department.

Convocation to deal with overpopulation's effects on biodiversity

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

A panel of K-State scientists met for a pre-convocation forum Wednesday night in the K-State Union.

The forum was part of preparations for botanist Peter Raven's convocation lecture, titled "The Global Biology Crisis: What it Means for Us," at 10:30 a.m. Friday, Sept. 17 in McCain Auditorium.

Panel members for the pre-convocation lecture were Donald Adamchak, professor of social anthropology and social work; Theodore Barkley, professor of biology; Wayne Geyer, professor of horticulture, forestry and recreation resources; and Wayne Nafziger, professor of economics.

The discussion topic was the human effect on biodiversity. Biodiversity is diversity in numbers of plant and animal species. All the panelists agreed that one of the principal causes of the current reduction in biodiversity is the rapidly expanding human population.

"The world's population is expected to double in 40 to 60 years," Adamchak said.

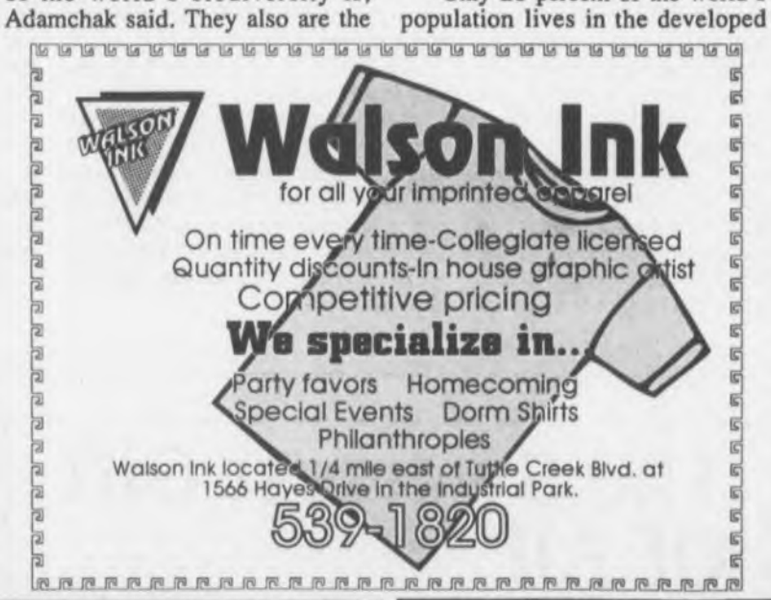
Countries where most of the population growth is occurring also happen to be the places where most of the world's biodiversity is, Adamchak said. They also are the poorest countries, with the worst technology, he said.

"The people in these countries have to live," Adamchak said. "They don't care about biodiversity. The current living conditions are so poor that the attitude about the long term is, "Who cares?"

Rich countries are also responsible for reducing biodiversity, Nafziger said.

"Only 26 percent of the world's population lives in the developed countries," he said. "However, these people consume 80 percent of the natural resources."

Too often there is no regard for the future in rich countries either.



"The current generation has an obligation to maintain natural assets in the same condition that it received them in," Nafziger said.

Raven is home secretary for the National Academy of Science, the elite organization for scientists, and a member of the National Science Board, which oversees scientific policy.

He is helping to organize a national biological survey as part of the reorganization of the Department of the Interior's biological research. He is the author of more than 450 scientific papers and 18 books.

Ambassadors help ease worries

K-State Cares welcomes new students to campus

LISA STAAB
Collegian

When your phone rings in the next few days, it might not be your mother or significant other.

Instead, it might be a student ambassador in your college who is calling with K-State Cares.

K-State Cares, a program focused toward new students, has been part of a recruitment tool for the University since 1987.

"I think K-State Cares is an extension of the message we give to students during recruitment," Gary Pierson, assistant director of New Student Services, said. "Even though this is a large university, we want students to know we care about them. It's an effort on part of the colleges to let students know of different services available.

"K-State Cares bridges the gap between recruitment and retention," he said. "We want students to know this is a university with a lot of support and resources."

Pierson said ambassadors from each college except the College of Arts and Sciences will make phone calls to new students from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Sept. 16, 21, 23 and 28. The College of Arts and Sciences decided not to contact students by phone and will pursue other options, Pierson said.

He said each ambassador is provided with a list of names of students in the college and curriculum. While talking with new students, ambassadors are provided scripts that contain questions such as problems in housing, academic, financial assistance or other areas.

"The ambassador's work is volunteer. These ambassadors really want to help the students, so I know their hearts are in the right places," Pierson said. "They don't do it for awards. They do it because it makes them feel good about helping these students."

Kay Stewart, assistant dean of the College of Business Administration, agreed with Pierson. She said she believes K-State Cares is beneficial for the ambassadors and new students.

"The feedback from my ambassadors that have called is that they think it (K-State Cares) is valuable," she said. "It seems the new students appreciate the fact that we make contact with them."

Pierson said ambassadors complete a response sheet for each new student. If a student has any problems, a referral sheet is made so Pierson can request the new student receive assistance for his or her problem.

"The majority of the students contacted are probably a little surprised. They may not say they have problems. But even if the ambassadors identify five or six students who have concerns, K-State Cares will have achieved its purpose," he said.

"This is an effort to help retain students and benefit their experience to be a success at K-State."

For those students who don't receive a phone call, Pierson said they will receive a letter from their respective college.

"We encourage each college to send out a letter to new students who were not contacted by phone," Pierson said.

"This letter should contain numbers or resources students can contact with any additional questions."

Pierson said statistics show that more than 1,200 students have been contacted by phone in the last several years.

Cardwell basement home to atom-smashers

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Not many K-state students realize that down in the basement of Cardwell Hall, scientists are stripping electrons, operating resonators and engaging in a suck, spit, suck, spit process.

No, highly educated people are not expectorating all over the floor — these are just terms used by K-State physicists who are working with the three technologically advanced particle accelerators in the James R. Macdonald Laboratory.

Each accelerator, the tandem Van de Graaff accelerator, the linear accelerator (LINAC) and the Cryogenic Electron Beam Ion Source (CRYEBIS), operates differently.

"If you want to look at such things as the properties of atomic nuclei, particle accelerators are the only way to do it," he said.

In 1984, the Macdonald lab was updated with the purchase of the LINAC and the CRYEBIS.

"The LINAC was a major acquisition for the lab," he said.

The U.S. Department of Energy funded the purchase of the LINAC and the third accelerator in the lab, the CRYEBIS, Richard said. These two accelerators cost $5.1 million, he said.

"The Macdonald Lab is a world-class lab," Jim Legg, physics department head, said. "The first and foremost reason it is so good are the researchers who work there."

"I can't give enough credit to the staff," Richard said. "It is because of their hard work that we have an internationally known lab here at K-State."

The lab was established in 1967, Richard said. It was named in honor of James Macdonald, a professor in the physics department who was instrumental in the development of the lab.

"Not many people know about the Macdonald lab," Legg said. "Most students only know about the teaching end of our department, and because the lab is underground, no one can see what is going on."

Maintaining the three accelerators and using them for experiments requires more than 50 employees, Tom Gray, associate director for operations, said.

"We are at the cutting edge of technology," Gray said. "We push equipment to the edge. When it breaks, we modify it so it can reach new limits."

"This lab is in a unique position," Gray said. "It is the largest of its kind in the world, and because of this, our resources are often strained."

There is a tendency for people to get carried away by the technology, Gray said.

"One thing I always tell people is that we are in the business to use accelerators. They are only tools, and they are not the only reason we exist," he said.

New policy flexible kinds of problems. Lafene Health Center provides counseling services, Erpelding said. Also, tutors and other advisory programs are available to any student facing dismissal.

Erpelding said there is flexibility in the new policy because students have an opportunity to appeal to the academic standards committee in their college.

Carrel said she is concerned the appeal process is too cut-and-dry.

"A death in the family would obviously warrant a reinstatement for the following semester. But what about a minority student who comes to a predominantly white campus and has trouble? What about a homosexual on a predominantly homophobic campus? How are you going to document that to a committee?"

Payments due for textbooks

Loan program started to provide supplies

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Now is the time to pay the price.

Students who purchased books and school supplies through E-CAP, the Education Charge Account Program, must begin making payments on their account.

Carrie Mitchell, operations manager of K-State Union Bookstore, said students have 30 days from their statement date to pay the bill interest free.

"After that, there is a 1-percent monthly interest rate, and the annual percentage rate is 12.68 percent," Mitchell said. "If it is not paid back by the beginning of registration next semester, the student cannot charge with the E-CAP account."

Kay Farley, Union Bookstore manager, said E-CAP is a service made available to students to charge $250 for books and academic supplies from the Union Bookstore and course packets from the K-State Copy Center.

Farley said students were only allowed to charge items between Aug. 10 and Sept. 10.

E-CAP was initiated at K-State because of other similar programs at Oklahoma State University and the University of Iowa, Farley said.

"We see that students aren't always able to buy all the supplies they need," she said. "The students' education suffers if they can't get the tools they need."

Farley said students were eligible to use E-CAP with a valid student ID. In addition, students signed a statement claiming their need for financial aid.

Items were limited to new and used textbooks, trade books, calculators, class supplies such as notebooks and pens or supplies for art, engineering and computer classes.

"The main benefit is for students to have the tools they need to get their education," Farley said.

Dottie Prater, lead cashier of the Union Bookstore, said the program was well-received.

E-CAP worries local bookstore

Although the K-State Union Bookstore thinks E-CAP is a snap, the new account program has caused concern for local competitor Varney's Book Store.

E-CAP is the Education Charge Account Program available to students to charge $250 for books and school supplies.

"We would anticipate if this program continues, it would be detrimental to us," Jon Levin, owner and manager of Varney's, said. "Naturally, the private owned stores are concerned about having a credit system on campus."

"We would anticipate if this program continues it would be detrimental to us."
JON LEVIN
OWNER AND MANAGER OF VARNEY'S

Originally, Levin said the Union Bookstore wanted the account limit to be $500 a semester; however, Varney's expressed some concern to college administrators.

"I'm not pleased that there is a charge system," Levin said. "We would not be able to have this program, so I consider this to be a proprietary.

"With the resources we have, there's no way any business without a credit check could let students charge their books and pay it later. Other businesses don't understand how this could work either."

Lisa Stevenson, operations manager of University Bookstore in Columbia, Mo., said the University of Missouri initiated a similar plan six years ago. Through their program, students have a limit of $750 to purchase textbooks and other merchandise, she said.

Stevenson said the system has worked well and has had only 2 percent unrecovered profit.

In addition, Missouri has control over the student's debt, so the student cannot enroll the next semester without paying the balance.

Charles Lockwood, manager of Missouri Bookstore, which is owned by Barnes & Noble, said the charge system has affected his business.

"We are still open for business right now, but our staff and sales have dwindled quite a bit," Lockwood said.

Stevenson said she also

K-State's ROTC program has a new cadet battalion commander, and for the first time in its existence, that commander is a woman.

She has proved she can hike five miles with a 60-pound ruck, fire an M-16 with accuracy and bellow commands with the best of them.

Ilsa Waterman, senior in anthropology, was chosen as the new commander on Aug. 16. She will serve as commander for the academic year.

"Ilsa was chosen because of her technical competence and organizational skills," James Buster, senior in public relations and ROTC cadet, said.

Senior cadets were evaluated on physical-fitness scores, grade point average and camp scores. Buster said Waterman's camp score was the most impressive.

Waterman finished in the top 10 percent of cadets in the nation and second in her platoon at Camp Adventure in Seattle, Wash., this summer. The six-week camp is a competition between ROTC battalions and is a culmination of a year's worth of training.

Waterman received a perfect score of five.

Initially, the men at camp tried to be gentlemanly, but after six days without bathing, everyone looked and smelled the same, Waterman said.

"At first, they held open doors for me, let me eat first and tried to carry my ruck for me, but you have to tell them, 'Hey, I'm just like you,'" Waterman said.

K-State's battalion competed against schools from Arkansas, Kansas and Oklahoma.

The Wildcat Battalion placed first at Camp Adventure for the second consecutive year.

Matthew Crystal, junior in agriculture education; Christine Ferguson, senior in kinesiology; and David Strange, junior in physical education, also received perfect scores at the camp.

"Put them in any situation, and they'll do a good job," Maj. George Stelljes, professor of military science, said.

New to K-State this fall, Stelljes appointed a battalion commander as one of his first tasks. He tested each cadet by running the cadet's scores and

Steffany Carrel, student representative to Faculty Senate, said she didn't think Faculty Senate was very responsive to the wishes of students.

"I hate to bag on Faculty Senate, but I just didn't feel they were very open to what the students had to say," Carrel said.

Carrel said even though she doesn't want to build any more walls between students and Faculty Senate, she still questions whether they always have the students best interests in mind.

"I wonder sometimes," she said.

Carrel said she even introduced a student to Faculty Senate who had a terrible first semester, but bounced back.

"I thought that would be one example of where someone slipped between the wire," she said.

Phil Anderson, Faculty Senate representative to Senate, said he was disappointed, but thought a compromise could still be worked out.

"It didn't turn out the way we had hoped, but I'm sure there's a solution we haven't yet discovered," Anderson said. "I know for a fact that faculty senators are disturbed by the perception that faculty are cold towards students who have a difficult first semester, for whatever reason."

Anderson said he didn't think debate over the low academic achiever policy was finished.

"I don't think this is a dead issue," he said.

Carrel said she agreed.

"I'm not going to give up," she said.

Senate to vote on new computers

MIKE ZAMRZLA

Student Senate will soon vote on a proposal to allocate more than $18,000 for a Macintosh computer system for the Office of Student Activities and Services.

The proposal, which will be voted on Sept. 23, calls for $18,179.76 to purchase eight computers, two printers and a variety of network, memory and software equipment needed to hook up the system.

Eric Henry, student body vice president and graduate student in journalism and mass communications, said the purpose of the system is to better serve students by bringing student government "up to speed with the rest of the world."

"Our office is way behind the times in comparison to other student government offices," Henry said. "Student government can either be on the front wave, or it can be left behind."

Ed Skoog, student body president and senior in English, said the computers are needed if student government is to adequately handle student money.

"We receive $201 from every student every semester," Skoog said. "For us to manage that money without a computer system is like putting your money in a bank that's managed with an abacus."

Henry said the computers will also be available for use by members of the 350 campus organizations.

"This follows the goal that we have some kind of student activities center where students can get together and get something done," Henry said.

The decision to purchase Macintosh computers was based on what types of programs student groups will need.

"A problem is the lack of availability student groups have to computers with design and graphic

Farmers struggle with loss of topsoil

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Some of the world's finest cropland has gone south, swept into the trough of the Mississippi River by the summer flooding that devastated the Midwest.

Farmers from Minnesota to Missouri are struggling to clear their fields of the muck, sand and debris the flooding left behind. But they're also worrying about their next problem: replenishing the nutrients that washed away with valuable topsoil.

"Productivity will be down for some period of time," said Daryl Buchholz, assistant director for agricultural extension programs at K-State. "It might be extremely difficult for some guys to survive. It really sets them back, there's no doubt about it."

The Soil Conservation Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates 10 million acres of Midwest farmland flooded at least once this year. Heavy rain sent the swollen Missouri and Mississippi rivers and many of their tributaries out of their banks, often onto rich river-bottom farmland.

Buchholz estimated fairly level fields that flooded lost from one to five tons of topsoil per acre. In more rolling areas where flooding may have broken terraces, topsoil losses could approach 100 tons per acre, he said.

Other soil experts declined to guess how much dark earth washed away — some all the way to the Gulf of Mexico.

"There's no way to know how much topsoil was eroded," said Roger Windhorn, a soil scientist for the USDA's Soil Conservation Service in Champaign, Ill.

Separists launch attack in Georgia

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Separatists launched a major offensive today in Georgia's Abkhazia region while Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze was trying to stop a rebellion in another corner of the former Soviet republic.

The offensive broke a six-week-old cease-fire and presented Shevardnadze with yet another crisis in a tumultuous week, during which he forced parliament to grant him emergency powers by threatening to resign.

At least five civilians were killed in the fighting in Abkhazia. Six Georgian soldiers were killed, and 24 were wounded, the Interfax news agency said.

Interfax quoted Shevardnadze as saying Abkhazian tanks had entered Sukhumi, the Georgian-held regional capital. There were conflicting reports about fighting reaching the city's main government building.

Armed with his new powers, Shevardnadze flew Wednesday to the western province of Mingrelia to try to end a rebellion by the supporters of former President Zviad Gamsakhurdia. Shevardnadze replaced Gamsakhurdia, who fled the capital in early 1992 after a two-week revolt.

Abkhazian separatists apparently hoped to take advantage of the turmoil by attacking while Shevardnadze's back was turned. The offensive violated a July 27 cease-fire that was brokered by Russia and monitored by observers from both Russia and the United Nations.

Under the peace agreement, Georgia began withdrawing its troops from Abkhazia on Aug. 15.

Clinton kicks off health care campaign

WASHINGTON — Some people will have to pay more to ensure health care coverage for all Americans.

As Clinton spoke, he was surrounded by people brought to the White House to tell hard-luck stories of health coverage lost or in jeopardy.

"I don't want to pretend that this is all going to be easy, but it seems to me that it's a fair thing to say everyone in America should make some contribution to his or her own health insurance, and all employers should make some contribution," Clinton said.

Later, he visited a hardware store to make the same point, but was told by the owner that small businesses cannot afford this plan. He answered back that it would have to for its own good.

Clinton started his day listening to people buried in debt or fear because of problems with the nation's health-care system.

He said his plan, to be unveiled Wednesday, will require workers and employers to share the burden to eliminate health care horrors: people going broke to stay healthy, losing jobs or insurance over illnesses and staying with bad jobs only because they include health insurance.

"Even the millions of Americans who enjoy health-care coverage are afraid it won't be there for them next month or next year. They want us to take action to give them the security that all Americans deserve," Clinton told the gathering of people who had written the White House about their problems.

Under a white tent in the Rose Garden, on a dark, drizzly morning, Clinton invited 21 of the letter writers to tell their stories. The made-for-television event, meant to personalize the debate, kicked off a sales effort that will last months.

Juanita McGowan's eyes were closed tightly as she broke the silence and praised the Lord for his blessings. Many people were muttering amens and praising God. The group then broke into a chorus of "Sweet Hour of Prayer."

The KSU Gospel Service provides a culturally rich worship experience at 11 a.m. every Sunday in All Faiths Chapel. The Rev. Donald Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, said the service is co-sponsored by Multicultural Student Activities Office and Religious Services Activities Office.

"Our intent is to provide a place for worship and faith development for minority students," Fallon said. "The primary emphasis is on diversity."

Every student can have a part, whether that be a leadership role, an usher or a musician, said Jermine Alberty, freshman in education and president of the planning committee.

"The key point of the ministry is that we are all one in Christ," Alberty said.

Fallon said the service provides a venue to bring down barriers and to learn and grow from one another's experiences.

"I have been deeply impressed by the talents, the depth of faith, openness and commitment of diverse cultural groups," Fallon said. "This service provides an opportunity for mainline denomination groups to learn different expressions of faith."

An international theme directs the service. Students speak of faith experience. Speakers of all backgrounds are heard, and many students read verse in their native language, Fallon said.

"The service gives an opportunity to learn the facets of one another's culture," Diana Caldwell, graduate student in human ecology, said. "Each of us brings our own experience, and we learn from one another."

The organization also addresses many international issues.

In the past, prayer services have discussed apartheid. The services have also discussed the Gulf War, the Rodney King trial and the recent Los Angeles riots, Alberty said.

"We are interracial, intercultural, interdenominational and international. We are an organization that has a place for everyone," Alberty said.

The organization originated four years ago and began as a monthly service. Moderate growth has occurred over the years, and it is hoped the weekly service will cause a significant growth spurt, Caldwell said.

McGowan, assistant professor of education, agreed.

"We need some continuity so that the Gospel Service will grow," she said. "Students need to feel this home."

The service has expanded to include a prayer and bible-study session from 4 to 5 p.m. every Tuesday.

The meeting for Sept. 28 will be in Union 208, Fallon said.

YCAT's policy for inmates puts students at risk

Your classmate could also be an inmate.

Along with doing time at the Youth Center at Topeka, three convicted murderers are sharing time with Washburn University and Kaw Area Technical School students.

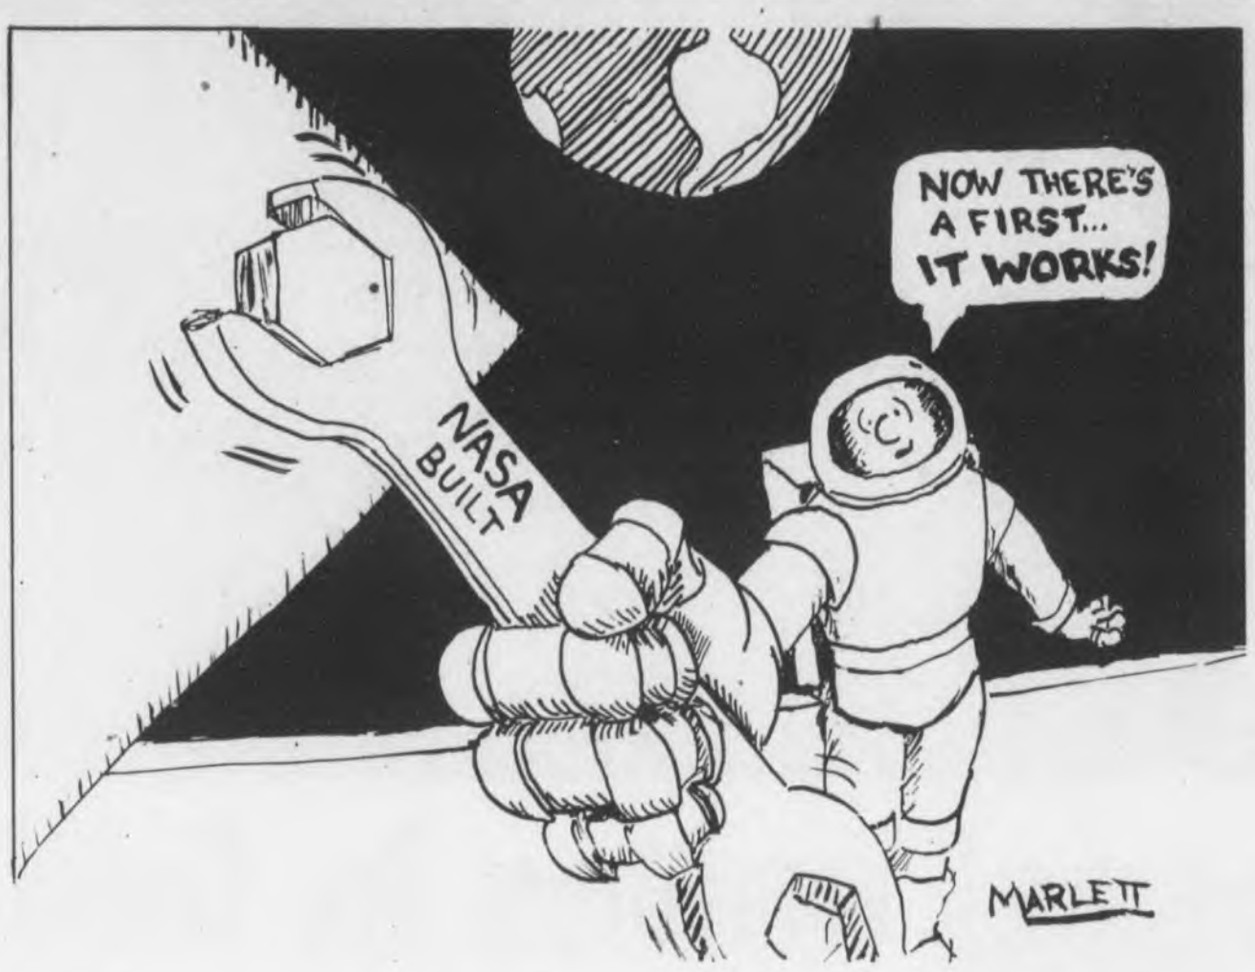
YCAT, a detention center for youths charged with misdemeanors and felonies, has been troubled for years with problems ranging from escaped youths raping and killing citizens to injuring and killing YCAT employees.

Ironically, on the same day it was revealed that these three students were being escorted to class, two inmates fled while being escorted to an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting.

YCAT officials are placing citizens' lives in jeopardy.

Their reasons might be noble — maybe they believe these boys are victims of a violent society or unstable homes and that they deserve second chances.

But the fact remains that they are criminals.



They have proven to be dangerous to the community. Why else would they need to be detained at YCAT?

They should have the opportunity to go to college, to take advantage of a second chance, but not one day sooner than they have proven locked doors and fences are no longer needed to contain them.

They are not the victims. They are criminals. YCAT officials should remember that when they plan the daily schedules of their inmates.

To allow them to leave the premises for the privilege of higher education, something many upstanding citizens cannot afford, while still claiming they are too dangerous to live in society, is absurd.

MARLETT'S WORLD

Being obese is a matter of considerable weight for those who must deal with it

After jumping off the school bus, I ran toward my house. Hot, salty tears streamed down, stinging my red, humiliated face.

All I wanted was the comfort of my mother's arms and the consolation of her soothing words.

My mom would wipe my face, make me blow my nose and tell me to ignore the kids at school. "If they know they can get to you, they'll keep teasing you about your weight."

With my mom's advice, I returned to school the next day fortified with forbearance.

From then on when the kids teased me, I ignored them, swallowing my pride and my choked-up tears.

Today, I am still teased and taunted by people.

Cultural and social awareness has been instrumental in the public's adoption of new politically correct attitudes toward people of all races, religions, national origins and sexual preferences.

Yet, sadly enough, we can't muster up a bit of human courtesy when it comes to overweight people.

It is wrong when a person makes a discriminating slur toward another person. We try to teach our children not to think or speak of such atrocities.

Society as a whole should have the same sensitivity, compassion and insight towards overweight people.

There are two things that really perplex me concerning this prejudice: probably every person who makes a snide remark to an overweight person does it for no apparent reason other than ignorance, and a majority of these people have a loved one who has a weight problem.

Our society bases first impressions on what a person looks like. If you are visually appealing to the public, then you are accepted. When people come in contact with an overweight person, they see them as being slovenly and lazy and as people who do not have control over their lives.

People can't get beyond the surface. Don't judge me for what I look like on the outside. Hey, believe me, jerks come in all shapes and sizes.

For many years, I have been discriminated against because of my weight.

When I was in high school, I tried out for the position of drum major in the marching band, a position vied for by many different types of students.

I was considered to be the best by the judges, the parents who were present, and my fellow students.

However, I was not given the position. The final decision came from the band director. He did not want me to march in front of the band because I was overweight. He thought it would reflect badly on the band and the school. I was terribly embarrassed and hurt. Everyone involved could not believe he did not choose me.

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY

A few years ago, as I was walking through Washington, D.C., with my fiance, I was accosted by a car full of men.

They yelled from the window,"Hey, fat girl." My fiance was shocked. He had never before witnessed blatant persecution directed towards me. I just shrugged it off like I had all the other times, but deep down inside I was completely devastated.

I blamed myself.

I believed I deserved the cruel criticism.

Now, however; it's a different ballgame with new rules. No longer will I allow people to be rude to me because of my weight.

I see myself as an assertive person trying to regain the self-esteem that had disappeared over the years. I am protecting my dignity because of an incident that happened where I work.

Instead of ignoring the situation, I went outside to where he and his friends were standing. I confronted the attacker and tactfully asked for an apology. I could see he was stunned that I actually stood up for myself.

When he said that he was sorry, I thanked him for having the guts for admitting that he was wrong.

If you are attacked by an insulting person, then you have to take a stand against the discrimination heaped upon you. Ignoring the perpetrator will not solve anything.

I am an optimist at heart and believe that someday, somehow, the discrimination towards overweight people will be over.

When that day arrives, the fat lady ain't gonna sing. It will be a lady singing.

▶ GPA POLICY

You don't have to be a rocket scientist to make a 1.0 GPA, folks

Editor,

Kudos and laurels to Faculty Senate.

It is refreshing to see that an academic institution is establishing some realistic academic expectations.

The Editorial Board claims this bill may be biased toward those students who, in the board members' words, "are not overachievers."

A 1.0 GPA — an overachiever? As if! Let's try indolent.

It is a facade to believe that students pay for their education and therefore have an inalienable right to attend K-State.

If a taxpayer's money is going to be spent on a student who is falling behind and not applying him or herself, then yes, please have that student leave.

Free tutoring, help sessions, study skill laboratories and remedial review classes are all available to students faced with a challenging course or two.

It has also been our experience that the faculty members do go out of their way for student questions.

Ever heard of office hours? Help is available if you only have the initiative to look for it.

If the Editorial Board feels that it is necessary to lower the academic standards to ensure an increase in the quantity of graduates at the expense of the quality of graduates, then maybe it should reevaluate what a diploma from K-State signifies.

▶ GPA POLICY AGAIN

Early underachievers can turn into the best professors later on

Editor,

I was surprised to see that the Faculty Senate passed the proposal to expel students who achieve less than a 1.0 GPA during their first semester.

I was surprised because many of the best professors I have studied under were very open about the fact that they were very poor as undergraduates.

UNDERSTANDING OF K-STATE'S HARASSMENT POLICY ESSENTIAL

"There is a kind of student who, for one reason or another, has unnaturally prolonged her virginity. ... and I, not quite another man, half an authority figure, can handle — a thing whose preciousness I realize."

— Professor William Kerrigan
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Harper's magazine

Well, where to begin. How about the fact that this statement is one of the most asinine, chauvinistic, demoralizing, degrading statements that I have ever had the displeasure of reading.

That's a start. It's also an actual statement, from an actual professor, who goes on to later blame all the uproar about sexual harassment on feminists.

Then I found out that KU was implementing a policy that prohibited professors from dating the students they taught, and I wondered why K-State didn't have one like it.

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the president, said that the question wasn't why K-State didn't have one, but why KU did.

So I went to Aruna Michie, head of Faculty Senate, and she said K-State has a fairly good harassment policy. Her feeling was that there was no need to legislate another policy.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

She also said that she personally had problems legislating genuine feelings and that to pass a policy prohibiting relationships between consenting adults would be a little intrusive.

I agree.

So travel along with me into the depths of the K-State Policy Prohibiting Sexual Harassment.

Definition: "Sexual harassment is any behavior which, through inappropriate sexual content or disparagement of members of one sex, interferes with an individual's work or learning environment."

According to the policy, it is sexual harassment if:

"A person is intimidated by the threat, overt or implicit, that any educational or employment decision may be affected by an unwillingness to tolerate or accept sexual attentions. (Those decisions may involve grades, recommendations, evaluations and all decisions about the requirements, terms and conditions of employment or learning.)"

"A person is required to tolerate or accept sexual attentions as a condition of employment or learning."

"Any educational or employment decision has been affected by a person's refusal to comply with or tolerate inappropriate sexual behavior."

"Any reprisals are taken for reporting or objecting to sexual harassment."

"Sexual harassment is prohibited not because it is sexual, but because it is harassment and a form of discrimination."

If you feel you have been, or are being, harassed, report it immediately! You can report it to the head of the department where the harassment is taking place, unless that administrator is involved or already knows of the harassment.

You can also report it to the Affirmative Action office, which has been moved to 201 College Court due to the fire in Anderson Hall.

If a complaint of harassment is brought, then the University will attempt to maintain confidentiality to the greatest extent possible.

This is all in the policy, and every student and faculty member should be familiar with it. With this policy, there is no real need to have a policy like the one at KU.

And as Professor Michie said so eloquently:

"We want to set an atmosphere free of fear, create an atmosphere where it's unthinkable to do."

REGENTS

Request made to repair Anderson Hall

Washburn asks for 11.6 percent increase, is denied

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

K-State will petition the Kansas Legislature for $1.5 million in emergency funding for repairs to Anderson Hall, the Kansas Board of Regents learned Thursday.

The damages were done when lightning struck the south tower of the building on Aug. 20.

Other facility projects on campus have been put on hold and money has been diverted to help repair the damage to Anderson, Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, said.

"We have our eye on other projects we could delay if the legislature denies our request, but we would opt not to," Rawson said.

The fire gutted the historic tower and caved in part of the ceiling below it.

The University has contracted a company to demolish what is left of the offices. Bids are being requested on the remodeling of those offices.

"We might have lost the whole building if it weren't for the foresight of some people who installed a sprinkler system in the building in the 70's," Rawson said.

In other business, Washburn University's request for an increase in state funding for 1995 was met with reservations from regents' school representatives at the Thursday meeting.

Representatives of the Council of Presidents and Student Advisory Committee both endorsed the increase in funding for Washburn to an 8.4 percent increase. Washburn had requested an 11.6 percent increase.

Wefald, spokesman for the Council of Presidents, said the smaller increase would be more in line with with the requests of the regents' universities in view of their capital needs.

Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science at K-State and chairman of faculty senate presidents, said the regents' universities have more need for repair of facilities, and the faculty have lower pay than those at Washburn.

"The Faculty Senate has great concern of how this increase will affect the other regents schools," Michie said.

Washburn has traditionally been funded through a combination of tuition, a local mill levy and general state funding.

However, President Hugh Thompson said Washburn would like to move toward to more of a public funding base.

Thompson justified the increase by saying it was comparable to the percent increase at regent schools and was actually a lower dollar amount than those schools.

The council of Presidents recommended an increase in the state mill levy for construction projects be raised from one to two mills.

"The present mill levy is just not enough to get the job done anymore," Wefald said.

The Student Advisory Council recommended to the board that a tuition increase be used to pay for a salary increase for faculty.

The regents revised their criteria for selecting Kansas scholars. The $1.2 million state-funded scholarship program awards approximately 1,400 scholarships to graduates of Kansas high schools who attend regents schools, Christy Crenshaw, director of student financial aid for the regents, said.

The selection criteria was solely based on ACT scores, which resulted in 200,000 scholarships not being awarded each year, she said.

Crenshaw said the ACT requirement was also prejudiced against students who have lower ACT scores.

"It will allow us to reward scholarships to good students, that just don't do well on standardized tests," Crenshaw said.

The new criteria would establish scholarship eligibility from students who reflect the top 15 percent of their graduating class with a minimum GPA of 3.0, score in the top 15 percent on the ACT and who have completed the Regents Recommended curriculum for high school students.

The top 12 to 15 percent of this group would be designated Kansas Scholars.

"This will allow us to spend the funds for the program down to the last penny," Crenshaw said.

The Regents Recommended curriculum is already required of other smaller state scholarship programs and includes requirements for upper-level science courses and two years of foreign language for high school students.

The regents voted unanimously to eliminate a policy of mandatory retirement for tenured faculty and lowered the age for retirement eligibility to 55 for regent employees who have been on staff for ten years or more.

CAREERS

Fair to examine women's careers

VICKY TILLIER AND MICHELLE SCHROEDER
Collegian

Women will have the opportunity to break away from traditional expectations by exploring new career options and training programs.

K-State New Directions is co-sponsoring a Community Career Fair at the Manhattan Town Center that will focus on non-degree training programs geared toward women.

The fair will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday.

"Many people don't realize that women earn less than 70 cents for every dollar earned by men," said Marilyn Schreiner, planning committee member of the Manhattan Business and Professional Women's Organization.

"By encouraging women to look at all their career options, some women may choose to go into more lucrative careers. That would even out the discrepancy, which perhaps would make women more self-sufficient," she said.

The idea for the career fair originated to benefit women, but anyone re-entering the work force or making career decisions will be able to investigate new career fields and training programs, Schreiner said.

"It will give them the opportunity to explore different career options and also talk to educational institutions to find out training requirements," Mary Harwell, a director of New Directions, said.

The career fair is a new venture for the mall, said Shannon Maddux, marketing director of the Manhattan Town Center.

Wildcats look to break 18-game losing streak

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State football coach Bill Snyder has broken many winless streaks since he came here in 1989. He has one more losing streak to break — an 18-game non-conference losing streak on the road.

Snyder's football team will try to break the drought Saturday against the 1-1 Minnesota Golden Gophers at 7 p.m. at the Metrodome in Minneapolis. K-State takes a 2-0 record into the game and hopes to become the first team to start 3-0 for the third consecutive year.

The Wildcats last non-conference road win came 14 years ago when K-State beat Air Force 19-6 at Colorado Springs, Colo.

The Las Vegas betting lines are favoring the Gophers, as K-State is a three-point underdog. The Gophers beat Division I-AA Indiana State 27-10 last week but lost to Penn State 38-21 two weeks ago.

Wide receiver Andre Coleman said K-State needs to shape up on the road.

"We haven't played well on the road," Coleman said. "It has been a road block for us. We've got to go out and try to beat Minnesota."

Snyder is 0-4 against non-conference teams. K-State has lost at Arizona in 1989, 31-0; at Northern Illinois in 1990, 42-35; at Washington in 1991, 56-3; and at Utah State last year, 28-16 .

Snyder said he didn't know about the losing streak.

"No, I wasn't aware," he said. "If it exists, it exists. It just means for 14 years, we haven't been good enough to win on the road. But I don't know if it is the key to our motivation for the football team."

If breaking the non-conference road losing streak isn't good for motivation, K-State can end a 32-year losing streak against Big Ten teams.

Snyder said playing a Big Ten team is positive for the squad.

"The idea of playing a quality team and quality conference is a plus," he said. "I would like to be able to do more of that, and we just have to wean ourselves into that."

"They traveled to Tokyo (last season in the Tokyo Bowl against Nebraska) and seemed to handle it all right," Snyder said. "The importance of this is that we stay focused, not get concerned about the surroundings and pay attention to your responsibilities.

"I think our players will do that."

Several players are not worried about the Gophers. One of them is free safety Jaime Mendez. Mendez said playing a Big Ten team doesn't mean Minnesota is better than K-State.

"They're just another team," he said. "We respect them like any other team, but because they play in the Big Ten doesn't make them special."

Coleman said this is an important game because of the perception of the Big Ten conference.

"It's the biggest game so far this season," he said. "This will tell us we are over the hump. The public hasn't given us any credit. People are going to wonder how K-State will do against a Big Ten team.

"This is the tail point of our season," Coleman said. "We have to go out and play well. If we don't win the game, it will be a very sad trip back to Manhattan."

Band gets the shaft

Things certainly got off to a bad start at the football game last weekend.

You may think I am talking about the way the Cats played, especially on the offensive side of the ball. Dropped passes, bad throws and general miscommunication seemed to control what was going on.

Although all of this is true, the football field is not the only place where confusion ruled supreme.

What I am talking about is the debacle created by the stadium parking lot attendants nearly two hours before the game even started.

I am sure there are not very many people who know what happened. Not to worry — I am here to enlighten you.

As the Band Day parade ended downtown, several members of the K-State marching band hopped into their cars at the end of the parade route and headed out to the stadium for their 11 a.m. rehearsal.

As they arrived, in full uniform, they were told that they would have to pay the $3 parking charge, because they did not have permits.

The band was not the only group to be stopped, either. Several members of the K-State cheer squad, as well as the director of bands, were stopped as well.

A parking attendant was quoted by a band member as saying, "There's been a whole bunch of people coming through here saying they're with the band." I am sure that there are a few morons out there that would try to park for free by saying they are a part of the band or cheerleaders, and they should be turned away without a permit.

But when a steady stream of people in full uniform with instruments in the back seats of their cars are saying, "I'm with the band," chances are, permit or not, they are for real.

As could have been expected, different people handled this situation differently. Some band members ignored the $3 request and went and parked. Some argued. Some parked across the street, and some just paid.

This went on until Assistant Athletic Director Angie Johnson got wind of the situation. She rushed out to the "Passes Only" gate and attempted to explain to the ever-so-receptive parking attendants what was going on. They, however, would have none of it. At that point, she pulled out a stack of dollar bills and began to pay the band's way in.

Both the band and the cheer squad work very hard and make countless personal sacrifices in order to perform, and hopefully entertain, at football games. I cannot think of anything more asinine than asking a member of either of these groups to pay $3 to park their car so they can perform.

By no means is the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics responsible for this debacle.

But I do ask them a favor. For the game on Sept. 25, try to have people with a brain and a pulse acting on your behalf in the parking lot.

Hopefully, things will go as well as they did for the Cats in the second half of their game.

Contract feud ends

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Emmitt Smith and Jerry Jones ended their contract feud Thursday. The agreement cost millions of dollars out of Jones' pocket and two lost football games.

Smith, Dallas Cowboys running back, who watched while the defending Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys lost both games they played without him, reached an agreement with Jones, Cowboys owner, that could make him the highest paid running back in the game.

The Cowboys owner and Smith signed a contract during a news conference Thursday night. Jones said it was a win-win situation.

No contract terms were immediately divulged, but Smith had said he wouldn't sign unless Jones paid him "Thurman Thomas money."

The contract was expected to be a four-year deal for approximately $13.6 million, which would be more than Thomas, Buffalo Bills running back, makes.

WINFIELD PASSES 3,000 MARK

During the 9th inning of the Twins' game against the Oakland Athletics, Dave Winfield hit a single to left field, giving him his 3,000th career hit. Only 19 other players have had 3,000 hits or more.

Winfield ranks 11th in total bases (5,044), 13th in RBIs (1,780) and 18th in home runs (453) on the baseball career charts. He has collected seven Golden Gloves, played in 12 All-Star games and had the game-winning hit in the sixth game of the World Series last year, giving him his first championship.

Cats return home

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The K-State volleyball squad, sporting a 2-5 record, returns home this weekend for the 1993 Wildcat/Continental Inn-Best Western Invitational.

K-State's first opponent will be UMKC at 8 p.m. today.

K-State coach Patti Hagemeyer said UMKC has shown steady improvement.

"They have played some tough competition so far," she said. "They took Missouri to five games before losing the match."

Angie McKee, senior middle hitter, said she likes the Cats' chances this weekend and is looking forward to the challenge.

"We haven't seen much of the teams in this tournament, but from what I do know, I think we have a very good chance to win it," McKee said.

Hagemeyer said the Wildcats are going into the tournament with an attitude that they can win all of the games this weekend, but she also wants her players to improve while they play.

"We have been working on our concentration in practice," Hagemeyer said. "When things don't go well right away, we are quick to get frustrated, and we lose our focus."

Hagemeyer said the team played well last week early in the matches, but the Wildcats need to learn to put an entire match together instead of just a couple of games.

"Coach used to yell at us in practice when our focus started to slip," Stephanie Liester, senior outside hitter, said. "But now it seems like we are catching on ourselves, and she doesn't have to tell us as much."

The Cats continue play at 2 p.m. Saturday against Oral Roberts and finish the tournament against Northeast Louisiana at 8 p.m.

For Love Not Lisa is real alternative

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

It's refreshing to hear a new alternative band that doesn't sound anything like Nirvana or Pearl Jam.

Ever since last year's Seattle invasion, dozens of self-dubbed grunge bands have appropriated the "alternative" sound and name, hoping for an easy ride to radio airplay.

Hailing from Oklahoma (except for one Californian), these four guys, whose debut album "Merge" is scheduled for an Oct. 5 release, describe themselves as a punk band. But no matter how you label them, For Love Not Lisa plays some mean-sounding tunes.

The band lists Pink Floyd, Fugazi and fellow Oklahomans The Flaming Lips among its influences. It's evident. These guys sound a little like the Lips — the OLD Lips, before they lost Bonham-esque drummer Richard English and started writing sloppy God songs.

The band also sounds something like a blend of Texas' The Buckpets and Fugazi. The guitars of Miles and vocalist Mike Lewis weave together beautifully, riding on drummer Aaron Preston's and bassist Doug Carrion's simple, yet important-sounding rhythms. This produces a very Buckpets-like sound in places.

At times, however, the Fugazi influence is quite clear. The band often shifts into a fast-driven, hack-and-slash guitar sound that would make Dave Mustaine wince.

Sometimes it's amazing what can come out of Oklahoma. Just when The Flaming Lips seem to have sold their souls to college radio, For Love Not Lisa comes along to preserve the tradition of wailing acid guitar and raw, post-punk energy.

Although the band is currently based in California, hopefully it will play in the Midwest soon.

These guys have got to sound incredible live.

Celibacy group slogan is yabba dabba don't

Dear Cassandra,

I've been at K-State for a couple of years and am still having a hard time fitting in.

None of the groups on campus really fill my social and emotional needs. Organizations like BaGaLs and Just Guys convinced me that I'd like to start my own group to promote celibacy on campus — not as a part of some religious observance, but in a non-judgmental, humanistic fellowship.

I've already thought up some names like YABBBA (Young Adults Begetting Brotherhood By-way-of Abstinence) and a catchy slogan (YABBBA DABBA DON'T!), but I don't know how to go about recruiting members or becoming a registered campus organization.

Can you give me some information on how other groups get noticed, as well as funding from the Student Governing Association?

Signed,
Disenfranchised and frustrated

Dear Fred Flintstone,

YABBBA DABBA DON'T?

First, to make your group known, put up posters around campus – an ad in the Collegian even.

If you want to get SGA funding, you have to register your new group with the University Activities Board. To do that, you must have at least five group members and a full-time faculty or staff person as your adviser.

Once you get that far, go to the SGA office and pick up your paperwork, which includes a "UAB organization registration form." Fill that form out and return it to SGA with your group's statement of purpose or constitution attached.

You'll then be set up with a time to come before UAB to be formally recognized as a K-State student group.

Beavis and Butt-head, why do we love thee?

Weekend just can't quite figure out the continued infatuation with Beavis and Butt-head. And, quite frankly, we are a little distraught that both Beavis and Butt-head have become icons in the lives of many college students. After all, these are guys who — in some of their more stimulating conversations — discuss bodily functions, bodily noises and bodily parts.

Beavis: I've been thinking, and I have decided that birth control is a very important option in a woman's life.

Butt-head: I've considered all my options, and I'm going to use the sponge.

Beavis: Huh-huh. Huh-huh. Cool.

Beavis: Cool.
Butt-head: I wish I had a face on my butt.
Beavis: Blow your nose in your underwear.
Butt-head: Huh-huh. Huh-huh.
Beavis: Huh-huh. Huh-huh.

Perhaps we're just missing something.

I think I left your paper in my truck's back seat

Talk about your hopeless romantics.

Among the places cited that the two conducted their after-school activities were the copy machine room in the main office, the football press box, the coaches' dressing room in the gym, the audio-visual room (now given literal meanings) and his truck in the parking lot. He allegedly went so far as to even have sex with one of his students in the kitchen of his home — while his wife was upstairs sleeping.

We've all heard the jokes:

What does a former KU athlete say to a former K-State athlete?

"Do you want fries with that?"

Well, here's yet another story that is sure to catch the eye of KU bashers everywhere.

Jayhawk offensive tackle Rod Jones injured his shoulder this week in a theater class. It seems the class was participating in the ever-dangerous game of "Red Light, Green Light" (don't college athletes have contracts prohibiting such hazardous activity?) when the teacher hollered "Green Light." Jones took off running. Seconds later, with Jones presumably giggling with childlike glee, the bellowing cry of "Red Light" rang out.

Jones came to a screeching halt. He fell down and, somehow, injured his shoulder.

Good thing they weren't playing "Pin the Tail on the Donkey." Somebody might have gotten killed.

... as well as Manhattan

And not to be outdone in the "Our Recruits are Dumber Than Your Recruits" department comes this story from Alameda, Calif.

It seems J.R. Rider, a former UNLV basketball standout who was hotly recruited by the folks here in Manhattan, was recently booked on a warrant for failing to appear in court.

According to police reports, officers asked Rider who they should notify on Rider's behalf. Rider's response?

"Ghostbusters."

We here at Weekend would like to be surprised. But then we remember that, hey, this is a guy who once took a class called Understanding and Accepting Premenstrual Syndrome.

And to think he could have been one of us.

Answerer: Yunqin Hu.
Year and major: Graduate student in statistics.

Q. Why did you answer the phone?
A. "Actually, I don't know. I just wanted to know if I could help someone."
Q. If I told you I needed to talk to someone on the fourth or fifth floor, would you go find him?
A. "I'd ask you if it was really important. If you said it was, I would go find him."
Q. That's awfully nice of you. So would you go all the way to the top floor to find someone you didn't even know?
A. "I think the elevator would help me." (Good point.)
Q. What are you studying there at the library?
A. "Actually I came here because there are public phones here (There are?). I wanted to make a phone call and then go home."
Q. Then what?
A. "I think that I will go swimming. I don't know how to swim. Can you believe it? I'm 20-something years old, and I still can't swim." (I don't remember asking that.)
Q. Well thank you for taking the time this evening.
A. "Thank you."
Q. Have fun swimming tonight.
A. "You too." (Actually, Yunqin, you're going swimming. I'm not.)

K - State is no Jurassic Park

You will be happy to know that genetic researchers at K-State are not creating brontosauruses.

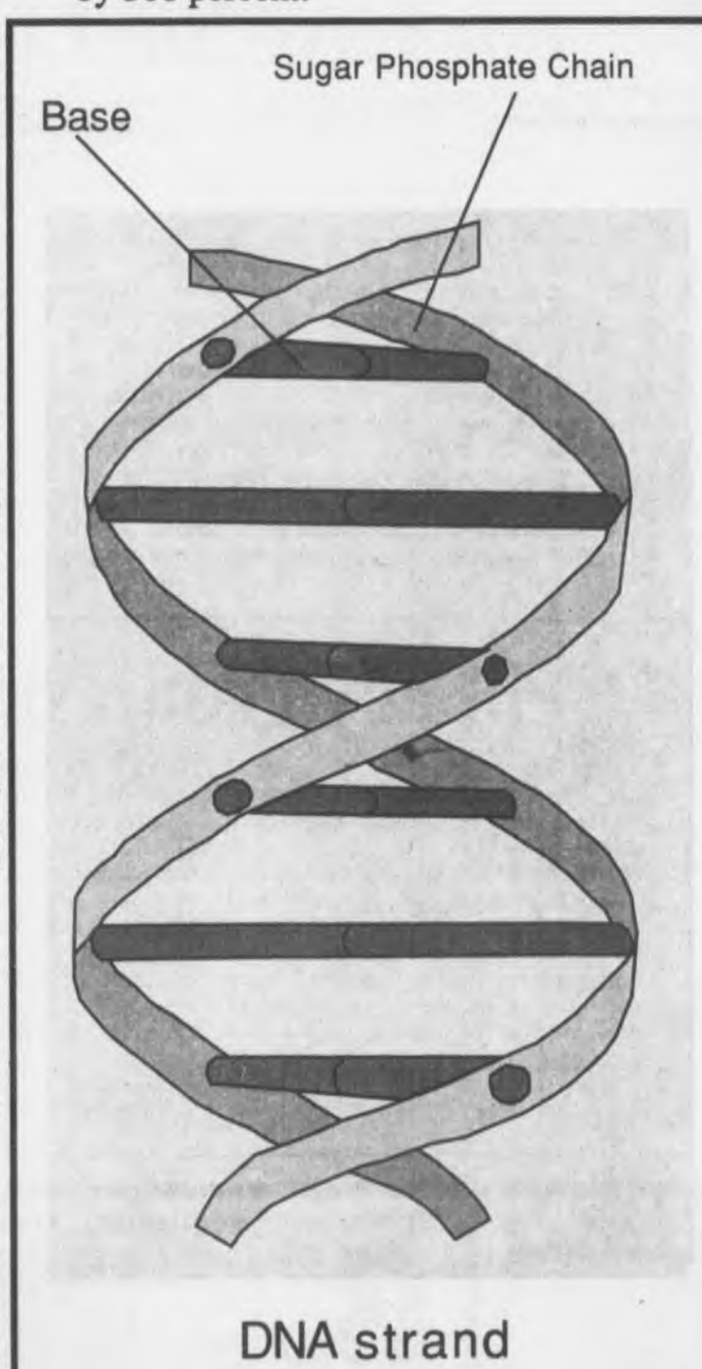
Genetic research became a media darling this summer with the release of "Jurassic Park". The movie portrayed a crazed Walt Disney-like fellow who "creates" dinosaurs from genes in the blood sucked up by mosquitoes who were later trapped in amber. By doing this, the film brought to light these scientists who may have otherwise languished in obscurity.

Though creating a full-fledged, living, breathing, rootin', tootin' dinosaur is a longshot in 1993 — and probably will remain a longshot in 2093 — researchers at K-State spend their days studying the little things in life.

Ramaswamy Krishnamoorthi, associate professor of biochemistry, and Donald Roufa, professor of biology, both research genetics at K-State.

Krishnamoorthi studies the structures of proteins. He asserts that, for many proteins, the work the protein performs depends a great deal on its structure. In other words, form in genetics has everything to do with function.

"If you cut just one of the hundreds of bonds in a protein's makeup, the protein loses its activity," Krishnamoorthi said. "We are interested in what structural changes occur as a result of the cleavage of this reactive site."



Sickle Cell Anemia a very classic example, Krishnamoorthi said. The only difference genetically between a person who has the disease and a person who doesn't is that somewhere down the line one amino acid, just one, is changed.

"As a result of just one amino acid change, molecules aggregate together, and as a result, there is a reduction in the capacity of the molecule to carry oxygen," Krishnamoorthi said. "To me, that is really fascinating.

"Another such little change occurs in a protein related to cystic fibrosis, Krishnamoorthi said.

"Just one amino acid substitution results in the protein losing its ability to conduct chloride ions," he said. "This small change results in an inability to carry out its function."

A cure to these diseases may be a long time coming. However, since Krishnamoorthi has become interested in the field, a large number of biomolecules have been solved. In addition, the technology of the instrument used to study the protein, the nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR) spectrographer, has increased in its power by 300 percent.

DNA strand

Story by David Eugene Frese
Design by James Moody

In fact, Krishnamoorthi said K-State has just purchased a brand new NMR spectography machine, and, once it is all assembled, K-State will be able to study at the forefront of this research.

Roufa works with a family of genes called ribosomal protein genes. These genes encode proteins that are important structural components of the machinery that make other genes.

He said a reason for wanting to understand genes is when this gene machine makes a mistake, a mutation occurs. These mutations cause diseases.

Roufa said some critics of genetic research have said it challenges a more artistic view of nature. He disagrees.

"I think you can't really appreciate how beautiful nature really is until you understand what nature has accomplished," he said. "Like a sports car. Sure it looks nice, but you can't realize how nice it truly is until you see how it all fits together by analyzing the fine details."

And those who may fear genetic research, he said, may simply not understand what is actually going on.

"If you tell them you are purposely altering the cellular basics of, say, a cow, then people are basically suspicious of what the downsides of that are," Roufa said.

"The kind of modifications genetic research makes are extremely subtle," he said.

First of all, Roufa said, contrary to the popular science fiction of Jurassic Park, scientists are incapable of creating new species.

Secondly, when scientists fiddle with the genetic makeup of things, Roufa said they don't provide the organism with something it does not already have.

"We just change the quantity," he said. "And if researchers do give the organism something it does not have, then the change made is very subtle, such as resistance to virus.

"We are not likely to put a human cell into a tomato," he said. "We are not likely to create a monster."

Roufa said the better we understand the genetics of natural products, the better we will be able to modify those products to suit our purposes.

Tomatoes, for instance, may be genetically modified to ripen more slowly. Roufa said this would enable tomato farmers in south Texas to ship tomatoes to Alaska in the dead of winter without fear of the tomatoes rotting before they made it there.

Wheat is another example.

"A gene could be inserted into wheat to make it an easier grain to store," he said. "Then wheat would be stored and shipped safely. That would be very beneficial to Kansas' economy."

Waterman chosen for work ethics and achievements through a formula. Waterman was chosen for her leadership capabilities and work ethic.

An example of that work ethic is Waterman's dedication to improving her physical-fitness scores.

"I remember as a sophomore she had severe difficulty in running, but she shot from zero to 100 percent in no time," Capt. Allen West, assistant professor of military science, said.

On her physical-fitness tests, she started at 180 from a possible score of 300.

Waterman now consistently scores 296 on push-up, sit-up and two-mile run tests.

"I've been an Army brat all my life. You get to travel. They pay for your room and board and medical expenses. You just can't beat a deal like that," she said.

Responsibilities of a battalion commander include acting as the top cadet position and supervising the organization.

Richard Rodgers, senior in mechanical engineering and last year's battalion commander, said he remembers what that responsibility means.

"Anytime something goes wrong, technically it's your fault," he said.

Rodgers said he spent three years in the Army and returned to K-State, where he spent three years in the ROTC program.

Some of the benefits to the position of battalion commander are learning about responsibility and working with people, Rodgers said.

"I think people will be a little more critical because she is a female. But she's going to have to be on her toes and pay attention to what goes on around her," he said.

Christine Ferguson, senior in kinesiology and ROTC cadet, said Waterman's professionalism will help establish her as a leader.

"Ilsa has to set the example and do what it takes to be a leader," Ferguson said.

Students use E-CAP

"A lot of students used E-CAP," Prater said. "It is a good program because it enables students to get their supplies. It's also an answer to those students who don't get their financial-aid checks until later."

Jennifer Walker, senior in sociology and psychology, said she agreed with Prater.

"E-CAP was very convenient because I normally have to wait to have my mom give me several checks. This way I could build up several charges and have her send me only one check," she said. "In addition, E-CAP is a lot better than any credit card with an interest rate of 14 or 15 percent."

Farley said more than 1,500 accounts were opened this semester.

"We'll evaluate E-CAP in a few weeks and talk to those people who used the program," Farley said. "We won't know if our sales are up until the end of the semester, and continued use of E-CAP depends on our evaluation of how well the charges are paid back."

functions," Skoog said.

Tim Brown, network administrator for Student Publications Inc. and senior in computer science, said he agrees.

"My personal belief is that Macintoshes are easier to use and that the set up, training and support services are easier," Brown said. "For the office-type environment, Macintoshes really are better."

Henry said that while the cost of the computer system is significant, there would be no additional student fee.

"The money for this purchase comes from a foundation account," Henry said. "We won't be digging in students' pockets."

Henry said student government may even save money by purchasing the system.

"Right now we allocate money for long-distance phone calls, and we've paid out money for graphics in the past," Henry said.

"If every little group can save money from doing something in house, in the long run, the system is a success."

Charge system viewed as 'unfair'

noticed the difference in sales.

"Eight years ago, they (Missouri Bookstore) probably had 80 percent of the business. Now, they may only have 5 percent of business," Stevenson said. "If it weren't for our student charge system, they'd still be the big man on campus."

Because of the charge programs, Levin said the state of Texas passed Senate Bill 336, effective Sept. 1, 1993.

It states, "The Bill restricts the credit which may be offered by a retail store that is owned or operated by an institution of higher education. While generally prohibited, credit may be extended against undistributed grant or loan funds (which may not be withheld to require the students to purchase books or educational materials from a store the institution owns)."

Levin said this bill means any university in Texas cannot have a charge account program.

"The account program is not a new worry for off-campus stores. We've talked about it for two to three years at conferences, so it's a universal worry," he said. "We feel it's proprietary since there's nothing we can do. Consequently, it's unfair.

"I feel like we fulfill an important function for the students, University and staff at K-State. It's important that we maintain the service even if we have to be competitive. I'm a K-Stater, and I support K-State and the Manhattan community, but that doesn't mean I have to agree with every process."

Senate allocates $2,102

In other business, Student Senate approved a proposal to allocate $2,102 to folkloric dancing group Puerto Rico Baila.

The allocation, which is more than the $1,001.80 recommended by Senate Finance Committee, will be used to offset travel costs the group will incur while performing at Hispanic Awareness Month at Fullerton, Calif.

Elsa Diaz, engineering senator, said Puerto Rico Baila deserves the extra money because of their need to travel by plane. If the group is not able to do so, some members will be unable to participate.

"The students would be missing too much school," Diaz said. "If we don't pass this amendment, they will not be able to take all of their members and will have to re-choreograph many of their dances."

Diaz said she also thought it important to remember Puerto Rico Baila is requesting Senate money for the first time.

"This organization has been together for a year and a half, and they have never asked for anything," she said.

"They are only asking for travel money. They are paying for their hotel and meals."

Chad Schneiter, engineering senator , said by providing the money, the group will be able to assist in the recruitment of a diverse range of students to K-State.

"These students in California will see how diverse K-State is," Schneiter said.

K-Stater subs for legislator

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Michelle Smith, a 24-year-old junior in political science and international studies, has a daily schedule that would make some K-State students cringe.

Not only does she keep herself busy with school work and involvement in several organizations, she also works as a legislative aid for Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan.

"I'm her legislative aid, and I pretty much do leg work for her," Smith said. "I usually open her mail and let her know what kind of constituent work needs to be done. She pretty much tells me who I need to go talk to, what I need to find out about the particulars, how to go about doing all that, and then I do it."

Smith met Hochhauser while working as an intern in Topeka during the 1991 legislative session. The office where Smith worked was right across the hall from Hochhauser's.

Smith said the two became better acquainted through work dealing with local Democratic politics. Smith starting working for Hochhauser in May.

Hochhauser is in Amsterdam until December because her husband, David Margolies, K-State professor of entomology, is on sabbatical there, but Smith talks to her on the phone daily.

"I give her my input a little bit and just the feeling of things here at home," Smith said. "Like with the gubernatorial race it was like, 'You are not going to believe what's going on here.' I relay phone messages that she gets and everything like that.

"I think she really prides herself on getting to know the people in her constituency, and that even extends to the students.

"She really, really misses her district a lot. That's what one of the really neat things about working with her is, how in touch she is with everything going on in the community," Smith said.

"I mean, from the Rotary Club to happenings here on campus to the League of Women voters, you name it. Everybody knows her, and she tries to divide up her time. I think it's amazing how she's able to do all that, and she's a mom.

"The great thing about Representative Hochhauser is she always believes in giving people opportunities to succeed and opportunities to learn, and this definitely was a very good learning experience."

This summer, Smith said she learned a lot about dealing with people, especially during the flood.

"I felt really good being able to say, 'Here, here is some information, I hope this helps you,' and to see the look on their face. That was the most rewarding part of the summer."

Michelle Smith

Smith said she admires a lot of Hochhauser's qualities. "Whenever a problem came up, I knew she'd always have an answer for me. And even if she didn't know the answer right away, she knew somebody to call to get the answer. She's very well informed about the different agencies of the state level as well as the local level."

Besides working for Hochhauser, Smith also stays involved with activities on campus.

"I'm currently serving as President (Ed) Skoog's community affairs director, and we're presently working on the United Way campaign and looking into a few other miscellaneous things to start some projects," she said.

"My key role here is just to keep a line of communication between what's going on in the community and what's going on here at Kansas State University."

"I think our biggest accomplishment this year is getting Joe Kennedy to come speak," Smith said. "That's really great. He's coming the first of October.

"And it's really exciting because he's the son of Robert Kennedy, who ran for president and came here and spoke at K-State 25 years ago. So, it was a really big accomplishment for us."

Smith also serves as a student seminar success leader and is helping to establish a new sorority, Sigma Lambda Gamma, at K-State.

Last year, Smith ran for a seat in the Kansas Senate 22nd District. Smith made it to the general election, coming in second out of three candidates.

Cats return victorious

Fans and band members greet team despite rain

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The K-State football team was greeted with style Sunday morning at the Manhattan airport after defeating Minnesota at the Metrodome 30-25 Saturday night.

The victory marked the first non-conference road win since 1979 and the first time in K-State history a team has started the season 3-0 for three consecutive years. It was also the Cats' first win in a dome.

Close to 200 fans were anticipating the arrival as early as 12:30 a.m.

Rich Gottschalk, senior in business, said he is a die-hard fan.

"I've gone to games for the last four years, since they were 1-10," Gottschalk said. "I was on the edge of my seat throughout the game. It's another definite turning point for K-State football," he said.

Craig Dassow, senior in statistics, said he was not going to let the weather stop him from supporting the team.

"It's great that people are out here even in the rain. We're all true fans," Dassow said. "The game was great to listen to. I jumped up and down because I was ecstatic."

For Jill Johnson, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, it was her first time to greet the Cats coming home.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Robert Kooser, junior in kinesiology, gets rowdy before the Cats departed the plane early Sunday morning at the airport.

"It's totally awesome. This is my second semester here, and I've never done this. K-State is just awesome," she said.

The electricity turned up a notch when the plane rolled in at 1:45 a.m. Fists were raised, and people were clapping as the team members and coaches disappeared into the crowd.

Selected members of the marching band helped with the hype. The band was under the direction of drum major Roger Denning, senior in electrical engineering.

Mass species extinction predicted at convocation

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

It is possible that, within the next century, more than two-thirds of the world's 10 million plant and animal species could become extinct.

If that happens, it could destroy the fabric of the planet's life-support system, endangering the survival of the human race, Peter Raven said during his Convocation Lecture Friday at McCain Auditorium.

"Most people, when they think about extinction, think about large, rare animals such as rhinos and elephants," Raven said. "Actually, it is much more pervasive than that."

Hundreds of thousands of valuable but less glamorous plants and animals are threatened with extinction in less than 30 years, Raven said.

"We depend on plants and animals for food, for medicine and to maintain the integrity of our environment, but we are just ignoring their loss."

There are thousands of potentially useful plants and animals that have yet to be found. That is because only 1.4 million species out of the estimated 10 million that exist have been identified by scientists, Raven said.

"The biggest danger in the mass extinction we are seeing is that we don't even know what we are losing," he said.

The primary cause of species loss is the fact that there are too many people, and they are consuming too much, Raven said.

"We must learn to control our consumption of resources," he said. "We must learn to get by with less."

Raven discussed many possible solutions to the mass-extinction crisis.

He called on universities, such as K-State, to be the models for operating in an ecologically sound manner with recycling programs and by becoming more energy efficient.

Environmental education will also be important, Raven said.

"It is irresponsible of universities to graduate people who are environmentally and ecologically illiterate, because in the future, the environment is going to be an important part of everyone's life."

Conservation efforts can be very difficult, however, in a world where millions of people are starving to death, Raven said.

"If you are hungry, you don't care about preserving species."

"With little social justice, there is little chance that we will save plants, and if we can't save plants, we might not save the world," Raven said.

The rich countries of the world, especially the United States, have an obligation to help the poorer countries, Raven said.

"Our future depends on us developing an international outlook. We must work together to solve our problems," Raven said.

New policy applies to parties

2 to 3 weeks needed to organize security

COLLEGIAN STAFF

A policy calling for mandatory security at certain events sponsored by K-State organizations is in the making.

The new security policy would require organizations to go through a series of steps two to three weeks before the date of the event.

The responsibility of going through the proper steps is put on by both the students of the organization and the group adviser, Ann Claussen, assistant director of programs, said.

The guidelines will require the adviser to notify the security council of the event.

The security council will review all needs and ensure that the organization is aware of the policies.

The adviser will not be responsible for actually contacting and setting up the security for the event.

"This needs to be the responsibility of the group," Claussen said.

The group members will be responsible for crowd control and providing security for these events.

"I think that the students will do a better job of doing crowd control," Stephen Thomas, president of the Black Pan-Hellenic Council, said. "Some advisers don't want to get involved."

A conglomeration of guidelines to be followed when scheduling an event is being compiled by the Union Advisory Board, Beth Trimmer, president of Union Governing Board, said.

The type of security is based on whether or not the event is an open, publicized event or a closed event. Both events will require a party patrol, consisting of two males and two females from the group.

One or two group members will also check IDs at the door and collect the admission fee.

"Students must be 18 years old to enter an open event," Shirlyn Brown, coordinator of Black Pan-Hellenic council, said.

The party patrol members are responsible for the overall event. This includes being visible and recognizable as security and encouraging the crowd to disperse at the end of the event.

Open, publicized events would be required to hire an on-duty police officer in addition to party patrol and group members at the door.

Closed events are required to inform the campus police of the event and make an on-duty officer aware of it.

"If the event has been held before, they should know what to expect," Captain Charles Beckom of the K-State Police said.

Beckom said he is concerned about using attendance numbers as the basis for determining what security measures need to be taken.

The actual event is what needs to be taken into consideration.

"There should be no fixed rate for security," Beckom said. "There are different types of events needing different types of security."

Man killed, 4 youths held for questioning

LAWRENCE (AP) — A man was shot to death in an apparent botched carjacking, and four youths were being held Sunday, authorities said.

Edward D. Lees, 29, of Lawrence, was shot at the entrance to Riverfront Park about 7 p.m. Saturday, Douglas County Sheriff Loren Anderson said.

"The scary, frightening thing about this is we've got a situation where a man died because somebody apparently wanted a car," the sheriff said.

Four 17-year-old Topeka youths were being held in connection with the killing. They were arrested shortly after the shooting at the East Lawrence interchange on the Kansas Turnpike. The four were on foot and offered no resistance.

A couple that was driving nearby when the shooting occurred said they saw a woman and a young boy running east from the park.

The woman ran up to the couple's car and screamed, "My boyfriend's been shot in the head. I've got to get help," Rhonda Bowman said.

The Bowmans left the woman and child with other passersby and called police. Lees was dead when police arrived at the scene.

Police said the weapons involved were recovered. The case is being jointly investigated by the sheriff's department and the Lawrence Police Department.

Pope, Israel's Lau to discuss relations

ROME (AP) — Vatican and Israeli officials are close to agreeing on formal diplomatic relations between the Jewish state and the Holy See, an Israeli diplomat said Sunday.

The news came as Israel's chief rabbi, Yisrael Lau, arrived in Italy for a meeting Tuesday with Pope John Paul II. It will be the first time the leaders of Israel's Jews and the world's 900 million Roman Catholics have met face to face.

The developments follow Israel's peace treaty with Palestinians, which the Italian and Israeli media have speculated would set the stage for a Vatican-Israeli accord.

Relations began warming in July 1992, when a bilateral commission was established to work toward formal ties.

Miriam Ziv, an Israeli Embassy official who handles Vatican matters, said lower-level members of the commission have almost finalized a preliminary agreement covering diplomatic relations and church interests in Jerusalem.

The pact would need the approval of top Israeli and Vatican diplomats on the commission, she said.

In Israel, commission member Naomi Teesdale said the panel had drafted an agreement of principles and would submit it to Israeli and Vatican officials. The road is clear for formal relations, she said.

Beer, liquor industry argue over taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tensions in the alcoholic-beverage industry have erupted into open warfare over which sectors of the business — beer, wine, or hard liquor — should be taxed to help pay for President Clinton's health reforms.

The president of the National Beer Wholesalers Association last week wrote a letter accusing his counterpart in the liquor industry of mounting an all-out attack on beer that has placed the common interests of the licensed beverage industries in great jeopardy.

NBWA President Ronald Sarasin told Fred Meister, president of the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States (DISCUS), that Meister has done more to damage the licensed beverage industries than all the activities of our most avowed critics.

The White House still had not reached final decisions Sunday on the precise mix of new taxes it would seek to finance the health-care plan. A late draft called for $105 billion through the year 2000, and there were clear indications that a large part would come from a hike of roughly 75 cents a pack in cigarette taxes. Other revenue could come from a hit on alcoholic beverages.

Clinton is due to unveil the plan to Congress on Wednesday night.

Sarasin's Sept. 15 letter was written in response to an appeal by Meister to Clinton not to focus any new taxes on hard liquor.

In a letter to Clinton on Sept. 3, Meister told the president that beer, not liquor, is the beverage of choice of the young and drivers. And he said a rumored proposal to single out distilled spirits for new taxation would perpetuate a "beer subsidy" that sends the wrong message to young people.

Meister's letter was followed by a blitzkrieg advertising campaign calling a liquor tax unfair and pointing out that 42 percent of the price of a typical bottle of liquor now goes for taxes.

Discovery astronauts retrieve telescope

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery's astronauts retrieved an orbiting telescope loaded with nearly a week's worth of star observations Sunday and shot some movie footage of themselves.

The retrieval of the 3-1/2-ton satellite was the crew's last significant job before returning to Earth on Tuesday and the only one conducted without a hitch.

"Oh baby, oh baby, oh baby," astronaut Daniel Bursch exclaimed after grabbing the telescope with the shuttle's robot arm. Crewmate Carl Walz used the same expression at the end of his spacewalk last week.

Bursch set the ultraviolet telescope free last Monday so it could study stars and interstellar gas, a job that would have been hampered if it had remained in the shuttle's cargo bay.

Bowie sways to jazz tunes

TOM LISTER
Collegian

Their music was even more colorful than their outfits.

Friday night, Lester Bowie's Brass Fantasy gave the audience at McCain Auditorium a lively evening with its mix of jazz, Latin, rhythm and blues and funk.

Bowie, wearing a silver laboratory coat, began the evening with a few simple words.

"I'm really glad to be here," he said. "We finally made it to Manhattan."

From then on, Bowie and his 10-piece band let the music do the talking. In addition to some jazz and improvisational pieces, the band performed instrumental versions of more widely known songs.

"We're famous for jazz standards," Bowie said at one point. "This one's by Whitney Houston.

"Well," he said after a pause, "it will be a jazz standard."

In addition to Houston's "Saving All My Love for You," Bowie and Brass Fantasy played such songs as Willie Nelson's "Crazy," Michael Jackson's "Remember the Time" and Sadé's "Smooth Operator."

"We get a great challenge out of playing different types of music," Bowie said.

Brass Fantasy's versions of the songs came across with the band's ensemble. Bowie led the band on trumpet.

In addition, the band had three other trumpets, two trombones, a French horn, a tuba, drums and percussion.

Throughout the performance, Bowie tapped his feet, shuffled across the stage and swayed with the music.

The band shared the same enthusiasm, especially tuba player Bob Stuart, who kept a strong drive going the entire evening.

"The music is everywhere. It's every being. It's everybody."
LESTER BOWIE
LEADER OF BRASS FANTASY

Percussionist Don Moye, wearing Native American garb during the first set, also added to the performance with a mix of bongos, congas, tambourines and more.

Bowie didn't limit the spotlight to himself. All band members got solo time, and Bowie repeatedly gave them credit.

So did the audience. After the Bowie and Brass Fantasy closed the show with improvisation on the alien cadence from the movie "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," the audience called them back with a standing ovation.

The band gave them an encore with the song "Next." The song, the only one with lyrics, had a little microphone trouble. Although not all the vocals came through, the audience gave a second standing ovation.

"The music is everywhere," Bowie said toward the end of the show. "It's every being. It's everybody."

VINCENT P. LAVERGNE/Collegian

Lester Bowie, leader of Brass Fantasy, improvises through a solo during Fantasy's show at McCain Auditorium Friday night. Bowie wears a lab coat while playing with his 10-piece ensemble because he said he considers the stage to be an experimental arena.

Bond deserves passage from Manhattan voters

Last year, the Lincoln, Kan., School District put a bond issue before the voters, and it was defeated by only one vote.

Now, Manhattan/Ogden U.S.D. 383 School District is about to put forth two bond issues of its own. Each deserves to be passed by the people when they get the opportunity to vote on Oct. 5.

The first question includes building two new middle schools, one new elementary school and several district improvements. It has a total cost of $25,887,000. The second question includes building an enclosed swimming pool to be used for athletic events and the general public. It has a price of $2,020,000.

Since 1982, the schools in U.S.D. 383 have been overcrowded. They have grown from 5,368 students in 1982 to 6,790 in 1992 and a projected 7,651 students in the year 1997. The current buildings in the district were built to accommodate only 5,400 students. This means the schools are 26 percent over capacity.

This is not a problem affecting only a couple of schools in the district. It is affecting all 13 schools.

Three years ago, the citizens of 383 rejected a bond issue by a vote of 3,788 to 3,208. That was when the school district's property tax level was 82.38 mills and long-term interest rates were high.

Today, fortunately, the mill level is down to a 46.15, and long-term interest rates are at their lowest level in almost 30 years — 5.4 percent. Further, the state, under current law, will pay 28 percent of the bond.

Besides these advantages, Manhattan and K-State would benefit from these improvements simply because a community is judged by its schools. If a person, possibly a new K-State professor, is looking for somewhere to move and has children, that person will look at the Manhattan schools.

If this bond issue is passed, he or she will see the true quality our schools possess.

Don't let what happened in Lincoln happen in Manhattan. Get out and register by Sept. 20 and vote 'yes' on Oct. 5.

Growth of the Androgynous Strain

Men and women are different. They always have been, and they always will be.

Extreme feminists, it seems, are determined to change that enduring truth. They want to repress gender differences and pursue, in the shallow rhetoric of new Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, a "gender-blind society."

Blindness is often a prudent way to approach issues of equality, especially when a inconsequential characteristic like race is the cause for discrimination. Gender equality, on the other hand, is a completely different story. Gender differences are of tremendous consequence; they strike at the core of what defines us as human beings.

These differences are the result of much more than what we were taught or our cultural background. They originate from our soul. Regrettably, I don't have any studies to cite proving an innate origin of gender differences. I left them at home along with God's dental records.

Nevertheless, one can strongly infer the same conclusion by looking at the world around us. If gender differences are the result of arbitrary cultural forces, as many feminists maintain, then one should find profound randomness in the patterns of gender differences among independent societies. What you find is not profound randomness but profound similarities in those patterns, which suggests that something in men and women encourages them to pursue specific roles, just as the design of a musical instrument determines its specific timbre.

JOHN HART

Men tend to be more aggressive or achievement - oriented and think in terms of justice and solutions, while women are more nurturing and think in terms of relationships and feelings. This is a generalization, but an accurate generalization nonetheless.

Repressing these tendencies and labeling them as bad or sexist results only in confusion, especially in the family. The role of fathers, for example, is one of the least understood and appreciated roles in society. If biology was the only factor separating men from women, as some feminists maintain, then there would be no need for fathers, except as fertilizers.

Feminists are quick to criticize men and fathers but very slow to affirm their unique roles and help them form an identity. When a mother and father work as a team, with both understanding their differences and pursuing unique roles, everyone benefits.

Rutgers University professor of sociology David Poponoe writes, "In three decades of work as a social scientist, I know of few other bodies of data in which the weight of evidence is so decisively on one side of the issue: On the whole, for children, two-parent families are preferable. ... If our prevailing views on family structure hinged solely on scholarly evidence, the current debate would have never arisen in the first place."

In no other area of human existence is diversity more beautiful than with the dynamic, fundamental differences between men and women. Liberals want to celebrate diversity in every area except where it makes the most sense.

Intellectual viruses like the androgynous strain hurt the credibility of the few feminists who understand that equality is a function of worth, not sameness. So let's celebrate our gender diversity. After all, one "Pat" in the world is enough.

THE ROLE OF FATHERS, FOR EXAMPLE, IS ONE OF THE LEAST UNDERSTOOD AND APPRECIATED ROLES IN SOCIETY.

Exposing derrieres to Mr. Robertson will not improve America

Editor,

As I read the article on the plans for protesting Pat Robertson speaking, I wondered what prompted you to call everyone to such obnoxious behavior. You definitely dislike his stand on moral issues and believe it has no place in the leadership of our country. It seems you have no respect for any authority, God's or otherwise. I suppose this fact would prompt one to want to do something rebellious, like "moon" an upstanding person such as Pat Robertson.

Pat Robertson stands for what is right and fair, including free speech. I'm sure he has never been involved in such childish behavior as you are suggesting, whether he agreed with the views of others or not.

I would make this a call for civilized people everywhere to listen to what Pat Robertson has to say, determine whether it is right or wrong, good or bad, and decide what they think at that time.

To act childishly will accomplish nothing, save getting a few laughs. It gains absolutely no respect for K-State, students there or Kansans in general. I would like to think the students in Manhattan have a little more dignity than to moon anyone.

Let's have a little more respect for our fellow Americans, whatever their views.

Perhaps Collegian rednecks should sit out a couple of semesters

Editor,

When I want thoughtful, considered opinions, I don't go into a redneck bar an hour before closing time. Neither, apparently, should I read a Collegian editorial.

The Faculty Senate recently decided to dismiss failing students after one semester instead of encouraging them to invest more of their resources in an immediate second attempt. This is not being anti-student. Experience has shown that failing students have a much better chance of success after sitting out a semester.

One of the functions of editorial pages is to provide a forum for opinions. Certainly the Collegian editors are entitled to the opinion that students should not be dismissed after only one failure. Many of the faculty hold the same opinion. But it says little for the Collegian when the editorial consists of unsupported assumptions and knee-jerk diatribes. We can get those in a bar.

It's time to open up those veins for K-State Red Cross bloodmobile

Editor,

We're out of blood. Right now, a friend, family member or neighbor needs your blood to live. You can help by becoming a blood donor when the American Red Cross Bloodmobile visits K-State from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Oct. 5-8 at the K-State Union.

Giving blood is a safe and simple process. You cannot get AIDS or any other disease by giving blood. The materials, including the needle used for your donation, are new, sterile, disposable and used only once — by you for your donation.

Are you a potential Red Cross blood donor? You must be 17 or older, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in general good health. You can never have had hepatitis and must not be in an AIDS at-risk behavior group.

Since the K-State/KU football game is the weekend following the blood drive, we are challenging all Jayhawks to beat the number of units donated at K-State. KU has not beaten K-State in many years, so keep the tradition going by donating blood.

You may make an appointment Sept. 20, 21 and 22 at the Union, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex or dining centers, or call 537-2180.

If you've never been asked to give blood, I'm asking you now. Please donate. Someone needs your blood to live.

▶ DIVERSITY OVERLAY

Questions need to be addressed concerning the funding of classes

Editor,

Regarding the recent discussions on requiring a course on diversity, I think that the faculty must seriously address the issue of where we are going to get the resources to staff such a course and consider the possibility that we might lengthen the already long list of closed courses. The diversity overlay, when implemented, will mean a significant reallocation of resources. Many students would argue that the University has an obligation to fund the courses we already require.

Secondly, is this ad hoc adding of a course here and a course there really the way we should set about reforming the curriculum?

Thirdly, we as a University have an obligation to stress both the goals and aspirations that unite us as a people as well as the forces that divide us. One only has to look to Eastern Europe, particularly the former Yugoslavia, to see where the stress on ethnicity and division rather than unity leads. Nor is this phenomenon confined to Eastern Europe.

In Western Europe, Belgium is in essence fragmenting into three separate nations. In our own hemisphere, Canada provides yet another example of the triumph of ethnicity over nationhood. We as Americans have always stressed the unum in the e pluribus unum. Are we now stressing the pluribus at the expense of the unum? Do we really want to stress cultural separatism and ethnic fragmentation over our historic commitment to forge an American identity that unites us all? Secretary of State John Quincy Adams said it best when in talking about migration to American shores. He noted that immigrants must "cast off the European skin, never to resume it. They must look forward to their posterity rather than backward to their ancestors."

party asked me if I'd like to run. I really enjoy being a Kansan, and there's a lot of things that I believed then and still believe now. I felt like there were a lot of issues that were concerning young people, and there's a lot of issues concerning just average citizens, average everyday citizens, and that's kind of what I consider myself, just an average person."

Smith said she learned a lot about how campaigns and candidates operate.

"You can read about it in a textbook, and you can even write papers on it and study others people's elections and other people's thoughts and feelings. But until you've actually dived in and done it yourself, you really have no appreciation for it."

Smith said she is unsure about her future but said it will depend on what she and her husband, Mike, senior in nuclear engineering, think is best for them.

They both plan to attend graduate school, she said.

Cats maintain spotless record

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

MINNEAPOLIS — K-State had trouble with its opponent like just about everyone else in the the Big Eight Saturday afternoon.

But unlike Missouri, Iowa State, Kansas and Colorado, the Wildcats were able to hold off the non-conference opponent, beating the Minnesota Golden Gophers 30-25 Saturday night in the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome.

The victory improved the Cats to 3-0, marking the third consecutive season K-State has been undefeated after three games. The win also ended an 18-game, 14-year drought against non-conference teams on the road.

Minnesota coach Jim Wacker said the win for the Cats was important.

"It was a great win for Kansas State," he said. "You have to give them a lot of credit, but I was also proud of our kids."

K-State coach Bill Snyder said every play was important to both teams,

"It was a ballgame of character, it was a ballgame of big plays, and it was a ballgame of special teams," Snyder said. "The whole game rested on one snap."

That one snap occurred with 52 seconds left in the game and Minnesota down to its final play. The ball was on the K-State two-yard line, and Minnesota was facing fourth down. K-State was clinging to a five-point lead.

After a timeout by the Gophers, the two squads came back for the deciding play of the game.

Gopher quarterback Tim Schade went back to throw to slot back Omar Douglas in the end zone. Schade's arching pass went beyond the reach of Douglas, giving K-State the win.

Cornerback Thomas Randolph said the victory was emotional.

"I wanted to cry (after the incompletion)," Randolph said. "It was a great feeling to pull it out.

"I'm glad we did it."

The Cats, scoring on their first three possessions, looked like they would control the game.

Andre Coleman returned the opening kickoff 38 yards. Two plays later, quarterback Chad May hit wide receiver Kevin Lockett down the right sideline for 53 yards. Tate Wright's point-after kick gave the Cats a 7-0 lead.

K-State scored again with a 15-play, 70-yard scoring drive. Running back J.J. Smith got the touchdown on a two-yard run, giving the Cats a 14-0 lead.

Wright then added a 42-yard field goal for a 17-0 Cat lead.

Everything was going smoothly when Minnesota free safety Jeff Rosga intercepted a May pass and ran 25 yards for a Gopher touchdown. Kicker Mike Chalberg missed the extra point, and the score was 17-6.

The Minnesota offense scored its first touchdown on an 18-yard pass from Schade to running back Chuck Rios. Chalberg's extra point moved Minnesota to within four points at 17-13 by halftime.

May got the Cats their next score with a seven-yard touchdown run on the first play of the fourth quarter to cap a 10-play drive. Wright's extra point made the score 24-13.

Minnesota responded with an 11-play scoring drive with Schade connecting to Andre Coleman avoids a potential tackle by Minnesota's Juan Hunter on a reverse play yielding 25 yards. Coleman scurried for 152 yards on five kickoff returns, including a 72-yard jaunt that set up K-State's game-winning touchdown.

VOLLEYBALL

Netters' championship drought ends

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Stephanie Liester reaches for a spike Saturday against Oral Roberts University in Ahearn Field House.

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

For the first time Coach Patti Hagemeyer can remember, K-State's volleyball team won a tournament.

The Wildcats won the Wildcat/Best Western Continental Inn Invitational with a 2-1 record by virtue of their 8-4 game record. Oral Roberts and the University of Missouri-Kansas City were also 2-1 but had game records of 8-5 and 8-6, respectively.

"All I have to say is we won the tournament, and that is a huge step in the right direction for us," Hagemeyer said.

The Cats rolled over Northeastern Louisiana in three straight games, 15-9, 15-9 and 15-2 during the final match Saturday night.

In the third game, K-State used runs of six, five and four points to dispose of the Kangaroos.

"The team saw an opening to win the tournament after UMKC beat Oral Roberts, and they knew that they had to win the match in three," Hagemeyer said.

All-tournament-team member Chi Dau set the tone for the Cats by recording 39 assists in the three-game match.

"I wanted to be more aggressive and more consistent, and I think I did that tonight," Dau said.

K-State was placed in the must-win situation when the Cats dropped a heartbreaker to Oral Roberts Saturday afternoon in five games.

Oral Roberts took the first two games, 15-13 and 15-9. However, K-State stormed back to take the next two games, 15-10 and 15-7, before losing the deciding game 17-15.

"It is more mentally draining than physically draining because it was such a long match," Angie McGee, middle blocker, said. "We knew we had to come out stronger against Northeast, and we did that."

McKee made the all-tournament team for the second week in a row with 37 kills and 24 digs.

"She's played just as well as she did last weekend. She is really on a roll," Hagemeyer said.

Liester has been on an all-tournament team selection in each of the Cats' three tournaments this fall.

"We still made some big mistakes at key moments this weekend," Hagemeyer said.

"We tend to relax when we get to our 13th and 14th points instead of attacking and putting teams away."

The Cats began the tournament by defeating UMKC in four games, 4-15, 15-9, 15-10 and 15-9. Dau led the way with 57 assists, 27 of which went to Liester.

K-State travels to Colorado Wednesday night to open the conference season against the defending Big Eight tournament champions.

"Colorado and Nebraska are definitely the two best teams in the conference, but I feel the rest of the conference is wide open," Hagemeyer said.

K-State finished last in the conference last year with an 0-12 record.

"Our biggest goal this year is to get back to the Big Eight tournament," Dau said.

"Our confidence is much higher than it was last year going into the conference season."

Floridian glad to finally be a Wildcat

SCOTT FRITCHEN

Dear Mrs. Jepson,

Remember, once upon a time, there was a boy who wanted nothing more than to be a K-State Wildcat?

Well, here I am.

So, how's sunny Orlando, Fla.? I sure do miss the place I grew up, where football and basketball dominated high-school life, the beloved city where kids were born and raised to attend one of three colleges — Florida, Florida State or Miami — to become a Gator, Seminole or a Hurricane.

Remember even after all the harassment I took from my friends, I still wouldn't conform?

Nope. I still wanted to be a Wildcat.

I never quite understood why people's horizons never seemed to journey outside the Sunshine State.

I distinctly remember countless times when people told me K-State was just for hay-balers or farmers, and when a friend even wrote an entry in my yearbook that read, "Don't forget to feed the chickens!" Those comments were a bit stereotypical. It would have been like me saying Miami is for gangsters.

I'm sure some of the high-school athletes who played football in Florida made fun of the Wildcats at one time or another, but when they graduated, where did they end up going?

K-State.

Little does anyone know that this year K-State recruited more players from Florida (17) than from any other state.

K-State has been led by a transfer quarterback from Cal-Fullerton, junior Chad May, who has come in and averaged 240 yards passing and has thrown for three touchdowns.

I must tell you about this outstanding preseason all-America free safety, senior Jaime Mendez. He had an interception on the first defensive play of the year and had 16 tackles the following week.

Then there's another preseason all-American, senior center Quentin Neujahr, who is among the top three centers in the nation.

Now that I'm finally here, I can see first-hand the K-State program has turned many critic's heads as it has its own performance in the past couple of years. The Wildcats' coach, Bill Snyder, has seemed to have brought instant credibility to the very program that in 1988 was named the worst team in Division-I football by Sports Illustrated.

In 1991, K-State was named its most improved team.

Saturday, Snyder produced yet another impressive accomplishment, as K-State ended its 14-year losing streak to non-conference teams on the road.

Snyder said the reason K-State hadn't previously won on the road was simply because the Cats weren't good enough.

K-State just keeps improving and, with its 3-0 record, is now ranked No. 29 in the Associated Press poll.

Next Saturday, K-State will put its 17-2 home record on the line when the Cats play the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

Yes, things have sure turned around.

Although the Floridians probably think I'm crazy, I still feel I made the right choice coming to K-State. Maybe the Wildcats are not ranked No. 1, but they're a team on the rise.

Sincerely,
Scott

▶WEST BREAKS RECORD IN FINALS

The 1993 Intramural Swim Meet became more competitive as it moved into its final night Thursday.

Estelle West, Kappa Alpha Theta, highlighted the evening by breaking the record in the 50-yard backstroke with a time of 30.7.

Clock finished first in the 50-yard breast stroke, second in the 100-yard breast stroke and was a member of the first-place 200-yard freestyle relay team.

Steve Lashley, Lambda Chi Alpha, won two events, the 100-yard breast stroke and the 100-yard individual medley.

"The pool wasn't open all week, and it was hard to train for the races, but I did the best with what I had, and it came out pretty good," Lashley said.

▶MARINERS TOPPLE ROYALS 4-1

SEATTLE (AP) — Erik Hanson expects to win every time he steps on the mound. The problem is he finds a way to lose far too many games than the Mariners think he should.

Making what he said were two mechanical adjustments in his delivery, Hanson scattered five hits over 81/3 innings to break his four-game losing streak, leading Seattle over the Kansas City Royals 4-1 Sunday.

Hanson (11-12), who had an 8.46 ERA since Aug. 13, struck out nine and walked one. Ted Power finished for his 11th save, allowing an RBI single to Kevin McReynolds.

Bill Haselman's double-play groundout gave the Mariners a 1-0 lead in the third. Seattle added three runs in the fourth on Ken Griffey's RBI double, Mike Blowers' run-scoring triple and Bret Boone's sacrifice fly.

Runners, walkers keep in shape

Physical therapy month observed with Scrub Shirt run

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

The Saint Mary Hospital celebrated National Physical Therapy Month with an event that allowed Manhattan residents to move some muscles.

A light drizzle fell Saturday while participants of all ages ran, walked and stretched in the seventh annual Scrub Shirt Run & Walk.

Anne Becraft, physical therapist at the Saint Mary Hospital, said 72 people ran the two-mile course, and 41 entrants walked a three-mile course.

"It's a fantastic event for some family fun," said Jackie Rawlings, director of physical therapy at the Saint Mary Hospital. "The national physical-therapy organization encourages us to promote the profession. This is what we've chosen to do.

"The slogan for physical therapy month this year is 'Physical Therapy for All Ages,'" Rawlings said. "It's perfect because in physical therapy, we treat all ages. And in this event, we have people of just about any age come out."

October is physical therapy month, but Rawlings had to schedule around Manhattan events such as football games.

She said it often gets too cold in October.

"This is the first time we've had rain," she said. "But I really don't think it's dampened anyone's spirits. We may have had a few people who didn't come out because of the weather."

The top three individuals in the men's and women's division of the run received plaques. Other participants received free giveaways, including T-shirts and water bottles.

The run and walk also supported Riley County's Drug Abuse Resistance Education program. The D.A.R.E. project is designed to educate fifth and sixth graders about drug abuse.

The Riley County Police Department introduced the D.A.R.E. program in 1990. It originated in Los Angeles.

D.A.R.E. officer Larry George is an instructor for Riley County.

"We go to 15 classes each week," George said. "We have 26 sixth-grade classes in Riley County, which means we reach about 720 sixth graders.

"One of the positive parts of the program is the kids have a positive role model as far as policemen are concerned," George said. "It's fun to find kids who don't run from cops."

Volunteers helped coordinate the run and walk.

"Most of our volunteers come from the pre-physical therapy club at K-State," Rawlings said. "They come to help us out and also to get involved in their profession early."

Cathy Post, senior in pre-physical therapy, helped with registration.

"This is a great event for community relations," she said. "It's an opportunity for people to get out and enjoy the morning while exercising."

Corey Long, senior in kinesiology/pre-physical therapy, stood at the finish line.

"We record the time each person gets as they come through. The people who are serious about competing are often interested in their times," Long said.

"It's a fun event. People of all different ages get involved."

Derrick Swihart, Manhattan resident, said he isn't a serious runner.

"We just came out for fun," Swihart said. "We heard about it, and it sounded like it would be fun. It's a great way to keep in shape."

split end Aaron Osterman on a nine-yard pass for the touchdown. The Gophers failed on a two-point conversion and trailed 24-19 with 8:58 left in the game.

On K-State's next possession, defensive end Andy Kratchvil knocked the ball away from May in the end zone. The fumble was recovered by Minnesota linebacker Craig Sauer for the touchdown. Another two-point conversion failed, but Minnesota was leading 25-24 with 5:33 left in the contest.

After the Gophers scored, Coleman took the ensuing kickoff 72 yards to set up the winning drive. Coleman said the kickoff squad did a great job.

"They had been doing real well on the coverage all game," said Coleman, who had 152 yards in returns. "The pressure was on us, and the guys had to make the blocks. I just ran the ball out, and we laid all it all on the line out there and came through."

May said the team knew they could win against the Gophers.

"We felt all along that we were going to win this game," said May, who threw for 247 yards on 16 completions. "We just had to go out there and do it."

Samples mix various rock flavors

"This misery leaves me lonely and it holds me in. This misery is a shell from which behind I grin." — Jeep MacNichol, the Samples' "Misery"

REVIEW

Reminiscent sorrow dances with both honesty and hope in The Samples' fourth album, "The Last Drag."

This recording shows a road-weary band that has toured for the past 18 months. Unfamiliar surroundings have affected the members' lives, so the Samples display their personal memories and emotions in this album.

Slow, reflective songs such as "Little Silver Ring" and "Darkside" speak of better times with friends and cold inner emotions.

The Samples' lyrics don't overwhelm. They keep the various messages coherent but allow room for imagination and thought.

With previous albums having splashes of reggae, soul and folk rock, it's no surprise the Samples have been compared to the Police and R.E.M.

Sean Kelly's vocals on "The Last Drag" are a mixture of Sting and Michael Stipe, minus the nasality. His presence is clear and appealing.

The Samples stray from the everyday use of acoustic guitar and a plain bass line by incorporating various flavors of rock. Ranging from a pedal steel guitar, programmed drum patterns and a Hammond organ, the Samples attempt to break away from a uniform sound while preserving a smooth beat.

Roommate: Keep feelings in closet for now

Dear Cassandra,

I have a problem. I am an 18-year-old male psychology major who has ... well, I have feelings for my roommate.

These feelings for "Alan," while I have tried to hold them back during these first weeks of school, have been getting increasingly harder to keep inside.

I started out having fantasies about him, with an occasional erection, but then it turned to masturbating to a picture of him. And now, I find myself staring at him in the dorm room and feeling my manhood start to grow.

I have considered telling "Alan," but I am afraid I will lose the closeness we have. Please help me.

Signed,
Confused

Dear Confused,

OK. This definitely isn't the end of the world. I understand it may be scary and a bit overwhelming for you, but you shouldn't feel ashamed or embarrassed by your feelings for your roommate. You're just fine.

I wouldn't advise, however, for you to tell "Alan" about your feelings right now. Before you tell him something that would surely surprise him and perhaps damage your friendship, I think you should concentrate on getting your thoughts and feelings squared away first.

You should talk with someone about your feelings for "Alan" and about your internal confusion. I would suggest calling Lafene at 532-6544 for times when its gay support group meets, or if you'd rather, you can anonymously call the Flint Hills Alliance at 587-0016 just to talk.

Let me know what happens. I care.

KC band Cher outdone by local band, Bosom

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Kansas City's three-piece hardcore band Cher was surprisingly upstaged by locals Bosom Thursday night at Berlin.

When the local folk-grunge band took command of the stage, it proved worthy of being the next big thing developing along the Kaw River.

Vocalist Jason McClendon belted out lyrics with the authority of heavy farm machinery. Bosom's working-class sound came out clear in such anthems as "Tractor Pull" and "Point of Rodeo."

In addition to lyrics, Bosom came through musically.

Alex Kice gave the band a distinctive sound with his mastery of the accordion and dulcimer, and auxiliary percussionist Paul Horton made for a thick rhythm section with his congas, bongos and Skoal can.

One would at first be intimidated by an act that combines thick Seattlesque rock along with hints of country and folk, but bizarre juxtapositions were normal for this show.

Berlin, a techno-club, was a hard-to-ignore distraction when patrons are dancing to techno music between bands.

When such diverse backgrounds met, the atmosphere of the house reduced itself to the lowest common denominator.

The crowd was afraid to even move within 10 feet of the stage during Bosom's set, and only a handful of the faithful dared to approach Cher.

Vocalist/guitarist Mike McCoy approached the stage in drag, sporting a plaid sundress and an old leather football helmet. His bandmates, both women, wore more traditional jeans and T-shirts.

Bassist Heather Grehan looked and played like a possessed woman. Her eyes kicked back into her head, and her hair fell from under her ball cap as she slammed her bass. Drummer Lisa MacKenzie, though barely visible behind her kit on the tiny stage, made her presence known by delivering loudly on the percussion end.

When put all together, Cher has all the parts of a good punk band but hesitates when it comes to substance. Mindless songs such as "Pie" and "Fucker from Behind the Couch" are not going to change the world but are fun to listen to. Call it passionless passion.

Egypt ready to join peace truce in area

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt — Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak met Sunday with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and said most Arab nations are ready to follow Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization toward peace.

Speaking to reporters after a two-hour summit with Rabin, Mubarak said he expects Israel and Syria would sign a declaration of peace within months. Mubarak said he'll try to speed the negotiations.

"Every country in the area wants peace," Mubarak said with Rabin at his side. "Enough hatred and bloodshed and killing and using our revenues for war. I can tell you most, maybe all, of the Arab world supports the step forward for peace."

Syrian President Hafez Assad said he was angry that Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat negotiated an accord with Israel secretly, but he said Syria would continue peace talks with Israel.

Rabin hastily arranged Sunday's summit at the Mediterranean resort to win support from friendly Arabs for the peace pact the Jewish state signed with the PLO in Washington a week ago. It calls for limited Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho.

The one-day visit was Rabin's third summit with Mubarak since the Israeli leader took office in July 1992. Egypt, the only Arab country that has a peace treaty with Israel, has been instrumental in mediating between Israel and other Arab states. Rabin returned to Israel later in the day.

After their meeting, Mubarak noted Syria's desire for peace with Israel. But he would not specify what he and the Syrian president will discuss when Assad visits Egypt later this week.

Second attack reported near B-2

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Less than two weeks after an assault incident in Lot B-3, a second student reported a similar incident near Lot B-2 Thursday evening.

According to the K-State police report, a female student, identified only as a sophomore, was grabbed by a white male about 10 p.m. Thursday as she walked from the parking lot toward Haymaker Hall.

The woman escaped and reported the incident to K-State Police. It was classified a battery because physical force was used, Lt. Rick Howard said.

Howard said despite the fact the battery took place in the open area between Lot B-2 and Claflin Road, no witnesses have come forward.

He said a security camera is positioned on the roof of Haymaker, but it recorded nothing that could identify the assailant.

"Unless it's zoomed in on someone, you're not going to get much detail," Howard said. "It wouldn't be close enough to identify anybody."

Howard said two incidents in almost as many weeks in that area was cause for concern. Routine patrols will be increased in that area as officers are available, he said.

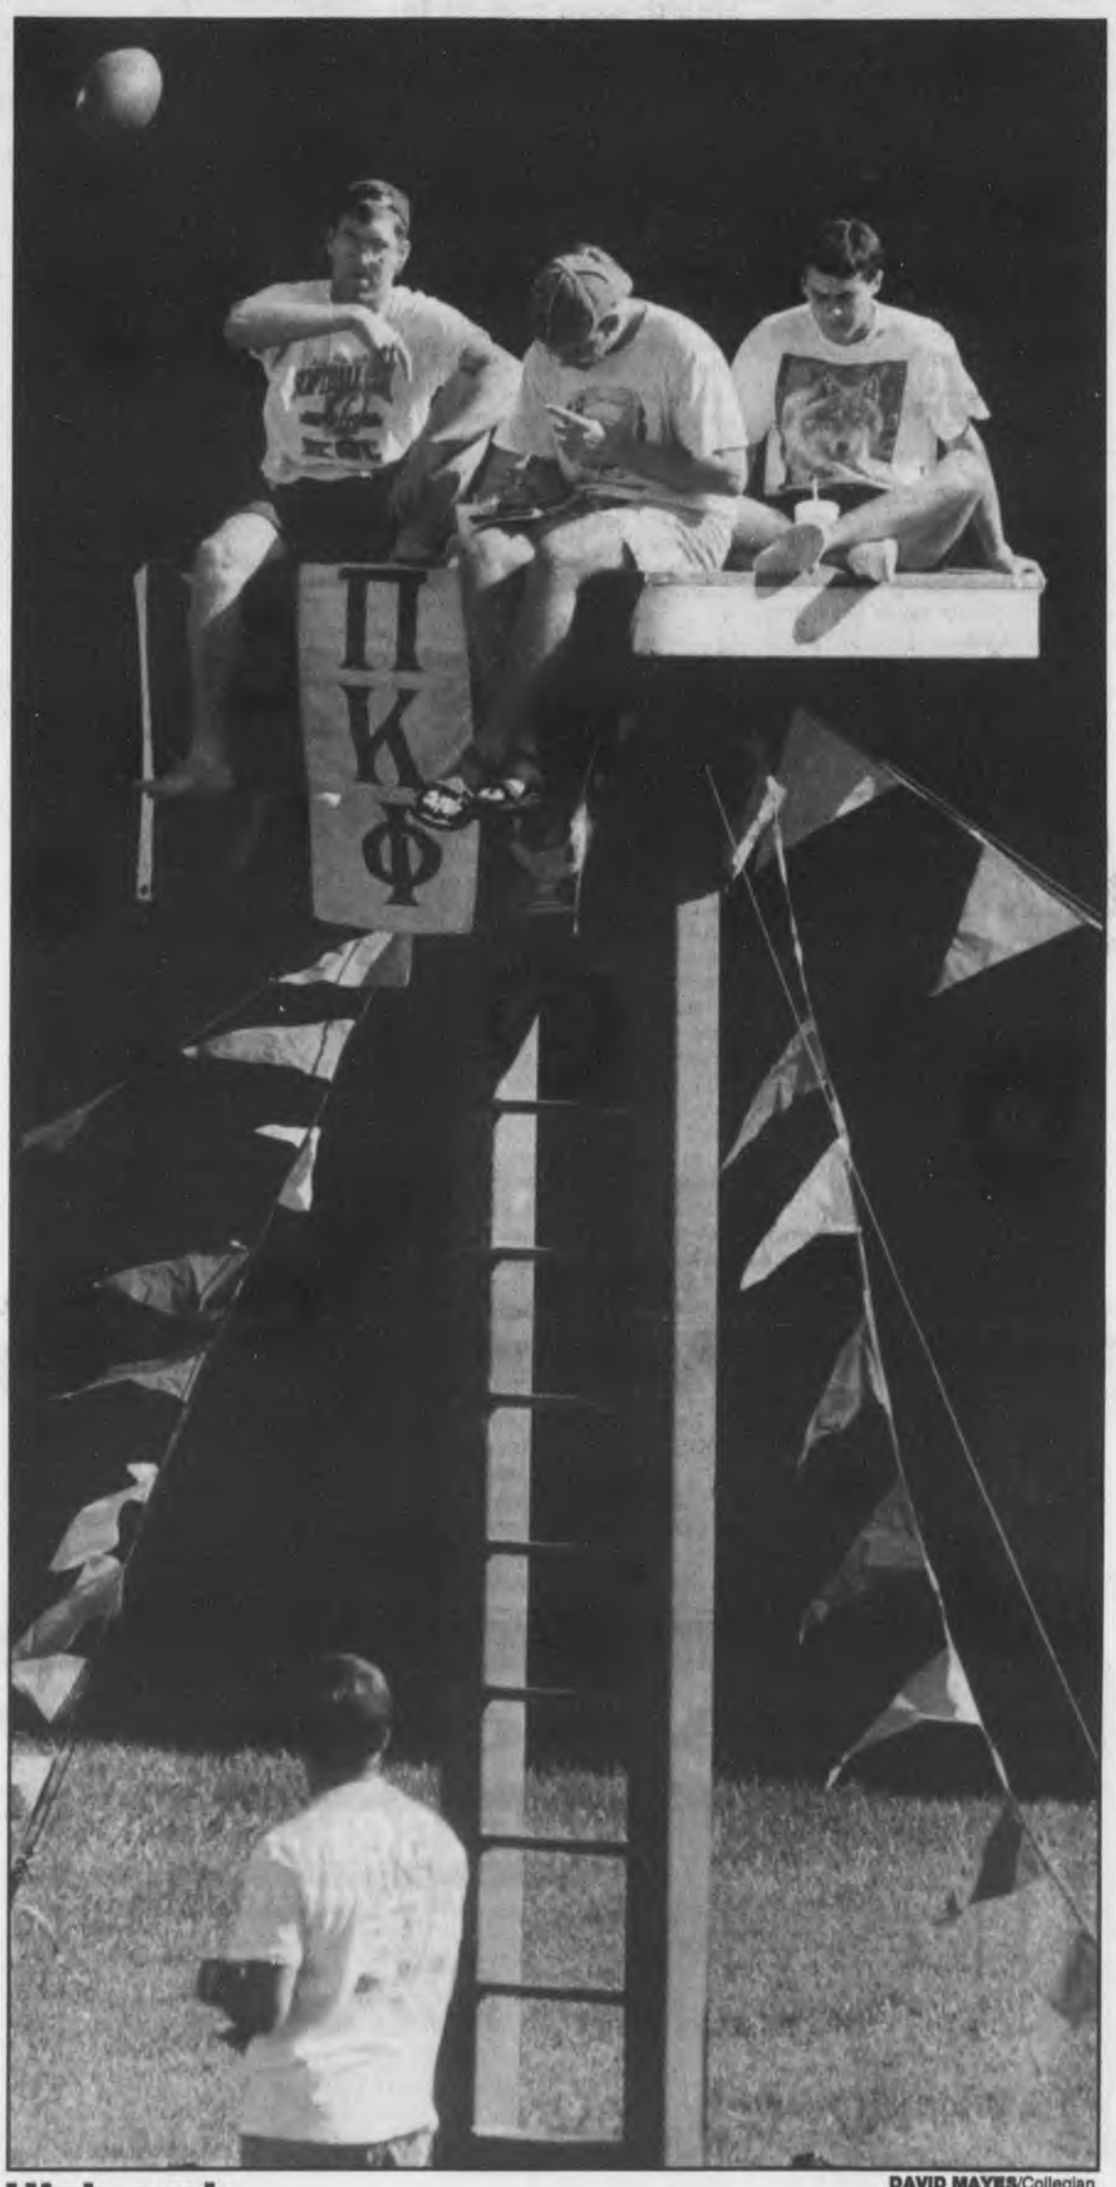
"We've got an extra patrol out there," Howard said. "But if manpower is short, we can only be in so many places at one time."

The woman helped police make a composite sketch of the assailant. Howard said she rated the sketch a nine for accuracy on a scale from one to 10. She said the hair was fluffier, but short.

In the police report, she described the assailant as wearing baggy, brown-and-orange plaid shorts, a white T-shirt and white three-quarter high-top tennis shoes.

Lt. Howard said students should take precautions.

"We encourage people to travel in groups and to use the escort services," he said.



BATTERY SUSPECT

An incident of battery was reported to the K-State Police Thursday, Sept. 16, 1993.

The suspect is described as a white male, 19-20 years old, six feet tall, 170 pounds.

If you have information about the incident or the attacker, call the campus police at 532-6412.

Kennedy to speak during political-awareness week

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Joseph Kennedy will speak to K-State students about political activism Oct. 1 at the conclusion of a political-awareness week sponsored by the KSU Young Democrats.

The event will take place at 3:30 p.m. in Union Forum Hall.

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kansas, who became a gubernatorial candidate Sept. 15, was instrumental in planning the event, Michelle Smith, vice president of Young Democrats, said.

The timing of Kennedy's visit is significant. His father, then Sen. Robert Kennedy, delivered a Landon Lecture here 25 years ago shortly after announcing he was a candidate for the presidency of the United States.

"He's talking about why young people and students in college should be interested and involved in politics," Smith said.

Kennedy's address is part of the political-awareness week.

The movie, "The Distinguished Gentleman," will be shown at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 28, in Forum Hall.

"It's a social period to see how politics play into everything, even entertainment," Smith said.

Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, also a Democratic gubernatorial candidate, will speak about women in politics during a women's studies class on Wednesday, Sept. 29, in Denison Hall.

"It's not a 'Hey, come be a Young Democrat' week. It's not focusing on that."
MICHELLE SMITH
VICE PRESIDENT OF YOUNG DEMOCRATS

Angela Hubler, assistant professor of English and women's studies, said it will be interesting to hear Wagnon's perspective on a variety of women's issues.

"I would like her to talk about her past experiences in Kansas and working on women's issues," Hubler said.

The Young Democrats are sponsoring "Pizza and Politics with Tom Sawyer," from 6-7 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 30, in the Nichols Hall atrium, free of charge.

Sawyer, D-Sedgwick and minority leader in the House of Representatives, will also address Student Senate at 7 p.m. in the Big 8 Room.

EVENT INFO
■ Joseph Kennedy will speak at 3:30 p.m. Oct. 1 in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

"He will address Student Senate about upcoming issues in the 1994 legislature regarding the Board of Regents during Student Senate's open period," Smith said.

Kennedy's address will be the finale of the week.

The first few days the focus will be on state and local politics, Richard Baier, president of Young Democrats, said.

"Well, basically, we requested funds for it, and we knew we wanted to bring a big-name speaker to campus. Instead of just having a day with a big speaker, we decided to have an entire week," Baier said.

"It's not a 'hey, come be a Young Democrat' week. It's not focusing on that," Smith said. "Politics definitely is in our lives, whether we like it or not."

"It (this week) is not to make sure everyone is being politically correct, but to make sure everyone is being politically conscious."

Debate champs face top 8 teams

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The defending national debate champions are kicking off the season in Columbia, S.C., this week.

The team left Monday to compete in its opener at a tournament in South Carolina. The top eight teams in the nation will compete in a round-robin Wednesday that will precede the tournament. The tournament will be Friday through Sunday.

Debate coach Susan Stanfield said she wants the team to do as well as last year's but it is a lot of pressure to put on the team.

"I think our seniors are as good," Stanfield said.

There are five returning, one transfer and six freshman team members, she said.

Taleyna Beadles, senior in journalism and mass communications who is teaming up with Jared Holland, said the South Carolina tournament is important.

"It's real important that we do well at South Carolina because it will establish our credibility," Beadles said. "It will also determine the way the squad interacts. That's so important."

Lincoln Houde, senior in psychology and a transfer from San Diego State University, said his partner, Dave Devereaux, senior in speech, persuaded him to come to K-State. He said he desperately wants to win nationals and coming to K-State was his best chance.

Student teachers rotate among grade levels

System provides variety, offers more experience

TRISHA BENNINGA
Collegian

Student teachers at Lee School are getting a different experience than most of their peers this semester.

This semester the six student teachers assigned to Lee school are rotating between fifth grade, third grade and kindergarten classes, Bart Mann, senior in elementary education, said.

The students work in pairs in each of the three classes. They spend five weeks in the grade of their choice and two weeks in each of the other two. After they have been in all three grades, they choose which one they want to spend the remaining weeks in, Mann said.

Michael Perl, coordinator of laboratory experiences, said this type of a system is commonly used at the secondary-education level, but it has never been used on a regular basis at the elementary level.

He said the first organized system he remembers was four or five years ago at Woodrow Wilson School when students switched cooperating teachers halfway through the semester.

Elizabeth Simons, assistant professor in elementary education, said Lee is one of four Professional Development Schools. The others are Ogden Elementary School, Woodrow Wilson and Amanda Arnold Elementary School. She said student teachers in all of these schools will work with more than one teacher in some way, but it may not be with a rotation system such as Lee is using.

Perl said he thinks the rotation will benefit the students in the future.

"The faculty here at K-State felt, as well as some of the teachers in the district, that it would benefit the students if they had that experience with children on more than one level," Perl said. "Invariably, a student could do student teaching in first grade, and a job opportunity would be at the fifth-grade level, and he'll end up teaching fifth grade when his only experience may have been at first grade.

"If you have experience only at one level it limits you, obviously," he said.

Simons said she thinks the program will give the students a better opportunity to decide what grade level they want to teach.

"One of the things that I think is really good about the rotation is that I think a lot of student teachers feel that they know what grade level they want to teach, but once they have had that experience, I think some of those student teachers may change their minds," she said.

The coordinating teachers, who decided to implement the rotation program, said they see benefits also.

"The students we have this semester teach kindergarten, third grade and fifth grade," Patty McCrary, kindergarten teacher, said. "They're getting lower elementary, they're getting middle elementary, and they're getting upper elementary. When they go out and interview for jobs, they'll have a taste of the three different levels of teaching."

McCrary said she thinks the students will be able to adapt what they learn from each level to whatever level they teach for students of varying development

Fire started by sock, suspected arson

A late-model Pontiac LeMans caught on fire Monday night because of an ignited sock stuck in the gas tank.

Two fire trucks and an ambulance were dispatched to the Corner Place apartment complex, 1026 Bluemont Ave., to extinguish the car, which belongs to Brandy Ralph.

Ralph and passenger Ken Nixon noticed flames and smoke coming from the rear of the car as they pulled out of the apartment complex's parking lot.

"I saw the smoke, and I thought the car was messing up," Ralph said.

Neither Ralph nor Nixon were injured, and the car had minor damage only in the area in which the sock burned.

Ralph said an unidentified ex-boyfriend had been harassing her all day, and she suspects he may be involved with the incident.

"The incident was definitely a case of arson, and it is currently under investigation," Chuck Tannehill, Manhattan Fire Department, said.

Tannehill would not comment on any possible suspects in connection with the incident, and no arrests were made.

Community college tuition researched

TOPEKA (AP) — A Sedgwick County official told a task force studying community-college funding Monday that required out-district tuition payments should be scrapped.

Willie Martin, the county's lobbyist, said the present financing system prevents counties, community colleges and the state from cooperating.

Out-district tuition is money a county pays to a community college outside its borders, $24 a credit hour for every resident who attends that out-of-county college.

Bosnia's factions fail to sign peace plan

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Bosnia's three warring factions had a surprise meeting on a British aircraft carrier in the Adriatic Sea Monday but failed anew in their quest for peace, Croatia's state news agency reported.

The failure apparently scuttled mediators' plans for all sides to sign a peace plan Tuesday in Bosnia's besieged capital, Sarajevo.

Croatia's HINA news agency quoted mediators' representative John Mills as saying there were no steps forward in negotiations aboard the HMS Invincible.

France demands new farm trade agreement

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — France demanded the European Community and the United States rewrite a farm-subsidy agreement considered vital to concluding world trade talks Monday.

France's hard-line position risked creating a deep rift among its EC partners. Most have opposed altering the trans-Atlantic deal and further delaying the end of global trade talks.

British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd warned Monday that reopening the accord could endanger the 116-nation Uruguay Round negotiations, which are designed to drop global barriers to trade.

Health-care reform to be funded by sin taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton honed his health-reform sales pitch before top doctors, in preparation for Wednesday night's unveiling.

Questions remain about the costs and cuts embedded in Clinton's $700-billion plan to ensure health coverage for all Americans while slamming the brakes on medical inflation.

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers left open the possibility Clinton may deliver Wednesday night's address to a joint session of Congress without making final decisions on how to pay for the program.

She said the president wants to raise $105 billion by increasing sin taxes, but has not determined how much to raise cigarette taxes and whether to hit other items such as alcohol.

Homeless program to provide job training

WASHINGTON (AP)— Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros described a new $20-million homeless aid program Monday as a way to circumvent shelters and connect homeless people with the services they need to survive.

The program will have a test run in the District of Columbia next year and be introduced in other U.S. cities afterward, he said.

Homeless people would be put in touch with job training, medical treatment and temporary housing away from shelters so ultimately they can secure a permanent home on their own.

At least 6,700 people are housed in shelters each night in the District of Columbia. Homeless aid advocates said thousands more are turned away for lack of space. District officials said 1,500 other homeless people never go to shelters.

Reverend shot during Sunday church service

NORTH SALEM, Ind. (AP) — A minister who had just finished delivering his sermon was shot to death as the congregation — including his 13-year-old daughter — looked on in horror.

The Rev. Roland D. Phillips Jr. was wrapping up a Sunday morning service when Elizabeth Mayberry, described as his ex-girlfriend, entered the Methodist church, parishioners said.

"She just walked in. He asked her to wait till he finished. And she did wait. Then she shot him," said Shirley Peters, who attended the service.

Phillips, shot three times in the chest, died on the way to the hospital, Lt. Terry Brinker, a sheriff's department representative, said.

Government sued for contract cancellations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon broke its own regulations when it canceled the Navy's A-12 carrier attack jet and demanded the nation's two biggest defense contractors refund $1.4 billion to the government, the companies said Monday in court.

McDonnell Douglas and General Dynamics are suing the government in the U.S. Court of Claims, asserting they're owed $1.5 billion for work on the plane that was to have been the centerpiece for the Navy's aircraft carriers through the turn of the century.

The cancellation on Jan. 7, 1991, culminated months of problems with the A-12 program, Justice Department lawyer Anthony Anikeeff said in opening statements at a trial expected to last two weeks.

The plane was too heavy, too costly, and the program was way behind schedule, Anikeeff said.

REVIEW

New club to feature live music and local artwork

STEFFANY CARREL
Collegian

There's a new kid in town.

The Warehouse, the newest addition to Manhattan's bar scene, officially opens on Wednesday, Sept. 22.

"I'd rather call it a live music hall than a bar or a club," Mitch Ulrich, owner of the Warehouse and Vital Vinyl, said.

The Warehouse occupies the old Sears warehouse at 318 Houston St.

"This place is going to cater to the people who love to drive to Lawrence to see shows," he said. "You won't have to drive there, because we're going to bring all the bands that go to Lawrence here.

"We'll have every kind of music — blues, reggae, everything," he said.

Ulrich said he is planning an incredible opening week, featuring Ed Hall, Truck Stop Love, and Elmo and the Deadbeats.

"It's going to be a vocal-fest extravaganza," he said.

Each show will cost $3 at the door, Ulrich said.

One $10 advance ticket will be offered for admittance to all four shows.

With only a short time before the doors open, Ulrich said the bar still needs a little work, but he is confident it will be ready by Wednesday night.

"Everybody who has been helping has just been busting their butts to get this place open," Ulrich said.

"There's been about a dozen really dedicated people down here, and a lot of people have been down just to help out," he said.

Although the Warehouse will showcase many local musicians, Ulrich said he isn't limiting his open-arms philosophy only to them.

"We wanted to give the artists of Manhattan a chance to express themselves too," he said.

Brian Bays, junior in art, volunteered.

"I heard they were getting people together to paint some murals on the walls down here, so I went and asked Mitch if I could paint," Bays said. "It's just such a big thing to be allowed to paint a mural in a public place."

Bays said there were more than a dozen artists painting 10-by-10 feet murals on the walls of the Warehouse.

Eric Burris, senior in art, said he has painted murals before.

"Mitch asked me and my friend Heather to come down and do a mural, so we did," Burris said. "We decided to do it of Bob Marley."

The murals aren't the only larger-than-life items at the Warehouse.

"The stage is the tallest indoor stage in Manhattan," Ulrich said. "It's almost 4 feet tall. You'll be able to see it from anywhere in the place because it's so high."

"This place is going to be cool," he said. "We're not in Aggieville. There's plenty of parking. Hey, we'll see what happens."

Future +/- bill will disadvantage all

The new plus/minus grading system, which will go into effect during the 1994 fall semester, will do more minus to students than it will do plus.

With the plus/minus system, an A = 4.0, an A- = 3.7, a B+ = 3.3, a B = 3, etc.

During the 1993 spring semester, Student Senate passed a resolution of disapproval concerning the new plus/minus system being studied by Academic Affairs. A couple of months later on May 11, Faculty Senate passed the new plus/minus grading system with a 40 to 29 vote.

For example, a KU student receives 92 percent on all tests and receives an A in the class. A K-Stater would receive an A-. The difference is a student from K-State gets a 3.7, as opposed to a KU 4.0.

Also, the Registrar's office stated all software will have to be modified to accept the new grading scale, and all documents with the old grading scale will have to be redone to list the new grading scale. The cost is estimated in the thousands.

Third, the policy is mandatory, but many professors have stated they will not give students pluses or minuses. Professors say it is already difficult enough to draw distinctions between A and B work.

With the plus/minus system, K-Staters will be put at a disadvantage against students from a majority of other universities, since we are one of a few who have a plus/minus system.

Faculty Senate has passed a policy Student Senate didn't think the students would want. This is a similar situation to the 1.0 GPA guidelines passed by Faculty Senate last week. Faculty Senate needs to listen to students' concerns when making policies affecting GPAs.

Good perfume and tight jeans do not a fashion bug make

The room is dark, Victorian and shot in black and white. She sits at the mirror, blasè. He enters. He speaks.

"I forgive you," he says.

She looks at him in the mirror. He continues, his aristocratic face marked with a sensual indifference.

"I forgive you for letting me hurt you."

The screen goes black, and a well-shot perfume bottle looms in the foreground. This disgusting distillation of counterfeit intellectualism is now available at Dillard's.

How can you be expected to take an advertisement seriously when an actress drops lily petals on her black-clad suitor while his voice-over whines in a monotone, "I could not reach her tormented soul. She eludes me." To which she replies, "No! You cannot possess me!"

Puh-leez. This is torture. Not to mention insulting. Does anybody fall for these commercials?

The two most melodramatic and generally phony categories of commercials try to sell two things: jeans and perfume. Two big industries you'd think could afford some more creative advertising. And I don't think these ads even work.

For example, I know women who own more than 10 pairs of jeans, and they don't buy them because their Bugle Boys will unite the world. They buy them because a.) they look good and b.) they're on sale.

As for myself, my perfume collection looks like the counter at Sak's. I have eight favorite kinds. Never once have I bought perfume because I was inspired by waves crashing on a beach on the TV screen.

As far as I'm concerned, no matter how many times you quote F. Scott Fitzgerald, I will not buy your perfume if I think it smells like sewage. Perhaps I'm not artsy enough to appreciate Calvin Klein's ad people.

Rarely do I see a truly good commercial, like the one in which the polar bears gather together to watch the Northern Lights and have a Coca-Cola. Now that's art. It makes me want to go buy a Coke just out of gratitude for the advertising.

But this psuedo-intellectualism I keep running into is a joke. Soon they'll be showing clips of avant-garde German films interspersed with Kate Moss pouting daintily as she immerses herself in Obsession or Eternity.

And the message behind it all? What valuable meaning can we extract from these blowing clouds and men in loose-fitting jeans running over rugged oceanside rocks? Something along the lines of "Buy our product and be profound/intellectual/culturally superior."

You may laugh. But to check the validity of this argument, I decided to scope out the perfume counters at Dillard's just to make sure. And I was shocked at what I saw.

SARA SMITH

A cute little student sprayed herself with Benetton's Colors and didn't seem any more concerned with race relations. She just waved her wrist at her boyfriend and asked, "Do you like it?"

Narcisse by Chlòe had no effect on the woman who was dousing herself with it a few feet away. She showed no indication she would be running through the streets of Paris anytime soon.

Maybe this is too low-brow, I thought. These are the cheap seats. So, I made a beeline for the Chanel counter.

In case you didn't know, Chanel No. 5 is the classiest substance on earth. It's even more classy than Dom Perignon or Beluga caviar.

The Chanel counter was deserted. I forgot I was in Kansas.

The hottest place to be was the Calvin Klein counter. I didn't go near it because I am somewhat allergic to Escape, the strongest perfume known to humans; so, I had to look from afar. But I could see there were no rolling clouds in the sky, no supermodels, no waves rolling at the customers' feet. It wasn't even in black and white.

I left, but not without peeking in at the jeans department, where people were checking the price tags before brands. I knew it.

If I were Ross Perot and could afford the ad space to run against these commercials, I think I'd address these ad people in language they could understand. I'd shoot it in black and white, of course.

I'd start out with a shot of a TV set, with a black-clad model looking jaded on a couch, flipping through a plethora of perfume and jean commercials. Then a voice in the background would drone, "She tortures my soul. I knew at that moment I must turn the channel or be destroyed."

At that point I would enter and kick in the television. And then I would go shopping for jeans on sale.

▶ GPA POLICY

If you can't make the grade, then it's past time to get a new line

Editor,

I know there is room for a diversity of opinions in the Collegian, which is why I am sure no one will fault me for expressing mine.

How can you argue against the GPA bill!? The arguments you made against it, too, are so weak, I can't believe someone actually thinks they can get away with it.

There are many, many ways to get an education in the world, one of which is college. In college, the yardstick by which good work is measured is the grading system. Fair or unfair, that is the truth. What is wrong with setting standards?

In the "real" world, if you don't make the grade, you get fired, you get fined, you get sent to jail, you get killed.

How long should students be coddled in the belief that if they do less than their best in an institution, they have every right to stay there because they pay their fees?

People go to college to do work, to study, to learn, and yes, they go to college to get graded. If they can't make even straight D's or three F's and an A, there is nothing wrong with doing something else with their lives.

I am no genius, but I am here because I want to be. It is hard enough, as an international student, to have to pay through the nose to get an American education that is supposed to be superior. Now you're complaining the standard is not set low enough. For shame!

How can anybody, especially in an institute of learning, tolerate an unwillingness to learn? If, as the Collegian argued, "the first semester for many is the worst," then why are so few of the drop-outs foreign students, who must have an even harder time? Or maybe all of us are geniuses? Can I say you people are crazy? Is a college education so important that you must have one even if you can't pass the exams? Is it really true that a college degree isn't worth the paper it's printed on? Then why am I paying for it?

I came here to get a good, well-rounded education, and I believe I'm getting it. I sympathized with those who have it tough making the grade, but if it worries them so much, they can get help. I would help. But for goodness sakes, you teach people how to use a fishing rod, or you'll end up teaching them all their lives. That must surely be the most important lesson anyone can learn in college.

The funniest thing about this is I'll be willing to bet those who can't even maintain the GPA requirement of 1.0 can't care less about this ridiculous debate.

▶ WOMEN'S RIGHTS

In this decade, the time has arrived for women to leap ahead

Editor,

I was deeply disturbed when I opened the Sept. 20 Collegian and read a usually enjoyable and insightful column by a fellow conservative, John Hart. As a conservative, Republican woman I felt John Hart sadly missed the mark.

Hart's sweeping generalization of women is both shocking and upsetting at best. Saying women are "nurturing, while men are achievement-orientated" implies that women are not achievers and, therefore, do not seek the same goals as men.

Unfortunately, Hart couldn't be more wrong. It is true some women do choose to take the silent and submissive road, but welcome to the '90s. The 1990s, John. Women and men seek the same goals.

The reason why ultra-feminist movements occur in today's society is because they are part of the backlash against ultra-conservative women-hating views like your own.

Better luck next time, Hart. I'm still out here waiting for a less condescending column.

READOUT: GPA POLICY LACKING

SYSTEMS FAILURE. IT SEEMS THE HEART DRIVE HAS CRASHED.

We live in an age of computers. When I need to do something like prepare a spreadsheet for class or write a column, I head for the trusty computer. It seems to have all the answers.

So when I had trouble understanding the reasons behind Faculty Senate's new Student Expulsion Agenda, I went to the University's computer to see if I could get some answers. I couldn't understand how, in a world of increasing compatibility, the campus I call home had just become less user-friendly.

ME: I am confused, Computer. Can you help me understand the Faculty Senate?

COMPUTER: More data required. Please input.

ME: Any student who gets below a 1.0 GPA in his or her first semester, regardless of how many hours were attempted, can now be dismissed. Larry Erpelding, chair of an ad hoc Committee of Faculty Senate's Academic Affairs, said, "The new policy is designed to help students who have severe problems academically." Please explain this type of service.

COMPUTER: Program not found. ABORT.

ME: They did have reasons for their decision.

COMPUTER: Please input.

ME: For starters, they claim these students tend to clog classes. With dedicated students trying to get into classes, and limited money coming from the state, it is unfair to hold space for students who just don't care about school.

COMPUTER: Faulty pathway. Records indicate the number of students would be minimal, not enough to relieve campus congestion. Additionally, state money is based on student enrollment, and expulsion of students would simply decrease our allocation.

ME: Well, the faculty is worried about K-State's low graduation rate. Right now, only 58 percent of students who begin their studies here actually graduate.

DAN LEWERENZ
GUEST COLUMNIST

COMPUTER: Faulty pathway. Student Expulsion Agenda does not decrease the number of students entering K-State, thus the graduation rate likely would not be affected. Additionally, records indicate that some 13 percent of those who will be dismissed would have stayed to complete their degree. Conclusion: Graduation rates may even fall slightly as a result.

ME: But all these Ph.D.s say it is a good idea because it would give the students a wake-up call. Maybe this policy will help them recognize their academic situation in time to correct it.

COMPUTER: Faulty pathway. The Student Expulsion Agenda provides no early warning. The fifth-week grade reports are usually too early to accurately reflect a student's progress. While the previous system allows for a period of academic probation to warn the student of the situation, under the new policy the first notice a student will get is the grade card, arriving like a bouquet of black roses to signify the death of an academic career.

ME: I didn't know computers were so poetic.

COMPUTER: Affirmative.

ME: So what is a student to do? I think a review board will try to save those with extenuating circumstances.

COMPUTER: Insufficient response. Some problems, while certainly legitimate, are much harder to document before a council of judges than others. If your parents die, that's relatively easy to document, and most people will understand. But many personal problems related to the adjustment to campus life at K-State will be much more difficult to address.

ME: Is there hope, then, that these students may again contribute to K-State and get their education at the school they chose?

COMPUTER: Retry.

ME: But that's part of the problem, Computer. The Student Expulsion Agenda extended the period of time that students must sit out from one semester to two. It will be even harder to get back in school.

COMPUTER: System failure. It seems the heart drive has crashed. While a good service could have prevented this catastrophe, I fear recent events will require K-State to pay dearly.

FIRE DEPARTMENT

Overlooked fire codes to be enforced

Greek housing, bars are focus

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

The Manhattan Fire Department has begun to open a blind eye to its fire codes, becoming more stringent in the way it deals with offenders.

This iron-fist approach, brought on by Fire Chief Larry Reese, will force responsibilities on those who may have been lax in the past.

"We have a new fire chief and a new administration, and they decided that there were things that needed to be looked at more," Donald Francis, Manhattan fire marshal, said

These responsibilities, which predominantly involve Aggieville bars, and K-State fraternities and sororities, include the increased enforcement of such things as maximum occupancies of drinking establishments and living arrangements at greek houses.

"Really none of the codes are being changed," Francis said. "We are just enforcing more codes that were not always enforced before,"

"We are doing more occupancy-load checks in Aggieville and checking fraternities and sororities for things such as adequate smoke detectors."

Francis, who also started his job in February, said a lack of smoke detectors is not the only unaddressed problem within the K-State greek system.

"We have problems with people wanting to build beds but not leaving enough room to get out in case of a fire," he said.

To discuss and understand what changes are to be made, the fire department will meet with presidents and chapter advisers from greek houses at 6:30 p.m. Thursday in Union 212.

"The Manhattan Fire Department called and asked if I could set up a meeting," Barb Robel, adviser of greek affairs, said. "This will be an opportunity for the fire department to talk with everyone."

FIRE CODE MEETING
■ The fire department will meet with presidents and chapter advisers from greek houses at 6:30 p.m. Thursday in Union 212.

Robel said she does not know what the fire department will say or request.

K-State fraternities and sororities are not, however, alone in the department's examinations. Aggieville bars are also being placed under the microscope for violations of a different kind.

"The fire marshals came in during the first week of school and rechecked our occupancy limits and inspected us," Rob Goode, owner of Auntie Mae's Parlor in Aggieville, said.

"Other than that I haven't heard very much except that they are holding a meeting on Sept. 30 for bar owners."

Goode, who said Auntie Mae's has a maximum occupancy of 113, does not count heads. Goode said he sometimes finds the restrictions a little unreasonable.

"If you add things up, we have seating, with booths and tables, for 85 to 90 people. That leaves room for around 13 to stand up. I feel like that is a little ridiculous."

Goode said he feels there haven't been many problems with Aggieville bars.

"I feel like the bar owners in Aggieville are responsible business owners. I mean, I'm not out to pack a lot of people into my bar," he said.

"All of the sudden they are cracking down. I guess my philosophy is, if it's not broken, don't fix it."

CITY

Water meter reading resumes after flooding

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The city will resume reading water meters after a two-month suspension during summer floods.

Some areas could not be reached during the past two months because the meter readers were needed to help in flood-related activities, Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said.

"We had people from all departments working around the clock on flood-related assignments, and that included meter readers," he said.

The bills have been estimated for the past two months based on use for the previous three months. Credits and charges will be issued based on the actual readings of the meters.

Students, who just had their water connected within the past two months, had their bills estimated from average water use in similar units, McCallum said.

"We think the billing should be pretty close to the estimates," City Manager Jim Pearson said. "People haven't been doing heavy outside watering that would throw the estimates off."

The meters will be read in three cycles, starting with the area south of Poyntz Avenue. The cycles will take about a month to complete, McCallum said.

The first revised bills will be issued Sept. 29.

Rotation program meets changing needs and abilities.

Susan Wendland, fifth-grade teacher, said she also thinks the rotation will help the students in succeeding later.

"I think it's going to be a more fulfilling experience than it was previously because the chances of going and getting a job in the grade level that they do the student teaching in is pretty slim," she said.

Cindy Norris, third-grade teacher, said he program will give the students a well-rounded view of the various grade levels, which will benefit them as they interview for jobs.

The student teachers said they also see advantages.

"If you go in and observe, I don't think you can really get a feel for what a third grade is like," Lisa Bonebrake, senior in elementary education, said. "I'm going to have my feet wet in different grades."

Becki Hubin, senior in elementary education, said she thinks the experience will be advantageous to the educational system in general.

"I think it's important to mention that everyone knows that education is changing and we are trying to make it better and better all the time," she said. "We're trying to get better experience for student teachers so that experience will go into the school systems."

Mann said he thinks the wide range of experience will give them an advantage when looking for jobs.

"Most student teachers only get a chance to do one grade level for a whole period, and so I think this is really going to make us an asset to school districts," he said.

Lowery boots Chiefs to win over Broncos

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Joe Montana's home debut as a Kansas City Chief was upstaged Monday night by a couple of other golden oldies — Nick Lowery and Marcus Allen.

Lowery, a 37-year-old, kicked five field goals, and a Kansas City defense led by Derrick Thomas and Darren Mickell shut down John Elway and Denver as the Chiefs beat the Broncos 15-7, a score typical of a Kansas City game in the pre-Montana days.

That was enough to avoid the last-minute heroics Elway has pulled off four years in a row against the Chiefs — he managed a 2-yard TD pass to Vance Johnson with 1:24 remaining for the only touchdown of the game.

Meanwhile, the old guys were performing for the Chiefs and penalty flags were flying — 24 in all for the two teams.

Allen, 33, gained 91 yards in 17 carries, his best regular-season game since 1988.

Montana avoided enough mistakes to win his second game without a loss as a Chief — he sat out last week's 30-0 loss in Houston with a sore wrist.

He missed open receivers several times, but finished 21 of 36 for 273 yards, six to Willie Davis for 139 yards.

But Lowery got the points — field goals of 34, 41, 52 and 44 yards in the first half and 20 yards in the fourth quarter. Typically, a Denver penalty for too many men on the field gave the Chiefs three points — it moved Lowery into position for the 52-yarder after Kansas City had already punted.

It was the first loss for the Broncos after two victories and a game totally unworthy of such stars as Montana, Allen and Elway.

The first AFC West meeting of the two premier quarterbacks was a dreadful contest, marred by 24 penalties for 180 yards between the two teams.

Gary Zimmerman, the Broncos' new left tackle, was called for three false starts, and the Chiefs were called three times for roughing Elway.

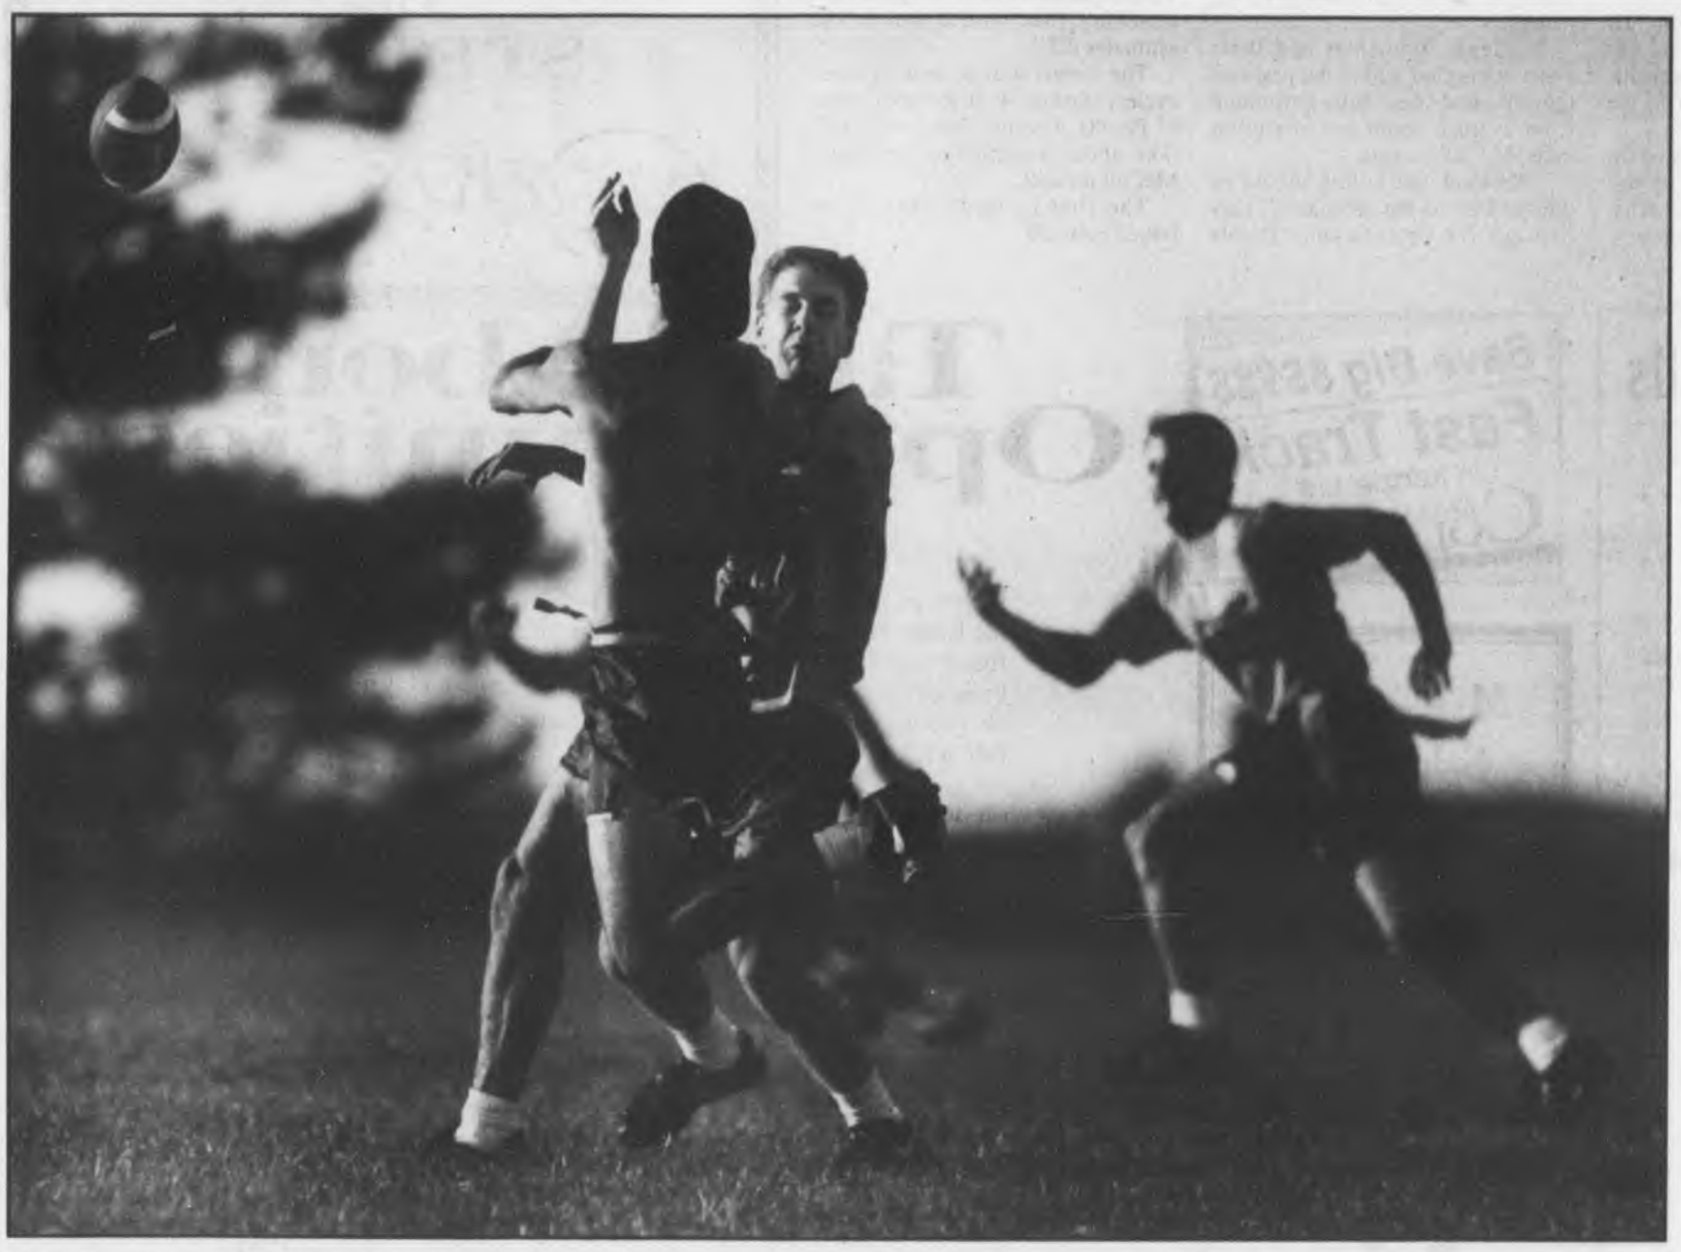
Elway, under pressure all night, was 28 of 45 for 300 yards.

The game marked the first regular-season victory for Montana over Elway, against whom he had been 0-3. Montana did lead San Francisco to a 55-10 triumph over Denver and Elway in the 1990 Super Bowl.

It was only the third victory in 12 games against Denver for Kansas City coach Marty Schottenheimer, who has been bedeviled over the years with the Chiefs and Browns by Elway's last-minute comebacks.

Montana didn't start brilliantly, but with the help of Ron Dickerson's 44-yard return of the opening kickoff, the Chiefs got off to a 3-0 lead.

Dickerson's return put the Chiefs at the Denver 48, and after a holding penalty on Ricky Siglar, Montana found Willie Davis for 35 yards to the Broncos 23.



But he threw wide to Tim Barnett, open on the goal line, and the Chiefs settled for Lowery's 34-yard field goal.

Lowery's final field goal came at the end of an 84-yard drive highlighted by a 29-yard pass from Montana to J.J. Birden.

It marked the fourth time in Lowery's career that he kicked five field goals in a game.

Two onside kicks went out of bounds, and Kansas City ran out the clock.

Chad Ross, junior in wildlife biology and running back for the Phi Gamma Delta intramural flag football team, clashes with Alex Dill, freshman in architecture and defensive rusher for the Delta Upsilon intramural flag football team, while trying to catch a pass Monday evening at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. The Fijis and the DUs were scrimmaging against each other.

Bears pick up former Chiefs LB

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Percy Snow, a former starting linebacker for the Kansas City Chiefs, has signed as a free agent with the Chicago Bears.

Snow will fill the roster spot of Jim Morrissey, who was released Monday. Morrissey was one of nine Bears remaining from the 1985 Super Bowl championship team.

Snow started 14 games as a Kansas City Chiefs rookie in 1990 but missed all of the next season with an ankle injury and played mainly as a backup last year.

He was cut by the Chiefs last month.

The former No. 1 draft pick won the Lombardi and Butkus awards while at Michigan State.

"We feel all Percy needs is a change of scenery, and hopefully he'll return to his college form," defensive coordinator Bob Slowik said.

Johnson and Gildon net Big 8 honors

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Colorado wide receiver Charles Johnson caught eight passes for 172 yards in a losing effort Saturday and was named the Big Eight Conference's offensive player of the week Monday.

Charles Johnson

Johnson, whose catches were good for seven first downs in Colorado's 41-37 loss to Stanford, was the unanimous choice for the weekly award. He leads the conference with an average of six receptions per game and receiving yards per game at 127.33.

Defensive end Jason Gildon of Oklahoma State was named the defensive player of the week after his sack of the Tulsa quarterback forced a fumble in the closing seconds and secured a 16-10 victory for the Cowboys.

Jason Gildon

Gildon, a unanimous selection for the award, had eight tackles in the game, including three quarterback sacks. His performance moved him to No. 1 for career sacks at Oklahoma State with 34.

Missouri regroups in wake of 73-0 drubbing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Missouri, winless since 1981 against non-conference road teams, maybe was overconfident before Saturday's 73-0 drubbing at No. 14 Texas A&M, Coach Bob Stull said.

The Tigers, who haven't had a winning season since 1983, had just opened their schedule with a convincing home victory over Illinois and "really felt very good about ourselves," Stull said.

"But the one thing I tried to caution them on was that A&M was a team that had not lost in two years in the regular season and had just been embarrassed at Oklahoma the week before."

In the wake of the second-worst battering in school history, players and coaches alike will do plenty of soul-searching before Saturday's trip to West Virginia.

"It was definitely one real bad day. But I still believe we have a good team," Stull said. "It shakes your confidence when things like that happen. But I believe in our team and the guys we have."

Stull admitted when the carnage began to unfold, his players stopped believing in each other.

"All of a sudden nobody believes in the guy next to him," Stull said.

It was particularly noticeable after quarterback Jeff Handy got sacked once, he said.

"All of a sudden, he doesn't get himself set, doesn't feel he has security up front," Stull said. "I don't feel any different about our team. But it was probably one of the longest days of our life, that's for sure."

Nobody can accuse No. 13 Colorado of setting up a cream-puff schedule. A week after losing a controversial 41-37 decision at Stanford, the Buffs will be host to No. 3 Miami. When asked if the Stanford receiver got his feet down in the end zone before dropping the winning touchdown pass with five seconds to play, Coach Bill McCartney was the diplomat.

"It's going to go down that way in history," he said. "I'm forbidden to comment on officials' calls. So, I just have to accept what happened."

That officiating crew was half Big Eight and half Pac-10. But the Miami game Saturday will be worked by a full Big East team.

"You just have to depend on the competence and integrity of the guys who wear the stripes," McCartney said.

"They're bright, conscientious guys who want to do what's right for the kids. That's what every coach has to believe."

Do officials vary from conference to conference in aptitude and consistency?

"Yes," McCartney said.

Could he elaborate?

"I think I'd be doing a disservice if I elaborated on that."

Another team having "one real bad day" was Kansas. The Jayhawks are 1-3 after losing 41-16 at home to Utah.

Coach Glen Mason is glad to have an off-week to try to get things straightened out.

"It's a great break for us," Mason said. "We need some time. We need some time to regroup and find some of the answers that are being asked right now. I'm glad I've got today to spent all my time and try to figure out what direction we're taking rather than jump in waist deep and get ready to play another opponent."

▶CHARGES ON BOYCE DROPPED

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Boulder police on Monday dropped obstruction charges against Colorado basketball star Donnie Boyce, saying there was no evidence he was involved in drug activities as previously suspected.

Boyce, 20, CU's all-Big Eight guard last season and the team's leading scorer the past two seasons, was arrested Sept. 5 on suspicion of obstructing a governmental operation.

Police "determined there is no evidence that Mr. Boyce was involved in any drug activity. Mr. Boyce was not arrested on any drug-related charges relating to the incident. The matter is considered closed. It is regrettable the matter generated such publicity and speculation," the statement said.

In August, Boyce, a junior from Maywood, Ill., considered leaving Colorado to play basketball at Michigan. He ended up deciding to return to Boulder.

▶DREAM TEAM NOT INVITED

NEW YORK (AP) — At next summer's world championships in Toronto, the U.S. basketball team will not include a single player from the squad that rolled to a gold medal in the 1992 Olympics.

And that's just fine with Magic Johnson.

"All these guys deserve it," he said. "It will be super team, but not good enough to beat our Barcelona team."

A selection committee chose 10 NBA players for the competition next Aug. 4-14: Larry Johnson and Alonzo Mourning of Charlotte, Orlando's Shaquille O'Neal, Derrick Coleman of New Jersey, Dominique Wilkins of Atlanta, Joe Dumars of Detroit, Mark Price of Cleveland, Miami's Steve Smith, Dan Majerle of Phoenix and Tim Hardaway of Golden State.

The U.S. team will be coached by Don Nelson of Golden State, with one pro and two college assistants: Don Chaney of the Detroit Pistons, Xavier's Pete Gillen and Utah's Rick Majerus.

Album brings back funky disco beat

HAROLD RING

Grab the loved ones and run for the hills. Disco is on the loose again.

The band My Life with the Thrill Kill Kult has released its fourth album, "13 Above the Night," and with it the band has jumped on the disco-revival bandwagon. It was a surprise John Travolta wasn't on the album jacket.

The album, "13 Above the Night," is a disco album. It has all the funky grooves from the '70s that should have been buried with the platform shoes and bell-bottom pants.

This album could have featured tracks on a K-Tel record. The song "Electrical Soul Wish" is right up there with "Stayin' Alive" by the Bee Gees.

Along with disco, the band includes elements of industrial, rave and techno. The release of this album should serve as fair warning to all the people out there who don't believe disco is making a comeback.

The album has 13 songs and some nicely done jacket art. The album cover could be deceiving because it has a pentagram on it. Don't be fooled. It's a disco album.

On the plus side the production on the album is tight. The lyrics can be clearly heard, and the songs are well mixed.

Lydia Lunch, an old-time punk icon, guest sings some of the songs on the album. Unfortunately, her best work was on Sonic Youth's "Death Valley '69" in the middle '80s.

Disco is dead and should stay dead. Fans of dancing all night and disco parties should get plenty of mileage out of this album. Old fans of My Life with the Thrill Kill Kult will probably like it too.

Beavis and Butt-Head addict confesses problem

Dear Cassandra,

I have this problem, see. And you're the only one that can help me, see. So give me some of your advice, okay?

I can't stop watching Beavis and Butt-Head, see. And it's really freaking me out, see. Every day I watch them on MTV, and I even tape each episode so I can watch them more.

On your page the other day, I read your Beavis and Butt-Head quote, and I thought it was really cool, see. You know ... huh, huh — huh, huh, huh.

So, do I have a problem or what Cassandra? You gotta tell me so I don't feel like I suck, see.

All right, cool.

Signed,
Beavis and Butt-Head Addict

Dear 12-Step Program Candidate,

Uh-huh. This is a real person. Sure.

But I'll humor you anyway.

I hear they've got a Beavis and Butt-Head Addicts Anonymous program somewhere here on campus. You should probably go light your butt on fire and see who comes to find you. Chances are, that'll be the right circle of folks for you.

If you want to try to wean yourself off of Beavis and Butt-Head, I would suggest trying to watch Ren and Stimpy. Of course, that may be too advanced for your B-and-B intoxicated brain.

You could try anyway. But turn away from the television if you smell anything burning.

Huh, huh — huh, huh, huh. You know. ... Fire! Fire! Fire!

talking with their HANDS

Sign language club links hearing and deaf students

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

A club at K-State has members who never have to use their mouths to speak.

Organized several years ago, the Talking Hands Club gives people a chance to communicate and practice their sign-language skills with others who sign.

Tim Anderson, junior in sociology, is a member who learned sign language to communicate with his wife, Kim, who is deaf.

"The club serves as more of a social group. People who know sign language can get together to practice and keep up their skills," Anderson said.

Kim Anderson, a second-year graduate student in adult and continuing education, has been a member for three years.

"I heard about it on campus and joined because it's a great way to meet other people who speak sign language. It's not an educational club, but it might offer a chance to learn a little about deaf culture," Kim Anderson said.

Manhattan residents and K-State students are welcome to join.

"It gives deaf people in the community a chance to communicate on their own terms, instead of having to overcome barriers," Kim Anderson said.

During their first meeting, the club established a rule that only sign language could be spoken at the gatherings, she said.

"We're emphasizing no-voicing in the club. It's good for the hearing members because they can learn more," Kim Anderson said.

"For the deaf, when we're in the club we can be ourselves and use our own communication," she said.

The club meets bimonthly and is free for anyone.

"We've got a bunch of people who know sign but not all on the same level. Some are fluent, and some are just starting out," Tim Anderson said.

Several classes are offered through the University and the Continuing Education program, he said.

The club has no president, and individual members volunteer to be hosts for meetings.

Cookouts, games and rollerskating are a few of the activities the club is planning.

Members are discussing plans for a presentation on technical devices the deaf use during daily life, Tim Anderson said.

"We're also talking about having a costume party for Halloween and singing carols at Christmas," he said.

Kim Anderson said she encourages new members to come but to be willing to accept the club's no-voicing rule.

REVIEW

Novel weaves characters' lives into believable fantasy

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

"In a universe of ambiguity, this kind of certainty comes only once, and never again, no matter how many times you live."

Robert Kincaid, a character in Robert James Waller's "The Bridges of Madison County," could not have better captured the theme behind this novel.

This novel takes one's attention hostage, allowing worries to simply fall away as it transports the reader to the world created by Robert and Francesca Johnson.

Robert Kincaid, world wanderer, free spirit and photographer, could not have better captured in words the feelings he and Johnson shared.

The two's diverse worlds collided by chance when Robert, making his way through the heat and dust of Iowa farmland, happened upon the Johnson place in search of one of the six bridges of Madison county.

Kincaid, master of manipulating different prisms of light and capturing the essence of a beautiful moment, feels he is the last of a dying breed.

"I'm one of the last cowboys," he said. "My job gives me free range of a sort. As much as you can find nowadays. I'm not sad about it. Maybe a little wistful, I guess."

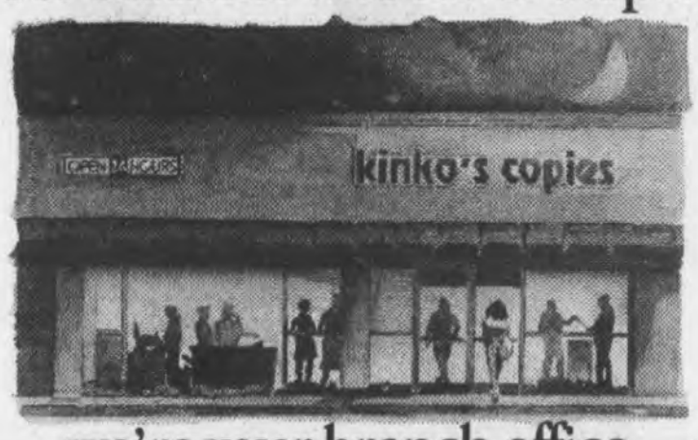
Francesca, 45, is a wife and mother, far removed from from the life she dreamed of in pre-World War II Italy. She is stifled by societal expectations and an unadventurous husband.

"What was the barrier to freedom that had been erected out here? Why the walls and the fences preventing open, natural relationships between men and women?" she asked. "Why the lack of intimacy, the absence of eroticism?"

The love story is intricately, passionately and suspensefully woven. It is tender, and beautiful, like the prisms of light Kincaid captures daily. It is the moments and feelings crystallized, offering proof of the ultimate love to the hopeless romantic in each of us.

"Loving him was — it sounded almost trite to her now, given the attention paid to such matters over the last two decades — spiritual. It was spiritual, but it wasn't trite."

The sex scenes elevate language use to a new dimension. They are amazingly tastefully written, elevating love and passion and never seeming cheap. The words transform sex into something of purity and sharing.



The descriptive word usage leaps from the page straight into the soul. This novel can make the reader believe in fantasy.

biggest tournament, but supposedly the best teams will be there — so, you don't have a lot of the fluff," Houde said. "I want to win every tournament including this one."

Devereaux said South Carolina is a more exclusive tournament. He said more than 50 teams will compete, including Emporia State and the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

John Burtis, assistant professor of speech and director of forensics, said South Carolina is a good opener, and it would be a nice win, but it is not going to determine how the team does for the rest of the season.

The forensics team, which includes forensics and debate as a team, has been one of the nation's top four teams for the past four years.

"We are the premiere forensics team in Kansas and in the Big Eight," Burtis said.

U.N. troops drawn into Somalian war

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — American soldiers aboard a helicopter gunship shot and killed two Somalis armed with rocket-propelled grenades Monday after a Pakistani peacekeeper was wounded in a militia attack on U.N. forces.

The U.N. troops, almost 27,000 soldiers from 28 countries, were sent to help Somalia recover from its famine and civil war. They have gotten caught up in a battle with the gunmen of fugitive militia chief Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

Several women were injured Monday when rioting erupted among about 400 Somalis outside a food-distribution center in Mogadishu. The women were cut and scratched on barbed wire barricades when the crowd surged forward amid rumors that food was running out.

The wounded Pakistani soldier was a demolitions man who was inspecting a mine on October 21 Road when his unit came under fire. Capt. Tim McDavitt, a U.N. spokesman, said the Pakistani's wounds were not serious. October 21 Road in northern Mogadishu is a frequent battleground.

After the shooting, the crew of an American Cobra helicopter spotted two Somali militiamen with rocket-propelled grenades and opened fire on them, McDavitt said. He said both men were killed.

The fighting erupted after a night of sporadic battles, with militiamen firing mortars and U.N. helicopters replying with rockets and 20mm cannon fire.

U.N. officials have issued a warrant for Aidid's arrest, blaming him for attacks that have killed 50 peace-keeping troops since May.

Controversy surrounds speakers

Christian groups offer alternatives to gangs and drugs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — A plan to bring motivational speakers, sponsored by a coalition of Christian groups, to area schools has drawn some objection.

Wichita public-school officials said they have been assured the speakers for "Youth Crisis Awareness Week" won't cross the constitutional line separating church and state when they appear at 65 schools the week of Sept. 28.

The speakers won't talk about religion, but rather ways to turn Wichita's teens away from gangs, drugs, alcohol, premarital sex and other destructive choices, school officials said.

They will be allowed to tell students about after-school, Christian-centered events.

Steven Green, the legal counsel for the Washington-based Americans United for Separation of Church and State, said he disagreed with the school officials.

In a letter to Wichita school Superintendent Larry Vaughn, Green said: "Neutrality, in the context of public schools, is a proactive responsibility requiring administrators to take affirmative actions to ensure that schools are not assisting or encouraging religion in any way. Quite clearly ... the school district's facilitation of these programs is unconstitutional."

"I have some real doubts about what's being done," said Jim Lawing, a Wichita attorney and member of the ACLU's Kansas board of directors.

"At the same time, there's an awful lot of leeway that the Supreme Court has been giving these sorts of proceedings. So, I wouldn't want to say out of pocket that they're doing anything wrong," he said.

Some school officials said the ethical and moral values taught in the seminars will be good for students.

"To the extent that we can deliver positive messages to kids, and have them be attentive, I'd have to be for that," Barbara Mohney, Southeast High principal, said.

Joseph Jennings, a Youth Crisis Awareness Week speaker, appeared at a Southeast High School assembly last year. Mohney said Jennings steered clear of a Christian message that day, and students listened.

"That often doesn't happen when you put that many kids in an auditorium for a presentation," Mohney said.

Cheryl Hurley, organizer of the week of activities, said the event had its beginning a year ago when Christian author and speaker Bill Sanders visited Wichita. Sanders, who spoke to students at Heights High School, was disturbed at Wichita's evolving teen-age gang and violence problem.

"He was just blown away," said Hurley, director of the High School Ministry Network in Wichita. "He said that he and four friends had been looking for a city to just come in and blitz and try to make a difference."

She said speakers will be careful to keep Christianity out of their school talks. Her purpose, she said, is to help children, not convert them.

"We have no hidden agendas," Hurley said.

During the week of Sept. 28, Sanders, Jennings, and five other speakers from outside Kansas, each of them accompanied by a musician, will lead at least 73 assemblies.

They will appear at every Wichita public middle school and high school, as well as Wichita Catholic and other parochial schools, and public schools in districts near the city.

On Sept. 29, the speakers will appear at seven Wichita churches.

Bomb threat clears Union

NICOLLE FOLSOM

The K-State Union was evacuated shortly before 3 p.m. yesterday when Jack Sills, Union director, received a phone call from K-State Police stating there was a possible bomb threat at the Union.

Campus police were contacted by phone at 2:49 p.m. about the possibility of a bomb in the Union that would go off at 3 p.m., Richard Herrman, campus police investigator, said.

Union employees and students were evacuated by intercom and campus police immediately after Sills received the call.

"A police officer came up to me and told me, and shortly after they announced it on the intercom," Linda Houser, Union cashier said.

Stephen Corkill, senior in electrical engineering, said during evacuation people were told to leave through the south doors, but the intercom message did not specify why.

After evacuation, the building was searched by campus police with the help of Union management. Recreation areas, loading docks and storage areas were checked before the search was called off, Herrman said.

Union employees were allowed back into the building at about 3:25 p.m., and students got to enter the Union about 10 minutes later.

Sills said he believes the threat was a prank, but the Union had to take precautions to make sure things were safe.

Campus police taped the phone call of the threat, but there are no leads to the caller yet, Herrman said.

A similar bomb threat was directed to the Union more than 15 years ago, he said.

Sidewalk changes spark debate at city meeting

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Heated debate about the Americans With Disabilities Act during provoked a dispute between Manhattan Mayor Roger Maughmer and concerned citizens at the City Commission meeting Tuesday night.

"You can just go to hell," Paul Palenske, a disabled Manhattan resident who ran for City Commission in March, said following a line of questioning with the mayor.

"I'll accept your criticism," Maughmer said in response.

The dispute began when Palenske asked the commission about the qualifications of Ebert and Associates, the architectural firm chosen for ADA improvements in Manhattan.

Palenske said he doesn't want to see the city get sued. He said improvements need to be done right the first time.

Von O'Briant, Manhattan resident, said having an expert is important because if a sidewalk isn't cut at a certain angle, it is difficult to maneuver a wheelchair.

Maughmer said the city is confident the architecture firm has the ability to make the necessary improvements.

"They submitted references, and we checked them and were able to confirm them," Maughmer said.

City Manager Jim Pearson said he has a great deal of confidence in the firm.

Mike Mayo, architect with Ebert and Associates, said his company intends to make sure the improvements comply with ADA requirements and, in some cases, exceed them.

In other business, Meryl Wilson, president of the Unified School District 383 school board, discussed the Oct. 5 bond-issue election concerning a $28-million improvement renovation.

Overcrowded and inadequately equipped classrooms are the main reason for the proposal, Wilson said.

The bond-issue election will determine the fate of the proposal, which would build two middle schools, one elementary school and an indoor swimming pool.

The commissioners unofficially said they support the bond-issue election.

Yeltsin takes biggest gamble

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — After wooing army support, demoting rebellious officials and creating new alliances, Boris Yeltsin took the biggest gamble of his career Tuesday by summarily kicking his enemies from office.

His decree dissolving the legislature and calling elections to a new parliament was an act of desperation. But it was also a bold act, taken with strong faith in his popular support.

Yeltsin took the act after two fruitless years of negotiating, cajoling and threatening Communist holdovers and former allies who oppose his tough political style as much as his policies. He took it in the belief that he himself is Russia's best hope for democracy, even if that means delaying it.

"As a guarantor of the security of our state, I am duty-bound to propose a way out of this deadlock, I am duty-bound to break this vicious circle," Yeltsin said in announcing his order.

The president and his aides left little to chance, right down to the prerecorded TV speech during which he took a sip of tea — possibly to counter his image as a boozer.

In the past three weeks, Yeltsin fired off decrees that undermined and distracted his opponents, starting with one Sept. 1 suspending Vice President Alexander Rutskoi, a rabid opponent who is first in line to the presidency.

While dressing it as a crackdown on corruption — he also suspended a leading reformist supporter — Yeltsin used the order to finally eject Rutskoi from his Kremlin office.

Russians grapple for political power

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Two K-State professors offered their opinions Tuesday about the turn of events in Russia.

Dale Herspring, head of the political science department, lived in Moscow and worked with the foreign service for 25 years.

Herspring said the situation is an 18-month battle between Yeltsin and the communist Parliament.

"Everything Yeltsin tries to do — it has been dismantled every time by Parliament," Herspring said. "For Yeltsin to move on, he has to slam-dunk the opposition."

The big question now, Herspring said, is what position the Russian army will take.

"My own suspicion is the army will back Yeltsin," Herspring said. "In my own opinion, Yeltsin will get away with it."

Herspring, who has written books on the Russian army, said the senior army officers refuse to get involved with politics.

"But realize if this comes to war, it will be a bloodbath."

Herspring said the United States' two options are to either avoid involvement or provide aid.

"If we want Mr. Yeltsin in power, we need to provide to keep him," Herspring said.

John Daly, associate professor of history, said the basic problem is the Parliament is still following the communist constitution.

"What you have are two opponents who claim legal act,"

College tuitions continue to increase

Average costs rise 6 percent at public universities

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The cost of higher education continues to outpace income, inflation and financial aid this fall, even as colleges and universities slash services, according to the College Board.

The average tuition, room and board climbed 6 percent to $6,207 at four-year public universities and 5 percent to $15,818 at four-year private colleges, the College Board reported in a survey being released Wednesday.

The increases were about the same, or slightly less, than last year's, as competition sharpened for the dwindling number of potential students.

"Colleges have simply come to realize that the very markets they wish to serve could not afford them at the rate of increase they were following," said David L. Warren, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

"People are dropping out," said Tchiyuka Cornelius, a student at City University of New York and president of the U.S. Student Association. "There are people who want to go to college but just can't afford to."

While inflation was 2.8 percent from last fall to this fall, the average tuition and fees at four-year private universities and colleges rose 6 percent to $11,025; room and board brought the total to $15,818. The average cost of two-year private junior colleges went up 7 percent, to $6,175.

Public university tuition rose 8 percent, to $2,527, after two years of double-digit increases fueled primarily by state budget shortfalls; room and board boosted the price to $6,207. The average cost of community and public junior colleges jumped 10 percent for the third straight year, to $1,229.

"The fiscal crisis in the states is not over," said James Appleberry, president of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities. "But it's certainly easing up a bit."

Still, 38 percent of public universities have put off making repairs to buildings, 30 percent have capped enrollment, 31 percent have cut the number of courses they offer and 45 percent have left full-time faculty positions unfilled, the association said.

"Public institutions continue to be under great pressure to increase tuition, but I think they're also under great political pressure to

Reporter refuses to give source's name

PARSONS (AP)—A reporter with The Parsons Sun said he was told he faces jail or fines if he continues to refuse to answer questions about the source of a criminal-history document he obtained.

The reporter, Ray Nolting, refused Tuesday during an inquisition in Labette County District Court to reveal his source because he had promised the source anonymity.

Nolting obtained the document as part of an investigation by The Parsons Sun into the handling of certain court cases by the county attorney's office. No stories have been written with information from the document.

FDA to approve drug for AIDS therapy

ROCKVILLE, Md. (AP) — A Food and Drug Administration advisory committee recommends approval of ddC as a single-drug therapy against AIDS.

The drug, marketed under the brand name HIVID by Hoffmann-LaRoche Inc., of Nutley, N.J., had been approved previously used in combination with another AIDS drug.

The committee also voted to remove HIVID from a conditional approval under which it had been authorized for use in combination with AZT, or zidovudine.

Judge denies plea from former Kansan

ARDMORE, Okla. (AP) — A judge refused Tuesday to allow a former Kansas man to withdraw the plea of no contest he entered last month in the death of a flower shop owner.

District Judge Thomas Walker last month sentenced Gregg Braun, formerly of Garden City, to death for the 1989 murder of Gwendolyn Sue Miller in Ardmore.

Braun also is serving three life sentences for the deaths of store clerks in Kansas and New Mexico and is charged in the death of a man from Pampa, Texas.

Two other women were wounded in the robbery of the Oklahoma flower shop. Braun also received two consecutive life sentences and two consecutive 25-year sentences in the crime.

If Braun had been allowed to withdraw the plea, he would have been permitted to go before a jury on the Oklahoma charges.

Congress removes ban on political activity

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House gave final congressional approval Tuesday to legislation lifting many of the restrictions on political activity imposed by law on federal employees since 1939.

A 339-85 vote sent the bill to President Clinton, who had sought repeal of major sections of the Hatch Act and is expected to quickly sign the measure into law. It would permit most of the government's 3 million workers to take part in the mechanics of partisan politics.

The Senate acted on the legislation earlier in the year, adopting a series of Republican amendments that exclude from the bill law enforcement and national-security agencies of the federal government, totaling about 85,000 workers.

Under the provisions of the bill, federal employees would be entitled to hold office in a political party, solicit political contributions for employee organizations only, distribute campaign literature and take part in a full range of political activities on their own time.

Oregon earthquake measures 5.4 — 5.7

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore.(AP) — Crews cleared earthquake debris of bricks and broken glass from streets and sidewalks Tuesday, and half-eaten meals still sat on restaurant tables where diners had fled hours earlier.

Geologists warned that buildings damaged by Monday's earthquake could collapse as aftershocks rumbled through the area.

The earthquake, which struck at 8:29 p.m. Monday, was upgraded Tuesday from 5.4 to 5.7 on the Richter scale by the U.S. Geological Survey in Menlo Park, Calif. It was followed within three hours by aftershocks measuring 5.5 and 4.8 on the scale.

The earthquake was felt more than 200 miles to the north, in Salem, and more than 100 miles to the south, in Redding, Calif. No significant damage was reported in Northern California.

Bosnian president reports progress

SARAJEVO (AP) — Bosnia's Muslim President Alija Izetbegovic reported progress Tuesday on a key issue blocking a peace agreement: his demand for giving a Muslim mini-state secure access to the sea.

Izetbegovic commented after returning to Sarajevo from a summit of leaders of the country's three warring factions on a British warship in the Adriatic Sea. His remarks also signaled some movement on another issue — the division of eastern Bosnia.

Navy ends prosecution in Tailhook scandal

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Two years after dozens of drunken military aviators forced women down gauntlets at a Las Vegas convention, pinching and fondling them and ripping some of their clothing, no one has gone on trial.

In a surprise turnaround Monday, the Navy dropped its prosecution of the the first naval officer scheduled to go to trial, raising doubts about the strength of four other pending courts-martial in the sexual-harassment scandal.

Vice Adm. J. Paul Reason, the senior officer deciding who gets prosecuted for misconduct at the 1991 Tailhook Association naval aviators' convention, withdrew the single charge of conduct unbecoming an officer against Lt. Cole V. Cowden, based on a review of the case.

Shuttle crew prepares for Hubble mission

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Discovery's astronauts headed for the first shuttle landing in the Florida darkness today after completing a dress rehearsal for the Hubble Space Telescope repair mission.

Mission Control awakened the five-astronaut crew late Monday to the Beach Boys' "Surfin' Safari" in honor of astronaut and surfing buff James Newman and Discovery's planned return to Kennedy Space Center before daybreak.

The astronauts achieved all their goals on the nine-day mission: the release of an experimental communications satellite; the release and capture six days later of an orbiting ultraviolet telescope; and a seven-hour spacewalk that helped NASA prepare for the Hubble mission.

Black Pan-Hel helps freshmen

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Members of K-State's black sororities and fraternities are doing their part to educate and retain minority students through a variety of programs and community service projects.

Shanta Bailey, senior in psychology and member of Alpha Kappa Alpha, said the Black Pan-Hellenic Council, which oversees the activities of the eight historically black sororities and fraternities, has implemented a Peer Mentor program to help minority students to adjust to college life.

The program's goals are to retain minority freshmen by offering tutorial assistance, budgeting advice and information about general rules at K-State, she said.

"If they have problems, they'll know who to talk to. If they have financial aid, they'll know where to go," Bailey said. "We want to make sure they know there's someone out there that cares about them here at K-State."

K-State's black fraternities are Alpha Phi Alpha, Phi Beta Sigma, Kappa Alpha Psi and Omega Psi Phi. The sororities are Sigma Gamma Rho, Delta Sigma Theta, Alpha Kappa Alpha and Zeta Phi Beta.

With the formation of Sigma Gamma Rho in 1991, the Black Pan-Hellenic Council was able to join the national chapter in 1992.

Shirlyn Henry Brown, coordinator of the Black Pan-Hellenic Council, said the goals of the council are to educate and uplift the African American race and to enhance and enlighten the campus and the surrounding communities.

"Their primary focus is to encourage high scholastic achievement," Brown said.

She said the organizations are considered honoraries because students must have attended an institution for a certain period of time and have earned a certain grade point average.

The organizations also provide a safe social environment, Brown said, but that is not their primary focus.

The Black Pan-Hellenic council works toward its goals largely through campus projects and community service.

Brown said the council is sponsoring the African American Male Symposium Oct. 2 in conjunction with the Black Student Union. The guest speaker will be Eric Abercrumbie from the Black Male Think Tank.

There will also be a panel discussion Oct. 6 during Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week between the historically black and white sororities and fraternities called "Open Forum for Greek Relations: Improving Relations for Greeks of the Future," Bailey said.

Each fraternity and sorority also has its own community service projects, Brown said.

Alpha Kappa Alpha participates in a mentor program at Woodrow Wilson School, and Alpha Phi Alpha is involved in a similar program at Manhattan Middle School, Brown said.

Jayson Strickland, member of Alpha Phi Alpha, said his fraternity was looking for an on-going and constant community-service project, and with the help of Upward Bound, they set up the mentor program in the middle school last spring.

They meet once a week with a selected group of minority men and focus on helping them with life skills, survival skills, self-esteem and cultural awareness, Strickland said.

"We really got to know the kids personally," Strickland said. "At first, they didn't know where we were coming from."

He said the program has been a success so far. "I've seen grades go

Still going and going ... the Tailhook scandal

Most parties involving alcohol tend to get a little crazy, but parties where things like the Tailhook sexual-harassment scandal occured are an example of what is not supposed to happen.

Tailhook was a naval aviator's convention in Las Vegas, Nev., in 1991. Dozens of women were forced to walk a "gauntlet" down a hallway.

They were fondled, stripped and otherwise assaulted by possibly hundreds of naval officers and seamen.

The Navy has attempted in the past to keep anything dealing with Tailhook as quiet as possible, probably hoping it would just go away.

The best way for it to go away is for the Navy to take the officers to trial and get the whole dirty thing over with.

It has been more than two years since the Tailhook convention/fiasco happened, and not one single officer has gone to trial.

About 50 officers received administrative "punishment."

Two Navy commanders and two lieutenants are set to go to trial.

Of 140 Navy and Marine Corps officers suggested for discipline in the Pentagon's investigation of Tailhook, more than half had no action taken against them.

Lt. Cowden will receive a delayed promotion and can return to flying.

He was cleared because a military judge concluded a legal adviser showed bias against him, apparently because Cowden refused to accept administrative punishment and demanded a jury trial.

Investigators have said the drinking has clouded memories of many people at Tailhook, and the long period of time between the actual incidents and questioning hasn't helped.

Let's hope the Navy doesn't find loopholes for the remaining officers to slip through or decide to make an example of one of them when they should deal with them all.

MARLETT'S WORLD

Educating, preparing one's self is just the beginning

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Men wonder why we women never go to the bathroom alone.

It's a minor thing really, a point that has been joked about and exaggerated by both sexes. A tradition of sorts, a ritual for some.

Some male friends of mine actually asked me what was so special about our bathrooms that we always had to go in a group.

Did they have secret rooms in the back where we were served champagne and given back rubs by half-naked male masseurs? Did they have a television in there?

Funny. But this is a clue to something much larger. It is a clue as to the way women are raised in this society.

We women have been fostered since infancy to believe that there is nowhere where we are safe alone. In our own homes, in our cars, at work — anyplace could be the place where we could lose our privacy, our dignity or our lives.

Defense classes are full of women preparing themselves for the inevitability of being betrayed. We have been raised to go nowhere alone and never, never in the dark.

We have been taught to see a rapist in every stranger and especially that clean-cut guy who seemed so nice when he took us to the movies. We have to be careful not to dress a certain way or walk a certain way and always, always to be aware.

Sounds like I'm paranoid? Sounds like I am exaggerating? According to information presented by the Women's Resource Center, one in four college women will be raped.

Eighty percent of the victims know their assailants. Fifty percent of college men surveyed said if they knew they wouldn't get caught, they would rape a woman.

Two of five of my close female friends have been sexually assaulted, and I don't know how many were threatened or attempted.

With these figures, I reserve the right to sound paranoid. And I reserve the right to be angry.

"It sucks having to be afraid of half the human species," a female friend said to me, and I agree.

So, what's to be done to alleviate the problem? There are always options. If you live in a residence hall, sign up to be an escort at your front desk.

Most halls will take men and teams of two women. Never let a friend drive drunk, and never let a friend go in unfamiliar territory alone. Be aware of potentially dangerous situations.

If you are a woman, be careful. We must be wise to the ways of our own protection.

Take a defense class. Don't walk alone in the dark and don't let your guard down. Better to be a little paranoid than to be raped. And never say to yourself, "It couldn't happen to me."

Hospitals are full of women who believed that.

Place limitations upon your own sexual behavior. If you feel as if you do not know or understand what your role as a man is, beyond the sexual, talk to someone at Lafene.

Ask around for groups that may explore that issue, and don't ever tell yourself that you wouldn't take advantage of a woman if the situation presented itself.

The jails are full of men who believed that.

Let us go to the bathroom in pairs, and leave us alone.

They don't serve champagne, by the way. It's plain white wine.

Chairperson sets the record straight after Collegian went astray

Editor,

First, I would like to thank the Collegian for enlightening students and UAB organizations about the new campus events policy that is currently in the works.

However, your article contained several false or misleading statements that I felt needed to be corrected:

1. The headline states "New policy applies to parties." The policy being developed will apply to more than parties; its scope will include all events of a social nature.

2. Your article states, "A policy calling for mandatory security at certain events sponsored by K-State Organizations is in the making." The policy that is currently being written is to ensure successful and safe events on the K-State campus.

3. Your article repeatedly refers to the "security council." No security council exists. It is possible that a committee of various campus departments including facilities, campus police and the K-State Union will be established to evaluate requests to use campus buildings and grounds.

Most important is the fact that this policy is still being worked on and is not in effect yet.

Your article gives the impression that the guidelines that are outlined in your article are already policy. This is very untrue.

The committee established to write this policy has just begun to meet.

After they write the policy, it must be approved by both the University Activities Board and President Wefald.

If anyone has questions regarding the "campus events policy," they can call the Office of Student Activities and Services at 532-6541.

▶ FEMINISM

There's nothing like a man who knows a woman's true place

Editor,

John Hart, thank you very much for providing the definition of "womanhood" for us females in the Sept. 20 Collegian.

For 22 years I have been confused when, as a woman, I have been "aggressive" or "achievement-orientated." I could never figure out why I thought "in terms of justice and solutions." Now I know that, being a woman, I should just stick to "nurturing" and thinking "in terms of relationships and feelings."

In your column this week, you alluded to equality as a function of worth. I am sure that you, as well as I, know how much "worth" businesses and other employers give to nurturing and feeling and being a good romantic partner.

In an age when men and women must earn money to support themselves, as well as a family, these "woman generalizations" that you believe in do not bring home the bacon.

Wise up, John. Both sexes need both sets of characteristics to survive.

At this time, if you are thinking that I have misread you, please remember: If it looks like, walks like and quacks like a duck, it must be a duck!

FAMILY

Men break with tradition, study fatherhood, sex roles

TRISHA BENNINGA
Collegian

Family Relations and Sex Roles is a class that has grown in popularity among students at K-State in the past few years.

The number of men enrolling has also increased.

L. Jesse Peterson, graduate teaching assistant in human development and family studies, is teaching one of the five sections of the course offered this semester.

There has been a definite increase in the number of students enrolling in the past three or four years, Peterson said.

Betsy Bergen, associate professor in human development and family studies, said the class usually fills up quickly.

An average of 200 students enrolls in the class each semester, she said. And there has been an increase in male students taking the class recently.

"It's not 50-50 gender split yet, but it's more like about a third males and two-thirds females," Bergen said.

At the undergraduate level, women outnumber the men, but there are more men on the graduate faculty than women, she said.

Bergen said she has a couple of theories as to why more men are becoming interested in classes with a focus on marriage and relationships.

"I think men are realizing that the old stereotype of what it is to be a male is no longer as satisfactory to them, and so they are also interested in relationships and understanding other people," Bergen said.

Some men also take the class because of outside pressures.

"I know some take it because their girlfriends talk them into it after they've taken it. Some of them tell me that," she said.

Peterson said he thinks more men are becoming interested in the class because there is a general move away from traditional roles, and men want to be more flexible.

"Males aren't necessarily the person who just plays with the children once and a while, rough and tumble, and don't communicate with their spouses," he said. "They actually want to communicate more, they actually want to learn more about how to function well as a father. It's kind of the whole idea of moving more to middle ground in what is called androgyny, which is maleness and femaleness coming together, both traits."

Travis Griffin, senior in agriculture business, said he took the class because it was something different than the classes he usually takes, and a friend recommended it to him.

"I thought it was kind of interesting for a change of pace," he said. "I felt real out of place that first day. I didn't realize it was going to be like that. I sat down that first day, and there were only like three guys besides me in there. That's probably the one time I felt like a minority."

The small percentage of men in the class would not have deterred him from enrolling, he said.

Griffin, who is in Peterson's class, said having a male teacher has made him more comfortable at times.

The class was not quite what he expected, Griffin said. He said he thought the class would focus on the family unit and was surprised when the class began discussing different types of relationships. However, he said he can see how students can relate the topics to their relationships and how he can benefit.

"I can see where it is going to help me. If nothing else, just the basic knowledge and maybe realizing how different men and women are compared to each other," he said.

Griffin's roommate, Chris Burton, senior in animal science, is also in Peterson's class. Griffin said he decided to take the class last semester and Burton decided to take it with him because it fit his schedule.

Burton said the class was something he had never had before and wanted to see what it was about. Now that he is in the class, he said he thinks he will have a better understanding of the differences between what men and women think.

"I might learn how to have a better relationship and to learn things people can do to make things better," he said.

In general; Peterson said many of his students when asked on the first day why they were taking the course, gave such responses as wanting to strengthen their relationships or marriages.

"A lot of people are doing it to build relationships and prepare for marriage," he said.

Bergen said one reason why many students take the class is to be sure of their relationship before making a lifetime commitment and they want to learn how to have a better marriage. She said only about five percent of the undergraduates who enroll are married.

She said the optimal approach would be for couples to take the class together, but it doesn't occur very often. This may be because many students haven't coupled off yet, she said.

She also credits a change in attitude of society in general for classes of this type gaining popularity.

"In the '80s we talked about it being the 'me generation,' but in the 1990s it is becoming the 'we' and the 'us', and people are realizing that just to be individual and think only of themselves is not the key to happiness. I think some of that may be rubbing off on students, that 'hey, there's more to life than just me.'"

Mentors ease college transition

Faculty support minority students in semester course

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

Surviving the freshman year of college is difficult for many K-State students. The multicultural freshman seminar course is designed to serve as a support program and a learning resource for these students.

The course was established by the Academic Assistance Center on a trial basis last year as a means to help minority students adjust to K-State, Judy Lynch, associate director of AAC, said.

"There is a lot of interest in helping minority students be a success at K-State," Lynch said. "This makes the campus seem less hostile and makes students feel like they have a place on campus."

The AAC is located in Holton Hall.

The class involves three components.

First, speakers from various ethnic groups on campus and from the community are invited to share their experiences with the class.

Second, each student is assigned a faculty mentor who volunteers to be a friend and adviser to the student.

"This is someone they can connect with on the faculty," Lynch said. "It teaches them not to be afraid of the faculty."

Students and their faculty mentor may attend lectures, go to lunch or talk about classes, Lynch said.

Karren Baird-Olson, assistant professor of sociology and American ethnic studies, said she became a faculty mentor to provide support for the students and to serve as a resource to them.

"I realized how important it was for you to have someone there if you weren't familiar with the University," she said. "We all need support and someone to be there."

The program benefits the students as well as their mentors, Baird-Olson said.

"I love to see people succeed in life, and if in some little, small way I can contribute to their making it — that feels good," she said.

The final component of the class,

Cats opens Big 8 action at Colorado

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

When the volleyball team steps onto the court tonight at the Coors Event Center, it will be trying to break its 10-match losing streak against Colorado.

"I now believe that our athletic talent is comparable," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "We're not as far away from winning as most people think."

The Wildcats are coming off of a successful weekend, as they won their first tournament since 1988 in the Wildcat Invitational. The last tournament win was at Northern Illinois.

"The kids are feeling really confident right now," Hagemeyer said. "They are dealing with challenges positively, instead of negatively. I hope we are able to duplicate that this weekend."

In the Wildcat Invitational, Angie McKee, Stephanie Liester and Chi Dau were selected to the all-tournament team. This marked the third straight tournament that Liester had been selected, and the second straight for McKee. Last week, McKee was also selected the K-State Athlete of the Week.

"Angie is playing the best volleyball that she has ever played," Hagemeyer said. "She has done it with her confidence and skills. Her attitude is now more positive, and she has stuck to thinking positively."

Colorado is ranked in the top 10 in the nation, and they are the defending Big Eight Tournament Champions. They have posted a 7-1 record and a perfect 5-0 home record so far this season.

"I think that they would like to think that the altitude has something to do with their success at home, but that's not entirely true," Hagemeyer said.

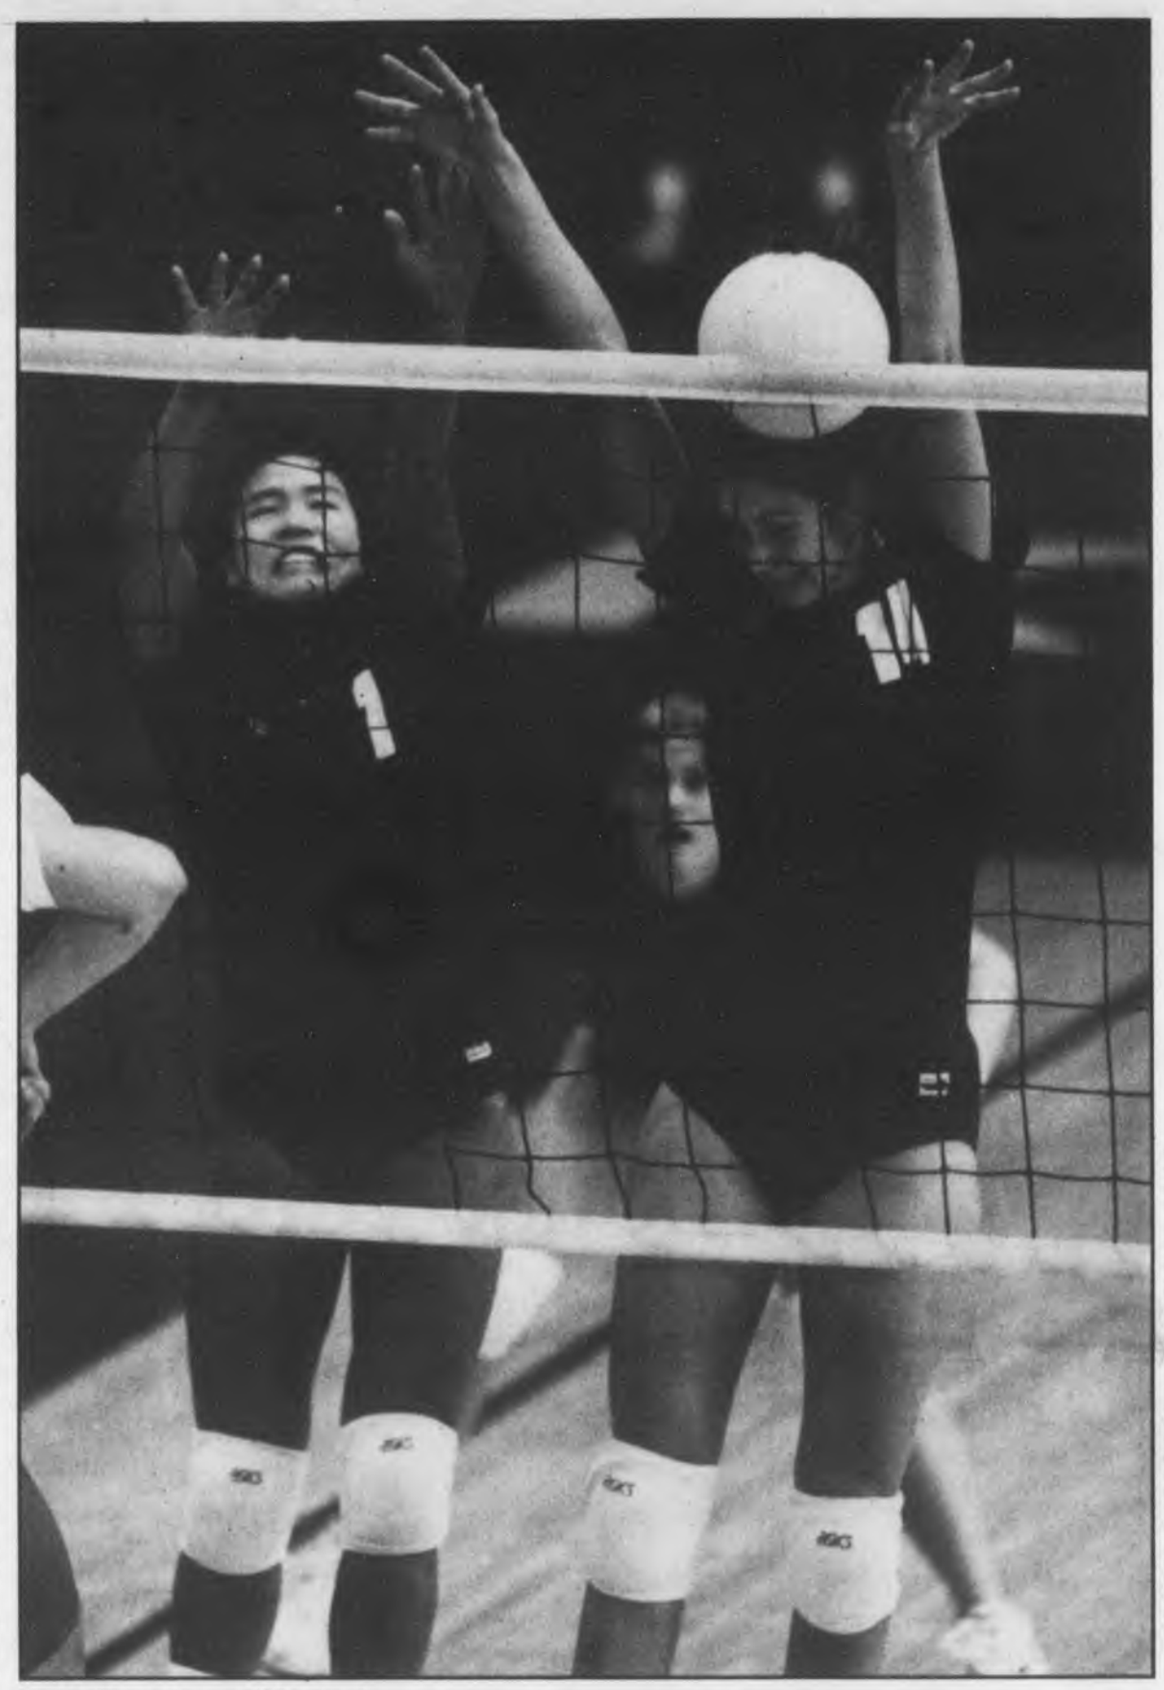
"They try to play on that idea, but Colorado is just plain old good."

The Buffaloes are led this season by a nucleus of juniors. Karrie Downey leads CU with an average of 4 digs a game, and last season she was selected to all-Big Eight Tournament team.

The Buffs are also led by Nicole Vranesh, who averages 4.4 kills per game, and Hagemeyer said she is very talented.

"Colorado is experienced. They established success in a short time, and they have taken volleyball to another level," Hagemeyer said.

The Cats, 4-6, left for Colorado yesterday morning with just three days of rest after the tournament over the weekend.



"Playing on three days' rest is not really a factor," Hagemeyer said. "It would be a factor if we were playing more than one match. I think that we are physically able to play with little rest because we are in great condition."

Another bright spot for the Cats last weekend was the play of sophomore middle blocker Jill Dugan. Dugan came off the bench and had two service aces, nine kills, seven blocks and hit .529 for the tournament.

"It was nice to see Jill back," Hagemeyer said. "At first she wasn't comfortable with changing positions, but she's past that now, and she wanted to show that she still could play in the middle."

Hagemeyer said the challenge of playing the defending Big Eight champions in the first conference match would benefit the team.

"Playing them first will help us gain experience," Hagemeyer said. "It will definitely benefit us, and it will be a good test."

Brett's yearly debate with retirement should end

"An open letter to Number 5"

To Mr. George Brett:

Again the time has come — your now-yearly debate as to whether or not you'll suit up again for the Royals, look elsewhere, or call it quits.

Can I be honest? It's time to look toward the front-office job you've been assured of with Kansas City.

TROY COVERDALE

I don't argue that when the Royals were just getting their feet on the ground and trying to become an established team, it was your spirit and fire that helped lead them to that level and beyond.

And you've provided some of the most exciting moments in Kansas City Royals history: the "pine tar" home run at Yankees Stadium, your run at the elusive .400 mark in 1980, three batting titles and much more.

But, at age 40, you aren't the same active, never-say-die, always-hustling player you were in the earlier days of your career.

In fact, after the 1985 World Series, and discounting the 1991 batting crown you won, you haven't been the same George Brett that Kansas City fans know and love.

The batting average has been under .300; the home run totals have dwindled, and you've gone from every day at third base to first base to occasional designated hitter. You've spent more and more time on the disabled list.

You got married, had a kid, and have actually had to start thinking about the future off the field.

I can understand why you want to play another year — the game has been your life for so long. It's never easy to give up your first love.

But think of everything that could happen if you play another year. You could spend more time on the DL, come back, and get injured almost immediately. Witness Nolan Ryan's ill-fated final year of 1993, four times on the DL and no effectiveness. Do you want to be remembered for a bad last season, or a relatively good one?

You could be benched in favor of a younger player. The Royals have to be looking to the future to replace you anyway. What's stopping them from just letting you sit to give someone a chance to prove that they're the heir apparent?

You could have a lousy year statistically. Not just batting .260, but maybe .220 with a couple of homers, not exactly the way a player known for hitting-prowess wants to exit the game.

If you quit after this season, you don't blemish your records any, and the totals on your plaque at Cooperstown will look that much better. You go out as a member of some of the most exclusive offensive clubs in baseball history. You go out with a world-championship ring.

What else could you want?

I and countless other Royals fans await your decision.

Miller joins K-State football team after remembering original recruiter

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Matt Miller decided he had enough of Texas A&M after two days of practice this year.

When he thought about where to go to finish his collegiate career, he remembered a coach who was recruiting him when he was just a sophomore at Shawnee Mission South High School in Overland Park.

Five years later, Miller has finally become a player for Snyder — only it's for the K-State football program.

Miller, a 6-foot-2-inch, 195-pound quarterback, said the reason he left was because he knew he wouldn't make any progress in the Aggies' program.

"The starting quarterback was the same age as me, and I knew I would not start," said Miller, who will have two years of eligibility left at K-State after sitting out this year. "I thought I played well, but things weren't going my way. It was an extremely hard decision to leave. I loved Texas A&M, but I felt I wasn't getting a fair shake."

Miller had only played in two games at Texas A&M as a red-shirted freshman against Stanford and Southern Methodist, but did not attempt a pass.

He transferred to San Diego's Mt. Carmel High School after his sophomore year at Shawnee Mission and was listed as one of the top three quarterbacks in California, according to the San Diego Union. Miller was also named the California High School Amateur Athlete of the Year in 1990 after passing for more than 2,300 yards and 15 touchdowns with only three interceptions.

At Shawnee Mission South in 1988, Snyder came knocking at his door, he said.

"I remember Iowa was recruiting me, and Snyder came to talk with me," Miller said.

When Miller contemplated transferring from Texas A&M, he said coaches recommended K-State.

"When I was talking with coaches about where to go, they kept saying how great K-State was," Miller said. "Then I remembered that Coach Snyder was at K-State.

"When I first called Coach Snyder, they said they had a scholarship waiting for me, and I decided to give it my best shot," he said.

While Miller sits out because of NCAA transfer guidelines, he said he would try work on the offensive schemes for next season.

"If I can get the offense down, I can compete next year," he said. "The offense is extremely complicated."

As he gets to the plays, he will be the quarterback on the scout team. Quarterback coach Del Miller said the transfer could be as high as second-string quarterback by next year.

"He is an upper-classman who has had some field experience," Del Miller said. "I think he's a potential back-up for Chad May. He's got good feet and a pretty good arm."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶BROWN SAYS MANAGER DID NOT PROTEST IN TIME

NEW YORK (AP) — American League president Bobby Brown, saying Boston manager Butch Hobson did not protest in time, Tuesday denied the Red Sox protest of Saturday's loss against the New York Yankees, in which a fan ran on the field in the ninth inning.

Brown, citing AL regulation 3.13, said a protest must be filed with the umpire-in-chief by the manager at the time of the dispute and before the next pitched ball.

"Inasmuch as no protest was lodged by manager Hobson with umpire-in-chief Drew Coble at the time of the incident and prior to the next pitch, and since no announcement of a protest was made over the public-address system at the time, the protest is not valid, and therefore is disallowed," Brown said.

But third-base umpire Tim Welke had called time when he saw a young fan run onto the field and said it was before the pitch was delivered.

Stanley, given a second chance, singled, as did Wade Boggs. Dion James then walked, and Don Mattingly's single gave New York a 4-3 victory.

"I guess I (messed) up," Hobson said from Toronto before Tuesday night's game against the Blue Jays.

"I should have done it at the time of the play, but I really didn't think there was a reason to protest (at the time) because it was a judgment call."

Hobson expected Brown to uphold the protest.

"I don't think we ever had a chance, even if it was done at the time of the play," he said.

▶STULCE FACES LIFE BAN AFTER FAILIING DRUG TEST

LONDON (AP) — American Olympic shot put champion Mike Stulce faced a life ban Tuesday after failing a drug test at last month's World Championships in Stuttgart, Germany.

Stulce, winner of the gold medal at the Barcelona Olympics last year and the bronze in Stuttgart, tested positive for the second time in his career.

"Both the A and B samples have been confirmed positive," said Jayne Pearce, representative for the International Amateur Athletic Federation, the sport's governing body.

Pearce said Stulce would be stripped of his medal and suspended for life pending a hearing by the U.S. Federation because it was his second offense. She said it was a substance that would warrant a four-year ban if it were a first offense.

Stulce was suspended for two years after testing positive for steroids in 1990. Coming off the ban, he was the surprise winner in Barcelona, leading an American one-two finish for the first time since Mexico City in 1968.

With James Doehring taking the silver and Russian Vyacheslav Lykho the bronze, it was the first time three medals in an Olympic event had gone to athletes who had been suspended for drug use.

a peer mentor section, is a new addition to the program. Ten upperclass K-State students are assigned to five to six students enrolled in the class.

Peer mentors and their friends meet once a week to discuss academic concerns, personal problems and questions about University life, Dina Bennett, coordinator of the student mentor program, said.

Peer mentors must have experience working with minority students.

Being a peer mentor is not for everyone, Elsa Díaz, senior in industrial engineering and physical science and peer mentor, said.

"You have to have patience and a willingness to help others, and you should understand the learning process," Díaz said.

Garry Massengill, sophomore in computer technology and former student in the class, said the course was a positive learning experience for him.

"I learned a lot more about K-State and about what I want to major in," he said.

Massengill and his faculty mentor attended Landon lectures together, went to lunch and discussed classes and future plans.

"If I had a problem, I knew someone in a high position that could help me fix it," Massengill said.

W.C. Fields once said, "Never work with children or animals," but in the Herbert Ross film "Undercover Blues," a child makes a nice addition to this corny adventure film.

"Undercover Blues" stars Kathleen Turner and Dennis Quaid as Jane and Jefferson Blue, a couple on vacation with their baby in New Orleans.

Turner and Quaid are not just run-of-the-mill parents trying to get away from it all for a little rest and relaxation. There is a catch to this scenario. They are federal agents who have taken maternity leave to raise their daughter, Jane Louise, in a "normal" environment. However, an unfortunate opportunity arises, and they find themselves again involved in espionage.

The Blues are trying to stop the Czechoslovakian terrorist Paulina Novachek, played by Fiona Shaw, from removing highly secretive weaponry from the country.

Turner is always a pleasure to watch, even when she appears as a hag undercover. She also adds a sultry edge to Jane Blue's maternal instincts.

Quaid's Jefferson Blue has a light-hearted sense of humor and gives the audience some good laughs. He is quite creative with a baby stroller.

Shaw's interpretation of Novachek, however, is a disappointing caricature. She should stick to Norwegian playwright Henrik Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler" and forget Hollywood.

The film's highlights include scenes with Jane Louise Blue, played by child actor Michelle Schuelke. She's cute, huggable and hard to resist when she's laughing.

"Undercover Blues" includes several different action sequences that try to please a diverse audience. Even with alligators and female mud wrestling, though, it's still not entertaining.

Advice for confused, Cassandra not amused

Dear Cassandra,

(A letter to Confused.)

I've been there and would like to extend the benefit of my experience to confused and any other confused males out there who may not have the courage to speak up.

I was 16 and at an all-male school at the time. I did seek the advice of someone older and wiser.

He pointed out that it really is not unusual to have some such feelings toward someone of the same sex, especially at a relatively young age when you are still trying to come to terms with your sexuality.

The sight of firm young flesh can be a turn on, period. Your feelings do not make you odd or homosexual. What you do about them is what is important.

I'm going to assume that you have previously felt attracted to women. If you continue to foster those feelings you will probably find the attraction to your roommate will subside.

We human beings have a tendency to allow our feelings to run our lives. You are doing that when you masturbate to a picture of your roommate. You are reinforcing feelings that would most likely be short-lived. Back off and see what happens.

Signed,
K.H.

Dear K.H.

So what you're saying to our friend, Confused, is that he should just concentrate, real hard on his past attractions for women and his feelings for his roommate will just go away?

That he should essentially deny everything? How convenient.

You aren't by any chance, K.H., in one of those religions that rejects homosexuality are you? Or maybe one of those religions that denies masturbation? You're not one of those are you?

In my opinion, Confused should seek counseling to explore his feelings. He shouldn't turn to denial and emotional constipation as you so politely suggest.

Regents to examine Washburn phase-in

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Kansas Board of Regents chairman John Montgomery said he supports the eventual inclusion of Washburn University into the regents system.

"We would want to be as sure as we could that Washburn would not take funds away from the other six regents institutions," Montgomery said during an annual visit to the K-State campus Tuesday.

Montgomery was accompanied by interim executive director Warren Corman. The two talked to campus officials and took a tour of campus research facilities.

Montgomery, who is a member of a sub-committee looking at the Washburn proposal for a larger public funding base, said the committee is looking at a variety of possibilities for phasing Washburn into the regents system.

A plan that would have gradually phased the Topeka-based university into the regents system over a five-year period was rejected by the regents last year.

Montgomery said he thought the plan failed because it phased out Washburn's dependency on a Topeka 17-mill tax levy.

Washburn proposed an 11.6-percent increase in state funding for 1995. This proposal does not provide for a decrease in the University's reliance on the Topeka mill levy.

Montgomery said an option in which Washburn continues to rely on the Topeka mill levy has a better chance of passing the regents.

Corman said the availability of funding was having an effect on tuition costs.

The money the regents schools have received from the state has increased at a rate of 1.2 percent, which is lower than the rate of inflation, he said.

"Our percent increase in funding has been less than any other state agency," Corman said. "We are having to self-fund the rest of the increase through increases in tuition."

The three largest regents schools, Wichita State University, K-State and the University of Kansas, will have a 9-percent increase in tuition over the next three years.

"We have quality on one side and shrinking money available on the other, and we are caught in the middle."

WARREN CORMAN
BOARD OF REGENTS
INTERIM EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

"We have quality on one side and shrinking money available from the state general fund on the other, and we are caught in the middle," Corman said.

Montgomery said tuition can only be raised so far without losing students.

Three percent of that increase was offered to the board last week by the Student Advisory Council to be used for faculty salary increases.

Montgomery said the increase for faculty salaries was an admirable move on the part of the students. He said there is a possibility that future faculty salary increases might also come from the students.

On another issue, Montgomery said he supported qualified admissions to regents universities.

"I think it is the right thing to do," Montgomery said. "We do a disservice to students to admit them to a university when we know they don't have a good chance of succeeding."

Bond issue would improve schools

$2.8 million needed for facility improvement projects

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

A bond issue election on Oct. 5 will decide whether overcrowding in Unified School District 383 necessitates the building of two middle schools and an elementary school.

Passage of the bond will have an indirect effect on K-State students, said Tom Hawk, director of staff development and special projects for the school district.

Students pay property taxes through rent, and some are home owners. One of the advantages college students may have as voters is their knowledge about the conditions of public schools. They are highly informed voters, Hawk said.

Enrollment within USD 383 has increased 26 percent in the past decade, according to a Board of Education pamphlet about the bond issue.

The pamphlet states overcrowding exists in all district facilities, and similar growth is expected to continue.

"We are pushing this because overcrowding has existed for years. The projected increase is 2.5 percent per year based on increases in the past 10 years," David Mickey, associate superintendent of the school district, said.

According to the pamphlet, there has been an increase of 1,400 students from 1982 to 1992.

"We're in a crisis in terms of crowding. We have more students than we can handle with the facilities we have," Hawk said.

The Oct. 5 election will ask voters two questions. The first deals with the building of the three schools and fund improvements for existing buildings in the district. The second question is about building an enclosed swimming pool near the Manhattan Middle School.

The total cost for both projects is estimated at $28 million.

The proposed solution is to have a new elementary school with a maximum capacity of 492 students and two new middle schools with a capacity of 600 students each. The proposal allows each school to expand to a capacity of 900 students.

"We have a pretty good idea of what the schools will look like. Detailed plans have not been drawn out, but it's not a shot in the dark either," Hawk said.

Staff members will meet with the architects so their input can be considered, he said.

The proposal states Manhattan Middle School might be used for the high school's freshman class.

"The Poyntz site will be part of the high school. Odds are high the ninth graders could move into the middle school, but it's not a given. Advantages are strong because of required subjects and efficiency," Hawk said.

Hawke said freshmen will still have combined activities such as music, band, sports, and special education and honors courses.

The reason for raising the issue now is because of overcrowding. However, there are three other reasons, Hawk said.

"Under current state law, 28 percent of the principal and interest will be paid by state aid," Mickey said.

This leaves 72 percent of the cost to be paid by local property taxes. Previously taxpayers would have paid 100 percent of the cost.

Property taxes were cut by 40 mills last year with the approval of the State Finance Formula. One mill equals $1 of tax on each $1,000 of assessed property value in the district.

"It's important for voters to recognize that taxes were reduced by 40 mills," Hawk said.

If the bond is approved, the mill levy will still be about 25 mills below the 1991 level.

Another reason for voting now is the rate of interest.

"Interest rates are the lowest in 25 years," Hawk said.

A concern of the community is the possible closing of Fort Riley.

"It's highly probable Fort Riley will stay here. We don't want to organize our future on pessimism. If it did close, it won't drastically alter our crowded conditions," Hawk said.

The bond issue will also decide the fate of two proposed improvements, which include air conditioning for Manhattan High School and modifications to existing district facilities to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

"The high school is the only school building in the district not air-conditioned," Mickey said.

Other improvements include updating science and computer labs, replacing intercom systems, re-roofing buildings, asbestos abatement, and plumbing and electrical improvements.

The second question on the ballot concerns construction of an enclosed swimming pool. The pool would be used for physical education classes, athletic competition and community use.

CAMPUS

Foreign study requires ability to adapt

Study abroad programs offered for many majors

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Somewhere in Tanzania is a part of K-State, in the form of Brian Hesse, junior in political science.

Hesse is taking part in the International Student Exchange Program for study abroad.

Study abroad gives a student the opportunity to live and travel in a foreign country while receiving college credit at the same time.

Barry Michie, program officer and director of study abroad, said students can begin their search for study abroad programs in the International Programs office. Many departmental offices have information on programs as well.

"I'm going to try to make coherence out of all the study-abroad programs on campus. Coherence in terms of communication," Michie said.

"Study abroad is like a thousand points of light across campus," he said.

Michie recently took over the director position from Walter Kolonosky, associate professor of modern languages, who is on sabbatical.

Part of the reason for the many different programs is because study abroad offers programs for almost any major. However, many students who do apply have some foreign-language background because of the hard competition to study in English-speaking countries, Michie said.

Therefore, the Department of Modern Languages has information, as well as its own programs for students.

"I think it's extremely important to us. The reality is that students need more intensive study to be proficient in a foreign language. There is nothing to point them in the right direction better than to live the language with the culture right in front of them," Brad Shaw, head of modern languages, said.

Shaw said most programs require or suggest a student have at least two years of the language, but there are programs, including exotic languages, that offer language instruction on sight.

During the summer, the modern languages department offers an intensive study program for Spanish in Cuernavaca, Mexico.

Reid Bork, senior in Spanish, physical science and secondary education, attended the Cuernavaca program last summer and has applied to study in Costa Rica for the spring semester.

"It's more than language. It's history, it's culture and society. It's a blast. I had the best time. I made a lot of friends in Mexico," Bork said.

Bork applied for study abroad through the University of Kansas' Grupo de Kansas program, which is open to any student in Kansas.

Although Bork has studied abroad before, he said he thinks a semester in Costa Rica will be much more difficult than the weeks he spent in Mexico.

"It's going to be hard not to be around all my friends for my entire senior year. I'll miss my girlfriend and my family a lot," he said. "I'm in a fraternity, and I'll miss seeing some of my pledge brothers graduate, and there are things that I'm involved in that I'll miss out on second semester," Bork said.

Bork may not be alone in dealing with homesickness. Problems such as homesickness may not make every student a good candidate for study abroad.

"It takes a person who is flexible, interested in finding out about other societies and has that ability to adapt," Michie said. "But they have a sense of humor about it all as well."

Study abroad also requires money, although the tuition of some study-abroad programs is only a little more than the cost at K-State.

In the ISEP program, fees are about the same because of the exchange of students from different schools.

However, transportation costs, a $25 fee for enrollment in study abroad and a fee to the International Programs office are added costs.

The International Programs office requires a fee because study abroad has no state support.

"So we have to find a way to be a self-sufficient office," Michie said.

There aren't any scholarships on campus geared directly at study abroad, but Michie said some financial aid can be used toward the program. The International Programs office also books listing scholarships for international study.

"But basically, for just the added cost of an airplane ticket, you can be studying in Malta or Tanzania," Michie said.

Once a student returns from a study-abroad program, the admissions office works with students to translate their hours and grades into something compatible with K-State's courses.

The benefits of study abroad go beyond the classroom.

"Once they do this, they find they have learned not only the language and culture, but about themselves. They really are changed from it. You see your own culture differently, from a new perspective, Shaw said.

Michie agreed.

"It can be a turning point in a person's life," said Michie, who studied abroad in Greece during college. "They come back and say they look at their own culture and life through a new set of eyes."

REVIEW

Berlin to introduce newest music, culture

MATT BECHTOLD
Collegian

It's more than a new name.

The bar Berlin, 702 N. 11 St., differs from the forerunners at its location. In the past, Boulevard's and The Spot offered mainly rock and metal.

However, Berlin offers something completely different to Manhattan.

Jef Mindrup, owner of the bar, said he wants to bring the newest music from around the world to Manhattan. He said he travels frequently in Europe and collects a variety of the newest music, which usually doesn't hit the U.S. music scene until years later.

It's impressive to see a bar bringing in new music and culture that hasn't yet been introduced to Manhattan. Everyone should really go at least once to Berlin, if only to discover what they've been missing out on for so long.

This variety of music, as well as its acceptance, is refreshing and exciting. Not enough clubs or bars in Aggieville give the opportunity to hear more than one style of music on any given night.

During time spent at Berlin, however, everything from hardcore to techno could be heard, and all the music could be danced to.

In addition, the dance floor was large and well situated for a sound system that shook the ceiling panels.

The atmosphere of Berlin was impressive in itself. The bar had a lot of physical similarities to the clubs and bars seen in Europe, but it also had a few unusual characteristics.

Some of these included a white-painted wall designated for patron graffiti, a fluorescent reincarnation of the Berlin Wall with reproductions of original graffiti taken from actual photos prior to the Wall's destruction and works of local artists and students on display on the right wall of the club.

All of these concepts fit nicely into the club's theme of freedom and self-expression.

Berlin also has a comfortable seating area that is perfect for relaxing with a drink after a bit of heavy dancing. The area has a fenced-in patio for anyone who may be hot inside or wants to talk.

The crowd that filled the club was not an intimidating or violent one. Instead, there was a sense of acceptance and welcome. This shows great promise for those who are just looking for a good time.

When Berlin first opened, patrons had to be 21 to enter. Recently the age limit has been dropped to 18.

Yeltsin removes military officials

Yeltsin even anticipated the parliament's counter-order Tuesday naming Rutskoi acting president. Over the weekend, Yeltsin issued a decree saying that Rutskoi could take over only if Yeltsin signs a decree saying so.

Pieces of paper, of course, aren't all Yeltsin depended on.

In recent weeks, Yeltsin spent long hours touring army bases, huddling with military commanders and ordering pay raises for soldiers in an effort to line up as much support as possible.

In August, he canned the chief of the former KGB, Security Minister Viktor Barannikov, whose political loyalty was never certain. Yeltsin then waited until this week to appoint a successor.

Yeltsin's ministers of defense, security and interior pledged support for his announcement Tuesday, and there were no signs of any military personnel answering the parliament's call to ignore the president.

Ultimately, Yeltsin was depending on the people to support him. Or better yet, to just stay home — unlike they did during protests in August 1991 when Yeltsin faced down tanks and troops sent by Soviet coup plotters.

Education cost outpaced aid in '80s

"What you see is institutions just cutting and slashing, and you're getting to the point where they don't have any more to cut."

Financial aid — including federal, state and institutional money — also still isn't keeping pace, the College Board and the independent college association said, though neither had firm estimates for this year yet.

Between 1980 and 1990, the cost of higher education went up 126 percent, while federal financial aid rose 47 percent, according to the independent college association. Students have increasingly relied on loans, borrowing more than $16 billion last year.

Family income has been overtaken by the cost of college.

"Income increased at a rate much slower than both student aid and college costs, which I would assume means families are having a relatively more difficult time paying for this," said Kathleen Brouder, representative for the College Scholarship Service, the College Board's financial aid arm.

She couldn't give specific figures for income increases in the past year. From 1980 to 1990 disposable personal income rose 63 percent, half the increase in college costs.

Including books, supplies and transportation, the average student who lives in a dormitory and attends a four-year private university or college will pay $17,846 this year, the College Board estimated.

The cost of attending college ranges from $120 a year at Antelope Valley College, a commuter school in Lancaster, Calif., to $27,600 at Landmark College in Putney, Vt., a two-year school for learning-disabled and dyslexic students.

Among the other high-priced colleges: Barnard, where tuition, room and board costs $25,492; Brandeis, $25,415; Bard, $25,194; and Yale, $25,110.

Warlord's aid captured

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — U.S. airborne Army Rangers today captured the chief aide to fugitive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, whose militia has been blamed for killing 50 U.N. peacekeepers.

About 50 of the elite Rangers arrested Osman Atto and three other Aidid supporters after arriving in six helicopters and raiding an area near Digfer Hospital, said U.N. military spokesman Maj. David Stockwell.

Militiamen opened fire on the Rangers with small arms and at least a dozen rocket-propelled grenades, but no U.S. forces were wounded, Stockwell said.

The operation came about three hours after militiamen killed three Pakistani U.N. peacekeepers and wounded seven others in an attack on an armored convoy not far from United Nations headquarters in Somalia.

Stockwell described Atto, a wealthy Somali businessman, as the principal adviser and chief financier to Aidid. Somalis consider Atto to be Aidid's No. 2 man.

The capture was the first major success for the Rangers, who were sent to Somalia with the mission of seizing Aidid himself. Twice the Rangers made serious gaffes in searching for Aidid — accidentally raiding a U.N. office and arresting supporters of Aidid's chief enemy, Ali Mahdi Mohammed.

Supporters of Aidid immediately demanded Atto's release, threatening to attack U.N. installations in Mogadishu if he was not freed in four hours. But the deadline passed with no major attack.

from D's to A's," Strickland said.

Veryl A. Switzer, associate director of athletics for Academic Affairs, was a member of the Beta Psi chapter of Kappa Alpha Psi at K-State from 1951-54. He served as president from 1953-54.

Switzer said as a new member, he found several big brothers among the other members, most of whom had just returned from World War II.

"I didn't appreciate the value of being in the fraternity as an undergraduate," he said. "It was an opportunity to have a leadership as well as a brothership role."

Switzer said there were very few social outlets at that time because of race restrictions, so joining Kappa Alpha Psi was a means of being part of a group.

As an adviser to the current members of the fraternity, Switzer said there are more options for involvement, and community service gives members a sense of what a community is all about and a chance to be perceived as leaders.

Members also benefit from the personal contacts they make, Switzer said.

"I've met alumni from all over the country," he said.

"It's opened a lot of doors for me, socially as well as employment opportunities."

Russians to end gridlock

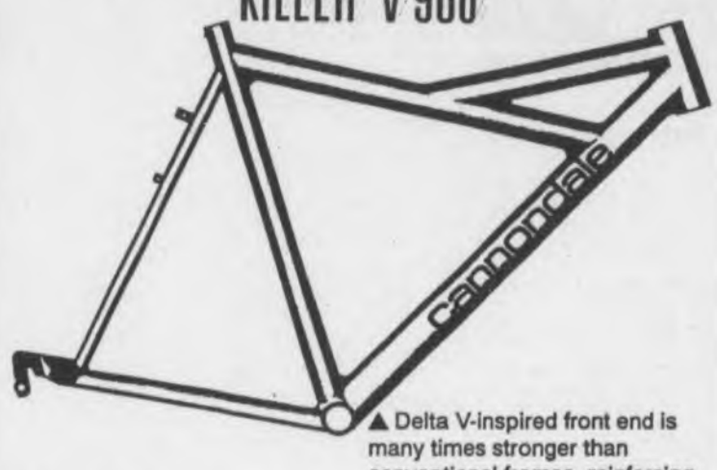
Daly said. "The 1977 Constitution, the "Breshnev" Constitution, has no legality."

"Yeltsin has tried to cut the Gordian Knot of gridlock politics since December of 1991."



Daly said the fact that Yeltsin is the only person with political authority is a problem.

"If you are looking for constitutional basis of Yeltsin's actions or the actions of the Supreme Soviet, there isn't one," Daly said. "A problem is the government has gone from a dictatorship to a democracy with only a minimal removal of dictatorship supporters."

Focus key to victory over UNLV Rebels

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

K-State will try to avoid a let-down against the University of Nevada-Las Vegas this weekend after the victory last week at Minnesota.

"UNLV possesses a lot of challenges," Coach Bill Snyder said. "It's so important that the players remain focused. If we don't remain focused and on track, then we are subject to get beat by anybody."

K-State's third home game this season will mark the first time the Cats have met the Rebels in football, but they have met four times in basketball.

Snyder said few people know about their football program.

"They probably have been overshadowed by their basketball team," Snyder said. "They are a team that concerns me a great deal, and so much of that is because of their speed."

The Rebels were successful in their home opener last Saturday against Central Michigan, improving their record to 1-2. They return 16 starters from last year's team that went 6-5 and tied with New Mexico State for fourth in the Big West.

One of the faster players on the Rebel team is running back Omar Love, who was hampered by lower-back pain in the first two games of the season. He returned last week against Central Michigan to rush for a career-high 117 yards.

He also added three receptions for 31 yards, a touchdown and a two-point conversion in the Rebels' 33-20 win.

"They run extremely well," Snyder said. "They have the greatest amount of quickness of any team that we have played this season."

UNLV's defense has been led this season by outside linebacker Jason Madlock and cornerback Tyrone Scott. Madlock has 28 tackles, including five for a loss, and Scott has 22 tackles. Safety Jason Davis also has two interceptions to lead the Rebels' defense.

While giving up 84 points this season, the Rebels have made some big plays on the defensive side of the ball, as they already have 39 tackles behind the line of scrimmage for losses totaling 223 yards.

Last season, K-State didn't have back-to-back 200-yard passing games, but quarterback Chad May has already accomplished that three times in a row this year. Against Minnesota, May threw for 247 yards on 16 completions last week. May said he is ready to play against the Rebels.

"After the win (against Minnesota), people might be looking down the road toward Nebraska and Colorado," May said.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

K-State fans cheer the team on near the end of the game Saturday in Minneapolis. More than 1,000 K-State fans traveled to Minnesota to see the Wildcats beat the Golden Gophers.

True fans: Minneapolis or bust

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

MINNEAPOLIS — The Cats weren't the only K-Staters on the road this weekend. More than 1,000 fans flew or drove to Minneapolis for the football game Saturday night against the Gophers.

Jason Beckmann, freshman in business law, said he and five people packed into a little, white Cavalier for the 10-hour drive.

"We decorated the car with purple paw prints and stuck a gopher puppet out the trunk," Beckmann said. "The Iowa Hawkeye fans honked as they passed. They really loved it."

Another group was plagued by van trouble when it stopped to help someone.

"We were being good K-Staters when we tried to help jump-start another car, then ours wouldn't start," said John Niemann, senior in agriculture business, as he traveled with seven other K-State faithfuls.

The group of seven finally made it to the dome, wearing matching straw hats and purple shirts that couldn't be missed.

Many of the nice hotels were booked.

"We couldn't find an inexpensive place to stay, so we ended up staying in a cheap motel that had theme rooms," Cantrell said.

"The whole place was really weird. The room we stayed in was the Caribbean room. The carpet was ripped, and plaster was falling off the ceiling," he said.

The Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome was something new for a lot of the fans, including Jeff Loomis.

"We decorated the car with purple paw prints and stuck a gopher puppet out the trunk. The Iowa Hawkeye fans honked as they passed. They really loved it."

JASON BECKMANN
FRESHMAN IN BUSINESS LAW

"It was much larger than I thought," Loomis, junior in marketing, said. "I couldn't imagine what the noise would have been like if it was packed."

The noise level didn't grow very much throughout most of the game.

The Minnesota fans were silenced in the first quarter when the Cats quickly scored a 53-yard touchdown.

Loomis said Minnesota fans didn't seem to back their team the way K-State does, and the crowd didn't have the college atmosphere that there is in Manhattan.

Some K-State fans said they were disappointed that signs and flags weren't allowed in the dome.

"They made me turn my flag in to security, and I had to pick it up after the game," Cole Stanley, assistant director of Haymaker Hall, said.

The white flag Stanley brought to Minneapolis had 'Kansas State' written on it. One group did manage to sneak in a sheet that said, "Willie did the Dome."

BIG 8 ROUNDUP

MIAMI AT COLORADO

FAST FACTS: 12:30 p.m., Folsom Field, Boulder, Colo. Live on ABC

RECORDS: Miami (2-0) and Colorado (2-1)

ABOUT THE BUFFALOES: The Buffaloes were just a split second away from a possible win against Stanford in the 41-37 loss to the Cardinals. Despite the loss, Colorado has rushed and passed for 200 yards in each of its last three games this year, as they rank second nationally in total offense with 538.7 yards per game. Quarterback Kordell Stewart collects 290 yards a contest by himself.

The 41 points the Buffalo defense gave up to Stanford was the most allowed since Colorado's 52-7 spanking against Nebraska last year.

ABOUT THE HURRICANES: Miami defeated Virginia Tech 21-2 to take first place in the Big East Conference last Saturday in the Orange Bowl. The Hurricanes also got a win at Boston College three weeks ago by a 23-7 margin over the Eagles. Coach Dennis Erickson is 44-4 in four years at Miami, and over the past five years the Hurricanes have had the best record with a 56-5 mark over that span. The last time the two teams met was back in 1978, five-years before they won the first of their four national championships. The last time Miami played in high elevation, they lost at Brigham Young in 1990.

OKLAHOMA ST AT ARIZONA ST

FAST FACTS: 9:00 p.m., Sun Devil Stadium, Tempe, Ariz.

RECORDS: Oklahoma State (2-0) and Arizona State (1-1)

ABOUT THE COWBOYS: Oklahoma State beat Tulsa 16-10 Saturday night. Defensive end Jason Gildon sacked Tulsa quarterback Gus Frerotte and caused him to fumble the ball for a recovery by the Cowboys. The sack by Gildon was the 34th of his career, which is a school record, and made him the Big Eight Defensive Player of the Week. The win moved Coach Pat Jones into a tie with former Coach Jim Lookabaugh as the winning coach in Oklahoma State history, with 58 victories.

Offensively, the Cowboys rank last in the league in total offense with 283 yards per game, but the defense is first in the conference — fifth in the nation — in total defense, giving up 227 yards per contest.

ABOUT THE SUN DEVILS: Arizona State dropped out of the top 25 polls when it had its first loss of the season at Louisville 35-17 last Saturday. Back on Sept. 4, the Devils beat Utah 38-0 at home. Arizona State is coached by Bruce Snyder, who is 7-6 at the school. Last year, the Devils tied for sixth in the Pac-10 conference with a 4-4 record, 6-5 overall. Right end Shante Carver returns to the Devil defense after he collected 59 tackles last year — 13 for lost yardage, 10 quarterback sacks and four deflected passes.

COLORADO ST AT NEBRASKA

RECORDS: Colorado State (1-2) and Nebraska (2-0)

ABOUT THE CORNHUSKERS: Nebraska went to (3-0) last week in a 14-13 squeaker at UCLA. Quarterback Tommie Frazier completed the game-winning pass to tight end Gerald Armstrong. Freshmen running backs Damon Benning and Lawrence Phillips are making people almost forget junior Calvin Jones. Benning ran up 127 yards against North Texas State two weeks ago. That was the most yards by a conference rusher until Phillips rushed for 137 yards last week.

ABOUT THE RAMS: Colorado State lost to Brigham Young 27-22 last week. It lost its first game to Oregon State three weeks ago 23-9, but came back the next week to get by Air Force in the low score 8-5 win. Next week, the Rams face their second Big Eight team on the schedule — the Kansas Jayhawks. Coach Sonny Lubick went up against Nebraska twice when he was the defensive coordinator at Miami when they played each other in the Orange Bowl.

MINNEAPOLIS — When the football team looks back at the 1993 season, it could say the turning point of K-State's season can be traced to the goal-line stand against the Minnesota offense in the final minutes of last Saturday's game 30-25 victory against the Golden Gophers in the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome.

Minnesota was moving the ball toward the Cats' end zone when Gopher quarterback Tim Schade threw a pass to slot back Tony Levine, with corner back Thomas Randolph covering Levine.

Levine slipped pass Randolph, and Randolph had to chase him. Randolph did not see the pass and interfered with Levine.

Randolph said he knew he fouled up on the coverage.

"I knew I was beaten," he said. "When I got back into the huddle, we knew we could beat him (Schade) and end the streak."

Running back Chris Darkins ran to the left of his offense line on first down and four yards to go for the touchdown, but did not gain a yard. Schade missed running back Antonio Carter in the end zone on the second play. The Gophers gained two yards on third down when Darkins again ran to the left side of his line.

K-State Coach Bill Snyder said he knew what Minnesota would do when they lined up for the final play.

"If they were going to use two running backs, they were going to run it in," Snyder said. "If they use one back, we were sure they wouldn't run."

After a timeout by the Gophers, the two squads came back for the deciding play of the game.

Gopher quarterback Tim Schade went back to throw to slot back Omar Douglas in the end zone. Schade's arching pass went beyond the reach of Douglas, giving K-State the win.

Randolph said the victory was very emotional.

"I wanted to cry (after the incompletion)," Randolph said. "It was a great feeling to pull it out.

"I'm glad we did it."

Once K-State knew it would get the ball to end the game, senior free safety Jaime Mendez said the defensive backs knew they had to be at their best on the final play.

"Between us seniors (Kenny McEntyre, Randolph and Mendez), we had to make another great play. When the play was over, I thanked God we got the win."

The victory improved the Cats to 3-0, marking the third consecutive season K-State has been undefeated after three games. The win also ended an 18-game, 14-year drought against non-conference teams on the road.

Minnesota Coach Jim Wacker said the win for the Cats was important.

"It was a great win for Kansas State," he said. "You have to give them a lot of credit, but I was also proud of our kids."

Snyder said every play was important to both teams.

"It was a ballgame of character; it was a ballgame of big plays, and it was a ballgame of special teams," Snyder said.

The Cats looked like they would control the game as they scored on their first three possessions of the game.

Andre Coleman returned the opening kickoff 38 yards. Two plays later, quarterback Chad May hit wide receiver Kevin Lockett down the right sideline for 53 yards. Tate Wright's point-after kick gave the Cats a 7-0 lead.

Henry Bailey does the punting and kickoff return jobs, but averages 4.3 yards per punt return and 19 yards on each kickoff.	✔

INTANGIBLES

AREA
MOMENTUM	K-State has won four of its past five games and looks to start the season 4-0 for the first time since 1931 and give the Cats its first perfect non-conference season since 1954 team went 4-0 in non-Big Seven play. A win for UNLV would boost the Rebels into conference play next week against Nevada -Reno and would erase the 24-14 loss at Clemson three weeks ago.	✔
COACHING	Bill Snyder's record is 21-26 in his fifth year at K-State. Since his 1-10 mark in 1989, Snyder and K-State is 20-16. A win for Snyder will tie him with Jim Dickey as the fifth-winningest coach at K-State. UNLV coach Jim Strong is 15-21 over four seasons . Last season, he coach the Rebels to a 6-5 year and a tie for fourth in the Big West.	✔
THE EDGE	Look at the checkmarks. Even though coach Snyder is worried about UNLV's team speed and his players overlooking the Rebels, he still has superior athletes that will outlast UNLV. Plus, many of the players have commented they aren't looking at Nebraska or Kansas. The Cats are ready for the Rebels.	✔

Snyder concerned with UNLV

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Coach Bill Snyder spent little time dwelling on last Saturday's 30-25 win at Minnesota. Instead, he said it is important the Cats move on to the University of Nevada-Las Vegas — Saturday's opponent.

A victory over the Rebels would give K-State a perfect non-conference stint and a 4-0 record for the first time since 1931, when the Cats went 8-2.

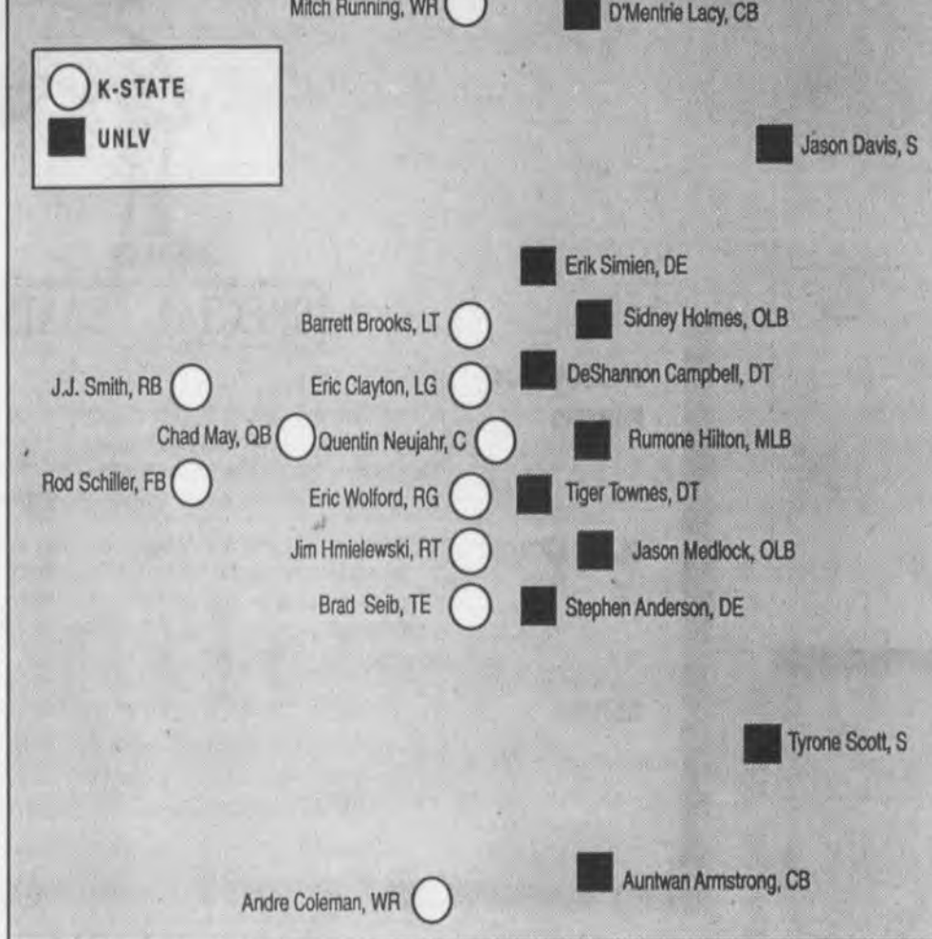
When asked about his team looking past the Rebels, Snyder said he hoped the players would remember a lesson from last year's team.

"It's so important for the focus to remain on UNLV, and that began yesterday afternoon and should continue throughout the week," Snyder said.

"There shouldn't be anything that should be a distraction from that, be it a victory last week or looking ahead to another game.

"I want to believe the players are gaining maturity and should be concentrating on UNLV. If you don't stay on track, we can lose to anybody. You just have to look at what happened when we played Utah State last year and the Utah/Kansas game last week."

The Cats, 3-1 at the time, lost to Utah State 28-16 last season, and Utah handled the Jayhawks 41-16 in Lawrence last Saturday.



K-State will meet UNLV for the first time ever, and Snyder said the Rebels have great mobility.

"They have very athletic players," Snyder said in a press conference in the Big Eight Room of the Vanier Football Complex on Tuesday.

"They have great quickness on the offensive and defensive side of the ball. Probably more than any team we've faced this year. It's a team that concerns me a great deal. They have the potential to create big plays."

K-State scored again with a 15-play, 70-yard scoring drive. Running back J.J. Smith got the touchdown on a two-yard run, giving the Cats a 14-0 lead.

Wright then added a 42-yard field goal for a 17-0 Cat lead.

Everything was going smoothly when Minnesota free safety Jeff Rosga intercepted a May pass and ran 25 yards for a Gopher touchdown. Kicker Mike Chalberg missed the extra point, and the score was 17-6.

The Minnesota offense scored its first touchdown on an 18-yard pass from Schade to running back Chuck Rios. Chalberg's extra point moved Minnesota to within four points at 17-13 at halftime.

May got the Cats their next score with a seven-yard touchdown run on the first play of the fourth quarter to cap a 10-play drive. Wright's extra point made the score 24-13.

Minnesota responded with an 11-play scoring drive with Schade connecting to split end Aaron Osterman on a nine-yard pass for the touchdown. The Gophers failed on a two-point conversion and trailed 24-19 with 8:58 left in the game.

On K-State's next possession, defensive end Andy Kratochvil knocked the ball away from May in the end zone. The fumble was recovered by Minnesota linebacker Craig Sauer for the touchdown. Another two-point conversion failed, but Minnesota was leading 25-24 with 5:33 left in the contest.

After the Gophers scored, Coleman took the ensuing kickoff 72 yards to set up the winning drive. Coleman said the kickoff squad did a great job.

"They had been doing real well on the coverage all game," said Coleman, who had 152 yards in returns. "The pressure was on us, and the guys had to make the blocks. I just ran the ball out, and we laid all it all on the line out there and came through.

"The guys were looking towards me for the big play," Coleman said. "When you've got guys that want to block for us, that makes me want to work harder. Fortunately, we broke it."

May said the team knew they could a win against the Gophers.

"We felt all along that we were going to win this game," said May, who threw for 247 yards on 16 completions. "We just had to go out there and do it."

K-State crew to make debut in KC

The K-State Rowing Association will try to get its season started Oct. 2 with the Head of the Kaw Regatta in Kansas City.

The varsity rowing team would have hit the water this past weekend at Des Moines, Iowa, but flooding on the Des Moines River canceled the event.

Even though the team hasn't competed, Coach Alex Binkowski said it is ready for the Kansas City regatta.

"We're very excited about this race," Binkowski said. "It isn't a high-pressured race. This race is great for spectators. It is behind Kemper Arena, and they plan to have a big barbecue."

The team will compete in one men's- and women's- eight-person boat race and four two-person boat races.

Binkowski said many teams, such as Topeka, Wichita and other rowing squads, could win it.

"It is too early in the season to tell who is going to dominate. It's anybody's ballgame," he said.

Lee Wilbur, varsity rower and sophomore in pre-medicine and nutrition, said the Wichita Rowing Club is a tough competitor.

"Some rowers said they feel Wichita is our rival, but for me it's everyone," Wilbur said.

The Kansas City regatta will be a three-mile head race. The rowers compete against the clock and are started at intervals.

"Your motivation isn't to row the hardest and the fastest, but to have a good solid race," Wilbur said.

Binkowski said the crew was doing well in practices, which take place on the east side of Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

"I'm very pleased with everyone's performance," Binkowski said. "The fall races are a great build-up for the spring."

The team hasn't had much water time lately, and that is an important factor, Wilbur said.

"Though it's more important to have the spirit to think we will do well, we have to learn to trust each other," he said.

The rowers were disappointed their first race was canceled.

"The water is too fast to row on, and the location of the race may be changed, but we decided not to go," Binkowski said. "We will probably have mock races here this weekend for the practice."

Binkowski said the team is looking forward to the Head of Tennessee Regatta in Knoxville, Tenn., on Oct. 23.

"This is a new race for the team. It is a great chance for us to see what teams from the East are doing and what we need to improve on," Binkowski said. "The regattas this season will help us build our endurance and make us work on our technique.

"This will prepare us for the sprint races in the spring, where we compete against other boats."

Ticket Master gives K-State a new mascot

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

They spell Wildcat, J-a-y-h-a-w-k, in Minnesota.

That seemed to be the case when five K-State students received their tickets from Ticket Master for the K-State-Minnesota football game Saturday.

Jason Beckmann, freshman in business law, said the group he traveled with to the game was surprised to find K-State's team misidentified.

"We were all stunned when our friend handed us the tickets," Beckmann said. "We didn't drive 10 hours to be called the Jayhawks, especially since they lost so bad."

Jeff Loomis, junior in marketing, said the mistake should had been caught.

"Anybody that knows anything about major university sports should know the difference between the University of Kansas Jayhawks and the Kansas State Wildcats, especially since we are a major school from a major conference," Loomis said.

"Ticket Master and Minnesota owes K-State a huge apology, regardless whose mistake it was," he said.

Craig Fahey, a representative for the Minnesota ticket information department, said the mistake was caught early.

"There were only about 80 tickets printed incorrectly," Fahey said. "This was a programing mistake made by Ticket Master. Someone from Kansas State notified us of the mistake, and we let Ticket Master know.

"We sent them the correct information," Fahey said.

A representative from Ticket Master in Minneapolis, who identified himself as Patrick, director of marketing, said they are dealing with the mistake within their staff and couldn't comment any further.

"I cannot give out any information until we have taken care of the situation on our staff," he said.

The stadium announcer made the same mistake when he welcomed the K-State Jayhawk fans to the game.

The K-State men's golf team recorded a ninth-place finish out of 24 teams at the Falcon Invitational in Colorado Springs, Colo., this past weekend.

The six-member squad collectively scored a 302, a 312 and a 298 for a three-day total of 912. Colorado won the tournament with a team score of 889.

The team went into the third round six strokes back of Wichita State. Coach Mark Elliott said the Wildcats played a strong concluding round to surpass Wichita State.

"It was important for us to beat WSU, Iowa State University and the University of Missouri, who are all in our region," Elliott said. Wichita State finished 10th; Missouri took 14th, and Iowa State captured 19th place. NCAA regionals are determined by win-lose ratios in a head-to-head competition.

"We played pretty well," said Elliott of the first tournament for the men. "The greens were incredibly difficult, but we did what we had to do for regional teams."

Brett Waldman had a final-round score of 71 to lead the team and take seventh place with scores of 75, 76 and 71, for a total of 222.

"I was pleased with Waldman's performance," Elliott said.

Kory Brown of Baylor University won the tournament with final scores of 75, 66 and 74 for a final score of 215 to take first place.

In his first tournament at K-State, Troy Halterman tallied scores of 74, 76 and 76 for a final score of 226 to place 18th. Jason Losch shot a 76, followed by rounds of 72 and 73 for the next two days to equal 231 for 49th place.

Scoring 77, 78 and 79 for a 234 score was Sean Robertson. He finished 59th in the tournament. Chad Judd, who was slowed by illness, recorded 104th place with scores of 83 in the first two days of competition. He shot a 78 on the final day to end with a 244 score.

The next action for the linksters will be at the First Coast Intercollegiate in Jacksonville, Fla., on Sept. 27.

Civil religion part of politics

Pat Robertson's message not aimed only at Christians

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

The upcoming Landon Lecture featuring Pat Robertson, founder of the Christian Coalition, has sparked interest and apprehension at K-State.

A few campus and Manhattan groups are planning to protest the lecture.

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the president and chairman of the Landon Lecture Series, said Robertson is a qualified candidate for the series because he is public figure.

"Pat Robertson was on the same list with people liKe Pat Buchanan, Jesse Jackson, Paul Tsongas and Ross Perot," Reagan said.

Reagan works with members of the lecture's committee to determine individuals who should be invited to participate in the series.

The Landon Lecture Series was established in 1966 by the late Kansas Gov. Alfred M. Landon, father of U.S. Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan. The series is devoted to prominent national and international figures.

This series has brought various presidents, vice presidents, senators, house members, heads of state, governors, ambassadors, chief justices, cabinet members, generals, religious figures and journalists to campus.

Reagan said he never knows for certain who will be responding to the invitation to speak.

"You never know — the phone may ring, and someone could say 'this is so-and-so, and the senator would like to speak on this date, thank you,'" Reagan said.

Reagan said this year's series may include top officials from the executive branch.

"I believe we will have one or two cabinet members," he said.

Robertson's religious background did not disqualify him as a speaker, Reagan said.

In the past, the Landon Lecture Series has had other religious figures such as Archbishop Fulton J. Sheen and Billy Graham, he said.

Because Robertson ran for president and has been involved with political campaigns, he is qualified as a speaker, Reagan said.

"Only in the minds of some people do you have the difference of politics and religion. Both want to change the world," he said.

Robertson will be a unique speaker because he is a political and religious leader, Robert Linder, professor of history, said.

"Americans historically have been very religious. They assume their religion has had something to do with their politics," Linder said.

Linder said it has always been easy for people to make a distinction between church and state. That distinction has not always been so easily made between politics and religion, said Linder said.

The majority of politicians practice a form of civil religion, Linder said.

"Civil religion is a way of thinking, which makes sacred a political arrangement or governmental system and provides a religious image of a political society for many, if not most, of fd members," Linder said.

"It is a religious way of thinking about politics which provides a society with ultimate meaning, thus making it a genuine religion. Which, in turn, allows a people to look at their political community in a special sense and thus achieve purposeful social integration," Linder said.

"Therefore, it is not a particular or specific religion or expression thereof, but is of such a nature that those who hold specific beliefs can read into it whatever meaning they choose," Linder said.

Civil religion would include the emphasis the United States is God's chosen instrument for whatever is at hand, Linder said. In the 19th century, civil religion's guiding principles were freedom and democracy. In the 20th century, they are freedom and prosperity, he said.

"Most presidents ascribe to this point of view and make references to it in speeches," Linder said.

"Ronald Reagan was the most vivid in civil religion. When he spoke at the Landon Lecture he had the students on the border of adulation. He had lots of standing ovations.

"He spoke a lot about God and America. He said God was using America. Reagan also wanted to get prayer back into public schools," Linder said.

Linder said he believes it is necessary for anyone interested in politics to claim a belief in God whether it is a genuine faith or a form of civil religion.

"The most reliable polls suggest that 80 percent of the public would not vote for someone who didn't believe in God," Linder said.

Linder said he believes Robertson will provide an excellent example of civil religion.

"Pat Robertson will not preach a Christian sermon. He might speak an American sermon," Linder said.

"People will understand him better if they go to hear him speak as an American and not as a Christian."

Union bomb threat under investigation

BOB MACHA
Collegian

An investigation into Tuesday's bomb threat in the K-State Union has not found a suspect or motive.

Richard Herrman, K-State Police Department investigator, said they are still doing an investigation with Union officials.

The officials are checking complaint and personnel records for cases of unruly conduct and disgruntled employees.

Herrman said officials are looking into what groups and activities would have been meeting in the Union at the time of the threat.

"This search should take a couple of days," Herrman said, "They will just be looking for people with a reason."

Herrman said campus police have a tape recording of the call as evidence. All phone calls to campus police are taped.

The tape will be used for by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation or the Federal Bureau of Investigation in convicting a suspect, Herrman said.

Kassebaum defends lecture series

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., defended Pat Robertson's right to deliver a lecture in the lecture series named for her father, Alf Landon.

The Landon Lecture Series was established in 1966 to bring speakers about public-policy issues to campus.

"There can be no question that Pat Robertson has had an impact on public policy," Kassebaum said in a press release. "He has run for president of the United States and now heads a grassroots political network of evangelical Christians who number in the millions."

Kassebaum

Kassebaum said in the release the lecture series was not established to give any one viewpoint the exclusive right to the forum. That audience members can judge the lectures is part of the political discourse of this country, Kassebaum said.

"Pat Robertson was invited to give the Landon Lecture in the same spirit that invitations have been extended to prominent figures with diametrically opposite views from Robertson's such as Jesse Jackson and Edward Kennedy," Kassebaum said.

"The reputation of the Landon Lecture Series was built on the stature and diversity of its speakers, and I am proud of that legacy."

NOW members oppose views

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The local chapter of the National Organization for Women is organizing a protest of Pat Robertson's Oct. 12 Landon Lecture.

"NOW is concerned how Robertson views women and their reproductive rights," Gail Selfridge, member of the local NOW chapter, said.

Selfridge said NOW was not the only organization concerned about Robertson and his views.

Members of the campus ministry, UFM and the Riley County Democratic Party and others will speak at the meeting.

"Women are not the only ones that oppose his views," she said. "There are people who oppose a lot of views on Christianity."

Robertson ran for president in 1988 and is the founder of the Christian Broadcast network, the first of its kind in the United States.

He has supported pro-life and anti-gay views.

Selfridge said people had expressed an interest in protesting.

"We are trying to get people out, but we never know until that day how many people might show up," she said.

Selfridge said it is not NOW's intention to disrupt Robertson's lecture.

Because NOW is opposed to Robertson's views on reproductive rights, Selfridge said there is always the possibility of a counter-protest from pro-life advocates. However, she said she did not feel there would be any problems.

"Everyone has a right to express their views," she said.

K-State Police Department Captain Charles Beckom said he has met with members of the K-State administration to discuss possible security measures for the lecture.

He would not release any specifics about what action might be taken.

However, Beckom said campus police has increased security in the past when national figures visited.

MEETING INFO

■ The group will meet at 7:30 p.m. Friday in the Ecumenical Campus Ministry building to decide if they will protest and what form of protest to take.

Health plan announced

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's plan to make health insurance a birthright of every American would limit a family's out-of-pocket medical expenses to $3,000 a year.

Regardless of age and health, workers would pay equal rates for equal coverage — in the $840-a-year range for an average family policy. Insurance could not be canceled because of losing or changing a job.

Clinton said Wednesday night he would give Americans more choice of health plans, and that would be left to the American citizen, not an employer or the government.

The proposal aims primarily to reach 37 million people who have no insurance at all and 22 million who have inadequate coverage.

A person cannot be denied coverage or required to wait for coverage because of any health condition. No limit on benefits, except for orthodontic services.

Every person would get a card guaranteeing health coverage. The hundreds of different claim forms would be reduced to one.

CLINTON'S OUTLINE

■ States will create separate alliances. Every individual must pay and join an alliance.

■ Costs could range from $70/month for families to $30/month for individuals.

■ Employers would typically pay an additional $280 for family plans and $120 for individuals.

■ There would be three coverage options: low cost, medium-cost and high-cost.

■ Several clinical services are covered fully. This includes such things as prenatal care and immunizations.

■ Families or individuals could buy supplemental insurance to cover a bigger share of the costs not provided under the plan.

Finney to continue gambling negotiations

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. Joan Finney plans to continue to negotiate a gambling compact with the Sac and Fox Tribes, but will not talk anymore to three other tribes with reservations in Kansas.

In a letter made public Wednesday, Finney told Rep. Clyde Graeber, R-Leavenworth, chairman of the Joint Committee on Indian Gaming, that the compacts with the other tribes had been rejected by the Legislature.

The Senate rejected the compacts negotiated with the Kickapoo and Potawatomi tribes during the 1993 session, and the Legislative Coordinating Council rejected the Iowa compact after the Legislature adjourned. All three were essentially the same.

The Joint Committee on Indian Gaming returned the Sac and Fox compact to Finney's office for revision. The compact was far less restrictive than the other three, allowing sports gambling and video slot machines.

Ex-KU football player caught in Florida

BISBEE, Ariz. (AP) — One of four inmates who escaped from the Cochise County Jail 10 days ago was caught Wednesday in Florida, an official said.

Authorities received an anonymous tip from someone who had seen Drayton's case Tuesday night on Fox Television's "America's Most Wanted," Capas said. He was caught about 12:15 p.m. Wednesday, Capas said.

Drayton, a wide receiver who received an honorable mention All-Big Eight award playing football from 1988 to 1991 at the University of Kansas, had been living in Sierra Vista this summer. Authorities believed he might have been headed to Lawrence because of his campus ties.

Thieves steal cellular numbers from air

NEW YORK (AP) — Stolen cellular phone numbers plucked from thin air have led to millions of dollars in illegal calls, and phone companies don't know how to prevent the thefts.

One of the latest cases was cracked in New York this week when six men were charged with scanning the airwaves for numbers and programming them into unauthorized phones.

Cellular telephone calls, which are carried on radio frequencies, contain two electronic codes that thieves can get by copying them off equipment.

Brokers buy policies from AIDS patients

BOSTON (AP) — One insurance regulator called it profiteering on the terminally ill.

But brokers in an emerging line of business that buys insurance policies from AIDS patients said they are helping people who desperately need cash.

Some insurance regulators worry sick people will become easy prey for such businesses.

This industry was a topic of discussion Tuesday at a meeting in Boston of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. The association's Life Insurance Committee proposed a model law that would license the brokers.

Also, it would require them to inform clients that the cash they get from their life insurance policies is taxable, and that it may make them ineligible for public assistance such as Medicaid.

Man arrested on suspicion of arson

MUSKOGEE, Okla. (AP) — A Muskogee man was being held without bail Wednesday on complaints of setting fire to a two-story house in which his 30-year-old wife and four young children perished.

Curtis Lee Foster Jr. told authorities he managed to flee the burning house Tuesday night, but it was too hot and smoky to go back in for the others.

Neighbors reported hearing an argument and someone saying "Don't throw the gas" shortly before an explosion that sent flames through the windows upstairs, District Attorney John David Luton said.

Because of the size of the fire, firefighters had to wait nearly five hours before they could retrieve the charred bodies of Ledavon Foster, 30; Brian Burks, 9; Kristi Burks, 7; Nicky Foster, 3; and Tiffany Foster, 2.

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A sixth-grader trying to become the youngest girl to fly across the United States was halfway through her journey Tuesday.

Victoria Van Meter, 11, was given a rousing welcome that included being made an honorary mayor and an application from the Ninety-Nines — an Oklahoma City-based club for female pilots co-founded by Amelia Earhart.

Van Meter, of Meadville, Pa., has another five years before she is eligible for a pilot's license. But she took off from Augusta, Maine, Monday at the controls of a single-engine Cessna 172 with her instructor, Bob Baumgartner. He said Van Meter would handle all the flying and navigating, as well as most of the radio communication.

Koon not scared of going to jail

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A police sergeant convicted in the Rodney King beating said Wednesday he is heading to federal prison with a pure heart and has no fear about his safety while behind bars.

Sgt. Stacey Koon said in a radio interview he is bolstered by support from family and friends, his faith in God and a strong belief his actions were within police policy and may have saved officers' lives.

Koon said he will surrender to U.S. marshals before "high noon" Monday in downtown Los Angeles to start serving his sentence.

Yeltsin gains strength, support from people

MOSCOW (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin's bid to control Russia gained strength Wednesday, buoyed by support from the army and cheering crowds. His hard-line opposition sat barricaded in parliament, struggling to respond.

Bonfires burned for a second night outside the Russian parliament building, where as many as 5,000 anti-Yeltsin demonstrators circled the building to protest his suspension of parliament Tuesday. Protesters waved red Soviet flags and stockpiled rocks, pipes and Molotov cocktails.

Despite appeals by Yeltsin's opponents for a nationwide strike, there were no reports of protests elsewhere. State television aired the usual shows. Traffic was normal, and many Muscovites sat outside enjoying the balmy weather.

CORRECTION

■ Due to a reporter's error in a page one story Wednesday, the Ken Ebert Design Group was incorrectly identified as Ebert and Associates. The design group is a construction firm, not an architectural firm.

The story also incorrectly stated the dispute between Palenske and Maughmer involved Palenske's question about the qualifications of the construction firm. In fact, the dispute involved Palenske's question about the qualifications of the contractor chosen for phase one of ADA improvements in Manhattan.

Children return; illness unknown

KIM DILLON
Collegian

Children returned to Hoeflin Stone House child-care center Wednesday morning, but the cause of their illnesses is still unknown.

The center closed because several children and teachers became ill after the center was sprayed for termites Sept. 9.

About 19 children and seven teachers had some symptoms from the incident, but everyone has since recovered, said Sharon Wolff, Kansas child-care licensing evaluator with the Riley County Health Department.

Preliminary results from the air monitoring done Sept. 17 at the center show no pesticide residue was detected on the first and second levels of the center, and a low level in the basement, where the spraying was done.

Preliminary results from the swipe testing showed low levels of residue on the first and second levels of the center.

In the restoration area that was sprayed, a higher level of residue was found.

This does not mean anything about how much Dursban, the pesticide, was applied, Steve Galitzer, industrial hygienist for K-State's Department of Public Safety, said.

Galitzer said the center has been thoroughly cleaned since the pesticide was applied.

The Kansas Board of Agriculture is investigating this incident as a possible improper application of Dursban, Galitzer said.

Under Kansas law, the pesticide supervisor has to be certified, but the applicator only needs training, Galitzer said.

K-State tries to make rules stricter because it has such a large work force, Galitzer said.

A campus-wide policy for pesticide application is being developed, instead of leaving policies up to individual departments, Galitzer said.

Galitzer said he is waiting for the Kansas Board of Agriculture and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment to finish their reports so he can write his.

"We may never find out precisely what happened," Galitzer said.

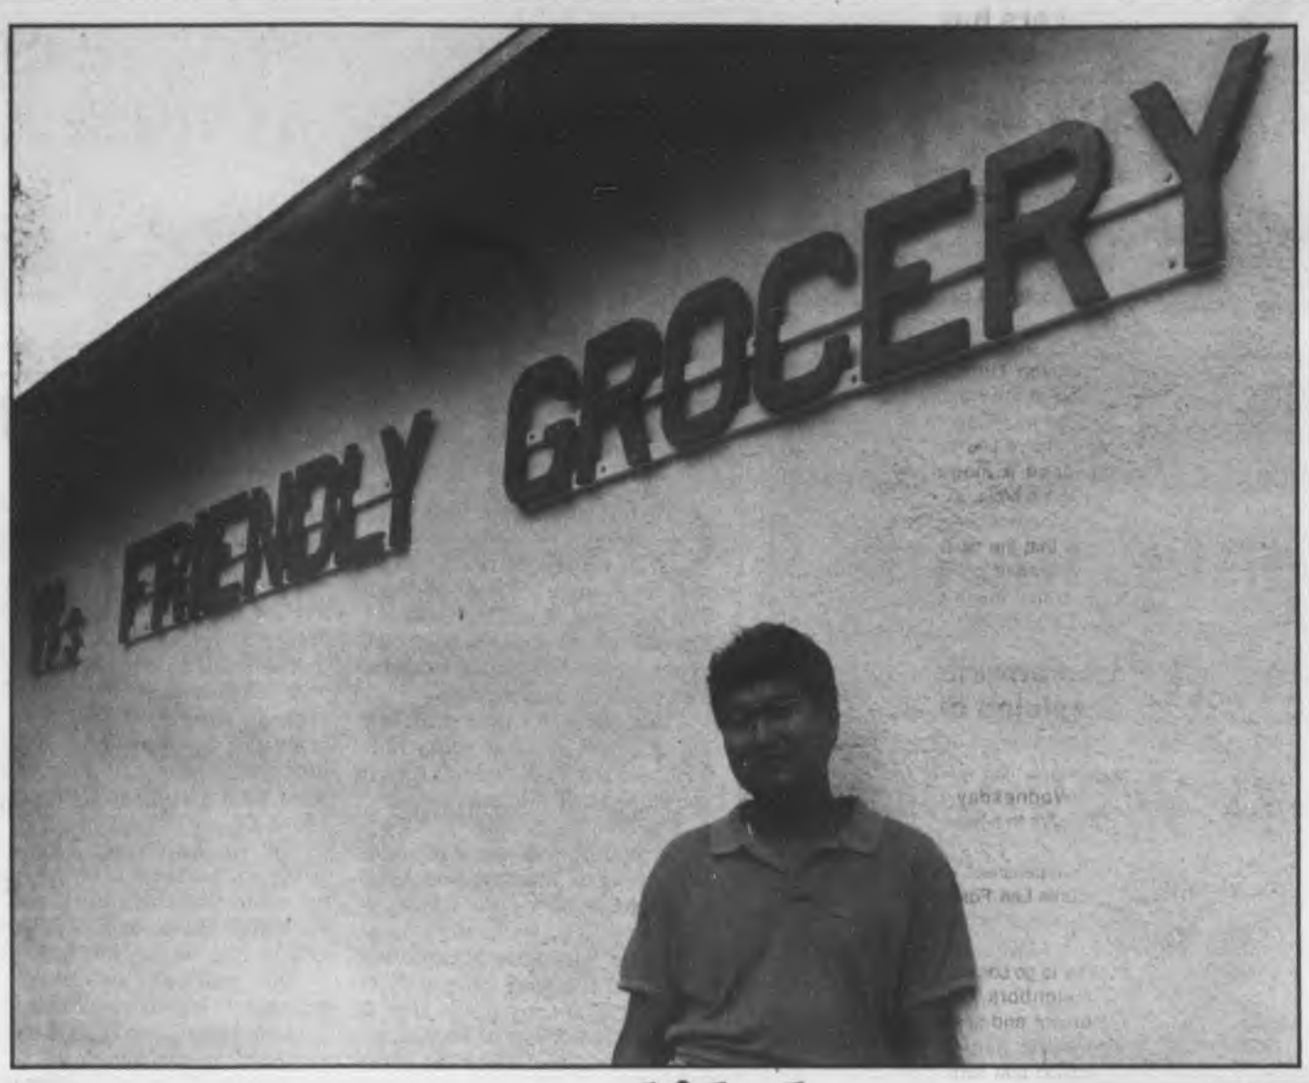
Library expansion will aid accessibility

RACHEL HART
Collegian

Architects working on the proposed expansion of the Manhattan Public Library shared the blue prints with Manhattan residents Wednesday night.

The expansion project, estimated at $2.7 million, has been under consideration for four years, Library Director Fred Atchison said.

"The theme we wanted to convey was to provide the necessary space while preserving the integrity of the building," Patrick Schaub, associate of Brent Bowman and Associates Architects, said.



Architect Brent Bowman said the plan was designed to maintain the commitment to a sense of place, originally done by architect Bill Eidson.

"We walk by and daydream about the project with respect to the community and what our notion of the expansion should be," Bowman said.

Handicapped accessibility, expansion of the children's library and the new parking lot were topics of concern for the citizens who viewed the plans.

Residents were concerned about Jim Irvine's house at 612 Houston St., which will be torn down to

Yi's Friendly Market caters to international taste with gourmet cuisine

RACHEL HART

A family business has found a market for dried anchovies and lotus roots in small-town America.

Yi's Friendly Market, 1030 Colorado St., is filled with brightly-colored jars and smells of exotic spices.

Customers can buy Korean cookbooks, fresh oriental vegetables or rent a videotape of a Chinese soap opera. Along with Tofu and ginseng tea, they sell cookware, noodles and American soda.

"We cover all Asian specialty items. If we don't have what they need, we try to get it," owner Sung Hui Yi said.

"We wanted to start a business, but we wanted to do something we knew quite well," Yi said.

A variety of customers shop there, including K-State international students. The countries represented by the store's customers include Japan, China, Taiwan, Indonesia, Thailand, Philippines, Hong Kong, Singapore, India and Korea, Chee said.

Daejong Kim, president of the Korean Student Association and a graduate student in business administration, said it's very difficult to adjust to an American diet. Shopping at Yi's, he said, allows him to cook like he did in Korea.

After one week in America, Kim said he was craving kim chi, a Korean salad made with spices, cabbage and onions. American food is too fattening and greasy, Kim said.

Many international students also have trouble digesting the Kansas mainstream milk and beef products, Harold Prins, professor of anthropology, said.

"Very often, non-European peoples cannot digest milk products. Their stomach simply doesn't allow it to break-down properly," Prins said.

In addition, Yi said, customers to the Yi's market travel from Topeka, St. Marys and Junction City to shop for the specialty items.

"Every week we drive here from Topeka to do our shopping," Darrell Patnode, Topeka resident, said.

Patnode said he has known the Yi family for 20 years. His wife, Kim, is Korean, and they said enjoy eating Korean food because it's healthier.

"Do you ever see fat Koreans?" Kim Patnode said. "Oriental people are healthy because there's not as much grease — mostly vegetables and spice."

Students' input necessary for diversity overlay

Faculty Senate would be remiss in its duties to the students if it failed to develop a diversity-overlay plan.

K-State has had a long commitment to diversity, such as hosting the upcoming Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week. Part of this commitment is all students understand and appreciate the diversity of other cultures.

The diversity overlay would require students in every college to use existing classes to educate themselves about the similarities and differences between cultures. It received a lot of support last spring at student forums, but has that energy carried over to this semester?

There is more than one committee working on diversity-overlay proposals. Will the students have anything to look forward to by the end of this semester?

It is being reviewed in a subcommittee of Faculty Senate, and an issue of this importance should not be overlooked by students. This is why our input is so valuable.

The proposal has a few problems, such as no class being offered at K-State-Salina to fulfill the requirement. It will probably go through several changes and revisions. This is when and if, it is passed out of committee and advanced to the full Faculty Senate.

Students can express their opinions by talking to Ann Butler or Harriet Ottenheimer, members of the Faculty Senate committee who are dealing with the diversity overlay. Give them your input on the plan. Both of them are located in Leasure Hall 3.

Students can also talk to Dan Lewerenz, director of multicultural affairs for student government, or Steffany Carrel, chair of the Academic Affairs Committee in Student Senate. They can both be reached through the Student Activities and Services Office on the first floor of the Union.

As the United States becomes more diverse, the University has to keep up with the cultural changes. It is up to the student body to demand K-State make the necessary adjustments to keep up with these changes.

What is good for the student ...

Come and listen to a story 'bout a man named Dave. In the fall of 1987, I came to K-State from a school of about 240 students. I walked into my first college class and was greeted by the sight of 350 other students. That really freaked me out.

Then the geeky little professor got up before all of us geeky little freshmen and said, "I don't care if you come to class or not."

So I didn't.

What followed was a semester of sleeping in, drinking beer I had smuggled into my dorm room and making time with my then-girlfriend who later became my wife. At the end of my first semester, I got my grade slip. It had an ugly word on it: Probation.

But I went back to school in the spring, thinking I could get myself squared away. But what followed was much of the same.

And, in short, the grade slip came at the end of the spring with another, even uglier word on it: Dismissal.

So, failing at college, I went to work in a bookstore, delivered some pizzas, played records and read weather on a local radio station and volunteered my time to the FONE Crisis Center.

And one day I woke up around 3 p.m., looked in the mirror, and a voice said, "Dave, you were going to be a journalist, remember?"

Sometime last week, Faculty Senate decided to change the policy of letting little Daves go through a whole year of school with a below-2.0 GPA and then kicking them out for one full semester to a policy of kicking little Daves out for a whole year if their first semester GPA is not above 1.0.

Cut to the chase: This new policy sucks. There is little hope in my mind that this policy will be reversed. Some say it is good. Others, like me, say it is bad.

No student deserves an education. I agree with that. The sticking point is no student should be denied an education.

K-State, though full of Truman scholars, rising-from-the-ashes football teams, pretty lawns and the nation's No. 1 debate team, can sometimes be downright unfriendly. The cynic in me does not think Faculty Senators will come to their collective senses and reverse this bonehead policy.

The smartass in me thinks Student Senate should one-up Faculty Senate by passing a policy that gives grades to teachers.

Then, if the teacher does not pass muster, (some arbitrary average number must be established that teachers must achieve), then the professor should be suspended for a full year without pay.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

This policy would have to apply to all teachers because the state spends more money each year supporting bad professors than it does financing bad first-year students.

An education is something that should be worked for and not something to be handed to an undeserving student, that's true.

Conversely, no teacher deserves a job either.

Antithetical to that argument is that bad teachers do more harm to students' education than any student could do to her or himself.

Now the shoe is on the other foot, Faculty Senate. Tell me: How does it feel?

The moral of the story is this: after failing two semesters and sitting out one, Dave came back to school.

He is sometimes still lazy and uninspired when it comes to his studies. But he is trying like hell to get that degree.

If someone had kicked me out for a full year after my first semester, it is hard to say if I would have come back.

I do know that after sitting out one semester, I came back with a better idea of how to handle college. This leads me to think the new policy was unwarranted. If poor scholars can't hack it at K-State, they have the chance to go somewhere else.

Can bad teachers find another job? I doubt it.

There is a footnote to all of this. The Kansas Board of Regents has raised your tuition so the State of Kansas can raise salaries for your professors.

If someone comes to you and asks if the professors deserved the raise, think hard about it. Think very, very hard.

Elements of Sex: Part II

As I surmised in my column last week, there was (and still is) considerable confusion out there about sex. Literally tons of mail — bag upon bewildered bag — covered the east entrance to Kedzie Hall by Friday morning. And because of this overwhelming response, I feel it is my duty to print some of the letters and offer a public reply so that you, a devoted Collegian reader, might benefit.

"Dear Brad: Thank you so much for your hard-hitting, honest, straight-forward column about sex. Young people today need to know the facts before they start foolin' around (my husband, Charlie, says to say 'Hello' and that 'foolin' around' is what got him where he is today).

However, one of the things you failed to mention (and I would sincerely like to know), is, 'Where do babies come from?' Yours truly, Naomi Shank, mother of six."

Naomi, due to the mature nature of your question, I had to consult Dr. Dustin, my 5-year-old son.

Me: "Dustin, tell me, where did you come from?"

Dr. Dustin: "Fwom outside."

Me: "No, I mean how did you get here?"

Dr. Dustin: "I walked (big grin)."

Me : "Let me put it another way: Where were you before you came into the world?"

Dr. Dustin: "I was sittin' wif Keeshan in da dog house."

There you have it, Naomi. It doesn't get much clearer than that.

"Dear Brad: Where did the word 'sperm' come from? Please hurry. Signed, Winnefred Blau."

Winnefred, actually the word is Olde English and originated in the ladies' hair salons of South Yorkhampshireshoptown, England. These places (even today) are veritable hotbeds of talk about sex. Therefore, it should come as no surprise that the first occurrence of the word "sperm" was actually a misspelling of the word "perms" in a hair-styling salon. To avoid any future embarrassment with your stylist, be sure to take special notice of the similarity – SPERM ... PERMS. Remember to ask for the latter.

"Dear Brad: How can a person tell the difference between male and female sperm? Sincerely, Roxanne Humpback."

Roxanne, Roxanne, Roxanne ... I am afraid you have your sperms all confused. There is no such thing as "female" sperm. Men only produce "sperm," whereas women produce "eggs" and these small, flat, round things called "eggos." And it takes at least one of all three (including butter and syrup) to make a healthy fetus.

BRAD SEABOURN

However, there are different kinds of sperm. Normally, sperm are naturally attracted to eggs. But there are some sperm that are attracted to other sperm. This really makes the other sperm uneasy. That is why when you look at a gaggle of sperm under a microscope, with the exception of the one or two attracted to each other, most of them are running from each other in all directions. Sperm are very sensitive on this issue.

Usually sperm are very aggressive and will seek out eggs, most often after class or on a Saturday night. However, there are some sperm that are just the opposite. These "immature" sperm are shy and have even been observed under a microscope to run and hide (somewhere near the slide clamps) when approached by an egg.

Now, here is another "sex fact:" one way you can tell the difference between sperm and egg is that sperm will always forget to put the seat up before using the toilet, or forget to put the seat down after using the toilet. But then there are those sperm that put the seat up after using the toilet; however, nearly all of these sperm are destroyed by hostile "killer" eggs before they actually reach a receptive female.

These letters, of course, are only a small sampling of the hundreds of questions you, the ever-curious reader, asked on the subject of sex. If you have any further questions, please direct them to Dr. Dustin. The last time I checked, he was out in his office sitting with the dog.

▶ MYTHS ABOUT MEN

Men are not the out-of-control animals they are thought to be

Editor,

I applaud Erin Mansur-Smith for educating us about the danger women face.

I take offense at the statement, "and don't ever tell yourself that you wouldn't take advantage of a woman if the situation presented itself."

The two big myths about men are that they reach a point when sexually excited where they have no control, and they have complete control over their erections.

The former myth has been used to blame women for rape. "You got me excited, and I couldn't stop myself," many men have said to a woman.

The latter myth has prevented us from believing men can be raped by women.

The prevalence of rape of women by men is due to a flaw in our society and not to innate characteristics of the two sexes.

I remember reading that many men, when told to prove their loyalty in the Yugoslavian war, chose the bullet over raping a neighbor's daughter.

▶ PLUS/MINUS

New grading policy will create more problems for students

Editor,

I completely agree with the editorial on the plus/minus system. This bill is the worst idea I have ever heard of.

Please let us know where we can call/write/picket to complain. Under this bill, all our students are at a disadvantage compared with not only University of Kansas, but the nation.

In addition, this will screw up all GPA requirements for honoraries and any other national requirements.

In the classroom, this will put undue pressure on students because it creates more borderline cases.

In many classes, the difference between an A and A- would be a single question on a test. If you think there is a lot of student/teacher conflict about grades, just wait until next year.

I can only hope my teachers will refuse to waste their time with this system.

At least teachers should be able to elect whether or not to use this method.

My only other alternative is to reconsider finding a way to graduate early.

▶ 1.0 GPA DEBATE

Here's one possible alternative to the new GPA expulsion policy

Editor,

Concern has been expressed by many about the recently passed GPA policy.

Dan Lewerenz pointed out on the Monday Opinion page that GPA based-cutoff will reduce the number of graduates, which will reduce the state funding of K-State in return, calling for a tuition rise. OK, I say. Let's raise the tuition. More specifically, let's raise the campus fee.

Let's establish a fund into which a certain part of every student's campus fee will be deposited each semester. Then, only those who successfully graduate will get their deposit money back (to help, for instance, pay off their student loans).

The GPA cutoff shall remain, although I would recommend to set the standard higher — 1.5 — with one semester probation.

The result? Students who came to college just to give it a try get their chance and get the probation time to overcome the "college shock."

Anyone who gets in personal troubles has more time to overcome them. After probation, those who really can't keep up will be dismissed, leaving their "deposit fee" behind.

The same money then shall be used to finance an improved academic advisory system.

This model, of course, does not provide for direct bringing up the enrollment rate, and the higher campus fee will not draw crowds in. But in the long run, it would increase graduation percentage and thus the academic standing of K-State.

▶ CAMPUS PARKING

Parking-lot designer should pay for paving workers into a corner

Editor,

A couple of comments about the new and "improved" Lot A-23, north of King Hall, from which we were routed last May 18 and to which we have been eagerly awaiting re-entrance. Four months later, I notice they have managed to move two light poles and close the entrance.

It seems when workmen finally found their way into this lot through the main entrance at the south side, they unwittingly closed it behind them and have been trying to find their way out ever since. It seems appropriate to provide a reserved stall labeled "Parking Lot Designer" in the space provided by closing the south entrance so all of us will be able to offer our comments to this parking-lot design genius.

This will also be convenient as this person should be required to assume new duties as a traffic director each morning and evening at the north entrance/exit to direct vehicles into/out of this parking pit. This will be necessary during December through March when the two - to three-inch-thick sheet of ice forms at the north end untouched by snow blade or sand truck.

"I have strong objections to destroying the Irvine house," Gary Ellis, Manhattan resident, said. "You are destroying houses to build a parking lot."

Irvine sold his house to the library for the project.

"We're concerned about being good neighbors," Bowman said. "If the parking situation is not addressed in some way, the integrity and very function of this library is compromised."

Bowman said the firm wanted to allow the downtown community to interact with the library. A way to establish this goal is to add more entrances. The expansion will add two entrances.

One of these entrances will be automatic doors leading into the Blind and Physically Handicapped Library, or commonly referred to as "talking books."

Atchison said this was a great improvement over the location in the old building. These services are now located up two flights of stairs, through a room and down a hallway.

Natural lighting was another element of concern. Bowman said there will be an atrium built between the old building and the new addition. The natural lighting would serve as a point of reference.

"We didn't want people to feel like they were walking into a completely different building. So, we built the atrium," Bowman said.

"Children have to run all the way up to this room on the the second floor for story time, which is a pretty frightful part of a librarian's day," Bowman said.

Bowman said the addition allowed for the reading room and the children's library to be connected. A children's garden is also part of the addition.

"I'm looking forward to see an expanded library," Patricia Clark, Manhattan resident, said. "I think it's going to be an anchor to the community."

Ekeler enjoying his role with the Wildcats

Special teams standout seeks thrills of making big tackles

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Mike Ekeler is a different kind of guy and a different kind of football player.

When asked how he describes his role on the football field, he refers to a quote, from former New York Jets coach Walt Michaels, that hangs in his locker.

"Everyone has fear. If you don't have fear, then you belong in an institution or on special teams."

And it is on the Wildcat special teams unit where Ekeler, a linebacker, does most of his work.

"Most people think I am crazy," Ekeler said. "But I just choose to exert my excess energy in a different way."

"The job he has is perfectly suited for him," Nick Quartaro, special teams coach, said. "His only responsibility is to run down the field, find the man with the ball and tackle him."

Ekeler said K-State's kickoff team is known to the players as the OOOOH squad. Their main objective is to tackle someone so hard that the fans yell "OOOOH."

"I want to help the team in any capacity possible," he said. "I really don't care what it is."

However, that isn't the only noise the crowd has been making.

Fans in the student section have been heard chanting his name in anticipation of one of his patented flips over the other team's blockers.

"That excites me more than anything else," Ekeler said.

"When you are on the field, and you hear the crowd yelling your name, it makes all the hard work seem worth it."

Ekeler said the ultimate play would be for him and teammate Kitt Rawlings to fly over the wedge of blockers, decapitate the runner and break into a Samoan war dance.

"There really isn't any specific steps to the dance, but Kitt is part Samoan, and we think it's fun."

Quartaro said after the Minnesota game that Ekeler went to the locker room in good shape.

But after things settled down and Coach Bill Snyder began to speak, Ekeler was standing there with a bloody nose.

Ekeler got injured during the post-game celebration.

"He is a very emotional guy, with a lot of enthusiasm, and there is nothing wrong with that," Quartaro said.

"When my four years at K-State are finished, I'm willing my body to science. After my last game, I want to crawl off the field."
MIKE EKELER
SPECIAL TEAMS PLAYER

Ekeler came to K-State as a walk-on and immediately earned a spot on the travel squad for his fearless play on special teams.

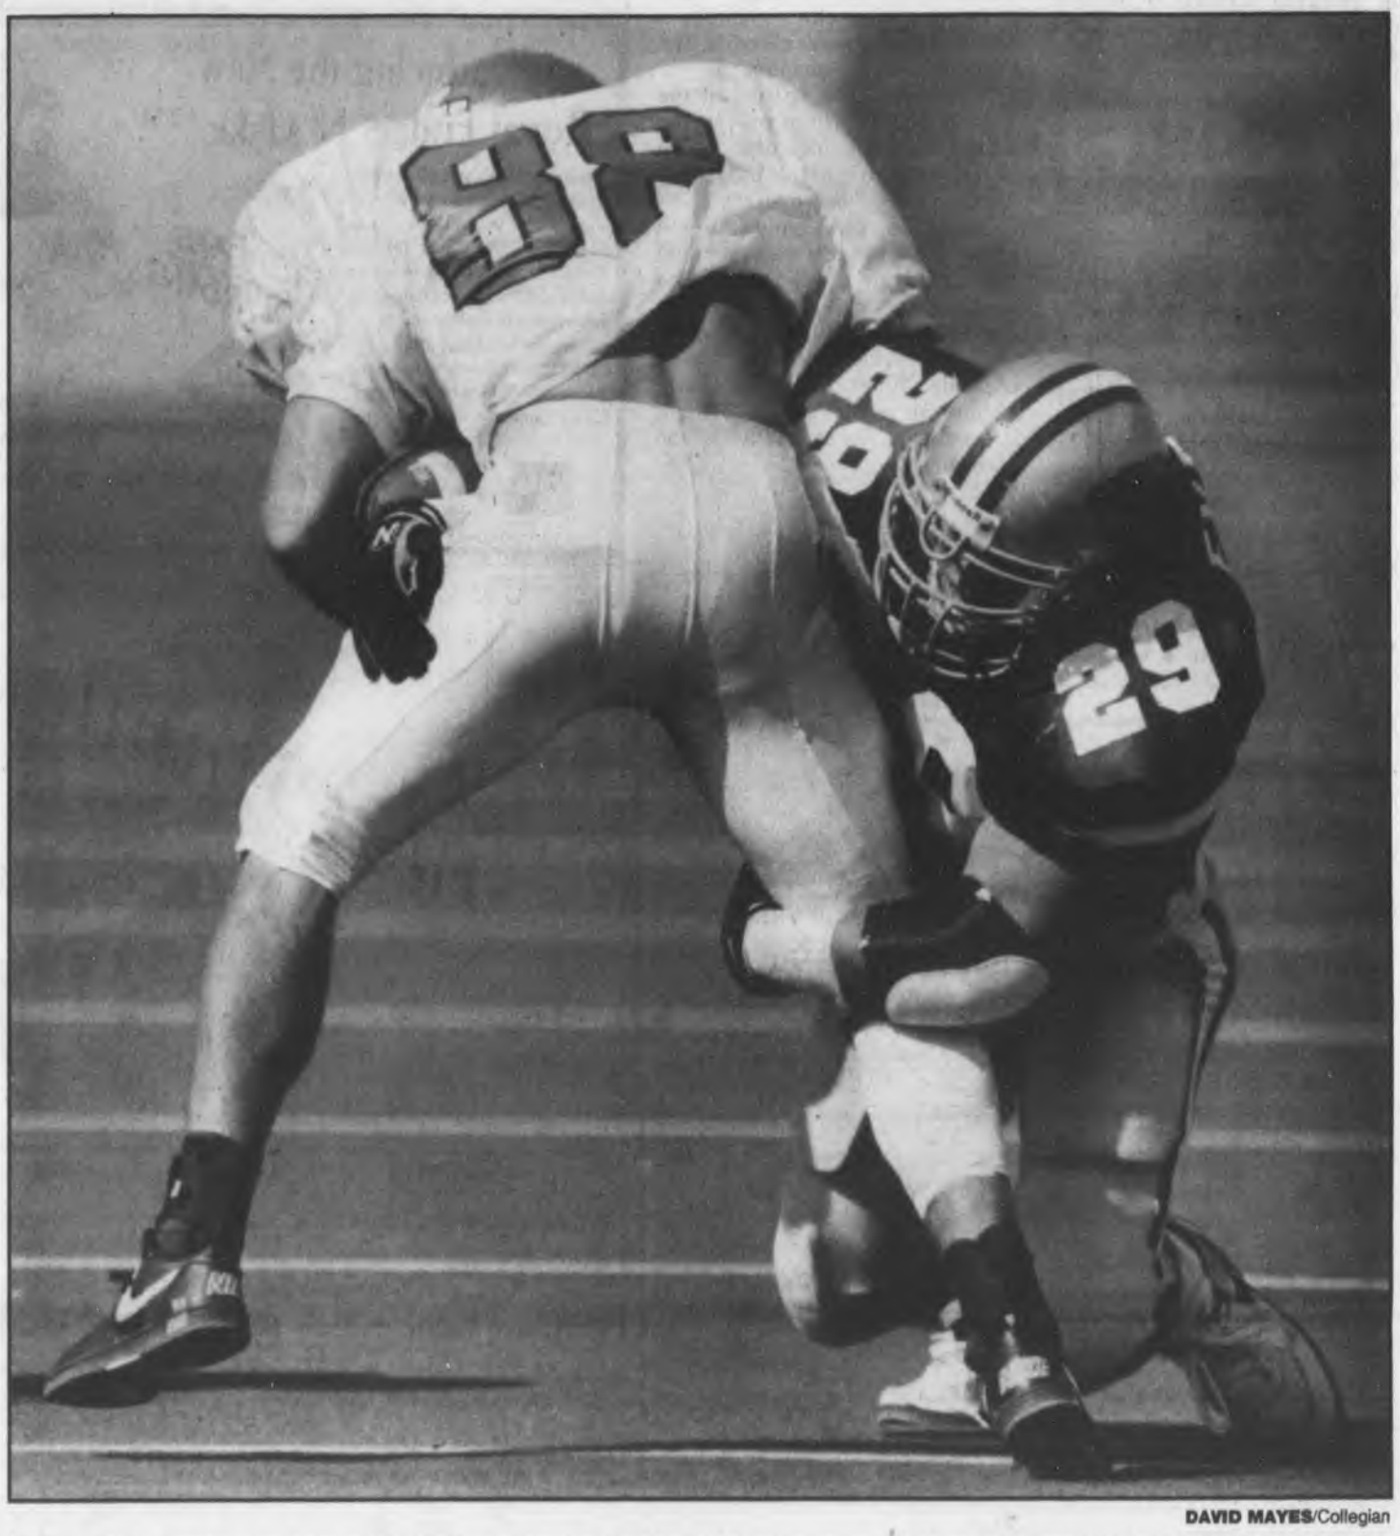
"He is definitely crazy," linebacker coach Jim Leavitt said. "He loves to play football, and I love to coach people who love to play football."

Ekeler's love for the game started in Blair, Neb., he said, where he attended every Nebraska home game with his family.

"I grew up around the game," Ekeler said.

"I remember how exciting the games at Lincoln were, and I want K-State to get to that level."

All of the success he has gained on the field has been accomplished through nothing but hard work, Ekeler said.



"He is a very durable player who is always practicing and always working hard," Leavitt said.

Bob Martin, Ekeler's uncle, was an all-American at Nebraska and served as an early inspiration for him.

Ekeler said that when his football career at K-State is finished, he wants to be remembered as a player who made a name for himself and who never backed down from a challenge.

"When my four years at K-State are finished, I'm willing my body to science," he said.

"After my last game, I want to crawl off the field."

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Mike Ekeler makes an open-field tackle during the Western Kentucky game at home Saturday, Sept. 11. Ekeler came to K-State as a walk-on and has contributed to the special teams and defensive units.

Fall Hunting Show to feature daily seminars and supplies

All hunters who have attended a gun show and bean disappointed at the lack of hunting supplies now have a show designed for them.

The Fall Hunting Show will debut in Concordia this weekend.

It offers an opportunity for hunters to ask questions of outdoors professionals from Kansas and Nebraska.

The show will feature daily seminars on hunting and trapping topics and will have day-long booths featuring everything a hunter could ever need.

The show will be in the National Guard Auditorium, and the cost of admission is $2.50.

I've heard the show labeled as the best series of seminars on hunting in Kansas.

TAD MUSSELWHITE

Larry Wright, Fall Hunting Show coordinator, said, "What we are doing is bringing a big show to a little town.

"This will be the first time a show like this has ever been held here."

Various gun shows have taken place all over Kansas and Nebraska, but never to my knowledge has anything like this show appeared.

The show will be set up very professionally with curtains around each booth, rather than a long line of tables with merchandise typical of most gun shows, Wright said.

Booths will feature everything from gun shops and archery shops to hunting dogs and dog-food information.

Hunters will be able to purchase a large variety of merchandise, including guns, bows, calls, camouflage and other hunting paraphernalia.

The World Turkey Federation, Ducks Unlimited, Bowhunter's Association and members of the Kansas Wildlife and Parks Department will also be attending.

If you have never spoken to a representative from one of these groups, make it a point to stop and listen to what they have to say. You will be amazed at the work these groups do for wildlife and hunters.

Wright said he coordinated a fishing show last spring that brought a crowd of more than 2,000 people from around the area.

He said he hopes the crowd for the hunting show will be just as large of a crowd if not larger.

This weekend offers every hunter a place to go to look around at the different products available, learn new techniques and tactics and talk to each other about hunting.

I would urge anyone interested to go out and show your support for what the coordinators of this show have done. A large turnout will only encourage more shows in the future.

It will be a weekend event you won't want to miss.

Ryan's career may end early

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Nolan Ryan's 27-year baseball career may have ended Wednesday night when a doctor found a suspected torn ligament in the Texas Rangers pitcher's right elbow.

Baseball's strikeout king failed to retire a Seattle batter, walking four and allowing two hits, including a grand slam to Dann Howitt, and trailed 5-0 when relieved in the first inning.

When he came out, Ryan asked to be examined by a doctor, Rangers' traveling secretary Dan Schimek said. Mariner team physician Dr. Larry Pedegana said he suspected Ryan has a torn ulnar collateral ligament.

Schimek said if the diagnosis is correct, Ryan won't be able to pitch again this season, which he has said is his last.

Ryan's last road start was over while fans were still filing into the Kingdome. For only the third time in his career, Ryan failed to retire a batter.

A crowd of about 50,000 gave Ryan a standing ovation when he walked to the mound to start the game, and the fans gave him another standing ovation when he left. Ryan walked into the locker room after being replaced by Steve Dreyer and then returned to the field to wave to the crowd.

On the disabled list 114 days this season because of injuries, Ryan entered the game with a 5-4 record and a 4.21 earned-run average.

He was making his 13th start of the year and was scheduled to make two more, Tuesday against Oakland and on Oct. 3 against Kansas City in the last game at Arlington Stadium.

Ryan had earlier failed to retire a batter in 1971 for the New York Mets against St. Louis and in 1991 for the Rangers against the New York Yankees.

Expos tame hot Braves

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTREAL — Jeff Fassero and the rest of the Montreal Expos knew what another loss to Atlanta, be it a rout or a one-run decision, would mean.

For a day, they can stop worrying.

Fassero tamed the Braves' torrid bats, striking out a career-high 11 and pitching the Expos to a 6-1 victory Wednesday night that tightened one NL race and kept another one close.

Plus, the Expos played their game. Montreal used its speed to steal four bases, setting up four runs, and rookies Rondell White and Wil Cordero each drove in two runs.

Montreal remained 5 1/2 games behind Philadelphia in the East. The Phillies beat Florida 2-1 in 12 innings and cut their magic number to six.

Atlanta's lead in the West was reduced to 2 1/2 games by San Francisco, which defeated Houston 1-0, leaving the Braves' magic number at nine.

On Tuesday night, Atlanta tied a team record for runs, getting 16 hits with three homers and six doubles. Against Fassero they managed only four hits in eight innings.

The three-game series ends Thursday when Dennis Martinez, who turned down a trade to Atlanta last month, faces Greg Maddux. The Expos have won 20 of their last 24, the Braves 32 of 40.

Fassero, who started his first game in the majors on July 10 after 161 relief appearances, walked just one and surpassed his career-best of 10 strikeouts.

■ Library agricultural center revamps

Farrell Library's agricultural center has received a facelift.

The Postharvest Documentation Service has been changed to the Information Support Services for Agriculture.

The Postharvest Documentation Service generally helped agricultural clients by providing information solely concerning crops, Donna Schenck-Hamlin, director of ISSA., said.

ISSA has expanded by providing more than than crop information. It covers almost anything in the agricultural field, from livestock to pesticides.

Governmental and private institutions request long-term research projects from ISSA, Schenck-Hamlin said.

"We have formalized something that already existed into a new entity," she said.

Brice Hobrock, dean of University Libraries, and Marc Johnson, dean of the College of Agriculture, worked with Farrell Library to establish the new department.

"It's a way to combine our support and work on issues for international agriculture," Hobrock said.

I.S.S.A. has new capabilities that can expand further than what Postharvest did, Schenck-Hamlin said.

"The office can work on anything that collects a long-term development of information, partnerships for projects, managing collections of information and developing data bases," she said.

■ Computing and Network Services gets director

The new director of Computing and Network Services said he wants his department to be partners in technology, bringing together campus resources, software, facilities and people.

Computer technology helps people do their jobs, John Bucher, director of Computing and Network Services, said.

Bucher became director this fall and is working on new ideas that will benefit students and faculty using the computer systems.

"I want to focus the direction of the department and to sharpen it up," Bucher said. "We need to form a team effort."

John Bucher

His job is assisting students to become life-long scholars, he said.

Bucher, who has worked with computer services at the University of Kansas and South Dakota, said he wants the Computing Services staff to work together to market their services by using advertising, special publications and speaking to campus groups.

The Computing Service is currently publishing a newsletter to inform students and faculty of upcoming changes. He said would also like to see customer service and the overall reputation of the service improve.

Computing and Network Services has a lot to offer students and faculty, Bucher said .

One is a program called MATT. This program allows students and faculty to link up almost anywhere in the world, he said.

Other services include the Unicorn Information System. This systems gives students and faculty easy access to campus information, including calendars, weather data, line schedules and campus jobs.

■ K-State–Salina gets flight-program director

The new director of maintenance for the Professional Flight Program at K-State-Salina has been interested in aircraft since he was a child.

"My father inspired me a lot because he was a pilot," William Garrison, director of maintenance, said. "I flew with him to many places."

Garrison, who grew up in Fort Riley, started his position with the flight program in January 1993.

The program involves certifying, experimenting and test-flying an Assessment 3-10, which is a two-engine military aircraft.

Thirty-eight students are involved in the program. It offers two options. Students can obtain airframe powerplant licenses, which will license them to be mechanics, or they can receive a pilot license.

Garrison's duties are to maintain the aircraft and be in charge of the flight operation while working with five certified airplane mechanics.

"Garrison is a hard-working person and an easy person to work with. His judgment is reasonable," Mike Paul, head airplane mechanic, said.

Garrison said his goal for the year is to improve the facilities he and the other staff members work in. The facilities and hangars, which were built in the 1940s, need to have better heat and compression.

"My plans for the program are to ensure safety when using the aircraft. I want to be more efficient," he said.

Betsy Bergen, professor of human development and family studies and a certified sex therapist, has been breaking ground at K-State in the realm of sex education for the past 29 years. In her classroom, Bergen tries to get her students to understand their sexuality as well as theories and research.

Bergen teaches understanding

TAWNYA ERNST

Trains of blue, red and green were reflected in Betsy Bergen's glasses as she proudly displayed her latest work, a quilt she made for one of her grandchildren.

Quilting is one of her favorite hobbies. In fact, it is rare to find Bergen, a K-State professor in human development and family studies, without a piece of patchwork and thread. Her home is in Topeka, and the hour-long commute before and after work provides the perfect opportunity to work on the quilts.

"I never go anywhere that I don't quilt. I've made a lot of quilts because of carpooling. After my first day of commuting, I realized I didn't want to just sit in the car for an hour down and back, so I started bringing quilt blocks. It's a fun hobby," Bergen said.

Her life has been to similar to a patchwork quilt, a little bit of this and a little of that.

Bergen, who teaches classes in sexuality, has been a professor at K-State for 29 years. She obtained undergraduate degrees in physical education and psychology from Ottawa University in Ottawa, Kan.

For the next 18 years, Bergen taught at public secondary schools. In the mid-1960's, she came to K-State to teach in the department of family studies and child development.

During that time, she received her master's degree in family and child development and her doctorate in education and administration.

Bergen has also been certified as a sex therapist and has a small practice on the side, but she prefers teaching.

"Education is much more gratifying. I believe in the Humpty Dumpty philosophy — it's easier to keep Humpty Dumpty on the wall than to patch him up. With education, you have a chance to reach people beforehand, so that they don't mess up their lives," Bergen said.

The subject of human sexuality was not important when Bergen started teaching at K-State. Many of people do not realize what it took to bring the subject into the classrooms, she said.

"People today don't understand the history of making sexual education available to students. During the '50s and the '60s, there was a real backlash against it. Sexuality was not talked about openly," Bergen said.

Bergen was one of the first teachers at K-State to teach a class on sexuality, Jerome Frieman, professor of psychology, said.

"Betsy is a pioneer in a sense of trying to teach sexuality long before many recognized the importance of informing people about it," Frieman said.

Sex is too often the target of sensationalism, Bergen said. In her classes, she wants students to understand their own sexuality as well as theories and research.

"In class, I teach that sex is absolutely basic. The first thing that is asked when a baby is born is whether it's a boy or a girl. It is absolutely necessary to life and affects all aspects of our lives. Too many people just focus on the act," Bergen said.

"People need to develop a tolerance of sexuality and each other. What's right for me may not be right for another person. I'm not saying that you have to buy into another person's belief, but to try to understand all sides," she said.

During her years at K-State, Bergen said she has seen more changes in sexual behavior than she has seen in attitudes towards sex.

"Women are much more sexually active. Not just in terms of before marriage, but in the number of partners as well," Bergen said. "Children between 10 and 16 years of age are becoming sexually active. There have been cases of 10-year-olds giving birth. At that age, children are lacking in knowledge of their bodies. We've missed the boat in teaching responsibility and education."

Many times, these children are the sons and daughters of parents who are themselves still very young, Bergen said.

Bergen said she does not believe it is the fault of one generation alone; in fact, it is both parents and children that share the responsibility. If parents would provide the children with more love and attention, everyone would be better off, she said.

"If every baby could be wrapped in a homemade quilt, I think that the world would be a better place. A

Political science professor invited to Pakistan

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

A K-State professor is doing his part to spread democracy around the world.

William Richter, professor of political science and interim assistant provost for International Programs, recently returned from a trip to Pakistan, where he observed the pre-election climate there.

"The purpose of our trip was to make an assessment of the situation prior to the elections, both to evaluate fairness and to guide the field team and international-observer delegation, who will arrive prior to the elections in October," Richter said.

Richter is a member of an elections-observation team sponsored by the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs.

"NDI is concerned with the development of democratic processes around the world," Richter said. "They have sent observer missions to more than 40 countries in the past decade.

"I've been fascinated with Pakistan ever since I went there in 1976 when India wouldn't give me a visa," he said. "I was there for the second general election in 1977, which led to public protest and an overthrow of the civilian government."

Richter was invited to be a part of the observer missions because of his interest and expertise.

"He's known for the work that he's done in democratization," Karen Clark, senior program officer with NDI, said.

Regarding the elections, Richter said his findings show there is a positive set of attitudes in Pakistan, but campaigning is not as active as expected.

"There is very little public excitement over the elections. It more closely represents an American election," Richter said.

Richter said he was glad to get back to Pakistan.

"I'm teaching a course on South Asia next semester," Richter said. "This trip was sort of like recharging my scholarly batteries."

K-State scientist receives grants

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

Research grants are giving a K-State chemist the opportunity to specialize in the chemical reproduction of natural products and organic compounds.

Money donated by the American Cancer Society, American Heart Association and American Chemical Society-Petroleum Research Fund is enabling Keith Buszek, assistant professor of chemistry, to look at new reactions and methods to produce synthetic drugs out of natural products.

"The conduct of research is extremely expensive. In order to perform this type of research, it is essential that a faculty member gain extramural support," Dale Hawley, head of the chemistry department, said.

Hawley said he believes research is an important part of a faculty member's responsibility, because K-State is a research University.

The grants are given to scientists because this type of research may lead to a potential cure of heart disease, cancer or arthritis, Buszek said.

"We try to discover new reactions in organic chemistry or apply familiar and established reactions in new and novel ways," he said.

Natural products are compounds that occur in nature. These compounds are found in plants and animals.

Buszek's goal is to recreate some of these important, naturally occurring products, he said.

Once the new compounds are discovered, chemists attempt to apply newly discovered chemistry in the chemical production of structurally complex, biologically important natural products, Buszek said.

After a compound has been made, chemists are interested in learning how it exhibits its biological function, he said.

"For example, how does an anti-tumor compound kill or stop the growth of cancer cells? The answer to these questions will enable us to address problems at the frontiers of biology and medicine," Buszek said.

Buszek said he believes compounds that interest chemists most are those that have profound biological properties, such as anti-tumor compounds.

Newly discovered compounds found in plants, animals and micro-organisms may work on undiscovered receptor sites in the human body, which may cause the synthetic drugs to be more effective than prescription drugs on the market.

Buszek, with the assistance of four doctoral and two undergraduate students, is making a compound, which shows strong activity against cultured human colon cancer cells.

The compound comes from an organism that lives in the sediment of the ocean floor, Buszek said.

Another compound that is being made is isolated from a marine organism called the Atlantic sea whip.

Research is essential because the fundamental science used to make biologically important compounds originated in academic laboratories, he said.

P.O.'d complains about fake political correctness

Dear Cassandra,

You are such a hypocrite! People like you make me sick. Did you even think about what you wrote in your column Wednesday?

You seem to be so politically correct, but don't you realize that by assuming K.H. was in one of THOSE religious groups, or by generalizing about what THOSE religious groups stand for is prejudice and discrimination in the boldest senses of the words?!

I can not believe you can be enlightened enough to understand the challenges and the rights of homosexuals, but stupid enough to bash another group, whoever they may be, for their feelings and beliefs in the very same paragraph!

Get a clue, Cassandra!

Signed,
One P.O.'d Reader

Dear P.O.'d,

Where do I start?

First, I never claim to be politically correct. It takes too much energy to remember things like vertically impaired (short) or horizontally challenged (fat).

Second, maybe K.H. wasn't in one of those religious groups. That's why I asked. I only wondered because the tone of his letter suggested they share some of the same warped ideologies.

Third, I know I'm not stupid for "bashing" these particular religions or their members because the religions I was referring to are the ones that are prejudiced, discriminatory and homophobic.

I can bash them all I want, thank you very much. They should be bashed.

Shall I assume, o' politically perfect one, in spite of these religious groups' hatred, etc., you embrace them with open arms?

I get the idea of respecting their right to speak and to have their beliefs — if that's what you were trying to pound into my brain.

They can talk as long as they want. The First Amendment provides for that. But it doesn't say I have to like them or support their messages of hate.

Fans cheer on the Samples' lead singer Sean Kelly halfway through their two-hour set Tuesday at Snookie's Bar. The Colorado band consists of singer/ guitarist Sean Kelly, bassist Andy Sheldon, keyboardist Al Laughlin and drummer Jeep MacNichols.

Fans brave humidity for Samples

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

More than 200 people packed a sweltering Snookie's Bar to see the Samples Tuesday night.

It was extremely hot inside the bar. So hot, in fact, sweat rolled down the faces of people who were standing still. Air conditioning was non-existent, but thankfully, the Samples provided some cool tunes to relieve the audience.

REVIEW

The crowd had dished out $10 to $12 to see the Colorado-based band and were rewarded with a 15-song set. The band's extremely professional performance lasted almost two hours.

The Samples, dressed in T-shirts, jeans or shorts, kicked off the show with a reggae-based flavor.

The beginning impression was annoying because it was filled with an overabundance of bass guitar and kick drum. Vocals from Sean Kelly and Andy Sheldon, as well as Al Laughlin's keyboards, were lost in the beginning sound mix.

Jeep MacNichol's percussion was filled with intense syncopation, but his kick drum kept a steady rhythm.

Halfway through the performance, however, these problems were mended.

The show progressed rapidly with various colors of reggae, ska and new-age music. In concert, the Samples' sound can be related to Bruce Hornsby, the Police, R.E.M. and perhaps Hawkwind.

Their unique sound is remarkably infectious. Using melodic and flowing instrument patterns, bright vocals and habitual chords interspersed with exploration, the Samples kept the music entertaining.

Repetition was the key factor as harmonies from both the vocals and guitar drew in the audience. Visuals made the show more than just music, but the songs kept most spectators absorbed in the fun atmosphere.

As the standing-room-only audience hollered and danced, a white backdrop lit up behind the band. Different ocean scenes illuminated the stage from a movie projector, while a slide show accompanied with clips from television. "The Beverly Hillbillies," "Beavis and Butt-Head" and David Letterman were among the guests sharing the stage via the screen.

Tunes performed from their latest album included "Eatonville," "Prophet of Doom" and "Playground." Each of these songs was performed with more experimentation than the album version, but it was a shame other material from "The Last Drag" wasn't played. Their new folk rock material was overshadowed by older reggae and ska tunes, which hampered the chance to present a different mood.

Even after the final song, most people were screaming to hear more.

Senate to inspect Union fee spending

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Student Senate will consider a proposal to research leasing space in the K-State Union to private food vendors.

The suggestion, which will be discussed at today's Senate meeting, is part of a broader recommendation to form a committee that would review the Union fee paid by students. The committee would also review the use of fees paid to the Union by K-State students. Each student pays $13.50 in fees per semester to the Union.

Mike Munson, senator in business administration, said the committee should be formed to ensure student money is being used efficiently.

"We hope to see what all the options are and to see if our money is being used wisely," Munson said.

Director Jack Sills said the Union administration doesn't allow food vendors in the Union because it does not think it is in the students' best interest.

"We've always felt it was to the advantage of the students and to our advantage to be self-operating," Sills said.

"We're not sending profit home with anyone because what we make goes back to the students," he said. "All the money stays here so that students can use free meeting rooms, enjoy free activities and other activities of reasonable cost brought in by the Union Program Council."

If private vendors were allowed into the Union, Sills said it would be difficult to maintain those services.

"If we have private enterprise come in, we would still need to recover from them enough to support our free services," Sills said.

"Otherwise, we would have to ask the students to help us support these free services or discontinue the services," he said.

Amateur bands will battle in 7th annual Opus Band Competition

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

Seven amateur bands will compete for cash prizes tonight in the seventh annual Opus Band Competition.

Opus is sponsored by the Union Program Council Eclectic Entertainment committee and is designed to give exposure to unsigned or amateur bands.

"The purpose of Opus is to promote amateur bands and originality," Charla Bailey, program adviser for UPC, said. "It also provides students free entertainment and a chance to see a variety of bands."

Burt Brungardt, chairman for the Eclectic Committee, said each band submitted a tape of two songs, one being an original work by the band. The bands were then selected by the Eclectic Committee according to originality, vocal ability and musical ability.

Of the bands that applied, about half are from Manhattan, Brungardt said.

COMPETITION
■ The Opus Band Competition is from 5 to 11 p.m. in the Union Plaza.

Six bands competing this year are from Kansas, and one is from Nebraska. Teflon Brain, Clear Blu Easy and Lisa Lied are from Manhattan. The remaining bands are Rosabelle Believe from Wichita, Month of Sundays from Lawrence, Back Porch Mary from Hays and Karma from Beatrice, Neb.

The competition also includes an alternate band, in case one of the bands does not show up, Bailey said.

The alternate band, Margin of Error, will perform in between the last band performance and the announcement of the winner, Brungardt said.

During the competition, bands are judged on originality, vocal ability, musical ability and audience response. Judges also look at stage presence and delivery.

The first-place winner will receive a check for $300, second place will get $200, and third place will receive $100.

The judges for the final competition include Jeff Shibley from the Note, a music magazine in Lawrence, and Nick Kurasz, a representative from Warner Bros. The other two judges are from Manhattan.

Attendance last year reached about 1,000, and if the weather cooperates, Brungardt said he hopes for the same plus more.

This year, Warner Bros., is giving out free compact discs and hats to promote another band Warner Bros. has signed, Brungardt said.

"They will be giving them out during the time that no bands are playing to keep audience attention and increase audience participation," Brungardt said.

K- IT'S hard to know just where to start, I've got so much to say. I never meant to hurt you dear, not in any way. I know the grief I've brought your heart is more than you can bear. I can't say enough how sorry I am and how much I really do care. I wanted you to notice me- To get back what we had. Instead things got way out of hand and the weekend went sourly bad. I'm sorry it had to come to this, but I'm willing to do what I can. To make you realize how special you are- To be my one and only man. -J.

Union president says 'no' to NAFTA

Mexico is more attractive to U.S. industries

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

The president of the Kansas Farmers Union Wednesday evening described the North American Free Trade Agreement as a giant octopus with tentacles reaching into every walk of life.

Ivan Wyatt, who is also on the executive board of the National Farmers Union, delivered his speech, "Why Farmers Are Saying: 'Not This NAFTA,'" to about 50 people at the First Congregational Church at the invitation of the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice.

Wyatt is a Chase County farmer and has been president of KFU since 1981. He said the union is a policy-developing organization that deals with such issues as prices, fair trade practices and maintaining agriculture on family farms.

KFU represents about 3,500 farm families, but Wyatt said he has heard from many non-members who agree with the union's position on NAFTA.

Wyatt said the average wage in Mexico is about 50 cents an hour or $4 a day, which is about 700-percent less than the average wage in the United States.

Mexican workers also have no health care, wage protection or safety standards, making Mexico attractive to U.S. industries that are required to provide these things to American workers, Wyatt said.

"Any industry that has 20 percent or more of its cost through labor is a good candidate to go to Mexico," Wyatt said.

"Almost 50 percent of jobs in small communities would be candidates."

Wyatt said he spent a lot of time talking with the campesinos, or ejiode farmers in Mexico, who up until two years ago farmed land given to them in trust by the government. By law, they could not sell nor mortgage their farms. They could only pass the land on to their children.

As part of the reforms by the government of President Carlos Salinas de Gotari, the campesinos were given titles to the land, though Wyatt said it could take 20 years to straighten out the legal aspects of the titles.

Wyatt said he and other members of the union warned the farmers not to mortgage their land or sign documents putting their land in debt because doing so has caused many American farmers to lose their land.

Wyatt said it was Salinas' government's intention to drive the subsistence farmers off the land by making them high interest loans and using under-handed tactics to make profitable production impossible. The government then seizes the land and sells it to U.S. agriculture industries.

"How does it affect Kansas farmers?" Wyatt said. "Land once used to feed families would be used to grow feed for cattle, which will be shipped to the United States to compete with the Kansas cattle industry."

"We talked to 60 or 70 Mexican farmers under a large spreading tree," Wyatt said.

"We asked, 'What will happen to you if you lose that family farm?' They said they would have to come to the United States to find jobs."

Wyatt answered questions about the labor and environmental side agreements to NAFTA. He said the documents haven't been released yet, but from what he has heard about them, they will have no teeth.

"Near as I can tell, it's a lot like an insurance policy that tells you in big, bold letters what it's going to do for you," he said. "Then, in the small print, it gives all the exceptions.

"If Mexico doesn't live up to its part of the negotiations, what are we going to do? Send in the Marines?"

Though Wyatt opposes the draft of NAFTA, he said he would like to see some form of a Western Hemisphere economic community established.

John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy and member of the board of directors of the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice, said MAPJ invited Wyatt because it believes it is important to inform people about NAFTA.

"We think it is going to lower environmental standards in the United States and undermine wages and the standard of living," Exdell said.

"We really don't think it is a conflict between the United States and Mexico. It is a conflict between a majority of the people and a small group of investors."

Doctor defends Gulf War actions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Yolanda Huet-Vaughn, who was convicted of deserting the Army during the 1991 Gulf War, testified that former President Bush was America's greatest enemy at the time.

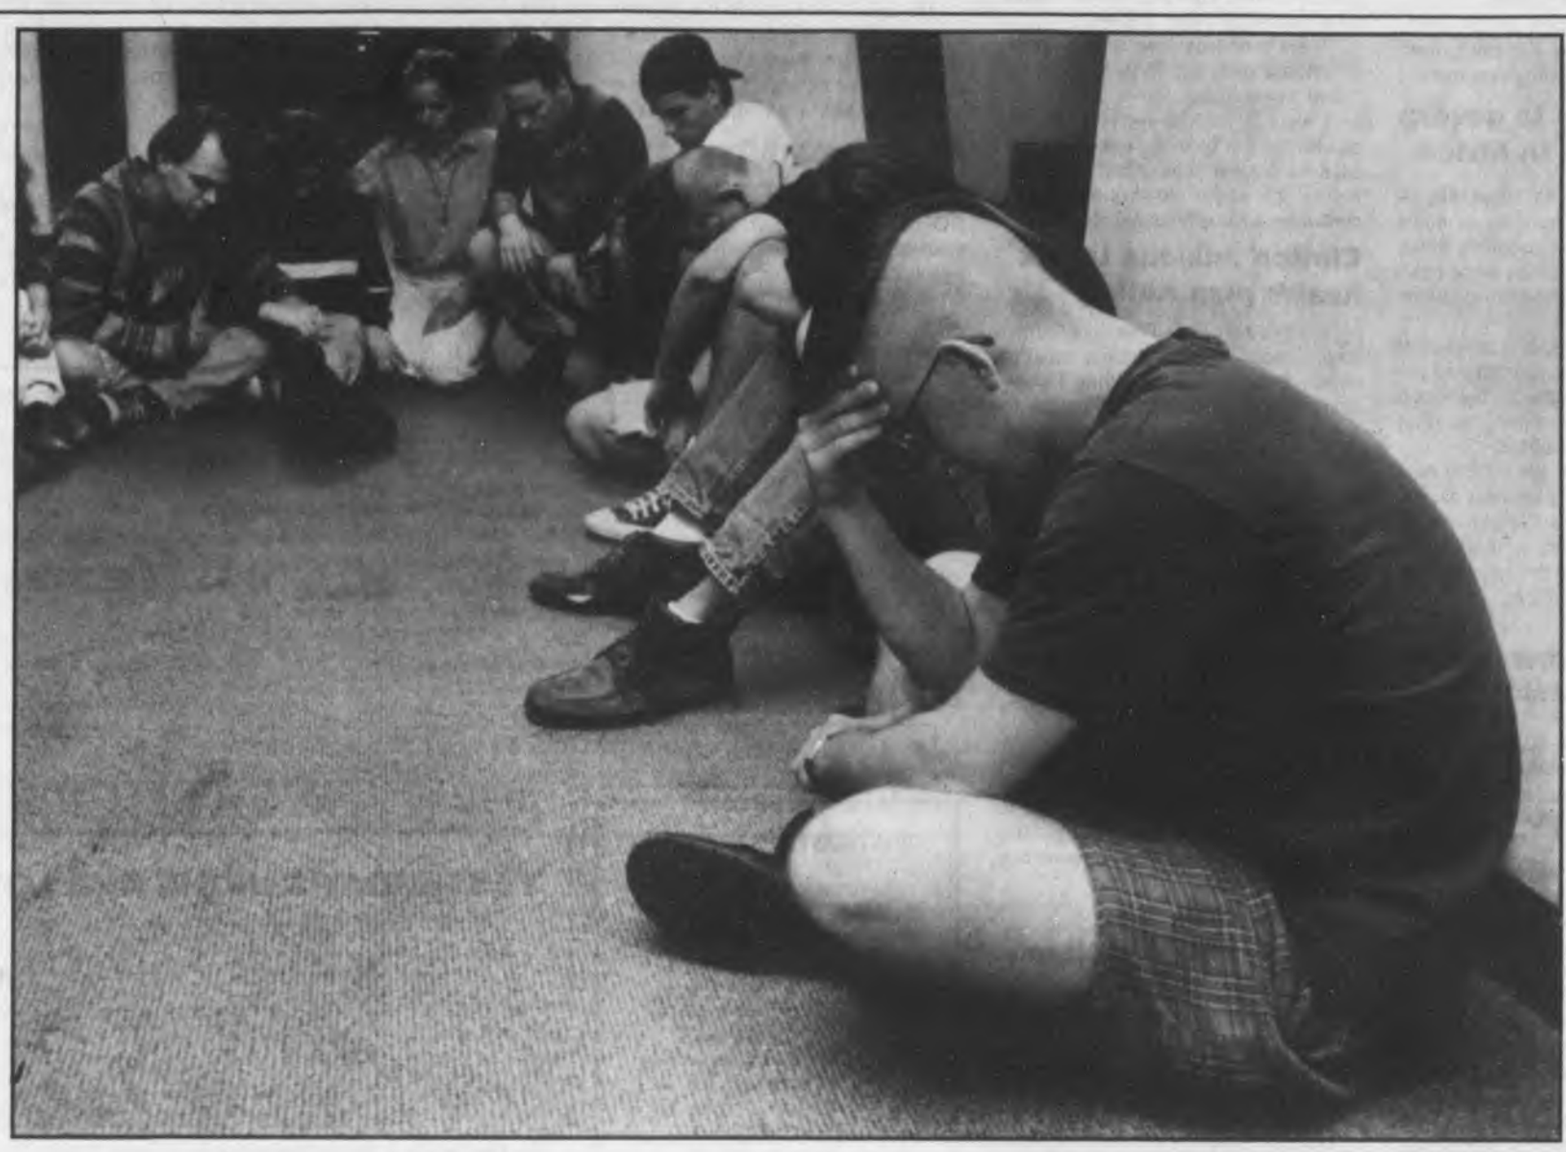
Huet-Vaughn of Overland Park, who is defending her right to practice medicine in Kansas, said the Gulf War, designated as Operation Desert Storm, was illegal and immoral.

She said she was upholding the oath she took when she became an Army officer — to protect the Constitution from enemies foreign and domestic — when she left the 410th Evacuation Hospital at Fort Riley, which later went to Saudi Arabia. She was called to active duty during the troop buildup to serve as a doctor in the hospital unit.

"The biggest enemy at the time was President George Bush," Huet-Vaughn said during a hearing that could lead to her license to practice medicine in Kansas being revoked.

Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark is scheduled to testify.

Huet-Vaughn said war is only justified if all other alternatives have failed. That was not the case in December 1990 when she was called to active duty, she said.



"The issue is not whether I would go to Saudi Arabia or not," she said. "The issue is whether I would provide support for a military mission that violated international law. ... I chose not to do that because a catastrophe was about to happen that did not need to happen."

The Kansas Board of Healing Arts is trying to determine whether her conduct was dishonorable, constituting grounds for revoking her medical license.

The board does not allege she is an incompetent physician. She maintains a family practice in Kansas City, Kan.

The hearing is being held before former Shawnee County District Judge Michael Barbara. He will make a recommendation to the board.

Debra Billingsley, the board's lawyer, introduced transcripts from Huet-Vaughn's court-martial, where she was found guilty of desertion. She served eight months of a 30-month sentence at the U.S. Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth before being released in April 1992.

Month of Sundays rocks Union Station

A crowd of more than 350 watched Lawrence band Month of Sundays win the seventh annual OPUS Band Competition. Because of the threat of bad weather, the event was forced to be held inside at Union Station, as opposed to the more familiar Union Lawn and Island.

Month of Sundays had its work cut out for them as they opened the 5-1/2-hour show to a small crowd with a blend of melodic guitar, and lofty lyrics.

The band managed to dash through five songs in its allotted 20-minute competition set. Month of Sundays caught the judges attention with song like "Alone," "Miss You Tonight" and "Runaway."

Upon finding out they won the competition, the band was surprised. "We're really pleased to travel here and have it pay off," said lead guitarist Jade Smith.

Lead vocalist Jeff Smith said he was impressed with the quality of all the bands featured in the competition. "It really was an honor to play on such a talented bill," he said.

Drummer Jeff McCarragher said, "We're goin' to Disney."

Wichita alternative band Rosabelle Believe placed second in the competition, taking home a check for $200. Lead singer Paulette Stegman spun like a top and danced during her band's set.

Lincoln, Neb., band Karma placed third in this year's contest with a blend of music that bassist Jamie Cox said was hard to pin down to a specific genre. "We all come from real diverse backgrounds, so that makes us sound like everything from country to Kiss," he said.

The band, all students at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, was pleased to come out of the evening a winner. "We'll be able to cover the entrance fee and our gas to get here, so I think we all had a real good time," vocalist Evan Rail said.

Teflon Brain, though not a winner, was quick to give all the glory of their speed-metal intensity to God.

The band is made up of K-State and Manhattan Christian College students.

Several fans of Teflon Brain came close to the stage during its set, but then retreated for the show's other acts.

Also competing but failing to win a prize was Hays' Back Porch Mary, and two local bands, Lisa Lied and Clear Blu Easy.

Senate votes to buy computer system

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Student Senate allocated about $15,000 for a new computer system for the Office of Student Activities and Services Thursday night.

The allocation allows $14,972 for the purchase of five Macintosh and one Disk Operating System computers along with a variety of network, memory and software equipment needed to hook up the system.

The computer system accepted by Senate is $4,736 less than the original request for eight Macintosh computers.

"I came in here tonight thinking there is no way I would spend $19,000 on computers," Meinhardt said. "I won't even spend it on tractors, and my dad sells tractors."

Paul Bridges, arts and sciences senator, said a DOS computer was made part of the proposal so students with a wide range of computer experience would have access to the system.

"This is something that I definitely think we need," Bridges said. "For people who can't use Apples, they can use IBM's."

Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator, said many students do not think there is a need for any computers.

"I've talked to 20 to 25 students in my college who said 'no,'" Henry said. "The very students we are buying these computers for are saying 'no.'"

Sarah Caldwell, arts and sciences senator and Senate finance chair, said she also used to think extra computers were unnecessary, but has changed her mind.

"When this first came to finance committee, I said you guys were crazy. But I've been convinced by this," Caldwell said. "I think having them in a place where students can use them is important. It's going to help them be more organized."

In other business, Ed Skoog, student body president, said he and several campus administrators discussed the need for a hotel to be added to the K-State Union.

"The convention and visitors bureau concluded we were about 250 rooms below where we should be for a city our size," Skoog said.

Holy day celebrated

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Today marks the holiest day of the Jewish year, and as the sun goes down tonight, celebration of Yom Kippur will begin.

"Yom Kippur is a solemn day of prayer and fasting," said Deborah Fedder, director of Hillel, the Jewish student organization at K-State.

Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, falls on the 10th day of the month of Tishri in the Jewish calendar. This day marks the end of a 10-day period of repentance since Rosh Hashana, Fedder said.

Families have invited students from Hillel to join them in their homes for a pre-fast meal that is served on the families' best table settings, she said. Then, after sunset, the ancient prayers of Kol Nidre will be chanted.

"Manhattan Jewish Congregation has always had a policy of welcoming students to any functions," Fedder said.

"We are responsible for not only our own actions, but for the actions of our fellows," Fedder said.

"So, as a whole, the congregation asks for forgiveness for anything we have done to offend another person, and then through prayer we ask forgiveness from God."

The congregation also asks to be sealed in the book of life of having a good year and says Shanna Tova, which means "good, good year," Fedder said.

Libby Rittmaster, a senior in Spanish and Latin American studies and secretary for Hillel, said when she attends Yom Kippur services, she'll look at the past year to see if there were mistakes she could have prevented and kinder things that she could have done.

"On the solemn day of Yom Kippur, prayers are said in remembrance of those who are departed, and we read from the book of Jonah from the Bible, which is all about forgiveness," Fedder said.

When the shofar, a ram's horn, is blown, it signifies the end of Yom Kippur, Fedder said.

"Once sunset occurs on Saturday, and our prayer and fasting is complete, we have a break-the-fast meal," Fedder said.

The entire congregation and the students from Hillel will partake in the festive meal. There are about 20 to 30 active members who will participate. The students in Hillel are also from all parts of the world, including Costa Rica, Brazil, Russia and Israel, Fedder said.

Compensation bill to control fees

TOPEKA (AP) — An important part of the effort to reform the Kansas workers' compensation system will be in place Nov. 1, when new limits on medical fees take effect.

The Division of Workers' Compensation finished drafting a host of new administrative regulations this month.

The 1993 Legislature approved a 137-page reform bill in hopes of controlling costs associated with the workers' compensation system.

The new regulations contain limits for about 6,000 items, everything from routine office visits to complex surgery.

Black people to govern for first time in Africa

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Parliament voted Thursday to allow black people a role in governing South Africa for the first time, and white right-wing lawmakers warned the decision could lead to civil war.

The vote creates a Transitional Executive Council, comprised of representatives from the 26 black and white parties that have participated in the talks on ending apartheid.

The body, which one official said may function as early as next month, will be a watchdog of the government with some veto powers. It will help oversee the holding of the country's first multiracial election April 27.

Chinese stunned by Olympic decision

BEIJING (AP) — Chinese were stunned by their country's failure to win the 2000 Olympics but comforted each other early Friday with vows to try for the 2004 games.

The 2000 games will be in Sydney, Australia.

The 800 participants at the party, who were watching events in Monte Carlo on a large screen, thought Beijing had won when International Olympic Committee President Juan Antonio Samaranch said he wanted to thank the five bidding cities and began by naming Beijing.

The room erupted in a frenzy with the viewers jumping up and down, beating cymbals, firing confetti and popping champagne corks.

Some Chinese warned of a possible popular backlash against the West and especially the United States, where congressmen said China should not get the Olympics because of its human-rights abuses.

Drinking and walking dangerous to health

ATLANTA (AP) — You've heard plenty about the dangers of drinking and driving. Now, federal-health officials are finding that drinking and walking is a deadlier combination than they had realized.

Fewer drunken drivers are running over pedestrians, but more than a third of the pedestrians killed by cars last year were drunk themselves, according to National Highway Traffic Safety Administration figures reported Thursday by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The 5,546 pedestrians killed by cars last year made up 14 percent of all vehicle-related fatalities. About 96,000 other pedestrians were injured.

There is no legal level of intoxication for pedestrians. But 36 percent of the 4,770 pedestrians above the age 14 who were killed last year had blood-alcohol levels of 0.10, enough to be cited for drunken driving had they been behind the wheel. Seven percent had consumed smaller amounts of alcohol.

Clinton anxious to get health plan rolling

WASHINGTON — President Clinton dispatched Cabinet members coast to coast and opened the White House lawn to a thousand allies Thursday to get the sales campaign for his health care plan out of the starting blocks.

"We have to do it right, and we have to do it right now," Clinton said.

"As much as I wish this to be a celebration ... I remind you that our work is beginning," Clinton told the show-of-force rally before heading to Florida for a nationally-televised town hall meeting.

As Clinton began his push, everyone with an opinion, friend and foe weighed in with judgments about Clinton's proposal.

"It's going to be a long, long tortuous road," said Senate GOP leader Bob Dole, praising Clinton for his pledge to compromise but criticizing the Democrat's plan as a little overgenerous and underfunded.

Yelstin calls for presidential elections

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin called for presidential elections next June, and there were signs Thursday of growing government impatience with hard-liners barricaded inside the parliament building.

Yeltsin ordered Interior Ministry police to secure public safety after accusing his political opponents of distributing dozens of automatic weapons to anti-Yeltsin demonstrators outside the Russian White House.

Bill makes donating organs legal at age 16

TOPEKA (AP) — Doctors are sometimes faced with this problem: a patient who dies wanted to donate his or her organs and tissue, but the family simply won't hear of it.

The House Judiciary Committee drafted a bill Thursday in hopes of preventing such problems. The measure is designed to increase the number organs and the amount of tissue available for transplants.

Under the bill, a person who is 16 or older could agree to donate organs or tissues after death. Legally, such a decision would be final, and family members could not overrule it.

The age is 16 because that is when Kansans can receive unrestricted driver's licenses. Each license now has a space on the back for a form a person can sign to become an organ donor.

Black September claims 6 more lives

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Six soldiers were killed Thursday in a clash with leftist rebels in northern Colombia, an army spokesperson said.

A group of counterinsurgency soldiers battled guerrillas of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia in the northern coastal state of Magdalena.

The fighting was still going on hours later. It was not immediately known if there were any casualties among the rebels.

The Revolutionary Armed Forces and another rebel outfit, the National Liberation Army, are carrying out an offensive called Black September.

Black September has claimed the lives of more than 45 soldiers and police.

Ultimate Frisbee

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

Men are not the only members of an Ultimate Frisbee Club on campus. A group of women, mostly K-state students, got together and formed a team.

It is a club sport registered through the University Advisory Board, Hensley said.

"Right now, we do not have a field to play on because the University designated it a green area. So, we practice at City Park in the field across from the Sigma Chi house on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 5:30 p.m.," Hensley said.

"Ultimate is a team sport with seven people on each team," she said.

"It is similar to soccer, but instead of kicking the ball, we throw a Frisbee. It is really fun, and we encourage anyone to come out, even if you don't know how to throw a frisbee."

The team also has women who are not K-State students.

"We have some K-State alumni and girls from Manhattan High School," Hensley said.

Bridget Murphy, K-State alumna and vice president of the club, said the team was around last year; however, due to lack of organization, the team did not catch on.

"The sport is fairly new, and not many people have played it. I just started playing last year," Murphy said.

"The sport is really unique, and there is a more laid-back attitude than a lot of sports," she said.

"There is a good spirit to the game in the way it is set up to be a friendly competition. I especially like that there are no referees," she said.

The women's club gets a lot of encouragement from the men's, Hensley said.

"Most of the ultimate tournaments are coed, and we would like a few committed women to travel with the guy's team since we won't start having women's tournaments until next year," Hensley said.

"Attendance is low right now because of lack of publicity," she said.

"Our goal is to get as many women as possible. An ideal team is 20 women, but we encourage everyone to come out and play."

Model planes fly through area skies

CHAD HARRIS
Collegian

With the remaining summer weather, members of the Manhattan Flying Club take to the skies as often as they can — that is, with remote-controlled airplanes.

The Manhattan Flying Club is a local club that is always looking for aces ready to fly the wild blue yonder. Gary Niehaus, secretary and trainer for the club, said he's been with the club since its earliest days.

"I started up with the club nearly 22 years now," Niehaus said. "Back then, though, we weren't quite as big. About five years ago, the club really started to grow. Currently, we have somewhere in the neighborhood of 35 to 40 members."

Niehaus's duty as trainer includes working with the novice members and teaching them correct flying techniques.

"Basically, what I do is teach beginners and veterans everything they need to know about flying the planes," he said. "Every Wednesday is designated Club Training Night."

Todd Crouch has been with the club for a two years and said he would like to help the club get more members.

"I work with special committees in the organizing of all the funflies," Crouch said. "Funflies are days when we get all the members, and hopefully those interested in flying, out to different clubs, whether it be in Marysville — where we had one this Sunday — or at Tuttle Creek, behind the dam, our designated flying area."

The club has a formal meeting the first Monday of the month in addition to Wednesday training night. Crouch said most of the club's advertising is done through the Manhattan Mercury.

Membership in the club consists of a

TELL US WHAT YOU THINK

EDITORIAL

Whose name should be printed?

Rape.

Not many words grab a person's attention like the word rape. It is a terrifying word that makes people of both sexes cringe.

Rape is a horrifying act of violence and not a pleasant matter to address.

So, is it right for media to print the name of a person arrested for rape? Is it right to withhold the name?

Should the arrested suspect and the victim both be identified when possible?

The crux of the dilemma stems from the social stigma that surrounds rape.

The arrested suspected's name is the only name that appears on a police report.

This topic has come up because of a case at Marshall University, W.Va., where the student newspaper printed both names and addresses of the students involved in a rape case on the front page in September 1992.

Everyone started taking sides and fighting each other. Some tried to dissolve the student publications board of the newspaper, yearbook and radio station. The bad feelings still continue at Marshall University to this day.

This is why we are coming to the students and readers of the Collegian.

Is it right to print one or both of the names in a rape case? We would like know the opinion of our readers.

Please tell us what you think by filling out the form below and returning it to Kedzie 116.

Tell us what you think

Last year, at the Marshall University, W. Va., a controversy arose when the student newspaper printed the names and addresses of both students involved in a rape case.

Collegian policy is to print only the name of the arrested suspect. What do you think?

- ☐ Yes, just the victim should be identified.
- ☐ Yes, just the arrested suspect be identified.
- ☐ Yes, both should be identified.
- ☐ Yes, neither should be identified.

Campus trial packs are sexist

The little gifts we receive mirror the sexism in our society

So, have you picked up your pre-menstrual syndrome pack yet? You know, the completely biased boxes you get for free each semester. I truly appreciated the aspirin and toothpaste, and the diet gum was exquisite. But dammit, I wanted the shaving cream!

It's a plot, I tell you. The manufacturers of the trial packs are discriminating against women by not including shaving cream in ours.

But that's OK. We get a one-use supply of perfume.

Yow!

Well, I suggest the women of K-State rise up and take all the men's packs. Show these discriminating idiots we not only desire parity, but we require it.

Do as I did. Scare the bejeezus out of the poor bookstore workers by ranting blindly about the conspiracy that has befallen us. Then frighten the poor men in the store by going up, poking them in the chest and saying in a voice that sounds like Ren's, "You ... all of you ..."

OK, so it didn't happen quite that way. I did rant at the bookstore workers, and I did frighten some guy buying batteries. But I can't imitate Ren that well. Still, the idea was quite attractive.

See, it's kind of hard to overlook this kind of thing when you hear about a senator from the South cornering a female senator in an elevator and singing racially derogatory songs to "try to make her cry."

It's hard to overlook something as simple as a biased trial pack when women make less than men while doing the same jobs.

Or when you hear about women being forced to decide between keeping their reproductive organs or keeping their jobs.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

Am I joking now or not?

'Fraid not. The issue of the campus packs is but a small speck in the vast history of discrimination against women. From the S. Weir Mitchell cure for "hysterical women" to the ad that runs on television for Kellogg's Muselix. The "aww, isn't she so cute mentality?" is damaging to both sexes because it demeans one for the benefit of the other.

Granted, it has gotten better through the years, but better is a matter of degree. Some strains of discrimination are more virulent than others. For instance: the Bubba Strain. This strain is woven throughout society and can be identified most easily by listening for the gentle strains of "Get off your ass, Mabel, and get me a beer!"

The Intellectual Strain. This strain is one of the hardest to define. Usually, men who belong to this strain disguise their discrimination, possibly even to themselves, by making all the wife's decisions for her. Usually, they can be identified by their distinctive call of "Well, I know you want to go visit your family dear, but I've made plans for a wonderful trip to the Yukitan."

The Brutal Strain. This is also known as the "If you look at me wrong one more time, I'll beat the crap out of you strain." If you married into this, you need to get out.

Not all men fit these descriptions, and some are quite nice. It's the ones who fit these who are destroying the trust that is so necessary to maintain a good relationship. The point is that there are forms of discrimination against women that are built into this society, and they need to be eradicated.

It needs to start with the campus trial packs.

WELL, I SUGGEST THE WOMEN OF K-STATE RISE UP AND TAKE ALL THE MEN'S PACKS.

Source: U.S. Department of Education

TAD MUSSELWHITE/Collegian

It was a sharp slap in the face to American superiority.

A little more than two weeks ago, the Department of Education released the results of a nationwide survey designed to estimate our nation's literacy rate. Though some assumed this rate would be high, no one was prepared for the monolithic 48-percent figure that hurled itself at our self-assuredness.

Reality was saying the United States is chocked full of stupid people. People who can't fill out a deposit slip. Folks who have difficulty determining the difference in price between two objects, finding an intersection on a map and so on. In other words, half of the country is functionally illiterate.

They may encode words, but they sure as hell don't know what they mean. They understand the TV remote control, but reading at a third-grade level shorts out the brain stem. Smoke coming from their ears. The dull, glassy stare of a caged animal.

The report goes on to wax philosophic on how our country's youth are sorely lacking in the basic skills of learning, such as drawing conclusions, writing in a coherent manner, reading between the lines. Adults aren't far behind.

And now, of all times, the next kick in the pants comes out of the barn.

The College Board has issued a report on how college expenses are far outstripping income, financial aid and inflation. The accompanying chart tells the whole sordid tale. And some people are getting worried.

"Colleges have simply come to realize that the very markets they wish to serve could not afford them at the rate of increase they were following," said David L. Warren, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

Big surprise. The few high-school students who do have a clue as to what they need to know are finding out that college is only for those with the cash.

JARED SAVAGE
OPINION EDITOR

Never mind scholarships, and forget financial aid. The world of higher education is pulling away from those who can't afford it at warp speed.

"People are dropping out," said Tchiyuka Cornelius, a student at City University of New York and a president of the U.S. Student Association. "There are people who want to go to college but just can't afford to."

The big picture is emerging from all of this: school budgets across the nation are feeling the drawing of the purse strings and turning out low-quality students.

These poor students are entering a national work force that is converting from an industrial-based to an information-based economy.

The majority of students with the brainpower to make it can't afford college, thus joining their slower peers in the competition for dwindling jobs.

And those who do make it to college struggle for years with institutions who have capped enrollment (30 percent), cut course numbers (31 percent) and left full-time faculty positions unfilled (45 percent). Screw egalitarianism, and good luck to whoever has the motzy to go the distance.

There's a name for my pain, and it's called Complacency. It's the attitude the system is going to fix itself. It's a bad dream, and we'll wake up tomorrow and it will be all better. Well, if we wake up tomorrow, we'll be too ignorant to realize the world passed us by in the night.

Perhaps Irwin Kirsch of the Educational Testing Institute puts it in the best perspective: "Beyond the individuals at risk, a society in which large numbers of citizens demonstrate limited literacy skills has fewer resources with which to meet its social, political and economic goals."

Tie this with the college crises, and your resources are severely lacking indeed. And we'll suffer for it.

Students' high expectations can lead to depression

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

Some young people may be putting extraordinary pressure on themselves to be perfect, local counselors said.

Society's attitudes about perfection set people up for failure and can lead to emotional problems, said Dr. Terry Pfannenstiel, program manager for adult outpatient services at Pawnee Mental Health

He said this may lead to emotional problems because individuals may experience overwhelming stress trying to meet such high expectations.

"It's not realistic to be perfect — it is something we are not going to achieve," Pfannenstiel said. "How do we know how to achieve it if we don't know what it is? Even though we are always striving to be perfect, we don't know what the end result will be."

John Robertson, psychologist for University Counseling Services in Lafene Health Center, said students are in an environment that requires high expectations and academic performance.

"If they're going to do well, they have to set high standards. These standards can be pretty perfectionistic," he said.

Students may encounter several types of stressful situations at a university, Robertson said.

For the most part, University Counseling Services sees most students for emotional problems concerning relationship difficulties, Robertson said.

"In my opinion, the No. 1 reason for relationship break-ups at Kansas State University is the unrealistic expectations students have for themselves and their partner," said Tony Jurich, professor of marriage and family therapy at K-State.

College students are vulnerable to unrealistic expectations for themselves, Jurich said.

"For instance, all you have to do is take a look at any of the aerobic classes at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and listen to students who drastically criticize their bodies," he said. "There you'll hear some of the best-fit people complain about how much exercise they need to make an already wonderful body perfect."

"Young people believe they can prove their existence by how they talk, who they're with and what kind of clothes they wear," Pfannenstiel said. "When, actually, those things are all pretty superficial and not a true measure of one's self-worth or self-esteem."

People shouldn't rely on other people's opinions to measure their self-esteem, Pfannenstiel said.

"There are better ways to measure self-esteem," he said. "People need to look at what they do to contribute to others. We've lost sight of basic values such as treating people with respect, saying 'please' and 'thank you,' sharing with people if we have enough, replacing something if we break it."

Essentially, every person is responsible for his or her own mental health, he said.

"You have to love yourself and take care of your own mental health in order to be helpful to other members of society," Pfannenstiel said.

He said he believes society can prevent mental illness and emotional problems.

"I believe that society or individuals can go a long way in changing the image of emotional dysfunction or what others refer to as mental illness," Pfannenstiel said.

Society could change the way it talks about mental illness, if phrases such as "problems in living daily life" and "traumatic events" were used to replace outdated terms, Pfannenstiel said.

"Terms such as mentally deranged, crazy, sick or cuckoo are all outdated, and they should be done away with," he said.

Many people believe mental illness is a personal weakness, said Marilyn Schreiner, mental health resource division director at Pawnee Mental Health.

"We don't look at diabetes or medical problems as a personal weakness, but society often looks at mental illness as a personal weakness," she said.

Many individuals are not willing to seek help for their emotional problems because of these attitudes, she said.

Schreiner said she does not think these attitudes are helpful.

"We all need to be more accepting of people," Schreiner said.

People should receive help for their emotional problems before they get out of control, Jurich said.

"It is important to deal with emotional problems before those problems lead to a major mental illness, criminal behavior or long-term hospitalization," he said.

Jurich said he believes Kansans have a rural mentality.

"People are expected to take care of their own problems and not ask for help," Jurich said. "When you're dealing with mental illness, the most crucial step is to ask for help."

One of the big battles in health-care reform is the question of including mental illness in insurance coverage, he said.

"If we don't include mental illness in the health-care package, we are being penny-wise and dollar-foolish," Jurich said.

Class offers students restaurant experience

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Grilling hamburgers, planning menus and serving with a smile have become criteria for a career in food service.

Students enrolled in Food Service Systems are learning these basic skills to gain experience in restaurant management.

Pat Pesci, director of hotel and restaurant management, said 31 students are enrolled in the course this semester. Two-thirds of the students are hotel and restaurant management majors, and the remaining third are dietetics majors.

Pesci teaches students management of food service and community service in the four-credit-hour course.

Besides attending lectures, he said his students are required to work at the dining centers, Flint Hills Breadbasket and Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc.

Amanda Crumrine, senior in hotel and restaurant management, and Kara Muggy, senior in dietetics, either work the pizza line at Van Zile Dining Center or the hamburger line at Kramer Food Center.

"I have taken on various roles in the dining centers from every position of grilling hamburgers, serving food, checking ID cards, setting up the salad bar, to being a manager in all aspects," Muggy said.

In addition, Crumrine and Muggy prepared meals at MESI. Flint Hills Breadbasket and various church pantries donate food to the shelter.

Crumrine, who prepared a taco bar and peach cobbler for her meal, said the items were easily accessible, so it only took 2-1/2 hours to prepare the dinner.

"They gave me guidelines to prepare an entree, vegetable and dessert, so it didn't take me too long," Crumrine said. "The people really enjoyed the meal because they are rarely served Mexican food."

Muggy, who prepared baked barbecue chicken, green peas, gelatin, salad and French bread, said the experience was beneficial to her education.

"I was nervous at first, but it was definitely rewarding," Muggy said. "I want to do more volunteer work because I've learned a lot. Since I had never worked in the food system before, I learned every day is a new experience."

Sonja Redmon, executive director of MESI, said she also benefits from the students' help.

"The student workers are always positive. They are pleasant and interested in what they're doing," Redmon said. "Some might be apprehensive, but they always do a good job."

Another requirement is for students to complete one additional training experience before the end of the semester, Pesci said.

"I have similar objectives for all the students, but different requirements," Pesci said. "I want the dietitians to go into the institutions or hospitals for further experience in food service, whereas I want hotel and restaurant management students to analyze a menu at a restaurant."

Muggy said she believes this is a good idea.

"Basically, he wants to get an overview of the different areas of residence-hall food service, community involvement and the (Irwin) Army hospital," Muggy said. "We get to see what the real world is like and gain some additional food experience."

Union expansion necessary

"Right now if the Alumni Association wants to hold a major event they have to plan it four years in advance."

Skoog said such an expansion is necessary if K-State wants to remain competitive with other universities.

"When the Union was built it was in the foreground and that was 30 years ago," Skoog said. "We are now in the background.

"The need for a Union hotel was immediate, but said the hotel was more realistically a long term project," Skoog said.

"It's part of our ten-year capital improvement plan to move up with it in the next three to ten years."

MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL
Pittsburgh at Atlanta

Wildcat quarterback Chad May scrambles from a defender during K-State's 30-25 victory at Minnesota. The Cats enter Saturday's game against UNLV with a 3-0 record and are averaging 374 yards of offense per contest.

Cats get another shot at 4-0

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

The last time the K-State football program generated a 4-0 record to start a season, Herbert Hoover was President of the United States.

That was 1931.

In Saturday's match-up with the University of Nevada-Las Vegas at KSU Stadium, the Wildcats will get another shot.

K-State had identical chances in 1991 and 1992 but lost 56-3 to Washington and 31-7 to Kansas. The only difference was both of those games were away.

The Cats (3-0) will be host to the Runnin' Rebels (1-2) at 1:10 p.m. in their last non-conference bout of the season. A win would mark the first time since the Big Eight Conference was formed that K-State sported an unblemished non-conference schedule.

But Coach Bill Snyder says the Rebels' athleticism gives him cause for alarm.

"This is a very athletic football team," Snyder said. His Wildcats have captured 17 of the last 19 games at home. "They probably have greater quickness than any team we've played up to this point. It's a team that concerns me a great deal.

"To me, their athletic ability translates into the potential to create big plays both offensively and defensively. That should concern any football coach, and it certainly concerns me."

But UNLV coach Jim Strong said the Rebels have been struggling to keep all their players healthy.

"We'll probably be without four or five starters," Strong said. His Rebels beat Central Michigan 33-20 for the first win of the year.

"We are really struggling with injury factors right now," he said. "I think our football team has played well at times, but not consistently."

What does Strong think about the outcome?

"If I could make accurate predictions, I'd probably get out of coaching and start something up here in Las Vegas," Strong said. "But I don't like making predictions.

"K-State has a lot of momentum right now, being 3-0. They have a tremendous secondary that will be really hard to throw against. I don't know if we can match up with them or not."

The game will be the first ever between the two teams, and for Strong it's something of a homecoming.

"I'm originally from Abbyville and played football at Fairfield High School in Kansas," Strong said. He is in his fourth season at UNLV with a 15-21 record.

"I've got a lot of my family and friends coming to Manhattan, and it should be a nice day," he said.

The Rebels haven't won on the road this season, losing at Clemson 24-14 and at the University of Texas-El Paso 41-24.

"It will be nice to see all my friends and family, but I wish they were coming to Las Vegas," Strong said.

Strong said one area his team has been working on in preparation for the contest is special teams.

"What we are going to try and do is contain their speed and not give up the big plays," he said.

"They've got some excellent special teams players, so we've been spending a lot of time working on that."

Andre Coleman leads the special-teams unit and is ranked first in the Big Eight in all-purpose yards (161 yards per game), punt returns (17.1 per carry) and kickoff returns (30.4 per carry).

"Andre has been the kickoff returner since he's been here," Snyder said.

"He runs well, yet as you watch him, you're not aware of that unless he's running alongside someone and pulling away from him. He's got deceptive speed, and he makes very good decisions."

The Cats are riding a nine-game home winning streak, which ties the 1917-1919 squads for the second-longest home winning streak in school history. The record is 10 consecutive games, set by Mike Ahearn's 1909 and 1910 squads.

The Wildcats' offense is averaging 374 yards per game, including 241 yards in passing. Quarterback Chad May is completing 54 percent of his passes and averaging 15 yards per completion.

"K-State has a fine football team, one of the best K-State teams I've seen in a long time," Strong said. "It will be a real challenge for us."

Golfers set for Hawkeye Invitational

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The women's golf team will travel to Iowa this weekend to play in the Hawkeye Invitational.

The invitational, which University of Iowa is host to, will feature nine teams from both the Big Eight and the Big Ten conference.

"I would imagine that this should be a good invitational," Coach Jim Brenneman said.

The teams the Wildcats will be competing against are Iowa, Iowa State, Kansas, Michigan, Michigan State, Northern Illinois, Wisconsin and Northwestern.

"Iowa is a good team, and Iowa State is the defending Big Eight champ," Brenneman said.

"We played KU in the first tournament at New Mexico, and we beat them. I don't know much about the other Big Ten schools, but I have a feeling that they are pretty good because of their budget."

The Cats are coming off a fourth-place finish at Iowa State in the Cyclone Golf Classic. The Cats had a two-round team score of 670, and they were in third place after the first round.

"The first round we played well," Brenneman said. "Then, during the second round, bad weather affected our play. Overall, the team played good. I think that they are in a good frame of mind now."

Leading the Cats at the Cyclone Invitational were Jacque Wright and Dallas Cox. Overall, they both finished in 15th place with two-round scores of 164.

"Jacque isn't happy with her performances so far," Brenneman said. "Her putting game has been hurting her, and she is slowly working out of it. I think that she has the potential to be the best women's player ever at K-State."

Brenneman said the Cox would definitely be the team's No. 2 or No. 3 player for the rest of the season.

"Dallas has incredible potential," Brenneman said. "She's really playing good right now. She transferred from San Diego State, and I think that she is now more comfortable."

Several other players contributed to the teams success at Iowa State, Brenneman said.

"Denise Pottle and Staci Busch really make our top four solid," Brenneman said.

"Denise is definitely the leader of our team. She knows that she has to play well, because this is her last year."

Wyatt's run sparks Kentucky

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Randy Wyatt's 64-yard touchdown run began a fourth-quarter comeback that gave Kentucky a 21-17 victory over South Carolina Thursday night.

The Wildcats (2-2, 1-1 Southeastern Conference) followed with an 81-yard scoring drive consisting of 13 running plays, the last a 1-yard burst by Michael Woodfork with 4:50 left.

South Carolina got the ball twice after Kentucky's go-ahead touchdown, but safety Marcus Jenkins secured the victory with a fumble recovery and an interception in the final four minutes.

The Gamecocks drove to the Kentucky 41, but Bennett, who rushed for 132 yards, fumbled, and Jenkins recovered.

COLUMN

Writer urges students to support program

BOB LEHMAN

This is my fifth year as a Wildcat. Before I became one, I knew nothing and, consequently, cared nothing about them.

That all changed once I got here. I threw myself into anything and everything that was purple. I became one of the biggest K-State fans around for no other reason than it was my school.

I quickly learned that, around here, the catch phrase was "wait until basketball season." I didn't care. I went out and bought a K-State football T-shirt anyway.

I put myself on the line every Saturday afternoon in the fall as a member of the Pride of Wildcatland. We went out to the far-from-packed KSU Stadium to cheer on our team, win or lose, good or bad. After all, this was our school.

I put my heart and soul into pushing this team forward in whatever way I could. By no means am I a part of the success this school has had, but because of how much of myself I have put into it, I can't help but feel a sense of pride and accomplishment with regard to the football program.

It is something I wish everyone at this school could feel. I don't mean a superficial feeling of "Hey, we're ranked No. 29." I mean a true sense of pride that you are a part, however small, of something special.

It is not a hard thing to achieve. But it takes more than going to the game because that is what your friends do.

It takes going to the game because you want to support those guys out there in purple and white who are working their butts off to represent you and your school.

Once you're there, it takes more than cheering only when things go well. It takes cheering all the time.

Don't let yourself get down. Stay positive, and the team will respond. By all means, reward the team for a job well done and go nuts in the stands.

But by the same token, keep cheering when things don't go so well. Yell and scream — urge them on when they get tired. Don't tell them your mother could do better. Your mother is not out there — they are.

Constant cheering isn't all you can do. Imagine the feeling the team would get if they came out of the locker room every week into the midst of 35,000 purple-clad fans. That adrenaline alone could beat Oklahoma.

Go out and spend five bucks on a purple T-shirt. There is a red sea in Lincoln. There's no reason there can't be a purple sea in Manhattan.

Basically, what it all boils down to is giving of yourself for a couple of hours every Saturday afternoon for the team. Let your purple pride show vocally and physically.

If you go to games regularly, become a true K-State fan and support the team the entire game, good and bad. Don't turn on them when they need you most.

If you don't go to games, go. The football team is representing you whether you like it or not. Go and let yourself get caught up in the phenomenon of college football. It will be unlike anything you have ever experienced.

The team showed it was ready to go big-time last week against Minnesota. Coach Bill Snyder was asked how they stopped the Gophers. All he said was, "We worked hard."

This week, and every week, let's all of us in Wildcatland "work hard" and show the team we're ready too.

After all, it is our school.

Smatterings

BY STEVEN ROCK

'Follow those buns!'

We can just hear it now:
"I just passed a ho-ho, and there's a ding-dong up ahead. Wait a minute. Is that a honey bun to my left? Holy Break Cakes, Captain — he's given me the slip."

Indeed, the Sunday afternoon police scanner must have been one entertaining item.

It seems that a Wichita car theft unwittingly tried to make out with a bread truck from the Rainbo Bakery last weekend. He hopped in the vehicle, waited until it was completely loaded with baked goods and took off.

Just one problem — the back doors were opened.

"They had bread and all sorts of Break Cakes and everything flying off the semi as it went down highway K-15," Police Capt. Beckie Miller said, undoubtedly chuckling uncontrollably.

So, officers simply followed the proverbial trail of bread crumbs and promptly arrested the man in nearby Derby.

But the real twist of the story may be that the spilled goodies, complete with tire tracks, were eaten by passersby.

Thanks, but no thanks.

And you said puppy love is restricted to humans

The next time Fido looks at you with his big, beady dog eyes, cocking his little dog head and just gazing at you lovingly, watch out — Fido may have fallen in love with you.

Or so says Elizabeth Marshall Thomas, author of "The Hidden Life of Dogs." Thomas, who said she spent 100,000 hours over the years observing 11 dogs, claims dogs have very human-like characteristics.

What, exactly, is a canine capable of?

Thomas said dogs can rape, enjoy "romantic love," marry (I'm not making this up), consciously kill pups and even smile. Dogs, Thomas said, have "moral fiber."

"In this country, there are thousands and thousands, hundreds of thousands of people who know darn well what I am talking about," Thomas said, refuting so-called experts who say she is a few cards short of a full deck.

"They have seen it themselves. They're good observers and know from their dogs what is going on. And this book is written for them. And if the scientists don't like it, they can shove it in their ear."

Heel, Elizabeth.

Good girl.

I bet Don Knotts never had these problems

Poor Christian Slater. He sure has his problems.

It seems Slater has been stricken with that famed Hollywood illness of falling in love with every woman he's ever made a movie with.

"We got very close," he said. "It's one of those unavoidable things."

The latest target of his affection is Patricia Arquette, with whom he stars in "True Romance." And he said their nude love scene was "really special."

"I lost sight of the crew being around. It was the first time nothing on the outside really mattered."

Weekend can't wait until Slater stars with Rosanne Arnold. Or, better yet, Sandra Bernhardt.

That oughtta cure him.

PHONE TAG

Time: 2:20 p.m.
Date: Thurs., Sept. 23.
Place: K-State Union.
Number of rings: 11.
Answerer: Seth Gilman.
Year and major: Freshman in journalism and mass communications.

Q. Why did you answer the phone?
A. "Because the phone was ringing, and I was sick of hearing it ring. The phone just kept ringing and ringing, so I picked it up."
Q. Eleven times, to be exact. Do you know why I called?
A. "Is this that thing that's in the Collegian?"
Q. Bingo.
A. "You're not taping me, are you?" (Wait a minute — who's asking the questions here?)
Q. No, I'm not. Those annoyingly long pauses mean that I am writing furiously. Anyway, Seth, do you have any plans for this weekend?
A. "I'm going to the game."
Q. Good for you. Do you know how the Cats are doing?
A. "Yeah — they're 3-0 for the first time ever."
Q. That is inaccurate.
A. "No it isn't."
Q. Yes it is. They were 3-0 last year, in fact. Where did you hear that?
A. "That's what the guy on the radio said, the play-by-play guy."
Q. Well, that's just not true.
A. "Why did he say it then?" (There you go, asking the questions again.)
Q. I couldn't tell you.
A. "Their last game was their first non-conference road win since 1974."
Q. 1979.
A. "Whatever."
Q. Well, Seth, thanks for playing.
A. "Thank you. You're not going to make me look stupid, are you?" (My reputation precedes me.)

The Stick Figure Players present The Renaissance Festival

THE RENAISSANCE FESTIVAL

The festival opened the weekend of Sept. 4, and continues every weekend through Oct. 17.

Themes direct every weekend.
September 25 and 26 is the Harvest Fair.
October 2 and 3 is the Tournament of Kings.
October 9 and 10 is the Music and Dance.
October 16 and 17 is the Fantasy Farewell.

The festival begins every day at 9:45 a.m. with a front gate ceremony. Gates are open from 10 a.m. until 6:30 p.m. Tickets cost $10.95 for adults, $4.95 for children and $9.75 for students and senior citizens.

The Renaissance Festival of Kansas City can transport those who are willing to experience another time and another place.

The festival, which began in 1977, is a benefit for the Kansas City Art Institute. In the first year, the festival drew 7,500 fair-goers, 50 performers and six artisans. In 1992, the festival drew a crowd of 176,000 people, 300 performers, and offered more than 150 artisans, Leigh Reinhart ticket sales coordinator and marketing assistant said.

Waiting to greet the patron are a wide array of street performers and characters common to the 16th century: vagabonds, hunters, aristocrats, commoners, musicians, jugglers, gypsies and many more. All are dressed in costume and bring with them the dialect and mannerisms of this time period.

The festival, located in Bonner Springs, is a reproduction of a 16th century village. The scene is set by a charmingly wooded area, as villas with shops inside line the lanes.

"The village is fashioned after a 16th-century harvest celebration," Reinhart said. Included in this are a King, Queen and their court, who rule over the shire.

Dotting the lanes are shops, where merchants sell craft of the time period.

"It is a shopping spree gone wild," T.K. Schlemm, a long time participant of the festival, said. "It is the largest and finest assortment of hand-crafted items around. There is no other place where you can find all of these treasures."

This dedication brings a great amount of atmosphere to the festival. The artisans live on site, and their daily interaction heightens the ambience.

"We love it here and have more fun because it is longer than the other festivals we attend," T.K. Schlemm, a long-time participant of the festival, said. "This essentially becomes like a 16th century village. In a way, we form our own society here."

The Renaissance broadened all cultural facets. The joyous spirit of the age encouraged all to learn about poetry, art and literature. Chivalry and codes of honor were emphasized. It was also an age of ardent thought. The earth was believed to be the center of the universe.

Roberta Comstock, a member of the Society for Creative Anachronism Inc. has adopted the trade of the Viking weighted wharp loom. She also has adopted a time persona — Hertha Balir of Froggestow.

"This is a wonderful place for exposure in a historical context," Balir said. "This is also a wonderful place for educational demonstrations of time-period crafts."

The performing arts was a big part of the period, and the arts are well represented at the festival. There are six main stages, each offering 14 shows daily.

People may hear musical varieties of the time, including madrigal, harp, Celtic and Irish music at Merlin's Pub.

Another stage features a mime act along with juggling, magic and comedy. The antic-filled Robin Hood & Little John presentation is popular among the artisans and patrons.

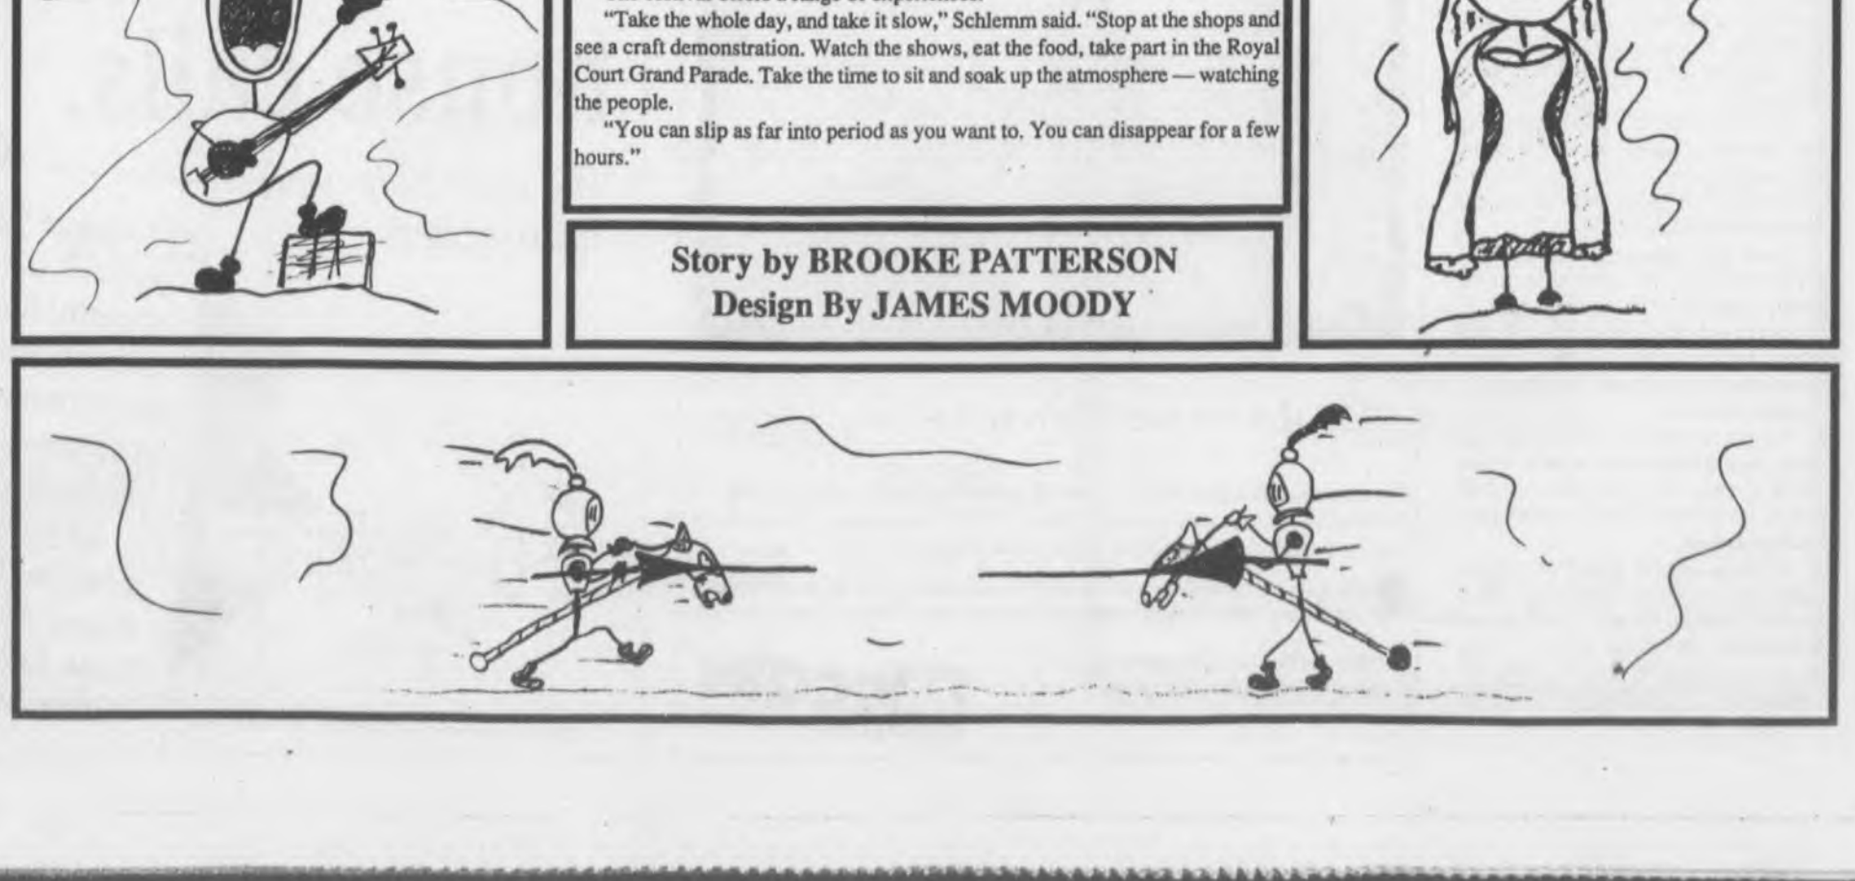
A new feature of the festival is the Renaissance Acting Troupe. The troupe consists of 16 actors. All are professionals or semi-professionals who put on a high-quality show, Reinhart said. They perform throughout the festival, and their featured act is the commedia dell'arte, which is a time-period tradition involving a traveling troop performing outlandish improvisational pieces.

The festivities also include knighting ceremonies and weapon demonstrations like jousting and sword fighting.

"Fighting was both a symbolic exercise in control and an opportunity to meet old enemies," Richard Flickinger said. "The causes ranged from spilt beer to lofty religious issues."

The festival offers a range of experiences.

"Take the whole day, and take it slow," Schlemm said. "Stop at the shops and see a craft demonstration. Watch the shows, eat the food, take part in the Royal Court Grand Parade. Take the time to sit and soak up the atmosphere — watching the people.



"You can slip as far into period as you want to. You can disappear for a few hours."

Pageant portrays town's history

TARA EUBANKS
Collegian

A live re-enactment of the demise of the Kaw Native Americans will be part of this weekend's activities during the second annual Wind Pageant.

"The pageant was started to tell people of the history that is behind Council Grove," said Stan Hirschler, director of the Convention of Visitors Bureau. The Kaw and the Osage Native Americans, along with the Santa Fe Trail, are both of significant value to Council Grove's history, he said.

The program is a multi-media event. It will incorporate 130 authentic slides of art work and historical images on a 16-by-24-foot video screen, narration by characters significant to Council Grove in the mid-1800s, a village showing the lifestyle of the Kaw, and a 60-foot town-set of the commercial district of Council Grove.

"The setting and the costuming of the cast is very true to the lifestyles of the 1860s," Ron Parks, curator of the Kaw Mission State Historical Site, said.

The setting of the pageant is in an amphitheater created to hold a capacity of 1,300.

The visual aids and the actual landmarks give the allure of actually being part of this re-enactment, Parks said.

The narration of the play is done by three main characters, Seth Hays, founder of Council Grove, Chief Al-Le-Ja-Wa-Ho and a townswoman of the community.

The script, written by Parks, shows the different perspectives of the removal and relocation of the Kaw.

"The script was sent to the Kaw Nation in Oklahoma to make sure that it represented the Native American's view accurately," Parks said.

The entire program is based on factual events that occurred in Council Grove during this time period.

"Everything is based on fact except for the language usage," Parks said.

The script experienced little change from last year because of the responses received by the coordinators of the pageant.

"The blend of music, visual scenes and setting were superb," Loretta Keyser, publicity chairwoman, said.

The narrators were also so believable through their dialogue that tears were hard to resist, Keyser said.

The Wind Pageant will be at 8 p.m. Saturday in the Council Grove Park on Main Street.

A chili cook-off and the Santa Fe Trail Arts Festival are also part of this weekend's events in celebration of Council Grove's historical background.

Native Bolivian band performs at McCain

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Rumillajta, a Bolivian band from La Paz, treated an auditorium full of Manhattan Middle School students to a performance of their native music Thursday morning.

The public will have the same opportunity to enjoy Rumillajta's sound when the band performs at 3 p.m. Sunday afternoon in McCain Auditorium.

This is the first leg of an international tour including other parts of the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom.

The majority of the group's sound comes from traditional stringed instruments such as the charango.

Juan Carlos Cardeno, Rumillajta's guitarist, said the only non-handmade instrument the band plays is the guitar.

"There is an old joke that the guitar is the only good thing that the Spanish brought with them," Cardeno said.

Nestor Tintaya and Carlos Pouce play woodwind instruments called zamponas, which are made from bamboo. Adrian Villanueva plays end-blown flutes called quenas. Pouce also plays the bombo drum, which is made from llama skin.

Laura said the music Rumillajta plays is a style several hundreds of years old that has been passed down from father to son.

Laura said the music is based on the concept that music is an extension of nature.

Laura said the band's name is from Quechua, a language native to Bolivia. Translated, Rumillajta means "city of stone." The band's guitar player, Cordero, said the Quechua are the second biggest of the original nations of people in Bolivia.

"Today we can see the stones with many rings, and we can see our ancestors' culture in the stones," Laura said.

He said the city in "city of stone" represents the Latin American people, the workers and those people who are still oppressed.

"Our music has a lot of energy with a fast rhythm based on the spirit of freedom, which never dies," Laura said.

He said the music was also about the Incas' sadness from being conquered by the Europeans. Specifically, he said it was sadness about the loss of knowledge and ways of thinking in fields such as astronomy and medicine during the Spanish colonization, and from being made slaves by the Europeans in their chase for wealth.

Cordeno said Rumillajta is part of a musicial cooperative in Bolivia that not only furthers the performance of music itself, but also the instruments and equipment.

Each member of the band has his own specialty in making the instruments.

In fact, hundreds of them have been handmade. Cordeno said Tintaya is doing research to learn the best material from which to make the quenas.

Cordeno said the band has just finished its 12th album, which has been dedicated to the original people of Bolivia.

Stick releases debut album

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

It's time to get out the ol' whacking club and bag some kill. Kansas-style hard rock has again scored big.

Stick, a four-piece group from Lawrence, has released its debut album, "Heavy Bag," on Arista Records.

Despite Czarnopys' departure, Stick members Darrel Brannock, Tim Mohn, Mark Smirl and Mike Tobin deliver some impressive blows to the body. Listening to "Heavy Bag" stirred up several artistic comparisons. Similar groups include early Black Sabbath, Soundgarden, Helmet, Corrosion of Conformity and King's X.

Trying hard to separate themselves from the past, the band drives forward with knock-out punches that leave minds foggy and bones broken.

Stick has intensified its assault even though the members have been together for several years. Sporting a tight, firm style of penetrating groove, the group continues to re-invent the popular grunge sound.

In its corner, "Heavy Bag" displays good production work with lyrics that continue to fire away at various social problems and injustices.

Stick's sound is guitar-driven and thoroughly saturated with power chords. Despite the limited approach, the band shows it can produce a few styles of rock 'n' roll.

The leader of the pack ...

Willie the Wildcat

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Willie the Wildcat, the K-State mascot, takes time to sign autographs for young fans during the K-State vs. Western Kentucky football game. Willie's comical musings and light-hearted personality make him a favorite with the younger audience.

LISA STAAB
Collegian

He has a huge head and does push-ups for points. He is a blend of K-State pride and tradition.

Willie the Wildcat, K-State mascot, said he believes in purple and spontaneity.

"I picture myself as K-State's number one fan. I have a lot of traditions within me as well as new ideas," he said.

Teri Sedlacek, junior in accounting, said she agrees that Willie is the best fan.

"Willie symbolizes K-State pride. He's a tradition to K-State and is the motivation for the student body," she said.

Willie said he was selected as mascot three years ago during cheerleading tryouts in front of a panel of judges.

"During tryouts we had to perform a skit with music or signs and have the head on and dress accordingly," he said. "At the end I was required to do a reaction session. For example, I had to demonstrate how I would react if Dana Altman (head basketball coach) got a technical or if a little kid came up to me and wasn't sure he liked me."

"We had some crazy fans do push-ups at the games a few years ago, so I decided to get a push-up board. The idea works well and everyone gets involved by counting the number of push-ups," Willie said.

"With my 20 pound head, I look like a grandma doing push-ups. It gets difficult when I have to do 35 or 40."

To prepare for the games, Willie said he lifts weights three times a week and goes to the cheerleading practices.

"I like to go to practices, too, because it keeps me in touch with the squad," Willie said.

One source of Willie's pride is the K-State crowd.

"When we have a good play, I react and am wild. The crowd's enthusiasm keeps me going," he said. "The crowd is my catalyst especially when they are happy."

"I think he's great. The many games I've attended he gets the crowd involved," Urban said. "We've all got the spirit but someone has to have the innovation to start it. We all need Willie's enthusiasm and vitality to get us pumped up during the game."

In addition, Willie said the children offer him inspiration.

"I want to portray myself as being nice so the kids like me since they're my favorite part. More of the kids are there to see Willie. They don't care about the game," he said.

CITY

Folklife, food and fun available at weekend festival

DARBY WALLACE
Collegian

If you're looking for a place to eat, drink and be merry, check out the Little Apple Folklife and Craft Festival this weekend in Manhattan City Park.

Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department's annual festival runs from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at 11th and Fremont streets.

There will be a more than 160 craft booths, a variety of food vendors, musical entertainment, a folklife demonstration area, a hospitality room and a children's tent at the folklife event.

The festival is expected to attract more than 16,000 people from Manhattan and surrounding areas.

"Our Little Apple Folklife and Craft Festival has grown into one of the most attended and successful events in our city," Don Cukjati, director of the festival's fine arts, said.

The fine arts tent, a new addition to the festival, will include paintings, sculptures and designs from local artists.

Saturdays musical entertainment consists of Sidekicks, Henry Ashwood & Friends, Flatlanders, Jeb Bolan and Elmo & the Deadbeats. The bands will start at 10 a.m. and run hour-and-a-half sets until 6 p.m.

"Brother Jeb is one of a kind," Doug Kohlhase, K-State senior and past festival goer, said.

"Manhattan is lucky to have such a carefree music man, not to mention a great dancer, at the festival."

> JEANETTE DEMBKOSKI
> PROGRAM COORDINATOR OF THE FESTIVAL

Wrapping up Sunday's entertainment will be Ghost Town Band, Eagle Ridge, Streetside and Phil Wang from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

The continuous music offers anything from country and western to blues and jazz.

Brother Jeb, who played earlier this year in the K-State Union Courtyard, calls his style of music "folk 'n' roll."

As for the food vendors, there will be barbecue brisket, chicken, ribs, buffalo burgers and bratwursts. There will even be homemade root beer and candy. Ethnic foods from old Mexico also will be served.

The children's tent has a show from the Manhattan Sunset Zoo, a free arts and crafts workshop, pony rides and sand-box art, which will be free of charge for children 12 and younger.

The namesake of the festival, the folklife area, will be filled with demonstrations of medieval fighting, Indian beading, spinning and more traditional displays.

Jewelry, baskets, metal sculptures, flowers and 100 more booths will make-up the craft section.

The festival will be completely covered under circus-style tents — so, come rain or shine, the festival will go on.

"This event is getting bigger every year," Jeanette Dembkoski, program coordinator of the festival and the department said.

"The new fine arts tent even has the Manhattan Arts Council as a co-sponsor.

"We are really excited about this year's festival."

Movie features high-tech voyeurism

TRENT FRAGER

Sharon Stone's name has become synonymous with sex. And sex sells, or so thought the casting directors of "Sliver," Stone's latest flesh flick.

Artistic, sleek cinematography, superficial performances and racy sex scenes, of course, typify this film. While there is a flamboyantly technical flair about "Sliver" due to lighting, set design and score, this film is not art.

Stone stars as Carley Norris, an emotionally flaky book editor, who moves into a high-rise apartment building with a bizarre history and a couple of mysterious tenants, chiefly Zeke Hawkins (William Baldwin) and Jack Landsford (Tom Berenger).

At first, 20-B seems like home. However, Carley slowly learns bit by bit, as her relationships with both Zeke and Jack grow (in the usual fashion Stone is accustomed to), that it is also the site of three unexplained deaths.

Who cares?

"Sliver" is, at its best, audacious and stylish. At its worst, it is foolish, predictable and arrogantly trashy.

Lines such as "You look good enough to eat" and "Are you wearing the brown panties?" illustrate the ever-present cheap talk Carley and Zeke share during weak moments. But their relationship is just that—cheap.

It preaches "Get a life!" How disappointing it is with all the other faults of our society and of the characters in the film, mainly murder and promiscuity, that the only unsolicited advice this film lends is not to eavesdrop.

Sex, AIDS and media

Dear Cassandra,

I happened to read a poem recently that goes like this:

"Sex is natural, sex is fun, Sex is meant for everyone. While girl and boy in bed they sleep, Bad manners it is for you to peep."

I started to think to myself how people can be so creative when it comes to this topic. People in this country are so obsessed with sex, which is the cause for the alarming spread of the deadly AIDS disease.

While the government spends huge amounts of money on AIDS campaigns, safety awareness programs, treating HIV positive patients etc., each year, I really wonder whether all this is worth it.

I think there should be a control on sex magazines, strip-tease joints etc. It literally makes one sick to the stomach. Please suggest.

Signed,
Sexually Baffled and Disgusted

Dear Baffled,

AIDS is spreading, not because people are obsessed with sex, but because they're not safe about it. AIDS is not a moral issue at all. It's a medical issue.

Regarding your concerns about pornography, strip teases, etc., I think you'll find folks who want to ban pornography. (Personally, I think the hard-core stuff depicting violence against women should definitely go.)

I don't really have any suggestions for solving the complex issues you've raised concerning our society's sexual morality. I guess just live your life safely and share your beliefs with those around you, including, obviously, your children.

And as a final word, helping to stop the AIDS epidemic is definitely worth it. Please know that.

CAMPUS

Lectures named for Peters

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

Kansas State University Center for Aging is honoring the memory of its late director, George R. Peters, through a new annual lecture series.

Peters, who died this summer, was the director for the center from 1977 to 1992 and was instrumental in developing much of the gerontology curriculum at K-State.

"We offer lecture seminar series each year, but we wanted to make this one special," Lyn Norris-Baker, director of the center, said.

"This annual lecture is for people involved in gerontology."

Norris-Baker said because the series is to honor Peters' work in gerontology, the center will have topics of interests to people in the aging-related field.

"We will try to have nationally- and/or internationally-known people in the field of gerontology come to speak here," Norris-Baker said.

The lecture is open to the students and faculty on campus and people in the gerontology field.

"For the first lecture, we had people from our campus, the Manhattan area, Topeka and Kansas City come and hear the speaker," Norris-Baker said.

Rowles is a professor of geography and behavioral science and the associate director of the Sanders-Brown Center on Aging at the University of Kentucky.

"We felt it appropriate to invite someone who was involved in rural issues as well as long-term care to be the inaugural speaker," Norris-Baker said. "Those two topics were of great interest to Dr. Peters."

Peters was involved in the graduate emphasis in gerontology, the secondary major in gerontology and the emphasis in long-term care administration.

fee of $20 a year, an FFA or AMA license, for liability reasons, and preferably a personal plane. Crouch said there are a few planes for those who don't have their own, and the club is considering renting planes.

"The only problem we found with renting the planes is that if one mishap were to occur, the plane would most likely be totaled in damage," Niehaus said.

Tony Eckert is second-year president of the club and has been a member for four years.

"I have always been interested in flying remote-control planes," Eckert said. "So, when I heard about the club, I got involved immediately. It's really a great hobby because it has a bit of challenge to it."

There are still plenty of good days left to fly out at Tuttle, but in the case of inclement weather, the club uses a different flying field.

"We fly at the dam until around October," Niehaus said. "When the weather gets rough, we meet at the Car Clinic garage, which one of our members owns."

Crouch said there will be a funfly at the dam soon and hopes to have a big turnout.

"This will be one of the last few funflies we have for awhile," he said. "So, it would be a great time for the interested public to come out and watch what goes on and hopefully get involved."

Shark fossil found at Tuttle

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The summer floods turned up a surprising piece of rock in the Tuttle Creek Canyon that scientists say could be part of a shark's jaw dating back millions of years.

"It's quite a spectacular specimen," Allen Archer, assistant professor of geology at K-State, said.

"Nothing like this has been found down here yet," he said.

Scientists said Friday the four-inch rock, which could easily be 250 million years old, might provide a key to identifying a species of shark never described before.

Jason Robben, junior in construction science, said he found the fossil about three weeks ago, but he did not think the piece of fossil was important at first. Robben and his roommate, Bryan Stancliff, senior in biology, took the fossil home with them. They then brought it to Deb Welch, graduate student in biology, who took it to Page Twiss, professor of geology, last week to be identified.

Robben led geologists to a spot in the canyon where the fossilized jaw, believed to be that of a shell-crushing shark, was embedded in several feet of shale.

Small white rivets around the rock were a clue to students who recognized them as teeth, and the fossil as a piece of bone that came from a shark's jaw.

Members of the group, their pants tucked in rubber boots, disregarded the afternoon rain Friday to carefully remove the fossil, which measured just under 2 feet long.

Keith Miller, a post-graduate researcher at K-State, said the fossil could help with questions about sharks and the Tuttle Creek area. He said because the jaw is large and well preserved, it will be easier to study.

Finding a fossilized shark's jaw in Kansas is not uncommon, said Hans Schultz, a national expert on fossil fish and professor of biology at the University of Kansas.

Shultz said in the Permian Period, 250 million years ago, Manhattan was very near the sea. In fact, small shark fossils are commonly found in Hamilton, south of Emporia, where he has done extensive research. Huge and famous marine fossils also have been found in western Kansas, he said.

"At that time, there was sea close to Manhattan, but the problem is the fish I know from there are much smaller," he said.

Pilot health programs initiated

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

This is the first in a four-part series about how the Clinton health-care plan will affect Kansans and, specifically, K-State students.

HEALTH CARE + REFORM

The Clinton administration has envisioned a program of sweeping health-care reform, but states will be mostly responsible for the details of implementing that plan.

Health-care reform is not a new issue to Kansas. State legislators have done their own studies on the issues and have already implemented some pilot programs to provide broader access to residents and cut health-care costs.

Managed Health Care

A Primary Care Network pilot program has been developed in Shawnee, Sedgwick, Saline, Douglas, Johnson, Leavenworth and Wyandotte counties.

Patients served by the Medicaid program choose or are assigned "gatekeeper" physicians who coordinate the rest of their care, such as lab work and referrals, to specialists.

The program is supposed to be more efficient because patients receive more of their care from primary-care physicians than from specialists. Rep. Melvin Neufeld, R-Ingalls, member of the Kansas Legislature Joint Committee on Health Care Decisions for the 1990s, said the program has the potential for decreasing costs. However, he said some people complained they had more problems getting to a specialist when they needed it.

"Not everyone will like not having a choice," Neufeld said.

The department of Social Rehabilitative Services has studied the pilot but does not have any concrete data.

Southwestern Bell Corporation implemented a plan for managed care in 1987 for its 67,000 employees, according to a special report by the Governor's Task Force on Health Care.

Employees pay a higher co-payment if they see non-network doctors.

In the first year of the program, Southwestern Bell's health-care costs increased at a rate about 7 percent below the national average. The next year the increase in health-care costs for the company was about 15 percent lower than the national average, according to the report.

Rural Health Care

Jim Ward, a former member of the legislative health-care committee, said out of 105 counties in Kansas, about half do not have enough doctors.

"We are talking about access," he said. "People need to be able to get to a doctor for care."

Neufeld, a farmer, said because about 80 percent of Kansas is defined as rural, providing rural health care is an important part of reform.

"Our number-one crisis in rural health care is a lack of primary-care providers," he said.

Neufeld said one of of the biggest contributors to this problem is that in the past decade the number of specialists is increasing opposed to primary-care physicians.

"The medical colleges are graduating specialists instead of the kind of doctors we need," he said.

Primary physicians are the first line of defense. For example, primary doctors would see patients

Joseph Kennedy II, U.S. Rep., D-Mass., will speak to K-State students Friday afternoon at the conclusion of a political-awareness week beginning Tuesday.

The week is sponsored by the KSU Young Democrats and starts with the showing of "The Distinguished Gentleman" at 7 p.m. in Union Forum Hall.

Two events will take place Wednesday.

From 11:30 to 12:30 p.m., a lunch buffet will be served in the Bluemont Room in the Union while Karen McCulloh, Riley County commissioner, discusses local issues.

McCulloh was instrumental in planning the Farrell Library expansion, Michelle Smith, vice president of Young Democrats, said.

The lunch will be an open time to discuss local politics or Farrell Library expansion with McCulloh, Smith said.

The price of the lunch is $5.50, but students will not be charged if they choose not to eat.

At 3 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre, Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, a gubernatorial candidate, will address a women's studies class, but the event is open to everyone.

"She will be talking about women's issues and women in politics and how politics has affected her life," Smith said.

On Thursday, an event titled "Pizza and Politics with Tom Sawyer," will be from 6 to 7 p.m. in Nichols Hall, free of charge.

Later, Sawyer, D-Sedgwick and minority leader in the Kansas House of Representatives, will address Student Senate at 7 p.m. in the Big 8 Room, Smith said.

He will discuss upcoming issues in the 1994 Kansas Legislature concerning the Kansas Board of Regents.

On Friday, Joseph Kennedy will speak at 3:30 p.m. in Forum Hall.

Joseph Kennedy is the son of the late Sen. Robert Kennedy, who spoke at K-State 25 years ago at a Landon Lecture, shortly after announcing his candidacy for president of the United States.

"He'll be talking about politics and why young people should be aware of what's going on in the political world around them," Smith said.

So far, the Young Democrats have received positive feedback about the week, she said.

"We've gotten good feedback about events that have been planned, especially about Joe Kennedy coming," Smith said.

U.S. presence in Somalia questioned

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Expanding the peacekeeping mission in Somalia was a mistake, the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee said Sunday. And, he said, it's time for Congress to narrow the U.S. role there so it has a definite ending point.

"This mission cannot continue to be enlarged," Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"And I would make that mission very narrow based on what I know now," he said.

Demands for an end to the U.S. military presence in Somalia were given new impetus Saturday when three Americans were killed after militia fired a rocket-propelled grenade that brought down their helicopter in Mogadishu. Jubilant crowds surrounded the downed craft, holding up pieces of the wreckage.

Reporters who went to the scene several hours later said some Somalis displayed what they said were pieces of flesh from the dead crew.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., called for a rapid withdrawal before more Americans are killed.

Nunn said he did not support putting time limits on any military deployment. But, he said he thinks the administration needs to be asked what the mission is. He said he believes that, at the very least, the Senate and the House ought to narrow that mission so there is a definitive ending point.

"I don't think capturing one person is going to end this," he said, referring to the search for warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, who is blamed for most of the attacks on U.N. peacekeepers.

"There are too many people out there in the streets celebrating the death of Americans, which is absolutely disgusting and tragic and deplorable. But it also may tell us something about the popular sentiment."

It was the first time a helicopter was downed during the 10-month U.N. operation in Mogadishu and the worst loss of U.S. life since four American soldiers were killed Aug. 8 by a land mine.

White House spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said the attack underscores the need to re-establish security in Mogadishu to prevent the international humanitarian efforts from being undermined.

The Senate earlier this month passed a resolution asking President Clinton to report on the Somali situation by Oct. 15 and setting a Nov. 15 date for congressional action to authorize the presence of U.S. troops there.

Sen. Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., asked on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley" whether he favored an immediate pullout, said the president ought to be given time to work this out.

"We need to find out what our mission is there before additional Americans and others are killed," Dole said. "There have already been 56 killed in what we thought was a humanitarian effort."

Dole said policy toward the U.S. troops in Somalia, about 4,000 out of a total U.N. peacekeeping force of 28,000, would have an effect on whether Congress approves a larger peacekeeping mission in Bosnia.

Police caution drivers about carjackings

TOPEKA (AP) — Police have only two words of advice when people ask how they can avoid carjackings: Be alert.

Motorists must be aware of their surroundings, both when they are driving and when they are parking their cars, trucks and vans, law enforcement officials say. They must know how they can escape quickly if the need arises.

Carjacking — taking over an occupied car by force, either when it is stopped or after a bump-from-behind accident — made its way to the Heartland.

An attempted carjacking that stirred Kansans occurred Sept. 18 outside a Lawrence park when a man approached by four teen-agers who wanted his vehicle was killed by one of them when he attempted to drive away.

The Kansas Highway Patrol is preparing an informational brochure to help motorists avoid being crime victims.

Dole supports NAFTA in Indiana speech

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., hailed NAFTA Saturday, saying it would open new markets for Indiana's agricultural commodities.

Dole, the keynote speaker at the Indiana Republican State Dinner, also said the GOP made a mistake during the Reagan and Bush years by not placing more emphasis on reforming the nation's health-care system.

Dole told about 1,300 people attending the dinner that labor groups were putting the wrong spin on the North American Free Trade Agreement by saying it would cost U.S. jobs instead of opening up new markets for U.S. goods.

Floods in Europe claim 13 lives, hundreds flee

ROME (AP) — Torrents of floodwater tore away at bridges and roadbeds on Sunday, swamping Alpine towns across northern Italy, Switzerland and France. At least 13 people have died.

Thousands of homes and businesses were flooded and hundreds of residents evacuated in the Italian regions of Liguria, Piedmont, Lombardy and Valle d'Aosta. Damage estimates have run into hundreds of millions of dollars.

There were warnings not to drink water from some aqueducts contaminated by flood waters, and electricity remained out for thousands of people.

Rain stopped falling Sunday evening in all of the affected Italian regions except Lombardy, but a state of emergency remained in effect.

Last of train wreckage cleared in Alabama

SARALAND, Ala. (AP) — Crews began hauling the last engine of the wrecked Sunset Limited out of a muddy bayou on Sunday. Other workers repaired the bridge from which it plunged, carrying 47 people to their deaths.

The baggage car of the California-to-Florida passenger train was pulled from Bayou Canot earlier in the day, leaving only one of three engines to be removed by crane from the bayou near Mobile.

The train plunged off a wood-and-steel bridge into the dark water early Wednesday. The accident, the worst in Amtrak's history, was survived by 163 people.

Still moored nearby were a tow of barges that investigators believe struck the railroad bridge shortly before the train careened into the water before dawn. A tugboat lost the barges in heavy fog.

Yeltsin supporters rally in Red Square

MOSCOW (AP) — Thousands of Russians cheered Boris Yeltsin at a concert on Red Square Sunday, and at least 10,000 people marched through downtown in the biggest demonstration of support for the president since he disbanded parliament five days ago.

Across town, the hard-liners who have defied the president by refusing to leave the parliament building dug in their heels.

In a potentially significant development late Sunday, the Interfax news agency reported that a top Yeltsin aide had agreed to simultaneous parliamentary and presidential elections. No date was mentioned, and the president has not approved the proposal.

U.S. water systems violate safe water act

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal and state officials are failing to protect millions of Americans who are exposed to contaminants every time they drink a glass of tap water or take a shower, a private environmental watchdog group said.

Water systems throughout the country routinely violate the federal Safe Drinking Water Act, but penalties are rare, according to "Think Before You Drink," a report released Sunday by the Natural Resources Defense Council.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency logged 300,000 state and federal violations in 1991 and 1992, but only about 1 percent resulted in penalties, said Erik Olson, author of the report.

Most of the violations involved failure to regularly test water quality, report contamination, follow proper water-treatment methods or notify the public of violations, Olson said.

Wind pageant highlights festival

Council Grove residents displayed their heritage in the second-annual Santa Fe Trail Arts Festival and Chili Cook-off Saturday and Sunday.

A "Voices of the Wind People" pageant was the highlight of the festival, and various exhibits of arts and crafts were set up throughout the weekend.

Saturday evening "Voices of the Wind" was presented on the stage of a dried-out riverbed. At the bottom of a hillside, complete with teepees and a wagon train, campfires burned while children gathered wood, and big hoop skirts swished as women walked across the stage.

Council Grove residents and members of the Kaw Nation coordinated a stage script with an accompanying slide show that narrated the history of the area.

The story of the Kaw Indians and their struggle to keep their land was told from both the Kaw perspective and the pioneer perspective.

Sharon Haun, cast member and costume designer, said volunteers built the amphitheater in February and spent all summer adding steps to the hillside for the show.

"We've had quite a time getting this riverbed ready," said Jan Claves, tour coordinator of the Council Grove Visitor Bureau. "We discovered a natural spring, so we had to dig drainage ditches and lay down wood chips."

In addition to the pageant costumes, Haun designed the living history characters' costumes. Haun researched the townspeople to create costumes that were accurate.

People who played an important role in the history of Council Grove were researched and portrayed by residents.

Booths were set up to display arts, music, crafts and food. Everything from a blacksmith exhibit to wool-rug hooking to hide tanning were featured in Sunday's activities.

"I got into rug hooking two years ago last spring," Dorothy Forsderg, Wichita resident and festival participant, said. "I had everything in a big basket and all my newly acquired equipment, and a tornado took it and blew it all away."

Forsderg said if she worked on an area the size of her hand everyday, she would have a 6-by-9 rug in three years.

Craftsmanship of every kind was displayed.

Elain Puckett, Council Grove resident and festival participant, tanned rabbit hides to make traditional Indian mendellas. Mendellas are ornamental and were used by the Indians to ward off evil spirits.

Puckett said she first got into tanning when her children joined 4-H.

"It was a way to teach kids values and about taking care of animals," she said.

The Fort Riley Ceremonial Cavalry Troop performed a riding exhibition, saber drill and horse jumping.

Don Cress, lifetime Council Grove resident and founder of the festival, said he keeps pushing the event.

The festivities were meant to promote the history of the community and restoration of the Old Stone Barn, he said. A museum will be placed in the barn as soon as the restoration is finished. The barn was placed on the National Historic Register in October 1991.

Research had to be gathered on the land, previous owners and uses of the property, he said.

Cress said he hoped the focus on Council Grove would help raise funds to complete the restoration.

Plan offers incentives to rural-area doctors first for ailments such as ear aches or sprained ankles.

The committee, in its report, saw a need to work with Kansas medical schools to graduate more doctors.

Neufeld said the state has tried to encourage doctors to go into primary care by offering scholarships for students in that field.

But it also has threatened more extreme measures, such as pulling state funding from the schools, Neufeld said.

President Clinton's plan for health care would offer tax incentives for doctors in rural areas.

Neufeld said this plan could help bring more doctbrs to rural Kansas.

Networking

Telemedicine and doctor and hospital networking were also ways the committee envisioned improving health care in rural areas.

Telemedicine is a network that connects local hospitals to the University of Kansas Medical Center through phone lines.

The idea of telemedicine is examination by remote. TV cameras and electronic stethoscopes are used so the doctor at the medical center can listen and observe while a local doctor examines the patient.

Neufeld said telemedicine was a promising program, but it probably would not be subsidized by the state.

Hospitals in individual communities would have to pay for the equipment.

Hospital networking links local hospitals and doctors to facilities nearby with more staff and equipment.

"We will be able to keep rural hospitals but in a cost-effective way," Neufeld said.

"Each doctor is not a world by himself. The doctors would cooperate within the network," he said.

Ward said networking could be effective in that it keeps clinics in local areas open, but the quality of care needs to be the same everywhere.

"We need to be sure we don't have two tiers of health care emerge — one for the city and one for the country," he said.

When and How

Legislators were mixed on how effective national heath-care reform would be and its effects on Kansas.

Neufeld said Clinton's plan for national health care could be a disaster.

"I have never seen a government project that ran right," Neufeld said. "The best things are done without government intervention.

"There are a limited number of dollars to go around," Neufeld said.

"If we decided to pay for every heart, liver and lung transplant in this state, we would have to close down half the regents schools," he said.

Ward said he thinks state health-care alliances will cut costs and improve accessibility for Kansas in the long run.

"We will be putting companies with one or two employees together with thousands of people so they can get the best price for their dollars," he said.

He said the national government will help control costs such as prescription drugs, b!t the state will still have control of the details.

"It's not all going to be run in Washington. Most implementation will be turned back to the states," he said.

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said the intentions of reform were on the right track, but they might be empirically unattainable.

"Our problems continue to grow, and the economics are working against us," Glasscock said.

"I don't think anyone knows what the economic impact of the plan will be right now," Glasscock said. "There will be winners and losers throughout the population."

The legislators said reform would not come swiftly.

"Generally, the states are going to wait until they know clearly the direction of the Clinton plan," Glasscock said.

Poor conservation ideas being used in Alaska wolf killings

"The wolf has come down from the North/And your fat little town is safe no longer."

These lines of poetry mirror the age-old idea that wolves are remorseless killers, interfere with the natural order of things and should be controlled. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Now, the Alaskan State Game Board has jumped on this stereotype to sanction legal wolf kills across a 2,000-mile swath of Alaskan wilderness.

Economics have also been tossed into the wolf melee. The board has sanctioned the wolf kill on the basis of improving the number of big game animals available for hunters. Among these include elk, moose, deer and caribou.

Alaska tried pulling this stunt last year and backed down only after an international outcry. The idea of a tourism boycott was more than the board and Gov. Walter Hickle could swallow.

But not this year. Despite an appalling lack of evidence of the effect wolves have on big game, 150 wolves have been targeted for hunting, snaring and trapping.

There are things to consider — like killing wolves breaks up their packs and causes male wolves to move off and form packs of their own. Hence, a greater number of wolves are born and the "problem" gets worse.

There is also the threat of poachers who take advantage of the open season. Hard enough to control now, they get worse when the word "legal" is added to the equation.

The Alaskan Game Board needs to reconsider its stance. Will killing 150 wolves really help those hunters garner their kills? Are the populations of big game so depleted this kill will suddenly solve the problem.

Animal conservation takes years to work. Picking off all these wolves in one felt swoop is ludicrous to say the least.

Now, who are the hunters without remorse, and who are the hunted?

Nature, God and man – one body

JOHN HART

I became an environmentalist this summer.

Sitting on a steep hill, a former mountain in days long past, in southern Canada, I gazed at the lake below me, spotted by numerous islands, reduced peaks jutting from the water. The air was crisp, the trees were fragrant, and my cola was delicious. And when I left, I took my can with me.

Although my respect for nature is profound, my goal for the next few paragraphs is not to raise your consciousness about how bad we treat the environment. We've heard it all before. We're numb to studies.

As university students, I hope we all know it's a bad idea to dump hazardous chemicals in our rivers and streams, to build unsafe nuclear power plants, to indiscriminately rape the land of its natural resources and to throw fast-food garbage bags out your car window on I-70.

I'm not so concerned with whether the environmental crisis is fact or fantasy, but simply the attitudes with which we approach the environment. On one side you have the radical environmentalists who are convinced that evil Western capitalist men are destroying the planet. On the other side, you have conservatives and some Christians who are so consumed with lampooning environmental fanatics, they forsake all respect for nature.

Weird ideas about the environment can always be traced to man's confused relationship with God and nature. For example, radical environmentalism is often nothing more than recycled pantheism – the religious belief that all is equal because all is God and God is all. Consequently, you and I are equals to a gerbil, an ant and a potato.

Cutting down a tree is butchering God.

Materialists, or naturalists, provide a far more rational approach. Yet, while denying the God of creation for the god of arbitrary natural occurrences, they too end up worshiping the environment: After God is evicted, it's the next great entity in line.

Sadly, Christians don't care. We constantly moan about the enviro-religious fanatics but rarely take initiative to become leaders in addressing the environmental concerns relevant to our lives. The Bible lays out the most reasonable way to deal with the environment, but few look into it.

God created the environment and is sovereign over it; man has dominion over nature, and the environment is of tremendous value because it's God's property. Some environmentalists trace the philosophical root of environmental problems to the specific teaching that man should control the environment.

Yet, man's place in the environment is not the problem. It's his egoism, greed and lust for immediate gratification that damage the environment. Remember, if it weren't for man's control over nature in the construction of Tuttle Creek Reservoir, Manhattan would be history.

The relationship between God, man and nature is a vital part of the Christian world view. The environment provides the answer to one the most nagging questions skeptics pose to Christians: "How could a loving and just God not allow a secluded native, ignorant of the gospel, into heaven?"

Answer: "For since the creation of the world God's invisible qualities — his eternal power and divine nature — have been clearly seen, being understood from what has been made, so that men are without excuse," (Romans 1:20).

The beauty of nature, as captured by an Ansel Adams photograph and the decomposing carcass of a fawn, enriching the surrounding soil, both proclaim the divine attributes of creation — a wonderful and intelligent design. That design is everywhere; from the earth's distance to the sun — which if slightly greater or lesser would make the earth inhospitable — to the complex metabolic reactions of the human body. It can't be escaped.

While charge program is helpful, it exists for all the wrong reasons

Editor,

I just wanted to comment on your Sept. 17 story concerning E-CAP, the Education Charge Account Program.

There were some valid points made throughout the article I feel are worth discussing. For example, Kay Farley, Union Bookstore manager said, "The students' education suffers if they can't get the tools they need." Also, Dottie Prater said, "It's also an answer to those students who don't get their financial-aid checks until later."

Call me cynical, but it looks to me like someone else is out to make a little money off the Financial Aid Department's inability to do its jobs properly and in a reasonable amount of time. How many landlords and grocery stores are there in town that will let the poor college students charge their rent and groceries until later when their financial-aid checks come in? I wonder if a student's education is suffering if they are only eating two meals a day and worrying about whether their financial aid will come in time for next month's rent.

I have an idea for a Christmas present from the Collegian to the K-State student body. Expose the Financial Aid Department for what it is. I propose on Dec. 1 you do a survey of the student body on when its aid came in (if it has at all), or encourage it to drop you a line when it does get it. Then you could keep a running total. Maybe ultimately the department will be "fine-tuned" to the point there won't be an angry student leaving Fairchild Hall every five minutes.

I don't have all the answers, but it just isn't right when a student has to pay more or suffer more because someone isn't getting his/her job done. Students have enough to worry about — it shouldn't be compounded.

▶ PLUS/MINUS

New system would put K-State back in real world of 20th century

Editor,

We wish to applaud the Faculty Senate decision to implement a plus/minus system. Such a program is long overdue.

Coming from undergraduate programs with plus/minus grading systems, we were surprised and disappointed not to find such a system here. More schools have this system than students might realize.

A plus/minus system allows for a finer discrimination so someone missing a grade by that much isn't walloped with a drastically lower one.

Contrary to popular opinion, this system does not damage grade point averages. Laws of probability suggest that over time, mistakes and lucky breaks even out, and one's overall GPA is the same.

A 4.0 scale is a 4.0 scale. This means GPA requirements for "honoraries and other national requirements" will remain unaffected.

What it does allow for is less fluctuation of cumulative GPA. At any given point, one's GPA is more representative of one's success.

In response to Ms. Miles, yes, the difference between an A and an A- could be one exam question. Under the current system, a similar situation could be punished with a B. Such a difference, in our opinion, causes more conflict than a plus/minus system.

As a teacher, a plus/minus decision is better as well, easier, despite there being more "boundaries." It is difficult to penalize good students down to a lower grade. At the same time, is it fair to reward a student who does only the minimum to make a grade the same as one would a student who works hard all semester to get that grade? A plus/minus system provides a much truer measure of student ability, which, I assume, is appreciated when GPA is used as a method of selection for jobs or graduate programs.

Professors who have difficulty discriminating between A and B work under the current system, under the plus/minus system can award grades without pluses or minuses, with shifting their personal system. When one is filling out grading sheets, no one can force filling in a plus or minus bubble. The option only allows more freedom, should the professor choose to use it.

We feel any cost of implementation is well worth it. We are glad K-State is pulling its head out of the sand and joining the 20th Century. We urge the student body to join it.

Were there little tear stains on your pillow when you flunked out?

Editor,

David Frese's column in Thursday's paper was the worst piece of journalistic trash I've ever seen since I've been to the supermarket.

Your little narrative about how you spent two semesters boozing and sleeping with women does not evoke empathy from me. You said it took two semesters to finally mature and use your tuition money (or was it your parents?) to actually learn something. With this new policy, you would have only wasted one semester's worth of money instead of two. You keep proving the opposite point!

Then, you go on with your sob story and bash teachers, saying they deserve pay docks when they now probably get less money than truck drivers. You sound like a hurt little kid trying to get retribution. I don't like some of my teachers, but I like and respect a lot of them; so, I take much offense to your so-called "solution." Your column reflects your total immaturity, and I think you should still be in elementary school.

Look, if you study and attend class, you'll get more than a measly 1.0 average, OK? How hard is that?

▶ OH, PATTY BOY

No one ever suffered permanent damage just from listening

Editor,

I'm writing in concern for the upcoming Landon Lecture featuring Pat Robertson. I'm a democrat, I'm pro-choice, and I believe in everyone's right to his/her own sexual preference (hardly the views of Robertson). However, I plan on attending the lecture, not as a protester, but a viewer.

What right do I have to protest a man who I have never met or heard speak? Don't get me wrong, I believe in the right to protest, but wouldn't I get more out of hearing the man speak? I think these leftist, feminist groups would be much smarter to attend the lecture and then meet for coffee at a restaurant or someone's home and have an intelligent conversation about what views they disagreed with and what views they did agree with, if any.

Trust me, not everyone at this lecture will agree with Pat Robertson.

Why must society always protest? Everyone has the right to his or her own views; that's what makes our country so diverse. Imagine if Pat Robertson were black, Asian or hispanic. The protesters would be considered racists, and there would be a counter-protest from all the minority clubs and organizations on campus.

Enough of this hoo-ra! If you want to live in ignorance, so be it. Just don't parade your little ignorant self in front of McCain when Robertson speaks.

I'll be inside, warm and out of the rain, listening to a man, with whom I may not agree, who has influenced millions of Americans.

Area groups plan lecture protest

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Several area groups decided they will protest Pat Robertson's Oct. 12 Landon Lecture at K-State by having what Gail Selfridge of the National Organization of Women called an old-fashioned rally.

The groups plan to have alternative speakers the day of Robertson's visit, pass out fliers, picket and wear black arm bands symbolizing the death of intellect at K-State.

Speakers from various area organizations spoke about objections to Robertson's view of women, homosexuals and Christianity as well as his political affiliations at a meeting Friday night at the Ecumenical Campus Ministry building.

Selfridge criticized Robertson for his lack of support for women's reproductive rights and the Equal Rights Amendment.

She said that, contrary to what Robertson has said, men and women should take equal responsibility for their sexual activity.

Kevyn Jacobs, president of the Flint Hills Alliance, an advocacy group for gays and lesbians, categorized Robertson as a "hate speaker" and "one of the most dangerous men in America.

"He may have never met me, but he hates me because I'm gay," Jacobs said.

Jacobs said Robertson and his followers, through their political agenda, tried to push their social values on other people.

"They promote family values, but they are their family values, not mine," Jacobs said.

Jacobs said the alliance does not oppose Robertson speaking at K-State but wants to get other views out.

"The best way to counter hate speech is with more speech," Jacobs said.

Don Fallon, K-State coordinator of religious activities, said Robertson's ideas were not representative of the University goals of equality and diversity.

"Robertson's invitation fosters a sense of exclusion and hate," Fallon said.

As a Lutheran minister, Fallon said he thought Robertson's views of Christianity were not representative of the Judeo-Christian society.

John Exdell, professor of philosophy and a representative of the Manhattan Alliance of Peace and Justice, said Robertson has no shame.

Exdell read quotes from Robertson that condemned feminists, homosexuals and the liberal media as a threat to Christianity.

He also accused Robertson of funneling money donated through his program, "The 700 Club," to a Guatamalan dictator that ordered numerous death-squad murders in that country.

Exdell also accused Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., of inviting Pat Robertson to Kansas because having Robertson speak here is important to the Republican Party.

Robert Littrell, chairman of the Riley County Democratic party, also accused Kassebaum of using her influence with the lecture committee to bring Robertson to K-State for political reasons.

"We have uncovered the real source of our misery," he said. "It is not the lecture committee, but Nancy Landon Kassebaum."

Littrell said he and his group think the lecture series has lowered its standards by inviting Robertson to the University.

"We are tired of having one conservative lecturer after another for the Landon Lecture here at K-State," he said.

Ag dean to be hired by early July

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

The search for a dean for the College of Agriculture might be completed by mid-summer.

Gerry Posler, professor of agronomy and chairman of the search committee, said if the screening process goes according to schedule, the College of Agriculture will have a new dean by July 1.

"We are currently accepting applications and hope to start screening candidates by Nov. 15," Posler said.

"We plan to complete interviews by March 1 and make recommendations to the provost by the middle of March," he said.

The position, which is also responsible for the Agricultural Experiment Station and Cooperative Extension Service, has been filled since last September by Interim Dean Marc Johnson.

Posler said the position, while challenging, should attract a number of quality applicants.

"Around $75 million, about one-third or one-fourth of the whole University budget, is controlled by the dean," Posler said. "It's a big position."

Posler said applicant numbers also should be helped by advertisements in scholarly magazines and announcements mailed to land-grant universities.

"My guess is that we get 50 to 100 applications," Posler said. "We should get at least 50 or more but hopefully no more than 150 or 200 as far as the screening process is concerned."

While he expects the screening process to remain on schedule, Posler said a lot depends on the ability of the 23-person search committee to come to a consensus.

"The intent of having a larger committee is to have a broad diversity of people who represent extension, processing and production agriculture," Posler said. "This is because of the outgrowth of the previous effort to look at the structure of the college."

The decision to leave the structure of the college intact means the new dean must be willing to place responsibility in the hands of others, Posler said.

"The position branches out into a lot of different areas," he said. "With so many responsibilities, he or she must be willing to delegate lots of things."

In addition to delegation, Mary Albrecht, professor of horticulture and member of the search committee, said the dean must be willing to alter the College of Agriculture to meet a changing Kansas.

"Most of our programs deal with urban clientele," Albrecht said. "Our programs have to change to meet the changing needs of the people of Kansas."

Albrecht said an excellent way to address those needs is to hire a dean who is willing to take risks in developing successful non-traditional agricultural programs.

"To me, we would need to have someone who has an open mind to how agriculture can be defined," Albrecht said. "We need someone who has visionary thinking and makes sure our programs stay on target."

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING
Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.
Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.
But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $172,109* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $219 a month to reach the same goal.
At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.
Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

School Colors.
In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?
If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.
There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.
Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.
All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

CATS SLIP IN POLL

Last week, K-State received 17 votes and was ranked 29th.

Cats' torrid 2nd half sparks comeback

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Forget for a moment the 14-10 deficit at halftime, the dropped or overthrown passes, the fumbles and the blown 10-0 lead in the second quarter.

The Wildcats are 4-0 for the first time in a long, long period.

K-State put together a 26-point second half, highlighted by Andre Coleman's electrifying 67-yard touchdown reception, to upend the University of Nevada-Las Vegas 36-20 Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"It was a tough catch," said Coleman, who finished the game with a career-high five receptions for 118 yards. "I juggled it and actually caught it with one hand. We needed a big play. Fortunately, I made it, and the momentum just changed."

The win gave the Cats their first 4-0 start since 1931 and marked the first time a flawless non-conference schedule has been attained since the Big Eight Conference was formed.

The Cats jumped out to a quick 10-0 lead in the first quarter on its first two possessions, aided by two UNLV penalties.

But the Rebels retaliated, scoring on a 42-yard drive in the first period and an 80-yard scoring drive with five minutes remaining in the second quarter, to take a 14-10 lead at the half.

UNLV also managed a defensive stand on its own 1-yard line, stopping quarterback Chad May inches from the goal line with two seconds left to preserve the lead.

"I didn't mention the not scoring (at halftime)," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I just said that we controlled our own destiny. It wasn't anything that UNLV did — it was just a matter of us taking control."

In the second half, the Cats did just that.

Wright kicked a 45-yard field goal, followed by a touchdown run from Smith to take the lead at 20-14 with 9:59 remaining in the third quarter. Smith's one-yard score was set up by an interception and 23-yard return from Kenny McEntyre, which put the ball on the UNLV 15-yard line.

Coleman, who finished the game with 179 all-purpose yards, said the Rebels' lead at halftime wasn't anything to be concerned about.

"To be quite honest, we're at a point now that we're so confident, we knew we could come back," Coleman said.

Linebacker Kirby Hocutt, who had his second career interception in the first quarter, said the team has a tendency to strike fast but then let up.

"This week and last week we came out with some adrenalin, and then we let it die down," Hocutt

Smith's 127 yards a career best

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State running back J.J. Smith had the best day of rushing in his career when he lit up the University of Nevada-Las Vegas defense for 127 yards and two touchdowns on 22 carries.

The game also marked the second week in a row Smith had two touchdowns in a game and his second 100-yard game this season. Smith said he gives all his effort into every play.

"I love to run the ball," Smith said.

"I try to do my best on every play, no matter if I am carrying the ball or not."

The plan for K-State so far this year has been to share time at running back equally between fullback Rod Schiller and Smith.

"It is hard to anticipate how much he will play," K-State coach Bill Snyder said.

"We have two very fine backs in Rod and J.J., and we try to get them equal playing time, but we are going to go with the hot hand."

Smith proved he had the hot hand early in the game by racking up 101 yards in the first half.

He also scored the game's first touchdown by zipping around the right end for 27 yards on an option play.

"When I got the ball, I saw the potential for a big play and a lot of green ahead. I was excited," Smith said.

Smith said the Wildcats' offense has the potential for a big play on every down, and when it starts to flutter, he stays confident it can be turned around on a single play.

"K-State has a good football team," UNLV coach Jim Strong said.

"If you make a mistake, they will capitalize on it, and that's what happened."

Early in the third quarter, Smith's day was almost ruined by an errant pitch from quarterback Chad May, with K-State trailing 14-13.

UNLV defender Jason Medlock tried to pick the ball up instead of falling on it. When he couldn't grab it, Smith hustled back and recovered the ball for the Cats. The play went for a 14-yard loss and pushed K-State back to the 29-yard line.

"That was the biggest play of the game for me," Smith said. "That did a lot for us not losing that ball."

Two plays later, K-State had the ball first and goal on the one-yard line, and Smith took it in from there for his second touchdown of the day.

"Chad threw the ball a little bit behind me, and I knew if we got it back we would have three more chances for a first down," Smith said.

Smith said the team and he have more confidence at this point in the season than they have had since his arrival at K-State.

"At the beginning of the season, I knew we could be successful, but we had to prepare and focus, and I think we have done that so far," Smith said.

Ski team takes 2nd in league championship

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

K-State's water ski team finished second in the Big Eight Water Ski Championships this past weekend at the Mo-Kan Water Ski Club southeast of Lawrence.

Casey Koehler, senior in milling science, said the choppy water and heavy wind made a difference.

"The wind played a big factor this weekend," Koehler said. "This wind was miserable, and it affected everything."

The competition, which the University of Kansas water ski team was host to, featured K-State, Iowa State and Oklahoma State. Members of the four teams competed in three events — the slalom, tricks and jump.

The Wildcats placed four team members in the top three places of four events. Koehler led the Cats with a second-place finish in the men's jump.

In the women's slalom, Melanie Stover, junior in business administration, tied for third place. Shelly Rapp took third in women's trick, and Lisa Fry, senior in elementary education, took third in the women's jump.

"The way that they kept score helped us," Koehler said. "The team was consistent in everything. We are not the best, and we aren't the worst. We were all bunched in the middle."

The wind and the choppy water especially affected the slalom and jumping events, Koehler said.

"It was a big factor in the jumps. Usually, there are jumps over 100 feet, but this weekend the farthest jump was around 80 feet," Koehler said.

"In the slalom, the wind and the choppy water pushed you ahead when you wanted to turn or slow down," he said. "So, that meant that you had to make your cuts a lot sooner than you would usually have to."

The team member had two attempts in the jump, but Koehler said the wind didn't allow a lot of members to complete their second jump.

"They didn't jump because the wind made it almost unsafe," Koehler said.

The Cats used the Big Eight Championships as a stepping stone for regionals next weekend on Camelot Lake in Indiana.

"We'll look at the performances this weekend to see how we are doing," Koehler said. "I'm going to look forward to calmer water in regionals."

Koehler said he expects the team to finish in the top four.

"The are going to be 17 teams this year. There are usually 13 teams, but I expect us to finish in the top four," Koehler said.

"We will have to do great to get to go to nationals, but there is always a chance. The odds are that we won't go nationals, though."

The team will leave for regionals on Friday morning.

"It will be a 16-hour drive," Koehler said. "The events will start around 7 a.m. on Saturday. The men will be the first to go, and the women will get started after that."

Brett not going quietly at career's end

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — George Brett, his career in its final days, will not go quietly.

On Sunday, he homered twice and drove in five runs, hitting a winning homer in the 10th inning to lead the Kansas City Royals to a 9-8 victory against the California Angels.

Brett, who has three home games remaining, doubled in a run in the first and hit a three-run homer in the fourth. It was his first five-RBI game since May 22, 1988.

"I told them (the Royals) I was going to go out and give it all I had this last week," Brett said.

"Next Sunday at about 4:30, the game should be over, and I'll have given it 100 percent, and I'll have given all I have, and there won't be anything left to give."

For good measure, he reached another milestone. He now has 1,119 extra-base hits, passing Hall of Famers Jimmie Foxx and Ted Williams to stand 10th on the all-time list.

"George is as relaxed as we've seen him in a long, long time," Kansas City general manager Herk Robinson said. "A weight is off his shoulders."

The crowd of 19,391 stood and cheered after Brett left the field. He reappeared to the ovation, shaking his head in disbelief as he went back to the clubhouse.

"I never wanted to go out and not perform well," Brett said.

"But I'm not the player I was, and I'll be the first to admit it."

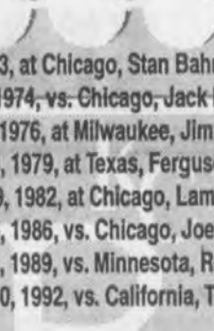
But for all the slashing extra-base hits, the championship in 1985, the pine-tar game, Brett says he will miss other things, simpler things, that have nothing to do with a pennant run or a chase at a batting title.

"The guys," he said. "Just being around the guys. The camaraderie. The bus rides. Sometimes some of the bus rides can be pretty funny. Not really the plane travel. I'll miss some of the towns. Boston. Seattle."

Boston and Brett have a mutual admiration. Boston fans, sensing this 20th season was his last, gave him six standing ovations during the Royals' last series there.

Jamie Quirk has seen Brett through the years. He was hired as a Royals coach this season when his career at Oakland ended and remains one of Brett's closest friends.

"Time and time again, he would come through," Quirk said. "You would just sit there and hope that he would have a chance to come up and do it again. You'd look at the guy batting and say 'Get a hit so George can have a chance to come up. Let him take one more shot at it.'



"You think of one highlight, and then you think of another, and we could sit here for hours talking about it. He's just a certain type of ballplayer that I don't think people here realized what they've had. There are a lot of cities that will never experience a player like him."

Brett, who will become vice president of baseball operations for the Royals, was criticized by some for not being a more demonstrative leader on a team for which he played his entire career. Brett simply led with his bat and glove.

"He's an amazing guy," said John Wathan, who played with and managed Brett and now is a coach with the California Angels. "I guess I'll think of how he played the game. All the big games he's had, it's hard to pick one out. He just played the game hard."

Writer experiences Wildcat football

TOM LISTER

Sure, I'd seen The Who and Alice Cooper, but during my five years in college, I'd never seen the Wildcat football team play. Saturday, I decided to check out this unique, cultural experience and headed over to KSU Stadium.

I went with apprehension. Football, in my eyes, has always been laced with too much competitiveness and aggression. A woman friend told me once that while women date to compete, guys watch sports.

Well, I'm not too competitive or aggressive. I'm a salesman, myself. I like to see what I can reap, and on Saturday, before the game, that meant cigarettes and beer.

I found both in the parking lot. The stadium's lot took on the family atmosphere of a state fair with open drinking.

It had been a bit like that when I saw The Who at Arrowhead back in the summer of '89. Back then, though, I'd heard Van Morrison booming out of cars, not Garth Brooks.

I dream of telling my grandkids about that concert, telling them how we checked out the clouds and the people with funny haircuts, how we leaned up against the Nova and took really good looks at our hands.

My cigarette will shake in my hand when I tell them about the lot Saturday, though. Too many Jeep Cherokees made me paranoid.

Rules were dropped that day, and students and alumni could drink with open containers in the lot. Cops just seemed to turn their heads for the day. It was a bit like a suburban redneck beer fest.

The beer I'd bummed helped me forget the shades I forgot, but after the second beer, I had to go inside the stadium.

The atmosphere drops once you get inside those gates. After you give your ticket, you encounter two frightening things: sobriety and football fans.

Football fans aren't the most coherent folks. They yell, scream and stand in the sun until their drunks fade away and they get nasty sunburns. All the while, they scream at refs on the field much like your bitter uncle talks to Bill Clinton on the TV screen.

I tried to watch the players on the field. I tried to understand why they dropped the ball so much. I tried to understand why these big guys got all the scholarships and why the fans who cheered them on would run if they saw the players on the street.

Throughout the game, though, one idea kept bouncing in my mind — it's a damn ball, people.

Still, it helps the people vent their aggressions away from their 9-to-5 jobs. Sure, we can't kick our boss's fern over, but we can always pump a few beers early in the morning and scream:

"Kill him! Kill him! Get that damn ball!"

If I want to feel macho in a collective scene, I'll check out the latest Bruce Willis action flick. Not only do you get some great ultraviolence there, you some great leading ladies and witty lines.

Maybe that's why I left after the first half — that and the prospect of a traffic struggle. Let me remind you, though, that when you're trying to leave a football game, remember where the hell you parked.

The folks still out in the lot had the right idea. They were chilled out, kicking back in their lawn chairs and enjoying the sun.

Believe me, though, they're watching you. They're really watching you.

said. "We thought maybe it was a little easier than it was supposed to be, and we might have relaxed a little. We can't do that. We've got to be mature enough as a football team to realize that you've got to smell blood when you've got a team down. We have to put them away."

The Cats gave up just one more touchdown, an 18-yard pass from Bob Stockham to Randy Gatewood with 1:27 remaining. K-State's defense buckled down in the third period and hasn't allowed a touchdown in the third quarter of any game this season.

"I think if you look at our stats, we haven't been scored on in the third quarter," Snyder said. "You could sense it got the crowd in the ballgame and our players excited."

UNLV (1-3) was hindered by extensive penalties throughout the game, including five that resulted in K-State first downs. The Rebels totaled 11 penalties for 106 yards.

"We got in situations where it seemed like penalty after penalty, and we made some critical mistakes," UNLV coach Jim Strong said. "Situations where mistake after mistake led to a lot of self-inflicted wounds that stopped us from ever getting some momentum that could have turned the ballgame around."

K-State does not play next week and will begin preparation for the University of Kansas game Oct. 9. The Jayhawks (1-3) were idle this week and face Colorado State Saturday at home.

Business pays off for student

Peterson named as one of the top 10 entrepreneurs

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Brent Peterson said that when he started his own window-tinting business, he never imagined it would bring him much recognition. To his surprise, it has.

Peterson, senior in business marketing, was recognized as one of Kansas' top 10 student entrepreneurs by the Association of Collegiate Entrepreneurs Sept. 11 at Wichita State University.

"When I found out I won, I was really surprised," he said.

Peterson received a plaque recognizing his management of Pete's Window Tinting, a business he has owned and operated for two years from his hometown of Inman.

Peterson said he didn't find out about the competition until the day the application was due.

"I found out about the contest, filled out the application and sent it in that night," Peterson said.

John Bunch, adviser to the K-State ACE Chapter, said he wants Peterson's new-found recognition to benefit him at K-State.

"Hopefully, we will make that pay off for him at K-State by helping him tell his story about his business," Bunch said. "One of the best things you can do for an entrepreneur is publicize his business."

Although the extra publicity is nice, Peterson said he earns most of his business because customers are willing to tell other people about his services.

Business is so good that, on average, Peterson said he does four to five tintings a day in Manhattan, even though he could do more.

"I schedule it to where I am busy," he said. "I have a location I can work out of here in town, or I can do on-site jobs. But most of my jobs are still back home."

Although he is his own boss now, Peterson said it wasn't always that way.

"I knew an older friend that owned a place and started working for him," Peterson said. "They trained me there, and then I went out on my own when I thought I could do it better and cheaper."

Peterson said for a long time friends and family encouraged him to start his own business.

"It was a real low investment in which I had nothing to lose," he said. "I knew before I started my business that it would probably be successful."

Peterson's business is an example of how hard work and dedication can pay off, and the formula can work for anyone, he said.

"I'm no 4.0 student," he said. "All it takes is a vision and being willing to turn that vision into reality."

Peterson said a good way to accomplish that goal is to make the most out of campus clubs and organizations.

"Get involved in clubs and gain as much information as you can," he said. "Then turn that information into something that is profitable to you."

Bunch said if Peterson applies for ACE recognition on the national level, the results could also be profitable.

"With ACE we do go to national competition," Bunch said. "That is a different application process, but I will advise Brent to apply to that competition as well."

Peterson said it would be exciting to see how he compares to entrepreneurs from across the nation.

"If there is some sort of national contest, I am sure I will enter it," he said.

Even though he enjoys the security of his tinting business, Peterson said it isn't something he wants to do permanently.

"I don't plan on making it a steady career," Peterson said. "After graduation, I plan to get a full-time job in marketing."

Peterson said he hasn't eliminated the possibility of returning to the business sometime in the future, however.

"That's still a vision," Peterson said. "I may do it further down the line, but not right away."

Pledges compete in annual games

TARA EUBANKS
Collegian

The sixth annual Sigma Nu/Chi Omega New Member Games were played Sunday afternoon at Memorial Stadium.

The windy day threatened to kill the enthusiastic chants of organizations vowing loyalty to their houses. Flags, posters and banners were scattered throughout the stadium, indicating who was who at the greek games.

The events brought out the athlete in everyone. The choices of games ranged from the 100-yard dash to the painstaking broom toss.

Overall winners were Sigma Chi in the fraternity division and Delta Delta Delta in the sorority division. Second-place finishers were Tau Kappa Epsilon and Sigma Kappa.

Proceeds of this philanthropy went to benefit the American Red Cross.

"All of the money received stays in Manhattan," Katie Marlo, vice president of Chi Omega and senior in marketing, said. "This year's profits will go to the disaster-relief fund for Manhattan flood victims."

Previous years have averaged a $4,000 profit, Marlo said.

A spirit award was also given to the organization that showed the most enthusiasm at the games. Sigma Phi Epsilon was the recipient. The fraternity members decided to show their spirit by dressing in women's clothing and making up cheers alongside the track.

All the participants were required to be new members of a K-State sorority or fraternity.

"It's nice to have a philanthropy that the majority of the houses participate in. It gives pledges of other houses a chance to see what greek life is really about," said Julie Dreiling, philanthropy chairwoman for Chi Omega and senior in human development and family studies.

Participants said the annual event gave new members a chance to get to know other people in other organizations.

"The games build spirit for the house and the greek system as a whole," said Patrick Dors, senior in business administration-pre-professional and pledge trainer for Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

"It's the first time these guys have interacted with other fraternities competitively."

U.S. troops may join NATO peacekeepers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — If President Clinton decides to order U.S. soldiers into Bosnia on a NATO peacekeeping mission, thousands of troops will enter Sarajevo in an airborne show of force that could be mounted within days of his request, military planners said.

But before U.S. troops go in, the Pentagon wants to see a peace accord that holds — with the combatants separated from one another, heavy artillery withdrawn and the free flow of humanitarian supplies assured, the planners said.

The initial deployment could grow to about 25,000 troops over a several-week period, bristling with enough heavy tanks, artillery and armed-troop transports to defend themselves and ensure their mission is carried out.

Military planners spoke of their work on condition of anonymity, but those expected to be in charge have been blunt about what they want to send, should they get the mission.

"If we have to go into Bosnia, I don't want to say 'Mother, may I?' to anyone," Adm. Jeremy M. Boorda, NATO's southern Europe commander told a conference organized by the U.S. mission to NATO on Friday.

Gen. John Shalikashvili, Clinton's nominee as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has said the force should be robust enough so it can take care of itself, regardless of what the circumstances might be.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said Sunday that the United States must have a very clear exit strategy before sending any troops.

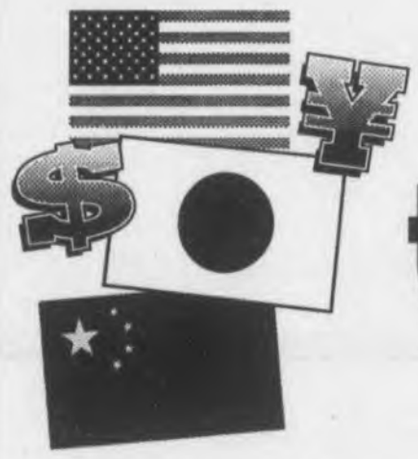
"Because when you commit to something like this, as we found out in Somalia, if you don't watch out, what your basic premise was ends up not being what the U.N. or the NATO premise was," he said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"Then you're in a situation where the mission gets broader and broader, and it's very difficult to find an ending point."

ask the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to monitor the new borders and disarm militias.

NATO has tentative plans to provide about 50,000 troops — perhaps half of them Americans. There has been some disagreement whether NATO or the U.N. will have overall command of the force, but Washington wants NATO in control.

Most of the 25,000 U.S. troops that would form the reinforced division envisioned for the job are expected to be drawn from the Army's 1st Armored Division, based in central Germany.



While an advance team would enter the region within hours of the president's order, the first troops could be flown in with some armaments aboard C-5A transports within three days, the military sources said.

Mellencamp proves he's not afraid of innovation

TOM LISTER

John Mellencamp continues to paint dirt road portraits of America in his latest album, "Human Wheels." This time, though, Mellencamp gives his small-town perspective a little more depth and maturity.

In the past, such songs as "Hurts So Good" and "Crumblin' Down" carried a lip-curled adolescent appeal, and with their commercial refrains, they had no problems getting MTV airplay.

REVIEW

Mellencamp has come a long way since then, and "Human Wheels" marks a plateau. He's peaked both lyrically and musically.

In addition to his combination of electric and acoustic guitars, Mellencamp brings in the violin (Lisa Germano), accordion, dulcimer, mandolin and a variety of percussions.

The variety stretches through the album. At times, "Human Wheels" takes on the air of David & David's "Boomtown," and with its soulful backing vocals, it can sound like Arrested Development.

Mellencamp's own cigarette-edged voice comes across more subdued in this album, and his vocals' sobriety are reflected in the lyrics.

Songs from recent albums, such as "Jackie Brown" and "Love and Happiness," aren't exactly birthday party tunes. Neither are most songs on "Human Wheels."

"Beige to Beige" shows the powerlessness and monotony of today's individual: "A world without color/ is a world without sound,/ a world to keep the rabble down."

Musically, the album shows a man with soul.

To disagree is not to be a homophobe

Dear Cassandra,

I'm writing in response to your Sept. 23 column. I am always amazed at how you can't write a single column without totally contradicting yourself. Whenever you slam religious groups, are we supposed to read your mind as to which ones you're talking about?

Am I allowed to say I hate homosexuals as long as the ones I'm talking about are only the ones that are discriminatory and heterophobic?

I don't hate homosexuals. However, I do believe they are abnormal. I think a behavior or genetic difference, only expressed by 1 percent of the population, is beyond normalcy. I don't think you should bash people who are abnormal. T h e same goes to all you heterophobic, anti-religious homosexuals who keep trying to shove your beliefs or lifestyles down my throat. If you want to be respected, quit calling everyone who disagrees with you homophobic.

Signed,

Different, not homophobic

Dear Darryl,

The above letter had to be edited slightly so it resembled the English language.

However, at least Darryl is kind enough to accept the abnormal homosexuals of the world. Such a swell guy.

I absolutely love these kind of letters. These folks dig their own graves with their ignorance and seemingly endless aptitude for stupidity.

I just thought I'd print Darryl's letter and share this insight into his world with K-State.

P.S. To K, your response is forthcoming.

REVIEW

Bolivian band educates audience

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

Although the Incas are gone, Andean music lives on.

Rumillajta (pronounced 'roomy-yakhta'), a Bolivian band on tour throughout the United States and Europe, brought the lively rhythm of Andean music to McCain Auditorium Sunday afternoon.

The group's performance was not only an entertaining experience but also highly educational.

The name of the five-member group is taken from the Incan language. The term is representative of a connection between the past and present of the Andean lifestyle.

The performers showed their skills as they played more than 15 traditional, personally handcrafted instruments, a majority of which were made of woods indigenous to their country.

These instruments varied from zampoñas, a type of panpipe as large as five feet long, to ch'ajchas, an instrument made of llama and sheep hooves worn around the wrist and shaken.

All the instruments helped to create a vibrant array of remarkable sounds, which had a uniquely pure and natural quality.

On stage the band was capable of recreating the sounds of the ocean surf slowly breaking on the beach, the wind gusting through the mountains and birds chirping in the jungles.

The sounds were so uncommonly authentic that if audience members were to close their eyes they could easily picture themselves at the ocean or in the mountains.

One could not help but get wrapped up in the mystical tones summoned from these exotic instruments.

The exceptional performance was full of driving force and devotion stemmed from the dedication the band had in capturing the music of their Andean forebears.

Another enjoyable part of the performance was the members of the band joking with the audience and explaining the meaning of different songs.

After the intermission, the performance got even better when the band invited Bolivians from the audience up on stage to dance to a Bolivian song called a Taquirari.

Passion and energy, which filled the performance, quickly moved into the audience as they clapped enthusiastically to the Taquirari and other songs.

Both the banner and the ponchos were as bright and colorful as the performance itself.

The two-hour concert was a euphoric journey into another culture's music, where the sole intention is becoming one with nature.

'I Hate Hamlet' has weak, fluffy plot

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Manhattan Civic Theatre's presentation of "I Hate Hamlet" is slapstick, melodramatic and only has a few bright spots, leaving it flat.

Andrew Rally, played by Fred Nelson, is a washed-up TV actor who has moved into late actor John Barrymore's apartment. Rally has come to New York at the urging of his agent, Lillian Troy, to take part in a theater-in-the-park production of "Hamlet." Barrymore is considered to have been the greatest Hamlet of all time, and everyone sees Rally's occupation of the apartment as a sign of destiny.

The farce begins as Barrymore's ghost enters and attempts to inspire and transform an untalented Rally. The tale spun from here is pure fluff and reminiscent of a soap opera. The plot line is boarderline predictable, still offering a few surprises.

Nelson's characterization of Rally is stiff and melodramatic. The first act is particularly rough. His reactions seem unnatural and plotted.

However, in the second act, as his character is elevated, so is the performance. The audience begins to see inside the charcter, making the performance mote believable.

A bright point of the play is Richard Hobbs as John Barrymore's ghost. His characterization was very enjoyable. He was able to juxtapose the serious, moving monologues with the farcical, comical moments. He was able maintain his presence without overacting or distracting. His responses were genuine, and he portrayed the inner struggles as well. Barrymore was real to the audience.

An equally high point is Nellie Weathers as Lillian Troy. Lillian was classy, suave, wise and believable. The point of her actions was easily understood, and her motivation was clear.

The costuming was gaudy and made the show seem more slapstick than it needed to. The costumes looked like an assimilation of second-hand clothes from Grandma's Trunk. They also were distracting. Lillian, who was supposed to be classy, wears incredibly tacky dresses suitable only for a 7-year-old playing dress up.

The play presents a semi-serious theme beneath a lot of farce and fluff. It is simply entertaining, offering little beyond that.

Credit Union moves to new home

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

The KSU Federal Credit Union will relocate to a larger office off campus.

The credit union, which has been located in Anderson Hall for the past 12 years, will be moving to 1455 Anderson Ave., across the street from Nichols Hall in the Anderson Village Shopping Center.

Loretta Whitney, manager of the credit union, said the office will close Oct. 15 in order to move furniture and belongings.

"We will open on Oct. 18 at the new location with new hours. Before, we were open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Now we will be open until 5:30," Whitney said.

The financial institution needed a larger facility, Whitney said.

"We need more space. We currently have 700 square feet, and the University doesn't have any more space available," she said.

The credit union is a member-owned financial cooperative. It is democratically run, as members elect a board of directors, Whitney said.

"The members of the board are all volunteers. That's different from a bank," she said.

Membership to the credit union is only open to faculty and staff, graduate students, alumni association members, KSU Foundation employees, Manhattan Christian College faculty and staff, Kansas Crop Improvement Association and UFM employees. Family members and persons retired as pensioners or annuitants are also qualified to be members.

The institution would like to be open to all students and employees of K-State, but Whitney said they simply do not have the space and staff.

"We have a little over 3,500 members," she said.

Becoming a member of the union has many advantages, Whitney said.

"We are service-driven, not financial-driven," she said. "The cost of loans are low in interest, and interest rates on savings accounts is high. The members have a say in how it's run because the board is elected."

The credit union offers numerous services such as saving accounts, consumer loans, checking accounts, notary service, financial advising and consumer information, Whitney said.

"We provide life insurance to match the amount of savings in the savings account, up to 5,000 dollars," Whitney said.

"On consumer loans, our rates are lower, or the lowest, than anywhere else."

The institution has gross assets of $7.3 million and growing.

"We are insured by the National Credit Union Administration, and we have a capital asset ratio of 11-1/2 percent.

"We are a very, very strong financial institution," she said.

Whitney said the credit union will have an open house in its new location Oct. 21, which commemorates International Credit Union Day.

SE Kansas flood ends

PITTSBURG, Kan. (AP) — Creeks and small rivers across southeast Kansas muscled their way out of their banks and into roads, homes and businesses over the weekend. But, officials said, much of the water was receding Sunday.

"They can't say anymore that creeks don't go out of their banks like the big rivers do," said Eldon Bedene, civil defense director for Crawford County.

"But, all of the water has gone down here," he said. "And right now, the Red Cross disaster team is in feeding some of the victims who are cleaning up. Tomorrow, we start our assessment of damages."

The National Weather Service said Pittsburg had 15.34 inches of rain in a 24-hour period that ended Saturday morning. That was nearly four times what any other official reporting station recorded.On Sunday, the skies were clearing.

"Today, we can drive just about everywhere," Bedene said.

About 40 people were evacuated from their homes around Pittsburg on Saturday, but only about four or five families were still out of their homes Sunday, Bedene said.

Bedene said there were reports of only two minor accidents when people were trapped in vehicles that were swept off roads.

Geologists cut canyon rock

Geologists preserved the fossil Friday so it could be taken to Schultz. Once the up-side of the rock was plastered, a saw was used to cut the entire piece of rock away from the rest.

Ultrasound, needles and air-abrasive tools will be used to knock leftover rock from the fossil and expose the whole jaw.

Three soldiers die in Somalia

The administration is suggesting that 50,000 NATO troops, including 25,000 Americans, could be deployed to Bosnia if the warring factions there end their territorial dispute and agree on a peace plan.

The deaths brought to 11 the number of U.S. troops killed in action in Somalia. Additionally, four other American soldiers have died in Somalia: two in a truck accident, one by drowning and another by suicide, the Defense Department said.

Russians study agriculture

Study exchange creates trade opportunities

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

To witness the confident look of stoicism etched on their granite faces and the cigarettes dangling loosely between their leather-worn lips, a person might believe they are seeing five typical college students well-accustomed to their surroundings.

Looks can be deceiving.

Iskander Gusmanov, Sergei Kozaev, Eugene Tsimbalov, Yuri Volokitin and Sergei Zhigalin arrived Aug. 20 for a one-year exchange program sponsored by Kansas Sen. Bob Dole and Russian President Boris Yeltsin.

Yeltsin offered five scholarships to K-State students to study in Russia when he was visiting in Kansas last fall. His offer prompted the one-year exchange program.

The Russian students are studying agricultural economics and veterinary medicine at K-State, while five K-State students study the Russian language at Moscow State Pedagogical University in Russia.

Volokitin said the most difficult adjustment so far has been the language barrier.

"For us it's actually easier to understand foreign people who speak English than Americans," he said. "Foreigners know the basic words and not all of the slang."

So much importance is placed on English, Zhigalin said, that extensive class time at K-State is devoted to the subject.

"We study English for one semester and then agriculture the next," Zhigalin said. "We can't study agricultural economics without good English."

The transition to English is made easier by the help of some K-State students, Kozaev said.

"We have a good friend named Sean who helps our class and discusses any problems we have," Kozaev said. "Our friends have lots of patience."

Volokitin said the exchange is more than learning English and studying agriculture. What they learn will affect Russian lives.

"It's about our future," he said. "We have lots of food lost because of bad storage and food production. I want to merge agricultural economics and engineering to prevent this from happening."

In addition to learning how to store food, Zhigalin said he wants to know how to sell it.

"I want to study what the best way is to export and import food from Russia," Zhigalin said. "America has a good quality and a good price for its product. We want to have the same in Russia."

Even though the language barrier and heavy course load are taxing, Volokitin said they are very thankful for the opportunity to learn about agriculture and K-State.

"It is a good place to study," Volokitin said. "The people are very helpful and very friendly."

Walter Kolonosky, associate professor in modern languages and University facilitator of the exchange, said the students should direct their thanks to the presidents of Russia and K-State for initiating the program.

"When he was in Kansas, Boris Yeltsin made an offer of five scholarships for United States students to study in Russia," Kolonosky said. "Jon Wefald matched that offer."

Charles Reagan, special assistant to the president, said while President Wefald may have offered the Russian scholarships, financial resources within the University and agricultural industry made the scholarships possible.

"When Senator Dole's office called and asked about the visit, we set out to obtain sponsors for the exchange," Reagan said. "We were able to get the College of Agriculture, the President's Office, Farmland Industries and Farm Bureau to fund five one-year scholarships."

Volokitin said if it were not for the generosity of those sponsors, they would not have the opportunity to gather information vital to the revitalization of Russia.

"We are thankful to these people for giving us the chance to understand America better," he said. "We want to be able to return to Russia with the information we have learned and then work with businesses from America to improve Russia."

The students said they also want to see what will not work in Russia.

"We want to compare American and Russian life and discover the differences," Zhigalin said. "We want to know your opinion, and then form our own."

Tsimbalov, who is studying veterinary medicine, said to make that opinion a broad one they must be exposed to as much as possible.

"American science, medicine, biology, microbiology — it's all very interesting and very important to what we are trying to do back in Russia," Tsimbalov said.

In addition to learning about agricultural technology, Gusmanov said the students also have picked up a thing or two about Kansas weather.

"Your winters here are like our summers," Gusmanov said. "We brought more clothes than we needed."

Volokitin said the only thing they don't like about the experience is being unable to see their families.

"I hate not seeing my wife and daughter," he said. "It's tough."

Students finance medical costs or health insurance

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Editor's note: This is the second in a four-part series about how the Clinton health-care plan will affect Kansans and, specifically, K-State students.

K-State students not covered by their parents' health-insurance plan are faced with a serious dilemma.

Students can either spend a large amount of money for health insurance or risk having medical problems and large medical bills.

Suzy Baker, sophomore undecided, does not have health insurance because of the expense. Last year, she had to spend $400 for a root canal and $400 to have a crown put on her tooth.

"One tooth ended up costing me $800. This didn't even include the visiting fees and cleaning while I was there," Baker said.

Baker said she would like to have health insurance, but because of the way health-insurance policies are set up, she would pay more for dental coverage, which is what she needs.

"I need to have my wisdom teeth pulled, and I can't do it because it's too expensive," she said. "It's about $700 to have all four pulled."

Baker said if she's ever seriously injured, she hopes she will be covered through an outside source.

"Hopefully, if I ever get hurt, it will be in my truck," she said.

Baker does not plan to purchase health insurance anytime soon.

"I will probably have to wait until I have a career and have a job that provides health insurance," she said.

HEALTH CARE + REFORM

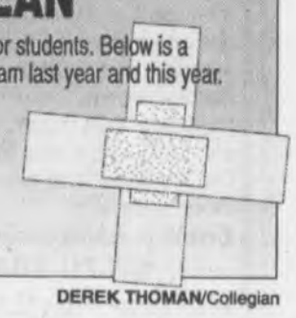
K-State offers a low-cost health-insurance policy for students. The policy is selected and screened each year by the Student Health Advisory Committee.

The committee is made up of 12 students and four faculty members. One of the committee's tasks is to choose a health-insurance plan each year for K-State students.

The policy chosen for the 1993-94 school year is provided by G-M Underwriters Agency Inc. through the Monumental Life Insurance Co.

This insurance company was chosen because of its willingness to work with students on campus and because it was competitively priced, said Mike Burton, senior in pre-med and chair of the Student Health Advisory Committee.

Students who want to purchase K-State health insurance can do so by completing an application at Lafene Health Center.



Every full-time student at K-State pays an $80 student health fee per semester, and students with six hours or less pay $25.

As a result of this health fee, students receive basic health care without charge at Lafene Health Center. If a student needs further treatments, such as an X-ray or physical therapy, they can also receive this for a lower price than available elsewhere, Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said.

Media critic discusses corporate ownership

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Media bias was the topic of discussion in Union Forum Hall Monday night.

Biases in media start with corporate ownership, Jeff Cohen, media critic and syndicated columnist, said.

Cohen, co-founder of FAIR, Fairness and Accuracy In Reporting, the New York-based media research group, spoke about the "News Media: Bias in the Age of Clinton."

Cohen said FAIR is seen as a pro-journalism group.

"FAIR doesn't care what your political beliefs are," Cohen said.

Fewer corporations control the press than in the past, he said.

"What media bias is is big money bias and big corporation bias," Cohen said. "Too much power put in too few hands is conservative.

"What is scarier is when NBC was taken over by General Electric in the mid-80s, and it wasn't debated."

Cohen said that in the debate of biased media, the corporate world has the power. He said advertisers have influence on what is being programmed, but any time an airplane crashes; the media pulls all advertising for that airline.

He said when you turn on the television, programming is sponsored by General Electric and General Motors night after night, so the news media would not think of undercutting its sponsors. General Electric has a full-time staff in Washington D.C. lobbying for a non-regulatory agenda, he said.

Cohen mentioned issues that are defined in President Clinton's administration. Members of the media have been reporting two viewpoints about Clinton's budget, which Cohen said were both wrong.

"It was hailed as courageous," Cohen said. "This is nothing more than a tax and spend politics."

The other issue is the health care program.

"The debate over a health care plan is over-managed. The competition has won," Cohen said, quoting a statement that appeared in the New York Times before the presidential election.

Cohen said that even public television has fallen into the corporate monopoly.

"PBS is biased because the same coporate elites who are dominating other networks are now dominating PBS," Cohen said.

Change in proposal creates confusion

Senate loses amendment that passed Thursday

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Student Senate played lost and found with a $15,000 authorization to purchase a new computer system for the Office of Student Activities and Services.

The allocation was approved by Student Senate Thursday.

DeLoss Jahnke, Student Senate chair, said the confusion was caused by an amendment that changed the content of the original proposal.

"It was on the table, but somewhere between the vote and adjournment, I didn't have it," Jahnke said. "I didn't realize I didn't have it until Friday afternoon."

The amendment lowered the request for Macintosh computers from eight to five and added one Disk Operating System computer to the proposal.

The problem came about when trying to work out the details for purchasing memory and software, Jahnke said.

"I didn't have all of the prices of the posted amendment," Jahnke said. "They were also put on the chalkboard, which is why a lot of people didn't write them down."

Eric Henry, student body vice president, said Tim Brown, network administrator for Student Publications Inc. and senior in computer science, is the one person who kept Senate from being completely embarrassed.

"The one person who isn't in Senate wrote everything down," Henry said.

It is a good thing Brown took detailed notes, Henry said.

"None of the senators I've talked to seem to know what they voted on," Henry said. "I find it appalling. I can't imagine taking the responsibility to spend that kind of money and not know what you're voting on."

Jahnke said he agrees.

"We probably should get a black eye for what happened," Jahnke said. "It was a screwed-up deal."

Even though he does find some fault with how the amendment was processed, Jahnke said there were also problems with how the amendment was presented.

"It was brought up in such a manner that the whole process was confusing," he said. "They came up to me twice with versions of the amendment that weren't acceptable."

Brown said he thought the amount finally allocated was not thoroughly discussed.

"The addition wasn't very well thought out," Brown said. "Neither obviously was the amendment at the last minute."

Eric McPeak, arts and sciences senator and co-sponsor of the amendment, said everyone shoulders some blame.

"Both sides were wrong, and it's good both admit it," he said. "It's hard to admit you were wrong."

The important thing, even with all of the confusion, is that a proposal was passed that was acceptable to all parties involved, McPeak said.

"It was a compromise between what the executive branch wanted and what Senate wanted," he said. "It saved students almost $5,000."

World War II artifact stolen from museum

A weekend theft at the Riley County Historical Museum is currently under investigation at the Riley County Police Department.

A Nazi-Germany Iron Cross Soldiers medal from World War II and two arrowheads found in Riley County more than 50 years ago were stolen sometime this weekend.

"We check our exhibits, and one of our staff members noticed that one of our exhibits was disturbed," Cheryl Collins, director of the Riley County Historical Museum, said.

The amount of the loss is undetermined at this time, and no signs of forced entry into the museum were apparent.

Collins said the stolen items would be a huge loss.

Man receives 15 to life for student's murder

A Council Grove man found guilty of second-degree murder and aggravated robbery was sentenced last Friday.

Scotty Adam, 18, of Council Grove, was found guilty on July 30 of killing Scott Sanders, who was a freshman in mechanical engineering at K-State.

Adam received 15 years to life for the second-degree murder conviction and five to 20 years for aggravated robbery. The sentences are to run concurrently, Lloyd Graham, defense attorney for Adam, said.

Adam will be eligible for parole in 7-1/2 years, Graham said.

"I had wanted the maximum sentence on both counts of second-degree murder and aggravated robbery, and I wanted them to run consecutively," Robert Daub, Morris County attorney in charge of the case, said.

Graham said an appeal on the guilty verdict will be filed within 10 days. He said it takes 10 months to a year to get a ruling on an appeal.

"I don't feel that there is much to appeal there," said Steven Opat, special prosecutor for the case. "Obviously, the defense feels otherwise, and that is their right to appeal."

Adam was charged with first-degree murder. The jury found him guilty of second-degree murder.

Opat said the jury thought Adam intentionally killed Sanders with malice, but not enough time had lapsed for premeditation.

Attorney wants repeal of sentencing laws

TOPEKA (AP) — A Topeka attorney, who is a probable candidate for attorney general, criticized the state's new sentencing laws Monday, saying they would return hundreds of dangerous criminals to communities.

Jerry Shelor, long active in Democratic politics, said he wants legislators to repeal the sentencing laws, which took effect July 1. He contends those laws will be easier on criminals, as well as allow the early release of dangerous felons.

Shelor is expected to run for the Democratic nomination for attorney general, but he has not formally announced his candidacy. He described his candidacy as soon to be announced, and he said he would form a campaign committee next month.

However, Shelor's statements were criticized by Attorney General Bob Stephan, a strong supporter of the new system. Stephan is a Republican and is not seeking re-election.

Wolf hybrid owners have more restrictions

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The owners of dogs that have been crossbred with wolves say they are facing more restrictions because of the animals' undeserved negative image.

Owners say wolf hybrids are warm, intelligent pets that bond closely with their owners. Opponents say the bad image is deserved, and they want to ban or restrict hybrids as pets.

Starting July 1, 1994, owners of wolf hybrids in Missouri must buy a $150 annual permit to own, breed or sell the animals, under new rules approved Friday by the Missouri Conservation Commission.

"The Little Red Riding Hood story is a fable," Earl Newland, a hybrid owner from Johnson County, said. "Because of the prejudice against these animals, a lot of people have gone underground."

Muslims to decide on Bosnian peace plan

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnia's Muslim president offered his people a choice Monday: Sign an unjust peace agreement, or be starved into defeat by another winter of destruction.

Alija Izetbegovic, undecided on a peace package that would divide the multi-ethnic Bosnia he has fought to preserve, outlined the dilemma to an informal but crucial assembly of Muslims and other supporters.

Muslims, who are the only members of the convention with voting rights, were expected to decide on the plan Tuesday before the full parliament meets for a final vote, Sarajevo radio said.

Clinton limits support for U.N. peacekeeping

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — President Clinton told the United Nations Monday the American people will support sending U.S. troops to keep peace around the world only if new missions are sharply limited.

"The United Nations must know when to say no," he said.

Noting that he is the first president born after creation of the United Nations, Clinton insisted on new rules for new times as he outlined his foreign policy views with a mixture of caution and high purpose.

Clinton is prepared to send as many as 25,000 American troops to Bosnia if peace terms can be worked out, and he defended keeping 4,700 U.S. troops in Somalia.

Georgian government falls to separatists

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Abkhazian separatists captured Sukhumi on Monday after 12 days of bitter combat, forcing Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze to flee the devastated city he had vowed to defend.

Abkhazian forces fought their way to the center of the city and raised their flag over city hall, Shevardnadze said in a message to his office in Tbilisi, the Georgian capital.

The fall of Sukhumi, the Georgian government's last stronghold in the coastal province of Abkhazia, gave the separatists virtually complete control of the region.

More than 3,000 people have been killed and 100,000 made homeless in the year-long war, one of the fiercest ethnic conflicts to rise from the ruins of the Soviet Union.

Director to retire following Waco raid

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Stephen Higgins, director of the federal agency that conducted February's ill-fated raid on religious cultists near Waco, Texas, announced his retirement Monday, just days before a report was to be released on the raid's handling.

Four agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were slain and 16 were wounded in the Feb. 28 raid to which the Branch Davidian group had inadvertently been alerted by a TV cameraman. About a half-dozen cult members also died in the Sunday morning shootout.

In a letter sent to Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, Higgins did not specify the recommendations to be made by Treasury officials, but he made clear his opposition to them.

"Since I do not agree with all the conclusions reached and actions proposed pursuant to the Waco incident, and since you apparently support the merger of ATF into the FBI as proposed by the reinvention team, I only have two real choices as a career executive where I find myself in serious disagreement with both decisions. I can either ask to be reassigned to another position, or retire.

"This is to advise you that I have decided to retire effective Oct. 30, 1993," Higgins wrote.

Assistant Treasury Secretary for Enforcement Ron Noble, who compiled the report to be released Thursday, would not comment Monday when asked about it and potential personnel recommendations.

However, published and broadcast reports have indicated Treasury officials likely would seek Higgins' retirement as well as that of two other high-ranking ATF officials — Deputy Director Daniel Hartnett and Deputy Assistant Director for Law Enforcement Edward Conroy.

Rock and blues style bands draw encore

MATT BECHTOLD

REVIEW

Big Head Todd and the Monsters played to a packed audience of approximately 650 people Sunday at Benchwarmers in Lawrence.

The night's show started about an hour late, but the wait was well worth the quality of the bands' performances and the lack of technical difficulties.

ALLGOOD, a rock and blues band out of Georgia, opened. The band kicked off the show with songs from both their independent release "Ride the Bee" and their A&M debut release "Uncommon Goal."

ALLGOOD's four years of touring experience was evident in its performance.

The band was strong and tight and well-received by the audience.

ALLGOOD's rock, blues and soul-blended style appealed to almost everyone in the audience. The two guitarists, John Carter and Clay Fuller, took opposite sides of the stage and shared rhythm and lead duties, which displayed their impressive showmanship and the ability of the band to work together.

Corky Jones' lead vocals were also impressive, coming out loud and clear. Mike Sain's bass and vocals were at just the right level to enhance the level of entertainment without drowning out the other band members, and drummer Charlie Pruet kept the band's timing down to the second.

When Big Head Todd and the Monsters took the stage, they performed a near-flawless set consisting of songs from all three of Big Head Todd and the Monsters' past recordings.

Of course, the majority of the set was from "Sister Sweetly," their debut album with Giant Records, which this tour was in support of. However, the album's "Another Mayberry" and "Midnight Radio" were also represented in the 90-minute set.

The show was a very strong and impressive display of the band's ability, which has become nationally known. The band was so well received by the audience that an encore was inevitable. The band closed with a great rendition of Voodoo Chile (Slight Return), which caught everyone but the band by surprise.

It was a great end to a great show.

Todd Park Mohr, vocalist of Big Head Todd and the Monsters, strums through a song before a crowd of 650 in Lawrence Sunday night. Originally scheduled for only one performance, Benchwarmers adjusted the line up and the band played Sunday and Monday in order to accommodate explosive ticket sales.

United Nations should not expect the United States to bear all of its burdens

The Clinton administration deserves kudos for the stance it has taken on the floor of the United Nations.

The United States, long the leader in peace-keeping across the globe, has tired of its role as the world's police force. Seeing this, Bill Clinton has begun demanding that the rest of the world fall in line and that tougher questions be asked before action is taken.

"Is there a real threat? Does the mission have a clear objective? Can an end point be identified for those who wish to participate? And how much does it cost?"

These are the hard questions, and it's high time someone has started asking them.

The numbers speak clearly: In 1987, there were 9,800 U.N. peace-keepers across the globe; today there are upwards of 90,000. The United State's role in Somalia is now in question as three more men died on Sunday. How much further do we need to participate?

Clinton is making other tough overtures.

He has made it clear that he'll stand by the Oct. 1 deadline for turning over two Libyan suspects in the 1988 downing of a Pan Am jetliner over Lockerbie, Scotland. Two hundred and seventy people died in the attack.

Further, he reminded the members of the moratorium on nuclear testing. This was clearly aimed at China, who is reported to be ready to resume underground nuclear blasting.

While peace is breaking out all over the world, it still is necessary for nations to be diligent. Diligent over countries who would undermine the goal of peace.

Diligent about people who put their personal greed ahead of the common good.

Clinton put it best in reference to the U.N., not just the U.S., being the leader in world affairs: "The U.N. must know when to say 'no.'"

Socialism marches on

"Fifty years ago, there might have been some excuse (though not justification) for the widespread belief that socialism is a political theory motivated by benevolence and aimed at the achievement of man's well-being. Today, that belief can no longer be regarded as an innocent error.

"Socialism has been tried on every continent of the globe. In light of its results, it is time to question the motives of socialism's advocates."

— Ayn Rand
1962

Today, it is hard to believe that socialism and the motives of its supporters must still be examined.

Socialism has been responsible for more war, death and human devastation than any other disease in modern times. It is the AIDS, the Bubonic Plague, the cancer of all political and social theory. But it's still alive and kicking.

National Socialists control a large percentage of the political scene in Germany. Here in America we have sold our souls to the welfare system, the first budding stages of socialism rearing its ugly head. Any ideological link to socialism should be regarded as the kiss of death to a political proposition, and yet we have done what England did and taken the first steps on the road to "national" health care.

We even see Socialist Sweden upheld as an example for us to follow. It should be an example of what not to do. Whenever I see an example of human suffering in the 20th Century, socialism is responsible, lurking in the background.

SARA SMITH

The word is attached forever to the two most bloody and destructive government regimes in history: The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Nazi Germany. The term Nazi is nothing but German slang for National Socialist German Workers' Party. These names are not accidental.

Whenever in a discussion I let it out of the bag that I am a capitalist, people get that terrified look of frightened deer in my headlights. They can't believe I'd actually admit something like that.

"But capitalism is such a cutthroat system!" comes the standard response. I always try to remind them that socialism and its ultimate result, communism, are the alternatives. And some of them actually defend it.

The back-pedaling copout which is the most common reflex to any critical examination of socialism is "But since it's never existed in pure form, we can't really know if it's good or bad."

Oh, really? I'm sure somebody knows. Somebody along the line must have made a judgment call.

I am fairly certain the victims of the Holocaust knew. I would guess the 30 million victims of Stalin's purges probably knew.

And if that's too general for you, consider the women who marched for communism in the streets of Petrograd in 1925, who fell down weak from starvation when they couldn't march anymore, vomiting blood as they died.

Do you think they had any last doubts in their minds that socialism was not a good thing?

To them, starvation was about as pure a dose of socialism as they could stand. And that is the end result, the final say and the pure form of socialism.

If one is to consider Cuba, Nazi Germany and the U.S.S.R. only trial runs of socialist theory, I think the world can do without the real thing.

Who would be the first to step in line to try it out again? What makes anyone think it would be any different?

The concepts of socialism have not changed. Nature has not changed. Human beings have not changed.

To those who are so egomaniacal as to think that they could implement socialism better than the leaders of the past, I would like to say, "Do not attempt it with me as your victim."

If you are one of those who still believe that the abstracts of socialism are good, but the concretes have just been bad, or if you think that socialism has any merit whatsoever, consider the city of Berlin.

Take a look at East Berlin and then a look at West Berlin before the wall came down. Ask yourself which half of the city in which you would have chosen to live.

And there is your answer.

Tobacco companies capitalize on the habits of smokers

There's a great American rip-off going on — and many people your age are buying into it.

One company promotes so-called "cash," which can be exchanged for T-shirts, lighters and leather jackets advertising the cigarette company. Another offers clothing to women who purchase nearly 980 packs of cigarettes in six months, which amounts to five packs per day.

These "giveaways" may seem like pretty good deals. But these "free" goods could be the most costly items you'll ever acquire, because you may wind up paying for them with your life.

Cigarette smoking claims more than 400,000 lives every single year and is the leading preventable cause of death in the nation. Studies have shown that smoking causes heart disease, lung cancer, emphysema and bronchitis. Whether inhaled directly or second-hand, cigarette smoke also worsens asthma.

The nicotine found in all cigarettes is extremely addictive. How bad is it? Studies show that a higher percentage of heroin users are able to quit their habit than smokers.

Cigarettes will literally take years off your life. On the average, smokers die seven years earlier than non-smokers. And according to a recent report by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, every cigarette steals seven minutes of a smoker's life. Think about that statistic the next time you light up.

If you find it hard to imagine the long-term consequences of smoking, think about the short-term costs. You'll be more susceptible to sore throats, nagging coughs and colds. You'll find it harder to ride a bike, climb stairs and go hiking.

The smell of smoke will ruin your clothes.

And to those of you who think smoking is attractive, think again. Smoking causes facial wrinkles and turns your teeth and fingernails yellow. In fact, in a recent poll, more than two-thirds of young Americans claimed that they would prefer to date a non-smoker.

DONNA SHALALA
GUEST COLUMNIST

If you smoke one pack of cigarettes a day, you will waste more than $800 each year on this habit. I'll bet you could think of better ways to use that money — no matter how many T-shirts you obtain by redeeming your "cash." Wouldn't it be more satisfying to use that $800 on something fun, like a new stereo, or even on something practical?

Many college students pick up smoking casually — only after exams, only on weekends, or, as a common excuse goes, "only when I drink." But as the addiction takes hold, you lose control.

That's why it's so important to quit now. No matter how tough it may seem, the pain of freeing yourself does not compare to the suffocating death grip of lung cancer. Or the enduring feeling, months after heart surgery, that your chest is on fire.

You've come a long way to get to college — too far to ruin it with cigarettes. Don't smoke. And if you've started, quit right now. If you need help, call your university health center or the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) at (404) 488-5705 for more information.

Donna Shalala is the Secretary of Health and Human Services and former Chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

We wish there were more open-minded liberals like this one

Editor,

Finally, a liberal who is practicing what he preaches!

We applaud Russell Fortmeyer for his open attitude concerning the upcoming Landon Lecture with Pat Robertson. Constantly crying for tolerance and openness, then attaching a label like phobic or proclaiming censorship, many liberals have become living oxymorons. They demand that their right to speech and expression be acknowledged, and yet they call Robertson, or anyone else who has an opinion different than their own, a "hate speaker," to invoke the words of Kevin Jacobs, president of the Flint Hills Alliance. Mr. Fortmeyer's letter was a breath of fresh air and has our respect.

Pat Robertson is a speaker of national significance who has already sparked intellectual debate on this campus. We think a true liberal would welcome the diversity of opinions that Robertson will bring to the Landon Lecture Series.

In conclusion, all K-Staters, conservatives and liberals alike, should take personal offense to the wearing of black armbands symbolizing "the death of intellect at K-State," to quote Cristina Janney's article in Monday's Collegian. What an arrogant notion to think that only those who disagree with Robertson are the intellectuals on this campus.

▶ FRESHMAN FOLLIES

So, tell us how many semesters have you been here in school?

Editor,

Jeff Hall was a bit sensationalistic in his critique of David Frese's column. Perhaps he's been spending too much time reading the tabloids at the supermarket. Dave Frese's column said that he spent his first two semesters drinking, sleeping in and making time with his girlfriend (Making time doesn't necessarily mean sleeping with).

The young Dave assumed, as many freshmen do, that the professor really meant that he didn't mind if the students didn't come to class.

Dave spent his time after dismissal working menial jobs.

Jeff Hall, have you ever worked in a menial job with no better opportunities in sight? Probably not.

Have you ever been grilled by the Academic Standards Board? Probably not.

In my dealings with the Academic Standards Board, I found they were a stern but fair group of professors. I believe the decision of when a student can come back should be left up to them.

Please note, Jeff Hall, that I am sparing you my own "sob story," although my dealings with the Financial Aid Office is quite funny in a warped sort of way.

What he said, in essence, was if students are going to be judged more harshly, then faculty should be judged more harshly.

After all, one argument for the 1.0 GPA is that it won't allow students who aren't serious to waste the teacher's time and the state's money. This is a valid argument; however, it can be said an inept teacher wastes students' time. Consequently, this wastes the school's time and much more of the state's money.

Also, a bad student will either shape up or drop out eventually. If a bad teacher gets tenure, then it takes an act of God to get rid of them.

Luckily, bad professors are fairly uncommon; however, bad graduate assistants are much more common.

I'm not talking about a language barrier. I'm talking about the assistants who are unable to explain important ideas in a coherent manner.

I might be more likely to support the 1.0 GPA if there were some guidelines for the faculty.

Well, I'm glad Jeff Hall has liked most of his teachers. I wonder what his grand total is ... five, six? I wonder how many teachers Dave Frese has had. I have a feeling that Jeff Hall won't be so smug when he's a sophomore or junior.

Jeff Hall, you head west on Kimball Avenue and take a survey. Find out how many of those nice houses are owned by professors and how many are owned by truck drivers.

Jeff Hall, I have read your letter several times to make sure I didn't misunderstand you. I wish you had shown Mr. Frese the same courtesy. If you had, you might have left out the first three paragraphs. I took your article home and read it beside David Frese's.

I didn't think that he was the one acting like a spoiled child.

I would like to say Jeff Hall's letter reminded me of an old saying salesmen have, "The only exercise some people get is that of jumping to conclusions."

Poetry highlights black history

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Michael S. Harper, poet laureate of Rhode Island, will read selected works today as part of the Missouri Valley Reading Series.

Harper, professor of English at Brown University, will be the first reader in a consortium that brings prestigious writers to speak at six member universities in Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska, Elizabeth Dodd, associate professor of English, said.

Harper has been an important figure in African American studies and to general readers of American poetry for two decades, Dodd said.

Harper was born in Brooklyn in 1938, the son of a postal worker and supervisor. At the age of 13 he moved with his family to Los Angeles.

From 1956-61, Harper attended Los Angeles State College, and in 1961 he became the first black writer admitted to the Iowa Writers Workshop at the University of Iowa. Forced to live in segregated living quarters, the experience increased his awareness of America as a fragmented society.

Harper was also strongly influenced by the large record collection his family owned, Larry Rodgers, assistant professor of English, said.

"He is particularly well-known as a poet who tries to draw on African American vernacular and musical forms, such as jazz, blues and gospel," Rodgers said. "His rhythms are often musical rather than metrical."

In 1970 Harper published his first book of poetry, "Dear John, Dear Coltrane," which received a National Book Award Nomination.

He was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1976, and in 1983 he received the Israel J. Kapstein Professorship of English at Brown University.

Harper has taught poetry at Yale and Harvard universities as a visiting professor and is considered one of the most prominent African American poets, Rodgers said.

His other books of poetry include "History Is Your Own Heartbeat," "Nightmare Begins Responsibility," and "Images of Kin."

Dodd said jazz rhythms can be heard in Harper's poetry, particularly in his earlier works.

"Jazz is an important contribution to world music and important to him as a concept," Dodd said.

Rodgers, who teaches a course in African American literature, said Harper uses poetry to explore his personal history and African American history, especially in connection to well-known musicians like Miles Davis, Charlie Parker, Billie Holiday and John Coltrane.

"His writing style challenges you to use the whole mind to think about what he's saying, and to listen to the rhythm of the voice in which he is speaking," Dodd said.

"He's a dynamic person, and I think people will enjoy hearing him read," she said.

POETRY READING
- Michael Harper will read selections from his works at 4 p.m. today in Union Forum Hall.
- He will also meet with interested students at 1 p.m. in Union 213.

K-STATE SALINA

Flying program attracted student

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

Editors note: This is the first of a five-part series about students' first impressions of K-State.

After four weeks of classes, new students have had a chance to settle into the routine of college life.

Lonnie Whitten Jr. is majoring in the professional pilot-training program, and said he feels the College of Technology is one of the finest colleges for his area of study.

Whitten is a graduate of Hays High School, but has lived in various places throughout the Midwest.

Whitten said when he was looking for a pilot-training program, he discovered K-State-Salina was his best choice.

"I have always wanted to be a pilot. There's not that many flight schools in Kansas. A lot of people told me it is a good and highly-respected school," he said.

Whitten said the college just received a $7.7-million grant.

"I was really impressed with the pilot-training program here. With the money, they were able to buy about 20 new airplanes and two new flight simulators with full screens. It will make flying more realistic," he said.

Whitten attends all four of his classes on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and between classes, he studies and plays racquetball at the campus recreation center.

Whitten is also one of two senators representing the College of Technology in the Student Governing Association. Every Thursday night, he and Alex Johnson, senator, travel to Manhattan to attend the meetings.

He said he is looking forward to working with SGA.

Whitten Jr.

"I was involved with several activities in high school, and I thought I would be able to help out. I know parliamentary procedures, and I felt I could do something," he said.

Whitten said he also likes to spend time outdoors.

"I like to hunt doves and pheasants. I participate in rodeos as a bull rider," he said.

McCartney vows brawls will stop at CU

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The brawl that erupted between Colorado and Miami players Saturday has left Colorado coach Bill McCartney feeling embarrassed and disgusted.

"It's the first time we've had this kind of an altercation," McCartney said, whose 19th-ranked team dropped a 35-29 verdict to the No. 3 Hurricanes. "It's not going to happen around here again — I'll tell you that right now. We're not going to participate in that kind of nonsense."

The fight lasted nearly five minutes and led to the ejection of seven Hurricanes and five Buffaloes.

McCartney said he is not through reviewing the matter.

"Whatever fault Colorado had in the incident, we'll deal with it," he said during the Big Eight's weekly conference call. "But we'll deal with it behind closed doors.

"I was disgusted something like that could happen here. That's the word — disgusted."

The Miami-Colorado row was the most spectacular but not the only fight that broke out in college games last weekend, naturally leading many observers to start talking about new NCAA rules against fighting.

"Why does everybody want to do something?" asked Iowa State coach Jim Walden. "This is a competitive, spirited game. I've seen doubles partners get mad at racquet ball. Why do we have to psychoanalyze? There was a fight Saturday. The referees handled it. End of subject."

Walden noted nothing that happened Saturday was new.

"They were fighting when Bronko Nagurski played. It will always happen, and the less said about it the better. It's not some sort of society's problem. Fighting on the football field is not what's corrupting our government today."

Oklahoma State linebacker Keith Burns, last season's Big Eight defensive newcomer of the year, was voted Big Eight defensive player of the week for his part in the Cowboy's 12-10 loss to Arizona State, a two-touchdown favorite.

"This game gave Keith a chance to be involved more than the first two because of the style of offense," coach Pat Jones said. "In all honesty, he's had better games. But he showed up all over creation. But he has had better days."

Two quarterbacks headed in opposite directions seem to be Oklahoma's Cale Gundy and Missouri's Jeff Handy. Gundy, who had three touchdown passes against Tulsa on Saturday, has not thrown an interception all year for the unbeaten Sooners. Handy, who smashed school records last year as a Missouri sophomore, has lost four fumbles and thrown four interceptions and been sacked seven times in lopsided losses the past two weeks to Texas A&M and West Virginia.

"We said all along he'd have an outstanding senior year," said Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs of Gundy. "Maturity and experience he's gained over the last couple of years is evident in his play. He's very cognizant in terms of where he is on the field, when he can take a chance and when he can't. His knowledge of the game has improved, and subsequently we're seeing a pretty good football player."

Handy has been particularly bedeviled by the blitz.

"If you look at Jeff's overall numbers ... they were good," Missouri coach Bob Stull said. Two of the interceptions were tipped balls. The offensive line needs to do a better job of protecting him. It's everybody's responsibility, not just Jeff's."

Cats' Smith collects weekly player award

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Running back J.J. Smith, who rushed for a career-high 127 yards and two touchdowns in K- State's weekend victory against Nevada-Las Vegas, was named Monday the Big Eight's offensive player of the week.

J.J. Smith

Smith, a junior from Kansas City, Mo., carried 22 times and scored from the 27- and 1-yard lines. This is the first time Smith earned the honor as he picked up the second 100-yard rushing day of his career to help K-State to its first 4-0 start since 1931.

He won the offensive honor in a split vote over Oklahoma quarterback Cale Gundy, who passed for 149 yards and three touchdowns in a 41-20 victory over Tulsa.

"We have two very fine running backs, and it's our intention to play both the same amount of time," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "It all evens out. If somebody gets the hot hands, he'll get the carries."

Smith leads K-State with 294 rushing yards on the season and ranks fifth in the Big Eight with 73.5 yards per game.

He is also second in the league and 19th in the nation in scoring with six touchdowns for an average of 9.0 points per game.

Smith said he was glad to carry to ball 22 times — another career high.

"I'm glad coach has enough confidence in me to let me run the ball that many times," he said. "If I get it, I'll give it my best effort. I'll go hard every play."

Defensive honors went to Keith Burns of Oklahoma State, who was credited with 15 tackles in a 12-10 loss to Arizona State.

The senior linebacker won in a split vote over defensive back Toby Wright of Nebraska.

▶BRETT NABS PLAYER OF THE WEEK

NEW YORK (AP) — George Brett of the Kansas City Royals, who hit two home runs the day after announcing his retirement, was picked Monday as American League player of the week.

Chi-Sox and Toronto will battle in AL playoffs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The Chicago White Sox, baseball's quiet achievers, used a three-run homer from designated hitter Bo Jackson on Monday night to win the American League West.

The White Sox defeated the Seattle Mariners 4-2, giving baseball its first division winner of the season and the White Sox their first division championship since 1983.

Jackson, who is coming back from hip replacement surgery, hit a three-run shot to snap a scoreless tie in the sixth inning.

The homer, his 15th and second in two days, was a towering fly to left that barely made it into the first row of the left-field bleachers.

It sent the crowd of 42,116 white-socks-waving fans into a frenzy and the White Sox to the playoffs.

MILWAUKEE — The Toronto Blue Jays, bursting with high-priced talent and closing the season as baseball's hottest team, won the American League East for the third straight year Monday night.

Pat Hentgen (19-8) scattered seven hits in 6 2/3 innings as the Blue Jays beat the Brewers 2-0 for their 13th victory in 15 games. Toronto will play Chicago in the playoffs.

MIAMI — Rookie Pat Rapp allowed only four hits in eight innings as the Florida Marlins defeated the Montreal Expos 3-1 Monday, pushing the Expos to the brink of elimination in the National League East.

Mexican film ignites passion

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Unrequited love, rebellious daughters and raucous revolutionaries don't get lost in the sauce of Alfonso Arau's film "Like Water For Chocolate."

"Like Water For Chocolate" or "Como Agua Para Chocolate," is based on the best-selling book and screenplay by Laura Esquivel.

REVIEW

Set in turn-of-the century Mexico, the film is the story of Tita, played by Lumi Cavazos, who is raised in her mother's kitchen by Nacha, the cook.

Tita learns at Nacha's knee how to prepare delicious foods and overcome the mysterious animosity Tita's mother has toward her.

With an underlying Cinderella-like twist, the audience can't help but root for Tita in her unhappy plight.

Throughout the film, Tita and her family suppress overwhelming emotions and passions. Tita can only express her sensuality and feelings through her cooking of sumptuous cuisine.

Once her family partakes of Tita's cooking, they are engulfed by the flames of their overpowering sexual desires.

NOW SHOWING
"Like Water For Chocolate" is shown daily at 9:30 p.m. at Seth Child Cinemas.

Unfortunately for Tita, it is a struggle to keep her sentiments a secret. It's especially difficult when she has fallen in love with Pedro.

According to family tradition, the youngest daughter must stay at the ranch and take care of her aging mother. As a result, Tita is forbidden to marry Pedro.

The strength of Tita and Pedro's love survives over many years of separation and hardship.

Cavazos's acting range is extensive and impressive. Audiences can look forward to many future endeavors from this young actress.

"Like Water For Chocolate" is full of fabulous imagery. The film also has a wonderful supporting cast of actors who add their own special ingredients to the celluloid mix.

It's a treat for Manhattan audiences when a high-caliber, first-run foreign film comes to town.

Mimes entertain with political comedy

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Anyone who thinks mime can only be defined as silent, white-face pantomime has not met the San Francisco Mime Troupe.

The Tony Award-winning troupe will present an evening of talk, laughter and song at 8 p.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium with its production "Offshore."

"Offshore" is a political comedy that explores the effects of free trade on the lives of four people from across the globe.

While entertaining the audience, it also provides information about free trade vs. protective tariffs, the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), manufacturers' search for cheaper labor markets, U.S.-Japan trade relations and the floundering economic situations in Japan, China and the United States.

Barbara Jeppeson, the mime troupe's publicity director, said the troupe likes to incorporate current events into its productions.

"We choose issues right off the headlines," Jeppeson said.

"'Offshore' deals with an issue that most people pass over, that of free trade. 'Offshore' is very bold, very entertaining and very enlightening. The play brings it home."

TICKETS
- TIME: 8 p.m., Wednesday, McCain Auditorium
- ADMISSION: Public: $12, Senior Citizens: $10, Students: $6.
- Tickets available at McCain Box Office

Richard Martin, director of McCain auditorium, agreed.

"It's a timely sort of thing what with NAFTA being discussed now. The political comedy idea is to entertain the audience and at the same time get them to think about important events going on around them," Martin said.

"Whether people leave and say 'Hey, NAFTA is the greatest thing since sliced bread, and everyone ought to have one,' or if they come out with the opposite feeling, it has gotten them to think about the issue. They want to shake people up."

In "Offshore," the United States and Japan are in a trade dispute. Unless American imports of rice are accepted in Japan, the United States threatens to place prohibitive tariffs on Japanese semiconductors.

On one hand, a Japanese business tycoon involved with semiconductors sells out Japan's rice farmers to an American trade negotiator, a Clinton-appointed lawyer. The tycoon tries to marry off his daughter to the negotiator, but she has plans of her own.

Across the Pacific, an American-born-Chinese dealer hopes to become a transpacific entrepreneur through free trade, and a California semiconductor factory owner depends on tariffs to keep her plant from shutting down.

"Offshore" continues the troupe's tradition of intercultural contact. In a previous play, the troupe worked with Israeli and Palestinian artists. "Offshore" was created with artists from Japan, Hong Kong, Taiwan and Manila, Jeppeson said.

Dear Cassandra,

What planet is this "Different, not homophobic" person from anyway? Classifying homosexuals as abnormal? I think he or she is abnormal for thinking that way. And I think it's clear this person IS homophobic. His or her argument just doesn't fit in today's society.

I agreed with you, Cassandra, last week when you said it wasn't right for religions not to accept homosexuality as a valid lifestyle. You said just what I would have. Those that don't accept it are living in the dark ages and should take their heads out of the sand.

These people who have been writing in don't seem to get it. Just because only 1 percent or only 10 percent of the population is one way doesn't make it abnormal or wrong. I guess that would make red-heads with blue eyes abnormal because those traits are so unusual.

By the way, Cassandra, what's with the Darryl thing?

New laws bring few changes

Rates for cable programming and equipment decrease

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

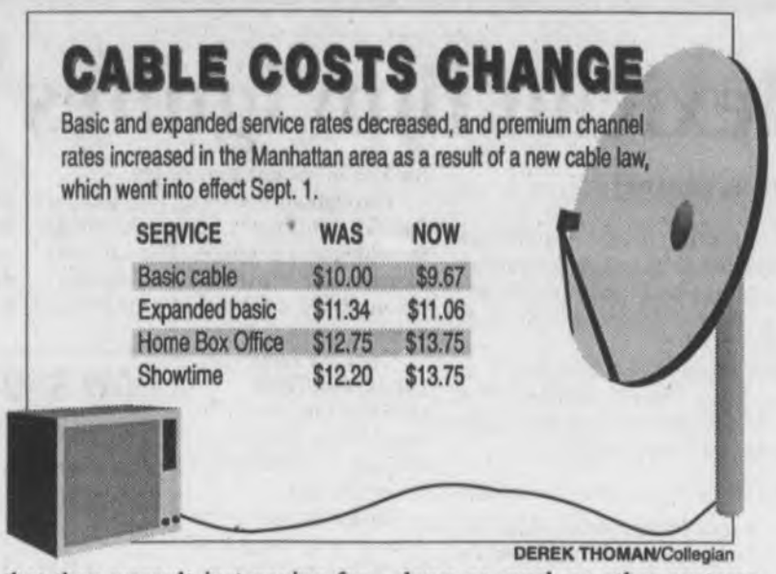
New cable laws will bring only a small change for Manhattan cable subscribers.

"It's a confusing system," said Ron Frazier, General Manager of Manhattan's TCI of Kansas office.

"Fortunately for the Manhattan area, basic service and expanded service rates actually went down," he said.

The new law, which took effect Sept. 1, was in response to complaints about cable systems raising their rates far above the inflation rates, said Bill Adams, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications.

Hijacked cable lines aren't illegal according to the law, although TCI will charge the normal installation fee, which is between $6.70 and $27.15 per hour of labor, depending on the hook-up for each line.The new law also says cable companies can't charge exorbitant prices for equipment.



"There used to be very high charges for equipment," Adams said. "The cable companies still charge, but it's limited. Now they can't charge way above costs."

According to Manhattan rate cards, a converter box that was renting for $2 per month now costs 60 cents per month.

Monthly cable bills won't reflect these changes because TCI writes in the cost of replacing Manhattan's co-axial cable lines with fiber optic lines as equipment costs, Adams said.

Another feature of the new law states cable companies must itemize their bills.

"They have to list out everything they're charging for now," Adams said. "It didn't occur to most people that they weren't just paying for channels."

Both sides seem to agree on what the new cable laws mean to the consumer. TCI's rates won't go down as much as other systems, Frazier said.

"In spite of all the advertising," Adams said, "you didn't really see any lowering of the bill."

Golden Key receives highest award

LISA STAAB
Collegian

The K-State chapter of Golden Key National Honor Society has been awarded the Key Chapter Award for the ninth consecutive year, which is a national record for any chapter in the country.

According to the national headquarters, all chapters are eligible to apply for the award. Recipients are outstanding chapters that surpass and excel in their fulfillment of chapter responsibilities and that create an environment of achievement and strong leadership at their universities.

"No other chapter has won this award nine times consecutively, and it is the highest award the chapter can get," Lance Lewis, program coordinator of Continuing Education and co-adviser of Golden Key, said. "We won it because we've been blessed with fantastic leadership from the students who have worked hard over the year."

Doug Schwenk, senior in physics and chapter president, said 10 percent of the approximatly 200 chapters received the award.

"We received the award based on points for service projects and community activities that we are involved in locally and nationally," Schwenk said.

"We sent in two 3-inch three-ring binders filled with information.

We were given some guidelines, but beyond that it included incredible documentation and photos to record our activities," he said.

"We sent in two 3-inch three-ring binders filled with information."
DOUG SCHWENK
SENIOR IN PHYSICS

Golden Key is a student organization that recognizes and encourages scholastic achievement and excellence in all undergraduate fields of study.

Membership is by invitation only, and eligibility is limited to the top 15 percent of junior and senior students.

Initiation of new members is Oct. 17, and approximately 400 members join each fall semester, Lewis said.

The K-State chapter sponsors many annual activities including a scholarship information meeting and an honors dinner to recognize faculty and administrators as well as promote student/faculty dialogue, he said.

In addition, the chapter presents an annual Outstanding Graduate Teaching Assistant Award and three chapter scholarships to its members.

Another activity that Golden Key members participate in is the Mentoring Program with Wamego High School, Schwenk said.

"Golden Key members are paired with a student for one reason or another so that the student can gain insight from a peer mentor who's in college to perhaps make that transition from high school to college," he said.

In addition, they have chapter meetings throughout the year with guest speakers on current issues such as the Future of Health Care or Gays in the Military, two forums they sponsored last year, Schwenk said.

"We are a very active chapter with strong student leadership," Lewis said. "The students at K-State are very involved. Our chapter officers and active members are dedicated to having a strong chapter."

Stress-reducing options available for students

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

As the semester gets under way, many students have problems with the class load they are carrying.

There are several places K-State students can go for assistance in handling class overload stress, including the University Counseling Services on the second floor of Lafene Health Center.

Art Rathbun, counselor and biofeedback specialist, said the first step to relieving the stress is to find out the cause of the problem.

"There are several reasons why students might have a class overload," Rathbun said. "The student could be in academic trouble and trying to get out, their curriculum might demand a certain schedule, or some students just can't operate except at the edge of a crisis situation."

Norm Sedillo, junior in life science and pre-medicine, is a student who is trying to cope with a demanding curriculum.

"One of my biggest problems is that as a freshman the classes were easier, and I had more time to study for the tough classes," Sedillo said. "Now all the courses are tough, and there is less time to study for each one."

Rathbun said the first place to go for help is the student's adviser. Some colleges, like business and architecture, have a full-time staff person available to help with these problems.

"The faculty adviser would best know the student and the course of study," Rathbun said. "If the problem is larger, the adviser might then send the student here (the counseling center) for stress counseling or the Academic Performance Enhancement Program or maybe to Academic Assistance for tutoring."

The performance program is a five-week workshop that works with students on issues ranging from improving study techniques and handling test anxiety to budgeting time better.

Many students complain about not having enough time for themselves or their friends.

"The bad part about all the studying is that I'm usually on campus all day and don't get home till late at night," Chantel Long, junior in biology and pre-medicine, said. "When I get home I usually have several messages, but most of the time it is too late to return the calls."

"I used to go out on weekends with my friends," Sedillo said. "Now it is all self control. I tell myself I have to study and not go out."

"This is the first semester I have really had to study all the time," Marc Scarbrough, senior in electrical engineering and pre-medicine, said. "Now I study on Fridays and Saturdays and have had at least two if not three tests a week for a month."

Rathbun said there are other places on campus available for the students, but often the best help is to make time and get away from the class work.

"Doing things that are different from class work are often good stress relief," Rathbun said. "That is where getting involved with Union Program Council activities and the rec complex can be a big help."

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?
If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.
There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.
Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.
All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.
Put Army National Guard in your college plans. Call:

Koon, Powell receive a grace period

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Police officer Laurence Powell had already spent his first night in prison for the Rodney King beating, and Sgt. Stacey Koon was just surrendering when a judge allowed them to go free Monday.

U.S. District Judge John G. Davies gave Powell and Koon about two weeks to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, setting Oct. 12 as the new date for them to start serving their 2 1/2-year sentences.

Both men had faced a deadline of noon Monday for checking into the Dublin Federal Prison Camp, a converted military barracks without bars or fences 40 miles east of San Francisco.

Powell surrendered at the prison Sunday afternoon. Koon arrived at around 11:30 a.m. Monday, around the time Davies issued his ruling, and hadn't been processed yet.

"If Powell and Koon elect to, they may walk out of the prison," said U.S. Marshal Craig Meacham in Los Angeles. "I expect they are going to make a U-turn and get out of there as fast as they can."

It couldn't immediately be determined when they would go free.

Attorney William Kopeny, representing the two, said he would file an emergency request with U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor to allow the men to remain free on bail while they appeal their convictions and sentences to a federal appellate court. O'Connor oversees California matters.

Koon, Powell and two other white policemen were charged in the March 1991 beating of King, a black motorist stopped after a chase. A shocking videotape of the beating was broadcast repeatedly worldwide.

The officers' acquittals on state charges in 1992 led to deadly rioting in Los Angeles and other cities. The officers were tried this year on federal charges of violating King's civil rights. Koon and Powell were convicted; officers Theodore Briseno and Timothy Wind were acquitted.

In August, Davies gave Koon and Powell surprisingly lenient 30-month sentences that were criticized by prosecutors and King. Davies said King himself was to blame for many of the blows he suffered in the beating.

WASHINGTON — Two Senate restaurant employees who said their complaints of sexual harassment by a male supervisor were ignored by management will receive a substantial financial settlement.

Susan Ochoa said the man called her a bitch and a slut, while Ella Bennett said he pulled open her dress in front of other workers.

A lawyer for the women, Sharon Cummings, announced Monday that the formal complaints filed in June 1992, as an act of desperation, have brought Ochoa and Bennett a substantial settlement from the Senate.

It reportedly was the first case resolved under the Senate's new procedure for handling job discrimination complaints — authorized under a 1991 law that finally gave civil rights protection to congressional workers.

The amount awarded, to be paid by the taxpayers, could not be disclosed under the settlement agreement.

But it will become public in the Senate's semi-annual expenditure report later this year.

William Raines, a spokesman for the Architect of the Capitol, did not return numerous phone calls. The architect's office is in charge of the restaurant system.

Ochoa, the Senate's first female chef, complained that beginning in 1990 and continuing through this year, the supervisor tried to look under her skirt, picked her up from behind and placed her on a conveyer belt and called her "bitch, slut and whore" as part of a pattern of harassment.

Bennett said she told her bosses how the same individual, from 1989 through this year, consistently harassed her.

She said he touched her rear end, put his hands under her dress and grabbed her thighs, picked her up and threw her head-first into an industrial trash can and pulled open her dress in the presence of other workers.

"When supervisors were informed, we were not taken seriously," Ochoa said at a news conference in her lawyers' offices.

"The people on the Hill call us troublemakers," Bennett said.

Bennett said her formal complaint triggered an attempt by Senate restaurant supervisors to fire her husband, who is a food supervisor in the Senate restaurant system.

The two said they complained to four separate managers.

Ochoa said the women were told that this was the way the individual was and they should conduct themselves differently.

Bennett was told she was over-sensitive.

Lecturer not political move

Robertson offers different viewpoints to Landon Lecture

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

The chairman of the Landon Lecture and the spokesman for Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., denied charges by two local groups that Pat Robertson was invited to speak at K-State for political reasons.

John Exdell, professor of philosophy and representative of the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice, and Robert Littrell, chairman of the Riley County Democratic Party, accused Kassebaum on Friday of using her influence with the lecture committee to bring Robertson here for political reasons.

Exdell said having Robertson speak at K-State is important to the Republican Party.

Kassebaum issued a prepared statement last week supporting Robertson's selection as a Landon lecturer. She said Robertson was one of a diverse group of speakers who had been invited to participate in the lecture series this semester.

Mike Horak, Kassebaum's spokesman, said Monday that Kassebaum played an active role in attracting top-caliber people to speak in the lecture series.

Horak said Kassebaum didn't necessarily agree with everything Pat Robertson said. However, Robertson could provide a different viewpoint for the lecture series.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture committee, said the lecture series had tried to bring members of President Bush's cabinet to K-State. The committee would like to bring some member of President Clinton's cabinet to the University soon, Reagan said.

This semester the committee wanted to invite representatives of the left and right wing of the political parties as contrast to the cabinet members.

"We wanted the lecture series to represent the broad view of American politics," Reagan said.

Reagan said invitations had been sent out to Pat Buchanan, Ross Perot and Jesse Jackson, but Robertson had been the only one who had accepted the invitation.

"We try to send out invitations to a well-rounded group of people," he said.

Reagan said invitations go out to a variety of people, but whoever speaks has a lot to do with who accepts the invitations.

"We can control the invitations, but we can't control who accepts," he said.

The people who are invited to speak at a Landon lecture are decided by a committee comprised of Reagan, President Jon Wefald and the chairman of the patrons of the Landon lecture. Kassebaum sometimes makes suggestions to the committee, Reagan said.

Reagan said his predecessor, Bill Richter, head of the political science department, had been removed because there had been several liberal democrats speak in one semester. However, Reagan said it was a coincidence and only those group of people had accepted the University's invitation.

Reagan said listening to opposing views was a part of the education process.

"Robertson doesn't represent my views either, but I feel it would be a disservice to the students if the lecture series didn't represent different views," he said.

Reagan said he was not concerned about possible protests of Robertson's lecture.

"We have had protests at the lectures before," he said. "We can't act as if this is the last speaker that will ever come to our campus."

Board considers revoking license

TOPEKA — Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark defended Yolanda Huet-Vaughn's decision not to go to the Persian Gulf with her Army Reserve unit because the war violated international law.

"To support and defend the Constitution is to make sure the U.S. does not violate its own Constitution," Clark said Monday. "International law is embodied in the Constitution and the supreme law of the land." He served as U.S. attorney general under President Johnson.

However, Debra Billingsley, an attorney for the Kansas Board of Healing Arts, said Huet-Vaughn broke a contract with the Army when she left Fort Riley in December 1990, before her unit was deployed to Saudi Arabia. Huet-Vaughn contends the war was immoral and illegal.

She was later court-martialed and found guilty of desertion.

In her closing arguments, Billingsley contended that Huet-Vaughn should never have been a doctor in the Army Reserve since she had opposed the Vietnam War and the Granada and Panama invasions.

She also said it is apparent Huet-Vaughn did not intend to fulfill her obligations as a member of the Army Reserve, except to do weekend drill once a month. Huet-Vaughn "abandoned patients" when she did not accompany the Topeka-based 410th Evacuation Hospital to the Persian Gulf, Billingsley said.

Plan shorts specialists

Primary care practioners to get bigger role

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Changes in health care service procedures will change the routines of Manhattan doctors and specialists under Clinton's health plan.

The plans means a larger role for primary care practioners at the expense of specialists. Also, the number of medical specialists, traditionally the highest paid doctors in the country, will be decreased dramatically to save money.

Many people will have to stop choosing their doctors unless they want to pay more for the privilege.

"Primary care physicians are going to be the gatekeeper it sounds like," Larry Moeller, medical director at Lafene Health Center, said.

Directing health care to primary doctors is one problem to be dealt with, Robert Cathey, a Manhattan specialist in dermatology, said.

"I don't feel in many cases the primary care can do it better and cheaper," Cathey said.

Complications might surface after the health plan is put into effect, said Walter Adams, assistant professor of anthropology and American ethnic studies.

"It seems to me that the idea might create complications and reduce costs in the short run only," Adams said.

Lack of resources to educate primary care practicioners may cause a problem in maintaining a consistent quality of care, Eugene Klingler, Manhattan general surgeon, said.

"The thing that concerns me is teaching and research," Klingler said.

The majority of doctors agree that some sort of health care plan should be initiated for those who are not covered, Cathey said.

"I think that basically it would be good to bring in the people that are somehow not covered now," Cathey said.

The premise for basic health care is excellent, Moeller said.

Cathey said something needs to be done, but thinks complete reform won't be necessary.

"I don't think we need to totally overhaul the system," Cathey said.

Klingler said he doesn't think a health care program could benefit small cities such as Manhattan.

"It may work in big cities, but I don't know about Manhattan," Klingler said.

Moeller said he admires both President Clinton and Hillary for addressing the health care problem.

"It is good that the first lady takes such a responsibility in the White House," Moeller said.

Klingler said he agrees that radical changes must be made in terms of a national health care program and believes it is moving in the correct direction.

"It's a starting point," he said. "It'll be interesting to see what happens."

Clinton calls for new strategy in Somalia, end capture efforts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said today he wants a political strategy that puts the affairs of Somalia back in the hands of Somalis and gives the United States and other nations a fixed date to get out.

The remarks signal the administration's shift away from the goal of capturing Somalian warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, stressing instead its effort to isolate him and create a political structure without him.

"The enforcement strategy has not changed, but what I wanted to emphasize at the U.N. yesterday was that there has to be a political strategy that puts the affairs of Somalia back into the hands of Somalis, that gives every country, not just the United States ... a sense that they are rotating in and out," Clinton said.

In a photo session with Democratic congressional leaders one day after addressing the United Nations, Clinton said nations involved in peacekeeping need a fixed date for their ultimate disengagement in Somalia because there are so many other peacekeeping operations in the world that have to be considered.

After the meeting, House Majority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., said there is a mood of concern and support in the House over U.S. involvement in Somalia."But I think the basic support is there."

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said Congress supports Clinton's actions, but he said some lawmakers are disappointed with the way events have transpired in Somalia.

"The longer any operation goes on, whenever there is a loss of life ... there's going to be questions..."

GEORGE MITCHELL
SENATE MAJORITY LEADER

"The longer any operation goes on — whenever there is a loss of life, whenever there is risk — there's going to be questions, reservations, arguments ... And clearly this exists, not just in the case of Somalia, but in Bosnia."

The New York Times reported today that the United States has moved away from its goal of capturing Aidid. Without confirming the report, White House spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers signaled a less aggressive approach, saying, "Should the opportunity present itself, certainly he would be arrested."

In New York, Secretary of State Warren Christopher said the U.S. had not changed its policy on Somalia.

He said the Clinton administration continues to support the U.N. resolution calling for the apprehension of Aidid and to see him brought to justice.

But, he said, the U.S. definitely needs a political strategy.

Facing growing criticism from Congress after three American soldiers were killed on Saturday, the administration is trying to change the view that the United States is a combatant in the fighting.

"I have tried to raise the visibility or the urgency of getting the political track back on pace because in the end, every peacekeeping mission or every humanitarian mission has to have a date certain when it's over and you have to, in the end, turn the affairs of the country back over to the people that live there," Clinton said.

"We were not asked to go to Somalia to establish a protectorate or a trust relationship or to run the country, that's not what we went for," he said.

GHOST TOWNS

At least some of the 6,000 ghost towns across Kansas are once again showing signs of life. In Woodson County, tourists pass through Neosho Falls, brought by a cult following of the rock group "Kansas" and a 1988 album dedicated to Neosho Falls.

—Nicodemus, Graham County: Experts predict a bright future for Nicodemus, one of the few surviving all-black communities founded in the United States after the Civil War.

—Randolph, Riley County: Tuttle Creek Reservoir, which destroyed the town in the 1960s, has brought prosperity to today's relocated Randolph by way of water recreation.

Car found, driver believed swept away

CHANUTE (AP) — Authorities who found a car that had been totally submerged in the flooded Neosho River believe its driver was swept away.

Dewey L. Clements, 56, of Chanute, has been missing since Friday, Neosho County Sheriff Rick Wingate said today.

His car was parked on a gravel road near the river sometime Friday when torrential rain fell in southeast Kansas, Wingate said. High water closed the road Friday, he said.

When the river level dropped Monday, the car was towed away. It was filled with mud and some of Clements' belongings, including his glasses and some clothing, he said.

Wingate said he would put a boat in the river to check the banks when the river level has fallen enough to do so safely.

Officials hope compromise in making

TOPEKA (AP) — Local government officials are hoping to reach a compromise next month with news organizations to salvage a bill that would allow higher fees for providing access to public records.

The bill would allow governments to collect fees for more than just the cost of the staff time needed to find a record and related copying costs. Local officials see a change as necessary in the computer age, when it can cost thousands to develop a database.

Government will not fund abortions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, in a defeat for abortion-rights supporters, Tuesday refused to lift the 17-year-old ban on federally financed abortions for the poor.

By a 59-40 roll-call vote, senators voted instead to slightly liberalize current restrictions. Medicaid can now be used to pay only for abortions for women whose lives are in jeopardy; under the bill, funds would also be provided when pregnancies result from rape or incest.

The vote signaled defeat of this year's effort by abortion-rights advocates to use the ascension of President Clinton to the White House to dramatically expand the use of federal funds for abortions. The House last June refused to drop the ban and settled for the same restrictions the Senate approved today.

Senate panel votes to give aid to PLO

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate panel voted Tuesday to lift restrictions on U.S. aid to the Palestine Liberation Organization, opening the way for American participation in West Bank and Gaza Strip development projects.

A measure approved by voice vote in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee would give President Clinton until Jan. 1 to waive laws that ban aid for and relations with the PLO.

It came hours after Senate and House conferees incorporated similar waiver language in the final version of the fiscal 1994 foreign-aid appropriations bill.

It includes $25 million for Palestinian development, funds decided on before Israel and the PLO reached their breakthrough agreement on self-government in the occupied territories.

Congress doesn't want gays in military

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House adopted legislation Tuesday to discourage homosexual enlistment in the military as the Pentagon considered a delay in implementing President Clinton's more lenient policy.

By a vote of 301-134, the House branded homosexuality an unacceptable risk to morale and approved the same policy adopted by the Senate earlier this month.

The House action came as the Pentagon considered holding off on enforcing Clinton's policy on Friday pending completion of the defense budget by the House and the Senate, said Defense Department sources, who requested anonymity.

Bosnians accept conditional peace plan

SARAJEVO (AP) — Bosnia's parliament, clinging to little more than its claim to the moral high ground, met Tuesday to choose between a bitter peace or more war.

A predominantly Muslim convention of political figures, intellectuals and religious leaders accepted the plan earlier in the day, but only if territory taken by force is returned. Serbs flatly refuse to do that.

If parliament follows suit, it would likely mean a continuation of the war that has left up to 200,000 people dead or missing.

The international peace plan, which would divide Bosnia into three ethnic mini-states, would mean signing the eradication of the Bosnian state forever and getting nothing in return, Bosnian government representative Kemal Muftic said.

Canada Prime Minister answers critics

TORONTO (AP) — Prime Minister Kim Campbell, slipping in the polls as national elections approach, struck back Tuesday against criticism that she has no plans for cutting the budget deficit or creating jobs.

Canadians vote for a new House of Commons on Oct. 25.

Campbell, whose Progressive Conservative Party trailed the Liberals in three separate polls published this week, previously refused to provide details on cuts she would make to eliminate the $35.5-billion deficit in five years as promised.

She delighted her opponents when she said last week social programs were too important to be discussed in a seven-week election campaign.

Students learn the ropes of horse training techniques

BOB FLEENER

Three times a week, students get academic credit for playing the part of a cowboy.

Horse Training and Management is a class that gives students hands-on experience in training an inexperienced horse.

Students are assigned to a horse at the beginning of the semester, and it becomes their job to train that horse to lead, to accept a rider and to follow the basic riding commands.

Raub said learning to read a horse's body language is the best place to start when breaking in a new horse.

There is not just any one set method of teaching horses, Raub said.

The horse training class facility is located north of Marlatt Road. It is a simple set-up, with four to five stalls in the barn and an apartment for a student employee. There is a pasture for the horses and several round pens for training.

Bill Keesecker, junior in animal science and industry, said he enjoys the facilities the class offers.

"I love using the round pens. As far as I'm concerned, that's the best way to train now. I used to train horses in regular pens, where they get caught in the corners," Keesecker said.

The class is limited to 20 students, Raub said. They are required to purchase basic training equipment such as a lunge line and a lead halter and grooming equipment. Advanced students may need to purchase a saddle.

The class meets three times a week, and that is adequate, Raub said. But, he said the best situation possible would be to have students work with the horses on a daily basis.

"Each horse is just like a book. You're going to react differently to each one. The main thing is to be consistent in your intentions," Raub said.

Todd Nutsch, senior in agriculture education, said he grew up around horses and has enhanced his knowledge through the class.

"Horses have different awareness levels than we do. Sometimes they react to something you've done or something in the environment. You have to recognize the problem and correct it," Nutsch said.

"I have to watch the horse closely that I've been assigned to," he said. "It had virtually no human contact before I got it."

Raub said it is important for his students to have a grasp of what a horse is saying through its motions.

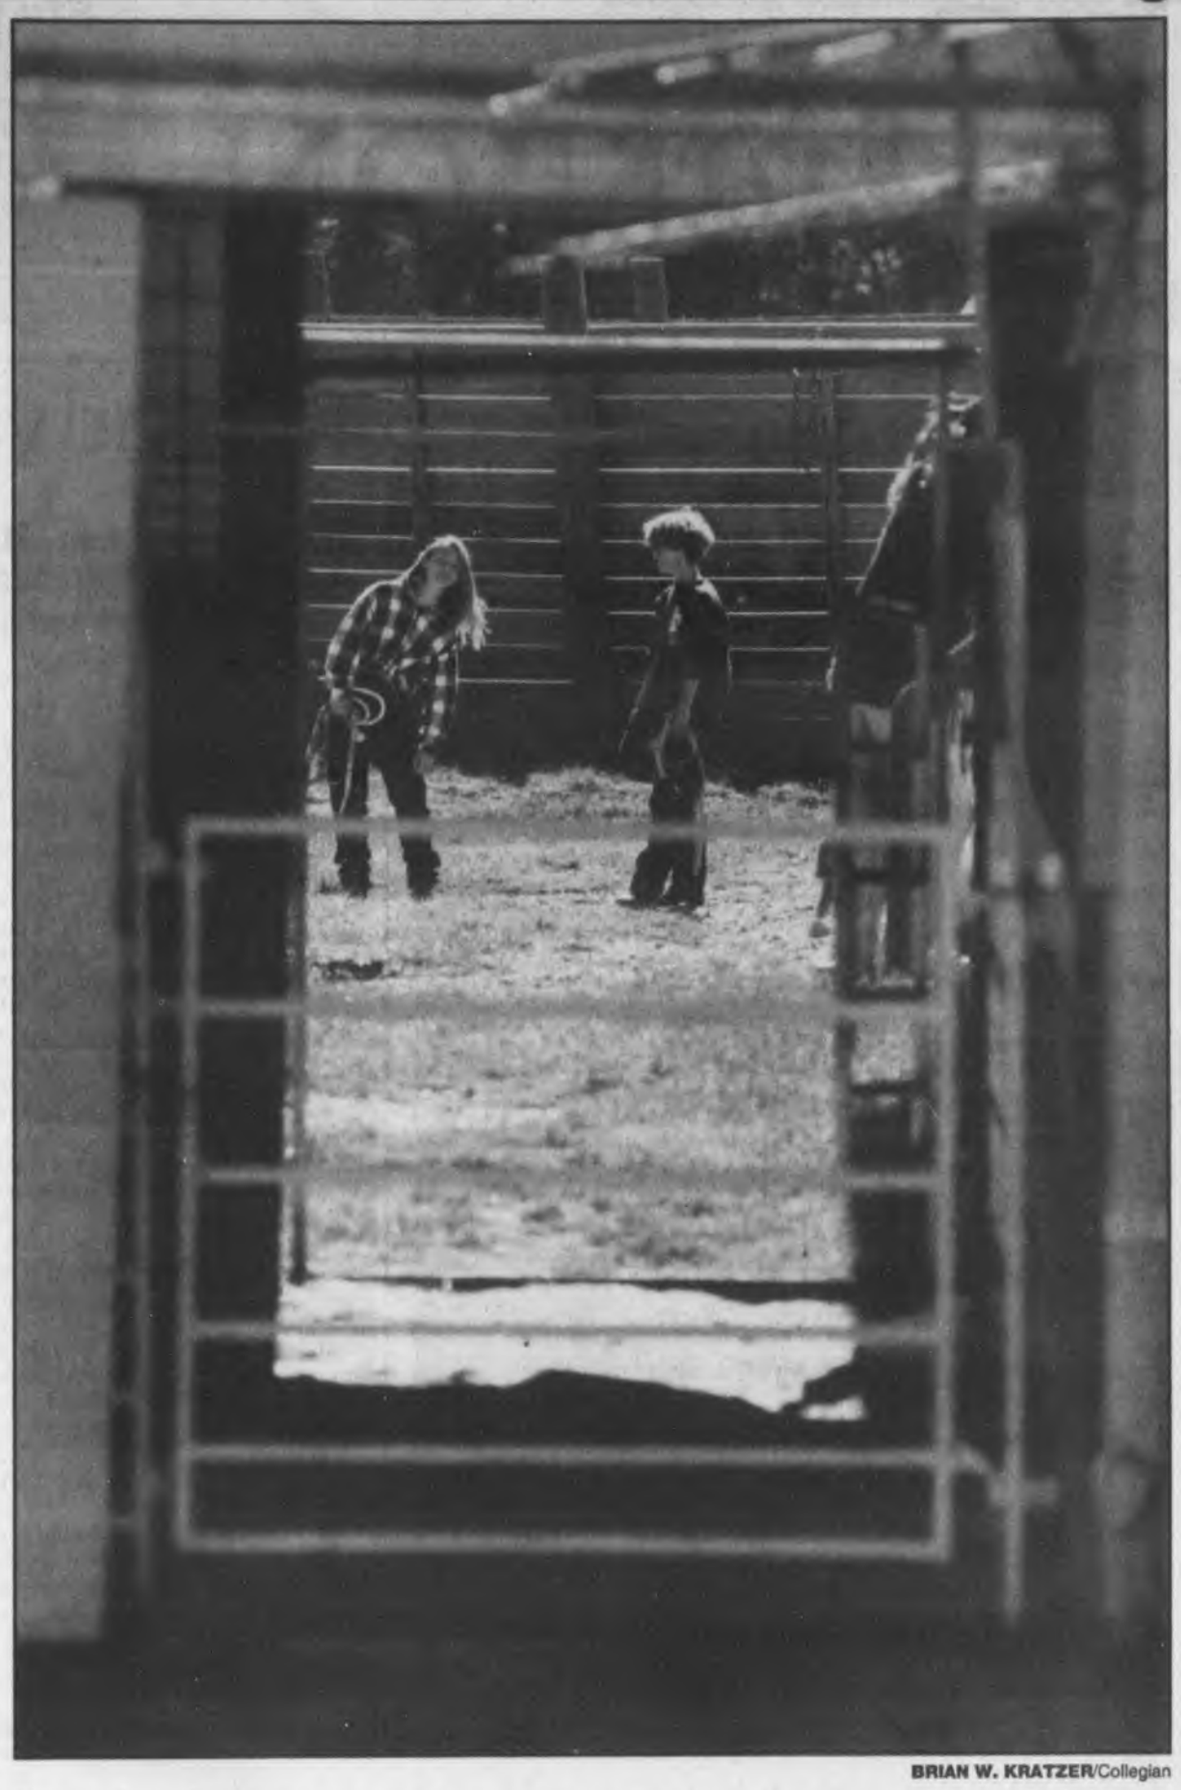
"I try to get them to recognize what the animal is telling them. If we can help students recognize what a horse is doing and when they are doing it, then they're off to a great start," Raub said.

The timing involved with interpreting these signals is crucial, Raub said.

"This class helps you to ride better by seeing what's going on in their mind," Keesecker said.

To get a horse to accept a saddle does not take very long, Raub said.

"You know some horses are ready when their head carriage becomes more relaxed, the muscles are relaxed, their body position is open to you, and they follow you around the arena. Depending on the horse, you can get a saddle on their back usually in an afternoon," Raub said.



"When you get on a new horse, they are the most sensitive they're going to ever be. The challenge is to not lose that sensitivity," he said.

"Once you're sitting in the saddle, the horse picks up on every movement. Each of your movements needs to have a meaning. If that meaning is unclear, then the horse won't react," Raub said.

"You see people who sit on a horse who will be tugging or kicking the horse to get it to go a certain way. The horse feels it the first time. The meaning is simply unclear."

There is a fundamental principle in training a horse, Raub said.

"The secret is to get more and more with less and less. With very little body movement, they do more and more," he said.

Sexual harassment hurts in many ways

The "Old Boys' Network" in Washington is alive and well and covering its backside again.

But now this network is using taxpayers' money to try to quiet the commotion surrounding its latest miscue.

On Monday, the Senate awarded a sizable settlement to two Senate restaurant employees. Their claims of sexual harassment against a male supervisor were disregarded by the management.

One woman had been repeatedly tormented with verbal and physical abuse since 1989. The other woman was groped, stuffed in a trash can, and had her dress ripped open by her superior in front of co-workers.

Their claims were repeatedly dismissed by their bosses. The women were labeled as troublemakers and told that they were too sensitive and should adjust to the individual's conduct.

The settlement will not be revealed under the terms of the agreement. It is compensation for the formal complaints filed in June 1992 as an act of desperation by the two women.

Worse than this, though, is that under new laws it will be the taxpayers who foot the bill for the settlement.

Sexual harassment does not belong in the workplace. The ease with which these charges were downplayed is an ominous sign that the acceptance of discrimination is still all too present in the workplace.

Perhaps this will be a wake-up call to Capitol Hill. It's past time for sexual harassment simply to be not tolerated; it's time for it to be sought out and eliminated.

In future cases, restitution should be paid by the guilty party, not the American taxpayer. This appalling episode is just one example of why we all suffer from discrimination.

Take advantage of college right now

In the long run, it may be a good idea to stick around awhile

I felt like I wanted to be sick.

My palms were sweaty, my heart was pounding, and my stomach, the one who had wanted that cream cheese-and-sprouts sandwich in the first place, was cursing at me. I was terrified.

"Mom," I said, quietly. "I am not graduating this year after all." I guess I was expecting her to turn into something from the "Exorcist," green bile and scratchy voice and all. I mean, I was telling her that I was not graduating. Again. After five years and umpteenth thousands of dollars, the big event she has been waiting for was not going to happen.

After five years of hearing me bitch and moan about schedules, financial aid and housing, she was going to be denied the opportunity to watch me in my gown, with Will Work For Food written on the top of my graduation cap. I'd prance down the aisle, mooning Jon Wefald and hugging the neck of every Arts and Sciences faculty member from aerospace to women's studies.

Was she nuts?

"You're not mad? Not even a little?"

My mother laughed. "Should I be?"

I was incredulous. Where were the recriminations? Where was the speech that, after five years, I should have figured out what I want to do with my life by now? I have heard them all before.

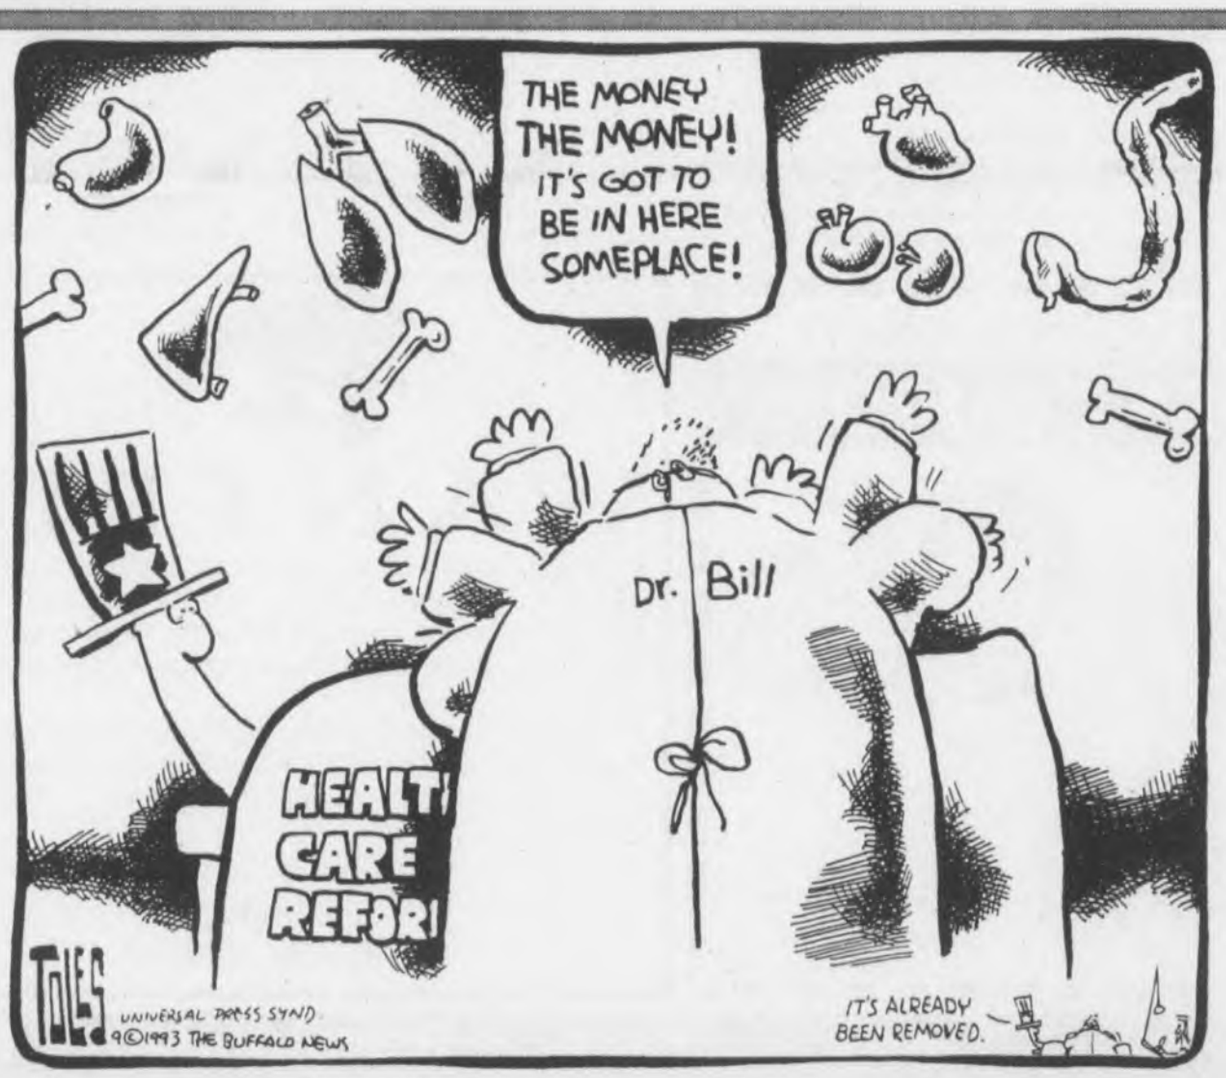
I have friends placing bets as to what decade in the new century I will get my B.A. — and in which of my 27 majors. I wouldn't be surprised if the Moore Hall housekeepers bronze a stall for me. And there is that little voice in the back of my own head that constantly reminds me every fall semester, as I gaze into the bright, somewhat empty, eyes of the new freshman class, that I have been in school almost as long as they have been alive. I get it from everywhere.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

But not from Mom. The darling.

"The reason I wanted you to go to college in the first place was to discover who you are. It's not just about finding a job, or getting the necessary skills to work someplace. It is about learning how to learn."

Mom would always push me to do what I haven't before. Into the unexplained territory. While friends have said, "Why would you want to take The History of Trees in America when it doesn't count for anything?" Mom has always said, "It'll count when you least expect it to." Whenever I doubted that I should even be here, or that I will ever graduate, Mom has always reminded me I could be washing dishes at McDonald's.



True, I will not be graduating this year. It'll be another year of sweating through financial aid and closed-class lists, the rising cost of tuition and the ridiculous cost of books. But I am not, nor have I ever been, idle. With every class I am gaining a little bit more knowledge and a lot more confidence in myself. I am making more friends and finding out what I am good at and what I am not.

And I think I am further ahead in the game, in the long run, than those people who come to this University knowing exactly what they want to do, and yet never even explore other options. I am not saying everyone should have a triple major. Just take a class you're interested in for the hell of it. If you are unsure, stick around. If you are sure, take Advanced Underwater Fire Fighting. You may change your mind.

My mom surprised me when she said she would support whatever decision I made. Not that all that fear I felt was a waste. It was practice. I still haven't told my dad.

I WOULD'T BE SURPRISED IF THE MOORE HALL HOUSE-KEEPERS BRONZE A STALL FOR ME.

▶ CRITIQUE

Next time, bring along a dictionary and look up 'farce,' 'comedy'

Editor,

Hats off to an excellent production of "I Hate Hamlet" by Manhattan Civic Theatre this weekend. Jeers to Brooke Patterson for writing an inaccurate critique of this hilarious comedy in Monday's Collegian.

Ms. Patterson began by describing the show as slapstick and melodramatic. These two elements are often found in comedy and are very appropriate in this production. She also mentions that "the plot line is borderline predictable, still offering a few surprises." A key comedic element in this play is the predictability of its plot, with a twist ending.

Her criticism of Fred Nelson's ability was unfounded. This play was a demonstration of the growth of the character Andrew Rally from a mediocre TV actor to an actor capable of portraying Hamlet. Mr. Nelson portrayed this transformation beautifully.

Ms. Patterson wrote that "costuming was gaudy" and "looked like an assimilation of second-hand clothes from Grandma's Trunk." Some of the props were provided by Grandma's Trunk, but all of the costumes were either new or handmade by the costume manager, Gina Cortez. This play is set in 1978, in New York City, which would explain why they may have appeared gaudy to Ms. Patterson.

In closing, Ms. Patterson observes the play is "simply entertaining, offering little beyond that." In the program, the director, Shel Edelman, writes, "'I Hate Hamlet' is part comedy and part farce," and that there are "no hidden meanings, no deep thoughts, just pure enjoyment."

▶ FOOTBALL

It isn't violence, it's just grace in action, a poem told on the field

Editor,

I sit here at this word processor trying to figure out just what the hell Tom Lister was trying to say in his column Monday.

I should point out I am a junior majoring in journalism. I've had some experience in the area of editorial writing, and although I can identify with Mr. Lister's attempt to illustrate the violence found in football, his article fails miserably in driving home his point. What he manages to do, though, is to infuriate football fans who not only love the sport, but the players who give their all every Saturday afternoon.

I have only one question to ask you, Mr. Lister. Where the hell do you get off passing judgment on something you have no knowledge of? If you had played organized football sometime in your life, then maybe, just maybe, you might have the right to critioize. But obviously, you haven't. It's the same as if I were to call Alice Cooper a no-talent-havin' waste of space. I've never really listened to the man, so I have no right to jump on him. (Although he had a great cameo in "Wayne's World.")

People watch football, like any other sport, because they want to witness an athlete's grace and talent. You left after the first half, so you didn't witness Andre Coleman's 67-yard reception that ended in a touchdown. It was almost poetic, the way he spun around that defensive player and galloped to the end-zone. And in the stands, a huge "Ooohh!" was uttered by the fans after they saw that amazing move. But you were too busy being scared off by Jeep Cherokees to notice this.

So in conclusion, Mr. Lister, if you're going to slam something, at least know what the hell it is you're slamming. Oh, and that reminds me, I've been to many of those "suburban redneck beer fests," and let me tell ya, those are some of the best times of my life. You don't know what you're missing. But seriously, if you don't like football, that doesn't make you un-American or anything; but offending the people who love the game is not the way to endear yourself to them.

And by the way, true fans always remember where they park.

▶ FRESHMAN FOLLIES

There are answers to some of the problems faced in first years

Editor,

Oh, the arrogance of a freshman engineer! How dare I say that? I can because I once was one. Mr. Hall was still pinching zits on his nose when I started here in the previous decade. I'm now happy to be out of the rat race of engineering. I have found a home in agriculture, back to my roots, so to speak.

Instead of maturity, Mr. Hall should be thinking of more important things such as love, responsibility and respect for those who have more experience than you.

NASA to display research in Union

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

A two-day symposium of the NASA Specialized Center of Research and Training in Gravitational Biology has been scheduled for Thursday and Friday.

Brian Spooner, professor of biology and director of the center, said the symposium is in the Union Big 8 Room. It will begin Thursday morning at 8:30 a.m. with breakfast and end at 5 p.m. On Friday, the symposium will begin at 8 a.m. and end at noon.

"On Thursday at 2 p.m., scientists will present 28 posters, with their data on it," Spooner said. "People wander through the booths, and the scientists tell their stories."

A banquet will take place on Thursday night in the Ramada Inn with Dr. Harry Holloway as guest speaker. Holloway is the associate administrator and head of the Office of Life and Microgravity Science Applications at the NASA headquarters in Washington, D.C.

Spooner said K-State is one of six universities to have a center. The others are Purdue University, the University of Rochester, the University of Texas, Southwest Medical Center, and the universities of California at Berkeley and at San Diego.

The center is funded for five years with $5 million by NASA.

"It was a great positive point that we have one of the centers because it was competitive to get it," Spooner said. "It was quite an achievement, and it reflects the quality of scientists we have at K-State. The presence of this center should be of great pride."

Research at the center involves attempting to ensure the health and well-being of humans in space and to provide the fundamental knowledge that will benefit mankind on Earth, he said.

"The research has to do with living organisms at the cell level and development of organism on Earth," Spooner said.

Researchers are trying to find out how gravity acts on organisms, he said.

"We all originated here on earth, and yet when man goes out into space, this cell development is gone," he said. "We need to know the fundamental difference."

When they know this difference, they will be able to improve aspects on Earth such as health and agriculture, Spooner said.

U.S. to deploy forces to restore Haiti order

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Six hundred U.S. military engineers, medical and civil-affairs specialists will begin moving to Haiti this week for a six-month deployment, U.S. officials say.

And if the mostly unarmed troops come under attack amid the Caribbean nation's political turmoil, they are supposed to be withdrawn.

The U.S. forces are going to Haiti as part of a U.N. plan approved last week. The goal is to help restore democracy to the island nation and help rebuild its infrastructure.

President Jean-Bertrand Aristide is to return from exile next month. He was ousted in a bloody coup in September 1991.

The first U.S. Navy vessel with about 250 linguists, medical specialists and military trainers will leave Thursday from Norfolk, Va., said one senior Pentagon official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Emphasizing the peaceful nature of the deployment, the official said it was a nation-building effort. Only one squadron of military police will be part of the U.S. deployment, the official said.

"It's supposed to be an inoculation, a shot in the arm" to help the Haitian people, one senior military officer said of the U.S. move. "We'll see if it takes."

The first Navy ship, loaded with construction equipment, will pick up dozens of Seabees from naval battalions in Puerto Rico and will reach Haiti Oct. 11, the official said.

A second vessel will follow with supply, communications and organization specialists.

The forces are expected to operate in and around Port-au-Prince. The deployment is to be for 179 days.

Wish for college becomes reality for KC student

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

Editors Note: This is the second of a five-part series featuring students' first impressions of K-State.

With the help of a scholarship program, a minority student from the Kansas City area, who otherwise would not have been able to attend college, is making his dream of a college education a reality.

John Martinez of Kansas City, Kan., is a freshman majoring in pre-medicine, and he is attending K-State through Project CHOICE.

The program was established by the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation in an attempt to prevent high-school dropouts. The late Ewing Kauffman was the owner of the Royals Baseball Club. According to the guidelines of this program, Martinez is able to attend K-State free, if he remains drug-free and alcohol-free.

Martinez said he feels somewhat accepted as a minority student by other students and faculty here at the University.

"Sometimes I do and sometimes I don't," Martinez said. "I actually thought more people wouldn't accept me because I am Hispanic. I try to talk to people and be friendly anyway.

"My teachers treat me the same," he said. "They aren't worried about what kind of students they have. They are worried about teaching."

Martinez' activities at the University include belonging to the Hispanic American Leadership Organization and playing soccer and intramural flag football.

He is also involved in establishing a Hispanic fraternity called Sigma Lambda Beta.

"We are not a chapter yet, but we are trying to get it started. That is what we want to do this year," he said.

Martinez said he has mixed feelings about the proposed multi-cultural overlay. With this policy, students will be required to take a two- or three-hour course that focuses on issues concerning cultural similarities and differences.

"I don't think it should be required. People shouldn't be forced to take it," Martinez said. "If it is just offered to students and not required, it will be good because people will get a better understanding of other cultures."

A typical day for Martinez is full of classes, studying, and sports.

"I go to class in the morning and do my homework in between. In the afternoons, I play soccer and go to my meetings and activities," he said.

Martinez said he has found little trouble adjusting to K-State and college life.

"I knew it was going to be a predominately white campus, but I didn't care. I was going to go to KU, but when I visited (K-State), I really liked the campus," he said.

Cats not concerned about drop in rankings

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Disrespect and a weak non-conference schedule.

K-State football players said these two items are what caused the 4-0 Wildcats to drop in the Associated Press poll this week from 29th place with 17 points, to a tie at 34th with just seven votes.

Center Quentin Neujahr said he isn't concerned about the polls until the season progresses.

"The polls don't mean anything," Neujahr said.

"I think we ought to be 103 or 104 (in the nation). The winning column is what is important to us. It's not what you do halfway through the season. Last year, we started 3-0 and finished the season with a empty tank.

"I'd rather we not be in the polls right now," he said. "I'd rather win a couple of Big Eight games before we start talking about polls."

Neujahr said the best way to get into the rankings is to keep on winning.

"The only thing I know is that if we go 11-0, we'll be in the polls. I don't know what it will take to be in the polls," he said.

Wide receiver Andre Coleman said he didn't notice the weekly rankings.

"When I walked around campus, it's exciting to our fans when they hear about it, but I'm not paying attention to them," he said. "I hear we dropped, but that means we aren't getting the respect we deserve, and the only way we can get there is to keep on winning.

"I don't know what it will take. If we keep on winning, they will have to put us in," Coleman said.

Coach Bill Snyder said the drop in the AP poll is not what the team should focus on during the off-week.

"I don't want to make an issue of it," he said. "It's the least important thing to overcome. We haven't played four quarters and haven't played against any Big Eight teams," Snyder said.

After Saturday's victory against the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, quarterback Chad May said the team was one victory away from breaking into the Top 25. Yesterday, he said he wasn't going to be concerned where the team is placed.

"Since we fell from 29th to 34th, I'm really not going to worry about it," May said. "We've just got to keep on winning. I think that will take care of itself.

"I think we've been playing pretty well, but we haven't been playing up to our standards," he said. "We have to get better this week and play well for the rest of the year."

Cornerback Thomas Randolph said the team can't control where it was placed in the polls, although the Cats' 36-20 second-half comeback might have been a factor.

"It could have been thought that we should have blown them out," Randolph said. "I think the writers thought we had great athletes and should have blown them out.

"We're one of the undefeated teams in the nation, but we haven't played the teams they think we ought to play," Randolph said. "If we have a great game against KU, maybe we'll get in."

Despite not gaining a slot in the AP Top 25, K-State does rank in the first 25 teams in the country in six of 12 statistical categories. The Cats are also ranked 27th in total defense and 30th in scoring defense.

K-State gained six votes in the CNN/USA TODAY Coaches poll after getting a single vote the prior week.

Fights setting bad examples

TROY COVERDALE

It's time again for another one of my patented "Quick Quizzes." No pencils are needed — the answer will be extremely obvious.

Today's question: What do the the Miami Hurricanes, Colorado Buffaloes, half of the Atlantic Coast Conference, "Sir" Charles Barkley and Barney, the Overblown Dinosaur, all have in common?

The Answer: All were involved in fights this weekend that you could see over and over on television.

And the only one that was worth anything was Barkley vs. Barney — as long as your 5-year-old cousin wasn't watching "Saturday Night Live" with you.

Unfortunately, that 5-year-old could have seen any of the others during the afternoon, again in prime time, on the 10 o'clock news and again Sunday morning on the sports highlight shows.

You might want to get that kid to a psychologist, and don't watch college football with him again.

Now, no one can go back and change the fact that these fights happened over the weekend — though Bill McCartney might send his players to confession instead of making them run laps.

And there are plenty of excuses being tossed around as to why these fights happened. Dennis Erickson blames the Colorado media for blowing the Hurricanes' "Bad Boy" image out of proportion. North Carolina and North Carolina State folks claim their fight grew out of their usual intense, in-state rivalry.

But despite all of the rhetoric and excuses, the fact remains that these fights occurred out of pure stupidity.

What reason is there for college football players to yell at each other during pre-game warmups? To scare them? Sure, like some 5-foot-6 wide receiver is going to frighten a 6-foot-5 defensive end into going easy on him during the game.

Not that the average fan is innocent in this equation, either. More and more, the fights that end up on the highlight shows instead of the game highlights get conversation going at the corner coffee shop. I'll admit I took great glee in Nolan Ryan punching Robin Ventura, and it was the talk of the office for days.

But it's sending the wrong kind of message to college kids participating in intercollegiate athletics. And what about the high-school kids playing sports as well?

After all, kids do get ideas from what they see on television. Case in point, a 15-year-old ran on the Yankee Stadium field last week after seeing another person do it on a TV highlight show.

Pro football, basketball, baseball and even hockey have taken steps to cut down on fighting. The NCAA has taken action, specifically in basketball.

Yet, every time it takes action, fans complain the new regulations will hurt the action on the field or court.

Does it ever? Nope. In fact, I personally think it improves the game. After all, the lure of watching sporting events and highlights on television is the game action, not the fights.

So here's my idea — let's have the NCAA and pro athletic organizations ask the networks and sportscasters to stop showing fight footage. They don't show it, it doesn't get seen, it's not talked about, and the incidents will die down.

And your 5-year-old cousin won't need therapy, unless you start watching your Sylvester Stallone movie collection when he's around.

VOLLEYBALL

Netters to take on No. 3 Nebraska

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Nov. 23, 1974.

That date doesn't stand out in too many K-State fans' minds, but it was the last time the Wildcat volleyball team won a match against the University of Nebraska.

Since that match, K-State has gone 0-47 against the defending Big Eight champions. In fact, the last time the Cats won a game against the Huskers was in 1987.

The Cats will get a chance to break that losing string tonight when they travel to Lincoln, Neb., to play the Huskers on their home court.

Coach Patti Hagemeyer said after a week's rest, K-State should be ready to compete.

"I think that our team is focused and ready to bounce back after the loss at Colorado," Hagemeyer said.

The Huskers are 11-1 this season and are ranked third in the nation. Huskers coach Terry Pettit will also be going for his 550th career victory tonight.

"Nebraska is really good. They lost some intensity when they got beat by Notre Dame," Hagemeyer said. "They have a lot of good players. Alice Weston and Nikki Stricker are great players."

Weston has been named to four all-tournament teams this year, including being named most valuable player of the FirsTier Invitational. She also leads the Huskers in hitting (.410) and kills per game (4.4). She has had a string of five consecutive matches with 10 or more kills, including a Nebraska record of 35 kills against Georgia.

Stricker is an all-America candidate and is second on the Cornhuskers' all-time assist list with a career total of 2,936.

K-State seniors Stephanie Liester and Angie McKee are both surpassing personal highs this season.

Liester has already passed or tied six single-match highs this season, including a 30-kill performance against Drake. McKee has also tied or broken three personal highs, including a .690 hitting percentage against Wright State.

"We're the type of team that doesn't have a key player," Hagemeyer said. "This team requires all 12 players. I'm so happy with Stephanie's statistics, and I think that Angie is playing the best that she has ever played."

The Huskers have an added advantage most volleyball teams don't have. They lead the nation in attendance, and for 63 consecutive matches the Huskers have had at least 1,000 fans in attendance.

"The crowd at Nebraska is a very knowledgeable crowd," Hagemeyer said.

"I have fun playing up there. They are a good group of people, and the fans are very appreciative. They will applaud when they see a good play, no matter who does it."

The Cats will travel to Kansas City, Mo., to play against the University of Missouri-Kansas City on Friday, Oct. 1.

K-State defeated the Kangaroos earlier this season in the Wildcat Invitational. The victory marked the 17th straight time the Cats have defeated UMKC.

"It was a heck of a match," Hagemeyer said. "They like to play against us for some reason and are very emotional. We will be playing in a small gym, and in their place they think that they can win."

"She matched up really good against their front row," Hagemeyer said.

"Angie created something that they couldn't stop. I expect their coach to change the line-up, but Angie has more tricks up her sleeve."

NETTER FACTS

K-State has yet to win a match against Nebraska, dating back to 1974. The last time they won a game against Nebraska was November of 1987.

Seniors Stephanie Liester and Angie McKee have already set nine single-match personal bests this season.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Phillies clinch NL East

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies waited 10 years to win the National League East. They are not the sort to wait another night.

Len Dykstra got them going with four hits and three RBI and Mariano Duncan finished it off with a dramatic grand slam in the seventh inning as the Phillies clinched with a 10-7 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Philadelphia completed a remarkable worst-to-first turnaround — a year ago, they were in sixth place, 26 1/2 games behind the division champion Pirates — by clinching 10 years to the day since they last won the East in 1983.

The Phillies could have waited for second-place Montreal to lose again to wrap up their sixth NL East title since division play began in 1969, but that wouldn't have been the way for these rough-and-tumble Phils.

The Phillies will play either Atlanta or San Francisco when the NL playoffs start on Oct. 6 at Veterans Stadium.

Rookie starting pitcher Mike Williams couldn't hold a 3-1 lead as the Pirates went ahead 4-3 in the sixth, but it didn't matter. Nothing as insignificant as a one-run deficit was going to keep the Phillies from winning this one.

Kevin Stocker tied it with a single, and Dykstra gave the Phillies the lead a by walking on four pitches against Denny Neagle, the fifth of the Pirates' six pitchers.

▶CATS' RUGAN SELECTED RUNNER-OF-THE-MONTH

K-State junior Jeanene Rugan was selected Tuesday as the Big Eight Conference Female Cross Country Runner-of-the-Month for September.

Rugan, a native of Ellinwood, placed second in the university division of the Woody Greeno/Nebraska Invitational Cross Country meet on Tuesday. She covered the 5,000-meter course in 18:12.3.

Her performance led the Cats to a runner-up finish in the meet. Rugan's second-place finish also marked the third time in her career that she has paced the team in competition.

The women's cross country team will be in action again Saturday, traveling to Stillwater, Okla., for the 56th annual Cowboy Jamboree.

▶KUREGIAN CAPTURES WIN IN OPENING MATCH

Jacksonville, Miss. — K-State tennis player Karina Kuregian won her first match in the qualifying draw of the Skytel National Clay Court Championships Tuesday in Jacksonville, Miss.

Kuregian defeated Iris Kraft from Georgia Southern 6-3, 6-2 and advances to face Branaca Elsberry, the No. 5 seed, from Northwestern. The match will be played today at 9 a.m.

The top four qualifiers advance to the main draw of the clay court championships, which will take place on Thursday.

Kuregian is a native of Armenia, a former Republic of the Soviet Union, who transfered to K-State this year.

Also competing for the Wildcats was Masha Meidell, who dropped her match 7-6 (11-9), 2-6, 7-5 to Caroline Hora from Miami.

Deadly AIDS virus helps strengthen family bonds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EMPORIA — Carol Crofoot and her husband were in the hospital room, waiting for what they knew was near.

In 16 hours her husband would die from AIDS. He had contracted HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, from a blood transfusion. Before he died, Carol had something to tell him.

"I told him I tested positive 16 hours before he died,'' she said. ''We didn't keep any secrets. He was just devastated."

It was November 1987. She was 38 years old and had a 10-year-old son and an 8-year-old daughter living with her. She also had HIV.

The disease at that time associated mostly with homosexuals and drug users had entered the white, upper-middle class, heterosexual life of an Emporia resident.

Almost six years later, Crofoot is still alive. More importantly, she and her family are still living life.

"What I regret is that this has overwhelmed my life in everybody else's eyes," she said. "It hasn't overwhelmed mine. I get lost under this umbrella of AIDS."

Finding a guide on how to raise a family while HIV is destroying one's immune system is almost impossible. Advice was hard to come by. One of the most respected books about dealing with AIDS devoted eight pages to women and AIDS.

"The doctors told me to go home and live my life," she said.

Living included care of the two children out of three who still lived at home. Those two children probably saved her life, Crofoot said.

"If it hadn't been for the kids, I might have committed suicide," she said. "It was too much to handle. I felt so alone."

But there were children to wake up for school, dishes to wash, laundry to do. It may not have always gone smoothly, but family life went on.

Soon after the diagnosis, Crofoot sat down with her children and talked about who would take care of them when she died.

"Sometimes I think I made a mistake doing that, but their (lives have) been more affected than anybody's," she said.

Her son Courtney, now 16, went to Charter Hospital in Wichita for outpatient treatment of cocaine abuse last year, which Crofoot blames partly on the burden AIDS had put on her family.

"I feel my kids, especially Courtney, got robbed of their childhood," she said. "Watching him get control and get his priorities straight has been wonderful."

Fear also crept into the family. When Crofoot was ill and in bed, both Courtney and Desiree, now 13, feared the worst.

"When Mom was in bed for three weeks, the kids would panic no matter how much I'd tell them that I'd be fine," Crofoot said.

But through all the struggles have come positives — things that make her proud of her children. She's proud of the strength they've shown despite the challenges that have faced them for six years.

"There's no book on how to handle this and do it right," Crofoot said. "I did the best I could with what I had at the time."

Crofoot is proud Courtney and Desiree are typical teens. Courtney and his friends from high school often use the home as a gathering place after school and a launching pad for a day's activities. He and Desiree's separate phone line gets many more calls than their mother's.

But the Crofoots are different in one way. They communicate better than most families. While all three say they've always been open with each other, the disease has encouraged even more openness on some issues, such as sex.

The first years after the diagnosis were rough. For two years, she waited for the bomb to drop, drinking too much, waiting for it to end.

"I checked out. I couldn't cope. I wasn't mentally there," she said.

She went through a state of paranoia when she saw people in public, somewhat stigmatized by the dirty disease.

If I went to the grocery store, I thought people were staring at me, she said.

She also had a stage of trying to pack an entire lifetime of experiences and purchases into a tiny window of time, putting things in fast forward to beat the disease before it beat her.

"You go through that period, but you just spend so much money," Crofoot said.

Slowly, she brought life back into better balance. Her children watched her fall apart and come back together.

She told more people about what had happened to her.

At first, the only people who knew were her doctor, her lawyer and some close friends. Her children found out six months later. Carol remembers telling her parents.

Her family hasn't ostracized her, but she lost some friends after she told them what had happened.

"If you ever want to find out who your friends are, get AIDS," she said. "It's funny because it's people you would never expect — the ones that went away. I think I came to realize that being a friend of mine is a big commitment.

"I've found friends. It's come from places I'd never expected."

As she started telling others, her children started telling their friends.

That encouraged Crofoot to start speaking to others about AIDS. She's talked at two conferences on AIDS issues since last year. Courtney joined her at one.

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?

If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.

There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.

Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.

All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

Football film fails to reach goal line

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Even with an interesting premise and a constant "get psyched" attitude, David S. Ward's "The Program" fumbles and never regains momentum.

"The Program" is about a fictitious university football team and the problems its participants encounter throughout the year.

James Caan plays the coach. The university's administration and alumni contributors firmly remind him if the team does not reach a bowl game this year, the university will be looking for a new coach.

As a result, the coach must make some unethical decisions to keep the program from failing.

In "The Program," part of the plot revolves around the academic performance of the players. Most of the players do not believe the education they are receiving is of any importance.

To these guys, the only reason they need to know how to read and write is so they can sign an NFL contract.

The coach echoes this attitude.

"When was the last time 80,000 people showed up to see a kid do a damn chemistry experiment?" he says.

If each player in the film can memorize an extensive playbook, and learn about the teams they play, then why do they have a hard time succeeding academically? Why is it not possible for these football players to "Win one for the Gipper" and achieve academic excellence?

The audience is also led to believe that even the university turns a blind eye when it comes to the educational integrity of each player.

Unfortunately, "The Program" resorts to using typical football stereotypes and leaves the audience seeking resolutions. Director David S. Ward should have gotten some pointers from the formulas used in the successful collegiate sports films "Hoosiers" and "One on One."

Overall, "The Program" has great action shots and some funny lines. However, the film would have been better off going with a "Hail Mary" play.

Movie kicks off political week

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Tuesday night's showing of "The Distinguished Gentleman" was the first event in a political awareness week, sponsored by the KSU Young Democrats.

In the film, Eddie Murphy portrays Thomas Jefferson Thompson, a con artist elected to Congress because his name is similiar to a recently deceased member of Congress in the same district.

"It was funny, but for being as hilarious as it is, it has real comments on how I think Washington is run," Elizabeth VanGoethem, sophomore in industrial engineering, said.

Carrie Bonebrake, sophomore in elementary education, said she felt the money scams were accurately portrayed, but did have some doubts.

"I don't think he'd make it (to Congress) in the first place," she said.

At one point in the movie, Murphy is asked if he's starting to develop a conscience. Murphy replies by saying he hopes not, because a conscience would be a nuisance in Congress.

"We wanted to see the movie because we've never seen it," Bonebrake said. "There was also a fire drill at West Hall and we had no place to go, so we decided to go to the movie."

Alice Hall, senior in psychology, came for a break.

"Well, we had a big test today and it was a big stress reliever," she said.

Richard Baier, president of the Young Democrats, was pleased with the turn out of approximately 30 people.

"It (the turn out) was good. I

Family members to be honored in contest

RACHEL HART
Collegian

Applications for the "Honorary Family" essay contest are due Friday by 5 p.m. to the Student Governing Association office or the Alumni Association.

The essay contest is part of the Family Weekend festivities October 22-24.

K-State's Alumni Association has changed the traditional Parents' Weekend to Family Weekend.

"We wanted to include the non-traditional students in the weekend's activities," Becky Klingler, Family Weekend committee chair, said.

The essay contest is designed to allow students to honor a influential or supportive family member, Klingler said.

Entries should be 500-1,000 words.

The essay should describe the relationship with the relative, their involvement in the community, and how the nominee encouraged the student's education at K-State.

Individuals honored in the winning entry will receive two nights of hotel accommodations and free tickets to the Colorado vs. K-State football game.

Chimes Junior Honorary will honor the family with a dinner before Saturday's game, and the family will be recognized with the presentation of a plaque during the game's half-time.

Illicit 'do triumphs at pageant

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — The beauty was hers, but the hair beneath the crown of Miss America Kimberly Aiken was coiffed by other hands.

Miss Aiken admitted Monday that she hired a stylist to do her hair for the Sept. 18 pageant, despite new rules intended to make contestants do their own hair and makeup.

But she said she didn't violate the letter of the policy, which only banned hairdressers from going backstage, or its spirit, because of her natural look: a bun.

And the pageant president, Leonard Horn, did not take issue with what she did.

"I know that the pageant was saying they wanted a fresher look," Aiken said. "Now, if that hairdresser had made my hair big and poofy and something I did not want ... ."

Anyway, she said, "I don't think my hair is what made me win Miss America."

The new rule, announced in July, was part of a pageant effort to make contestants "relevant role models" and to eliminate the "Stepford Wives" uniformity of the contestants.

Aiken said about half the contestants had hairdressers come to their hotel rooms and do their hair. Aiken's professional hairdo came to light when the stylist, Jim Leone, came forward.

Horn, who was in London, said through a spokeswoman that he believed banning hairdressers from the pageant curtailed their effectiveness. He said contestants had to arrive 12 hours before the pageant and remain there throughout the day.

"We felt if they — a state pageant or a contestant — wanted to go through the expense of bringing a hairdresser with them, it was inappropriate for us to ban them from the rooms," Horn said.

Reader wants more beer, sex, and flatulence

Dear Cassandra,

Where have you gone? What has happened to that quick-witted, funky gal we all knew and loved? Why does every column have to do with homosexuals? There are plenty of other subjects.

Don't tell me the P.C. crowd has zapped your will and carefree attitude and has you scared. (Hint: They are all a bunch of windbags who don't practice what they preach.) So c'mon — lighten up.

Surely you receive plenty of letters from dysfunctional people. Where are the letters about weird sex hang-ups, people who dress their pets in women's underwear, toilet-paper fiends and other social degenerates?

Recapture the audience that loves you and your column. Get back to what college students care about: beer, sex, flatulence, the turmoils of dating, beer and roommates with disgusting habits like body odor, nose-picking in public and back hair (on females).

Please come home, Cassandra! Please!

If I wanted to be depressed, I'd read the comics in the Collegian. Hey! There is your first column: Now those guys need a sense of humor.

Signed,
Concerned Citizens

Dear Friends,

Thanks for the great letter. Things have been pretty dark around here lately. I've noticed the gloom too.

Unfortunately, I haven't been getting those groovy nose-picking or excessive body-hair letters this semester. And those are my favorite kind! I've only gotten serious letters, save a few.

Where are my fellow degenerates and other social misfits? Write me with your disgusting habits. Tell me of your favorite dead pets. Ask me about the correlation between sex and the salad shooter. Write me, and I won't fail you again.

Greek myths still alive in cinema

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

"It is not necessary to understand. It is necessary only to believe," Death says, summing up Jean Cocteau's film "Orpheus."

The film's lyrical dialogue and captivating, sometimes dreamlike, cinematography make the film interesting, if somewhat abstract.

The title is an allusion to the Greek myth of Orpheus and Eurydice. Orpheus was a great musician and the son of Apollo. His beautiful wife, Eurydice, was bitten by a snake and killed. Orpheus, stricken with grief, journeyed to the Underworld and sang for Hades.

The god was so moved that he permitted Orpheus to take Eurydice, on the condition that he not look at her until they left the nether region.

They were almost out of the Underworld, but Orpheus momentarily forgot, looked back, and Eurydice was lost.

Cocteau's film retells the legend in a modern setting. Orpheus is a famous poet who is unhappy because he feels he is too popular and a sell-out. He has many admirers but no friends because of his melancholy air. However, he has a devoted wife, Eurydice, to whom he is faithful.

Orpheus is grousing to a fellow poet in the Café des Poetes when a young, up-and-coming and quite drunk poet, Cegeste, is run down in front of the café.

His companion, a mysterious princess, commands Orpheus to help her with the body.

As they drive away in her Rolls-Royce, Orpheus thinks he is dreaming. The car radio plays a cryptic message, and the seductive princess reanimates Cegeste and leads him through a mirror in her decomposing villa.

We learn that the princess is actually Death, specifically, Orpheus' Death. She has fallen in love with him because he woos death in his poetry. She forms a plan to entice him and bring him to the Underworld.

The film is an interesting twist on the myth, because Orpheus neglects his wife to listen to the car radio for gleanings of poetic inspiration. Little does he realize these are verses Death has commanded Cegeste (which sounds vaguely like "suggest") to broadcast on the supernatural frequency to enthrall Orpheus with.

Both the use of symbolism and the fascinating glimpse of Cocteau's version of the Underworld make this film stimulating and memorable. Heurtebise, Death's chauffeur, is an enigmatic, yet appealing, character.

"Orpheus" is both a minimalist fantasy and a somewhat complex love story. Perhaps, as Death says, it is a mistake to try too hard to understand.

High-tech art makes debut

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

The K-State Union Art Gallery has had some unusual exhibits in the past, but nothing quite like "Intimate Technology."

The exhibit, on display until Oct. 8, features artwork created with computers.

Bob Hower, associate professor of art, brought the exhibit here.

"We're trying to provide exposure of students to work that may be different from what they normally see at the gallery," Hower said.

Harry Anderson, graduate student in sculpture and coordinator of fine arts activities, was also involved.

"Being in sculpture, I work much more with three-dimensional things," Anderson said. "This is a chance to learn about computer imagery, its presence and focus in fine art, the possibilities of what it can do and how it can present itself as a medium in the art world."

The exhibit consists of several computer-generated wall hangings, two videos featuring computer-generated effects and two computers with which visitors may interact with the artwork.

One of the interactive works, by artist Edward Pope, is titled "Memory" and involves a computer screen with a pillow framed around it. In front of the screen is a control pad with a roller ball and a button on it.

Visitors can move the tiny cursor around the computer screen while various colored lines bounce across a black background. When the button is pressed, a sound is made, and an image appears wherever the cursor is pointing.

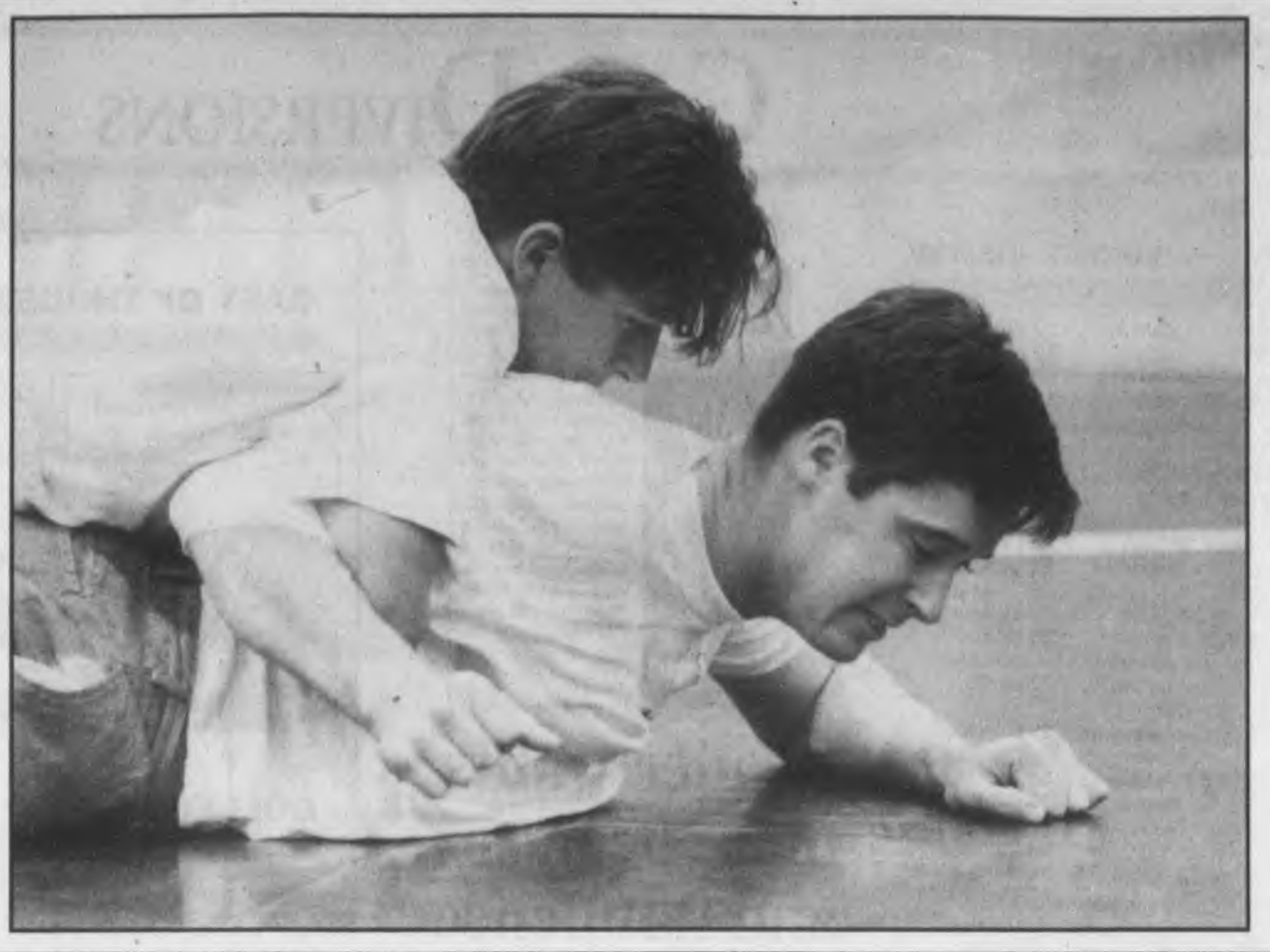
The other interactive work is entitled "Muto(Scape)" and is by Christopher Burnett of the Kansas City Art Institute, who will demonstrate the work at 11 a.m. Friday at the Union Gallery.

The work is a sort of salute to popular animation, featuring images ranging from Mickey Mouse to Felix the Cat. It involves a series of computer-generated wall hangings and images on the computer itself.

Seven artists are represented in the display.

Hower said the purpose of the exhibit is to get people to see technology in a new way.

"'Intimate Technology' means that we want people to see cool technology in a warm way," he said. "Computers are usually seen as cold machines, but the artist brings a lot to that and makes it a personal statement."



Hower said that computer artists work in the same way other artists do, but with a different medium.

"They're both trying to solve a visual problem," he said.

Hower said next year he is hoping to bring a sculptural-robotics exhibit to the Union.

ART EXHIBIT

- Artwork created with computers will be on display at the K-State Union Art Gallery until Oct. 8.
- Included in the exhibit are videos and computers that allow visitors interact with the art.

Band dedicates new album to the blues

ALLGOOD pays tribute to late Stevie Ray Vaughn

MATT BECHTOLD
Collegian

ALLGOOD, a rock and blues band, just released its debut album with A&M Records, "Uncommon Goal," after being together and touring for about four years. They have had one other previous independent recording, titled "Ride the Bee."

ALLGOOD's style is a nice blend of rock, blues, and soul. It's reflective of the band's biggest influence, the late Stevie Ray Vaughan. In fact, if you couldn't tell by the music that he was a big influence, the dedication of "Uncommon Goal" to his memory makes it obvious.

"We dedicated the record to Stevie because in between 'Ride the Bee' and 'Uncommon Goal' he was killed, and besides all of us really diggin' his music, he was also someone who we all respected as a person," said bassist Mike Sain. "It was just something that we thought we could give to someone that we all admired."

Sain also mentioned other influences.

"Well, like the other day in the van, we listened to some country music radio, Primus, and some Black Sabbath. We're a lot more open-minded," he said. "We love rhythm and blues. We love soul music. More than anything, soul is probably Corky's (Jones) biggest vocal influence, but the same can be said of Stevie Ray."

This similarity in vocal styles is haunting at times throughout the album.

"Their voices can sound similar at times, especially on that first single, 'It's Alright,' but what's funny is that when we put out the independent record called 'Ride the Bee', which is stuff we still play live, no one even thought of comparing us to Stevie Ray Vaughan. It never came up anywhere," Sain said.

The music has a lot of the same style as well, yet on many of the tracks, such as "Ease On My Way", there is also a delicate balance between classic blues riffs and a sense of a hard rock influence, giving it a bit more energy and spunk, which can only be described as modernization of the style.

There is also some good song writing that shows thought and emotion was put into the music, rather than simple imitation. However, the album could have used more of its own flavor. The band used classic blues riffs to get the desired base sound, but there could have been a bit more of that unique flavor that would have made this album exceptional.

The balance of tempo was also well arranged on the album, with mellowed-out songs like "With You" and "Down Here Where I Live"; and rockin' tunes like "Them Changes," "It's Alright," and "Nickel and Dime." The balance was near perfect, with slow-tempo songs to reflect other sides of the band, and enough rock 'n' roll throughout the rest of the album to hold your interest.

ALLGOOD has a bright future in store , and this is a great example of good blues and rock living harmoniously together. Even though this album doesn't offer much when it comes down to unique style, it is still worth checking out simply for the quality of the music.

Health plan debated

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton met a barrage of questions from doubting lawmakers Tuesday as she opened Congress' hearings on the administration's health care plan. Standing her ground, she told them, "Americans can no longer wait for health care reform."

Hillary, breaking ground as a first lady, led off as the key witness before the House Ways and Means Committee, telling lawmakers that details of the plan will be debated but action must follow. An overhaul of the $900 billion system will require sacrifice from all Americans, she said.

"The upcoming debate is not about any one set of citizens but all of us," Hillary said.

The task is urgent, she said — "As we sit here today, literally hundreds and hundreds of Americans will lose their health care."

After the two-hour morning hearing, Hillary headed to the House Energy and Commerce Committee. There will be three more committee stops this week as the House and Senate get down to the task of dealing with President Clinton's package. No final action is expected until well into next year.

At the Energy and Commerce hearing, Rep. Cliff Stearns, R-Fla., noted that many Cabinet members show up to testify surrounded by aides who whisper responses to lawmakers' questions in their ears.

"You're making a winning statement by showing up all by yourself at that table," he said.

Small businesses will in the end be better off because they'll get the same breaks as large companies.

Bell keeps $54,000 in worker's comp

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The state legally could not force Fletcher Bell to return $54,862 in workers' compensation benefits he collected over 2 1/2 years, two state officials said Tuesday.

A settlement between Bell and the state Self-Insurance Fund now is final. He agreed to stop receiving benefits, a loss of $39,607 through 1996. The change represented a 42 percent decrease in a $94,469 award he received in February 1991 in connection with an earlier back injury.

George Gomez, director of the Division of Workers' Compensation, described the settlement as the best the state could receive, given the laws that applied to Bell's reopened case.

George Robertson, the administrative law judge who handled the case for the division, said the law limited the Self-Insurance Fund to asking for a decrease in future benefits.

The case sparked widespread public anger because of the award's size and because Bell hurt himself in January 1989 by lifting a briefcase from the trunk of his car. The Self-Insurance Fund had the case reopened in March after criticism from legislators.

"In an ideal world, I'd have to say he should be required to give it back," said House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita. "I think people want him to give it back."

Robertson and Gomez said the law precluded the Self-Insurance Fund from trying to force Bell to return benefits he had collected.

Gomez acknowledged the state's actions were limited because it had no evidence that Bell or anyone connected with the case committed fraud. Gomez said his division investigated the possibility of fraud.

And the state's hands were tied because of its actions after Bell first filed his claim, Gomez said.

In 1991, Administrative Law Judge James Ward had a hearing in the case, then allowed Bell to take a lump-sum payment of $23,024 and payments of $233 a week for 306 weeks. Ward removed himself from the reopened case.

"They could only look at the future and not anything that has been paid," Robertson said. "Certainly in that sense, the state came out ahead."

Robertson approved the settlement Sept. 17 after it was signed by Bell's attorney, Derek Shafer of Topeka, and the Self-Insurance Fund's attorney, Billy Newman. Both sides had another 10 days to appeal, and the settlement became official when that period expired on Tuesday.

Both Shafer and Newman declined comment, saying they want to wait until Gomez signs an order acknowledging the settlement's finality. Bell could not be reached by telephone at his Lawrence home.

Sawyer said ordinary Kansans are angry because Bell knew the workers' compensation system and used his knowledge for personal gain. Newspaper editorial writers have compared his actions to insider trading.

"If a person gets an orthopedic surgeon to write the report and makes the right legal arguments, it's a compensable claim," Gomez said. "It's very hard to make people understand that."

The Self-Insurance Fund's options also were limited because in 1991 agreed Bell had injured himself. It also accepted two doctors' assessments of his injury, which Ward used in making a decision.

"If a fact has been stipulated to as of two years ago, you don't alter that," Gomez said. "You don't have that option."

Robertson said the law is designed to prevent an injured worker from paying if, for example, a doctor mistakenly diagnoses an injury as more serious than it is.

As for fraud, Gomez said events surrounding Bell's case indicate strongly that none was involved.

For example, he said, Bell sought reimbursement for future medical expenses in addition to disability benefits. He also took his case to a hearing before an administrative law judge and did not seek a single, lump-sum payment up front. Both are not typical of fraudulent claims, he said.

Gomez also noted there was nothing "weird" about his Bell's examinations. For example, a person's claim would receive attention if he or she never had seen the doctor before or if a gynecologist examined a back injury, he said.

"We have nothing to indicate a grand conspiracy," he said.

Social Security offices face merger

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration is considering merging some of Social Security's 1,300 field offices to save tax dollars.

But lawmakers and advocates for the elderly are likely to oppose any plan that inconveniences frail and disabled Americans.

Word of the administration's desire to look at the agency's field offices surfaced in the notes of a Sept. 8-9 meeting of Social Security Administration managers and Acting Commissioner Lawrence Thompson.

According to the memo, obtained by the Associated Press, Health and Human Services Secretary Donna E. Shalala "favors consolidation; wants it handled locally; feels we can handle the politicians."

Although spokesmen for the Department of Health and Human Services say Shalala would never claim to be able to "handle" lawmakers, they say she would consider closing field offices.

"Anything we can do to improve service to the public, while saving taxpayer dollars, we will do and we will do it in consultation with members of Congress," said HHS spokesman Victor Zonana.

The meeting notes were written by a Social Security manager in attendance, but Zonana said they are not an official record of the meeting.

"The secretary would never have that kind of attitude toward members of Congress. And those were not her words," Zonana said.

Some 26 million Americans visited Social Security's field offices last year, according to an agency estimate prepared for the House Ways and Means Committee.

The offices handle applications for benefits and Social Security numbers, help recipients who have lost their checks or have questions about their benefits, and issue emergency checks.

Any changes to Social Security instantly become politically volatile in Washington, and the mere mention of closing field offices stirs opposition among lawmakers and advocates for the elderly.

Congressional staffers say they were taking word of possible closures seriously. Aides to two key Democratic lawmakers were reluctant to discuss the proposal on the record, but called it foolhardy and said it showed a lack of sensitivity to the elderly and disabled.

Advocates for the elderly say they are concerned about the impact of closing field offices on the frail and disabled.

Roberta Havel, executive director of the Save our Security Coalition, said closings could force the elderly and disabled to drive longer distances to be served.

She said she also worries whether there will be enough staff to help the mentally and physically impaired with their disability applications and if field offices will be located in safe neighborhoods accessible to public transportation.

And Evelyn Morton, a lobbyist for the American Association of Retired Persons, says AARP members already have problems being seen by their local Social Security offices.

"I don't know if there's a need to cut a lot of offices or any at all, as long as beneficiaries are still having access problems," Morton said. "There's a lot of frustration on their part."

Shirley Sears Chater, President Clinton's choice to run the Social Security Administration, is likely be questioned about the issue at her confirmation hearing Wednesday before the Senate Finance Committee.

Social Security touches the lives of nearly every American — the 134 million workers who pay into the system and the 42 million survivors, retirees and disabled workers who will collect $303 billion in benefits this year.

The Supplemental Security Income program will pay an additional $24 billion to 5 million people.

Although most checks are mailed each month without fail, the agency faces growing financial and administrative troubles, from rising backlogs of claims for disability benefits to frequent busy signals on its telephone lines.

The agency's work force was cut by 21 percent during the 1980s and the 1,300 field offices are still feeling the effects, according to a March report by the Democratic staff of the Ways and Means Committee.

The report found that field offices are increasingly required to turn away people who arrive without an appointment. They are also less able to help the disabled complete their applications for benefits, and in many areas, office appointment calendars are so booked that people who want to file a claim must wait as long as five weeks.

A chat with Jason

Jason Smargiasso is a great guy.

Thank goodness he doesn't play football for the Wildcats anymore.

And I thought I saw the last of him, until he was walking around campus last Thursday afternoon. He hasn't changed much. He still had a dark tan and was somewhat still in physical shape, although he had a jacket on to protect himself from the cool air and to prevent from revealing if he was out of shape.

Smargiasso would stop by the Collegian every once in a while because he was enrolled in an advanced writing class, for which students wrote stories for the newspaper.

He was glad to see me, for some odd reason, and immediately struck up a conversation. I thought he was glad because of what I wrote in the first issue of the Aug. 23 Collegian. I ripped Smargiasso for not telling the football program he was leaving.

I said he was basically a no-good son-of-a-gun for not giving Coach Bill Snyder the slightest hint he was walking away, for not showing up to press conferences and stinking up nearly every game last season.

I guess he had not heard about my column.

"Hey Jason, what's going on?" I said with enthusiasm. I was hoping he would talk about football. "Are you doing all right?"

"Not much," said Smargiasso, who seemed happy to see me. I got along with him outside of the football scene. "I've been doing all right."

"So, what have you been up to since you've left?" I asked. At the moment, I wished I had had a tape recorder, even though it was just small talk.

"I've been back East trying to find some work," said Smargiasso, who got a degree in business. "But I think I'll go to Vail (Colo.) and try to find a job."

BRIAN ANDERSON

"Yeah, that would be a good place to live," I said. "There are a lot of big spenders who go there."

"That's for certain," he said. "If a person is a penny-pincher, he better not go to Vail. There certainly is a lot of money changing hands out there."

Now, I should have gone in for the kill. Press him with the tough questions. Make him sweat underneath his jacket.

But, I didn't.

Like I said before, Jason is a good guy. I wasn't thinking of him as the SOB who quit on the K-State football team. I might have asked him those questions until he uttered these words:

"I miss K-State," he said. "I miss the atmosphere of college life."

OK, reader, do you miss Smargiasso? I didn't think so.

A thought came to my mind — maybe he and I could go out on the town. We would both get crazy. Heck, I would be turning 21 years young, and I knew I was going to celebrate.

"Are you doing anything later?" I said.

"Yeah, I'm going to be busy," Smargiasso said as he started walking away. "But I'll be coming back. I might be around this weekend."

"Maybe I'll run into you later," I said.

"OK, you take care, bud."

"Yeah, see ya around."

As a player before.

Michael Smith celebrates with his K-State teammates after scoring against Nebraska in the 1991 season at Lincoln, Neb. The Cornhuskers beat the Wildcats 38-31 in the game.

As a coach today.

Smith is an assistant graduate coach this year for the football team. After playing from 1988-91 for K-State, he spent last year with the Kansas City Chiefs.

A new career for Michael Smith

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Michael Smith has gone from shattering school records on Saturday afternoons to an assistant coaching position on the sidelines for the Wildcats this season.

The former K-State receiver broke seven K-State football records in receiving, and he is also the second all-time leading receiver in Big Eight history. Despite his accomplishments during four years at K-State, Smith played only one season in the National Football League with the Kansas City Chiefs.

"The NFL is a very up and down business," Smith said. "And that is what it exactly is, a business. I know that I am good enough to play, and I'm not bitter that the Chiefs released me."

Since Smith began assisting offensive coordinator Del Miller, the Cats' receivers have been making several big plays, such as receiver Andre Coleman's 67-yard touchdown reception last weekend against the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

"I would like to believe that my experience helps," Smith said. "I played the position, and I know that they are going to get heated by the coaches."

Smith said his job is to give suggestions to the current receivers.

"I am basically out there giving advice," he said. "Coach Bill Snyder has given me some say so, and I understand where the players are coming from. So far, we have come together pretty good."

Smith said he didn't plan to come back and be an assistant coach, but Snyder encouraged him to come out and help.

"I knew that I wanted to help, but I never thought that I would," Smith said. "Coach Snyder said I was welcome to the staff, and that I would really help."

"It's a lot harder than I thought it would be," he said. "I, at first, thought coaching would be easy, but it is actually very time-consuming. You have to be very patient, and it helps that the players are willing to listen."

Smith said he has many fond memories of being a Wildcat.

He said his best highlight came in 1989 against Missouri when he broke the school record for receptions in a game.

"You just get in the zone," Smith said. "It's like what Michael Jordan says when he can't miss. It became instinct to me, and I didn't realize that I did something special that day."

Smith said that his crowning achievement was when he became the second all-time leading receiver in the Big Eight.

"That was the greatest thing that has ever happened to me," said Smith, who finished with 179 receptions and 2,457 yards in his career. "It's a Cinderella story, because everyone said that I was too small to be any good."

A transformation has occurred since Smith has been here at K-State. In his freshman season in 1988, the Cats finished with a record of 0-11.

Snyder then came to the program in 1989, and the Cats finished with a 1-10 record. Then, in the next three years, the Cats finished with records of 5-6, 7-4, and 5-6.

"The victory against KU in my senior year (1991) was a big step for the program," Smith said. "For the first time, the players really realized that we were good enough to win. Our first goal was to never give up, and we never did in that game."

Before Snyder came to K-State, Smith said that his goal was just to play. Then, Snyder made Smith K-State's top receiver in 1989.

"My freshman season I just wanted to play, and that was my goal," Smith said. "Then when Coach Snyder came here, he said that I would be the go-to guy. With that, I got all of the media, and I wasn't used to it. I finally realized that nobody could do anything to take my place.

"I was talking with my dad the other day, and we both said that (freshman wide receiver) Kevin Lockett might have a chance to break some of my records. I would hope that some of the records stay up there for a while, but records are meant to broken," Smith said.

THE MAN BEHIND THE RECORDS

Michael Smith set seven K-State records and is second in the Big Eight in career receiving yards.

Smith owns the following school records:

MOST RECEPTIONS	MOST YARDS GAINED	MOST TOUCHDOWN RECEPTIONS
Game: 13 vs. Missouri, 1989.	Career: 2,457.	Game: Tied with 3 vs. Iowa St., 1991.
Season: 70, 1989.	MOST 100-YARD GAMES	Career: 11, 1988-91.
Career: 179.	Career: 9, 1988-91.

BIG 8 ROUNDUP

OKLAHOMA AT IOWA STATE

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Cyclone Stadium-Jack Trice Field, Ames, Iowa. Delayed broadcast on the Prime Network.
RECORDS: Oklahoma (3-0); Iowa State (1-3)
ABOUT THE SOONERS: Oklahoma beat Tulsa 41-20 last Saturday in Norman, Okla. The Sooners had a battle on their hands until a couple of Golden Hurricane errors late in the third quarter paved the way for victory. A blocked kick by free safety Larry Bush toward the end of the third quarter gave Oklahoma a touchdown, and then a Tulsa fumble in the fourth quarter set another Sooner score.

Sooner quarterback Cale Gundy is the only Big Eight quarterback who hasn't thrown an interception this season. He has completed 42 passes out of 68 attempts to rank first in the conference.
ABOUT THE CYCLONES: Iowa State lost to Rice 49-21 last Saturday in Houston. The game was tied 14-14 late in the second quarter after Cyclone quarterback Bob Utter hit Calvin Branch for a 72 yard pass — the seventh-longest scoring pass in Iowa State history. Rice answered with a 1-yard touchdown run by running back Byron Coston.

The last time Iowa State beat Oklahoma was three years ago in Norman, 33-3, on a fourth-quarter touchdown run by quarterback Chris Pederson to stop a 28-game Sooner winning spree over the Cyclones.

COLORADO ST AT KANSAS

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Memorial Stadium, Lawrence
RECORDS: Colorado State (1-3); Kansas (1-3)
ABOUT THE RAMS: Colorado State lost to No. 6 Nebraska last weekend 48-13, even though the Cornhuskers played without several key players, who were injured. The Rams haven't played the Jayhawks in 53 years.
ABOUT THE JAYHAWKS: Kansas was idle last weekend, and the Jayhawks will try to end a two-game losing streak. The Jayhawks have fallen in many categories in the Big Eight. They have fallen from second in scoring offense in the league, with 31.8 points last year, to seventh place, with 19 points per game this year.

TCU AT OKLAHOMA STATE

FAST FACTS: 6 p.m., Lewis Field, Stillwater, Okla.
RECORDS: Texas Christian (1-2); Oklahoma State (2-1)
ABOUT THE HORNED FROGS: Texas Christian fell to Southwest Conference rival Southern Methodist 21-15 last weekend in Fort Worth, Texas. The Horned Frogs trailed by 1 at halftime. TCU's only win was against New Mexico (35-34) on Sept. 11. They lost to Oklahoma (35-3) on Sept. 4.

Horned Frog coach Pat Sullivan is 3-11-1 in his second year at TCU, but his team beat the Cowboys 13-11 last season.
ABOUT THE COWBOYS: Oklahoma State failed to come back against Arizona State in last Saturday's 12-10 loss to the Sun Devils. Arizona State got the win when Cowboy quarterback Tone Jones was sacked in the end zone for a safety.

SMU AT MISSOURI

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Faurot Field, Columbia, Mo.
RECORDS: Southern Methodist (1-2); Missouri (1-2)
ABOUT THE MUSTANGS: Southern Methodist beat Texas Christian 21-15 at Forth Worth, Texas. Mustang quarterback Ramon Flanigan passed for two touchdowns and ran for another. The Mustangs lead the series 13-7-1 over the Tigers.
ABOUT THE TIGERS: Missouri's defense kept the Tigers in the game against West Virginia halfway through the third quarter when the Mountaineers ran off 21 points to pull away from Missouri 35-3 last Saturday.

The first Player of the Week award for the running back

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

It was the first quarter when the play began. Running back J.J. Smith grabbed the ball from quarterback Chad May. He looked ahead, aware of everyone on the field, and knew where he was headed.

Smith broke through the line, darted downfield, and the play ended seconds later with Smith standing alone in the end zone with a 27-yard touchdown run—the first of two touchdowns on that day.

Following his 127-yard, two-touchdown effort on Saturday against the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, Smith's work finally paid off as he earned Big Eight Offensive Player of the Week honors — something he had never before received in his collegiate career.

"I think I have finally got the feeling for the timing in our running game."

J.J. SMITH
K-STATE RUSHER

"I'm happy and surprised. I didn't think 127 yards was enough to get Player of the Week," Smith said.

Rod Schiller and Smith alternate at the running back position, and the amount of playing time between the two depends on who's playing better. Smith said he feels more and more confident about his ability to carry the ball.

"I think I have finally got a feel for the timing in our running game," Smith said. "I know when things are happening now."

Smith said those things refer to the blocks at the line of scrimmage.

"I count on the line to get the blocks — which they did a great job on Saturday — to open up the line and give me the opportunity to get the yards that I've got," Smith said. "If it wasn't for them, I wouldn't have anything."

Through the first four games, Smith carried the ball 64 times for 294 yards and scored six touchdowns. He has scored two touchdowns in each of the past two games.

May said Smith's running has not only benefited the rushing game, but also has helped him in the passing game.

"I takes a lot of pressure off me," May said. "If you run the ball well, I think you're going to pass the ball well too."

Coach Bill Snyder said whoever is running better will start.

"I don't know if it will be J.J. or Rod," Snyder said. "They're both awfully good running backs, and they both will have ample playing time. Whoever has the hot hands is the one we'll give the ball to."

The fact that Kansas' defense allows 183 rushing yards doesn't matter to Smith. He said he expects Kansas to come prepared to play.

"They're a tough team," Smith said. "They've got a lot of athletes, and I'm sure they'll come around because they're a good team. We've got to prepare well and focus, and hopefully we'll do good."

But with this weekend off, Smith said he wants to make no mistake about his intentions — he will be ready.

"Having the week off is going to help a lot," he said. "It'll give me time to look at a lot of film. While Kansas is going to be looking to beat Colorado State, we're going to be looking to beat Kansas."

WILDCAT WATCH

CATS KEEP ROLLING

By Derek Simmons

Forget for a moment the 14-10 deficit at halftime, the dropped or overthrown passes, the fumbles and the blown 10-0 lead in the second quarter.

The Wildcats are 4-0 for the first time in a long, long time.

K-State put together a 26-point second half, highlighted by Andre Coleman's electrifying 67-yard touchdown reception to up-end the University of Nevada-Las Vegas 36-20 Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"It was a tough catch," said Coleman, who finished the game with a career-high five receptions for 118 yards. "I juggled it and actually caught it with one hand. We needed a big play. Fortunately, I made it, and the momentum just changed."

The win gave the Cats their first 4-0 start since 1931 and marked the first time a flawless non-conference schedule has been attained since the Big Eight Conference was formed. K-State is now riding a nine-game home winning streak.

K-State jumped out to a quick 10-0 lead in the first quarter on its first two possessions, aided by two UNLV penalities.

But the Rebels retaliated, scoring on a 42-yard drive in the first period and an 80-yard scoring drive with five minutes remaining in the second quarter, to take a 14-10 lead at the half. UNLV also managed a defensive stand on its own 1-yard line, stopping quarterback Chad May inches from the goal line with two seconds left to preserve the lead.

"I didn't mention the not scoring (at halftime)," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I just said that we controlled our own destiny. It wasn't anything that UNLV did — it was just a matter of us taking control."

In the second half, they did just that.

K-State got a 45-yard field goal from Wright, followed by a touchdown run from Smith to take the lead at 20-14 with 9:59 remaining in the third quarter. Smith's 1-yard score was set up by an interception and 23-yard return from Kenny McEntyre, which put the ball on the UNLV 15-yard line.

Coleman, who finished the game with 179 all-purpose yards, said the Rebels' lead at halftime wasn't anything to be concerned about.

"To be quite honest, we're at a point now that we're so confident, we knew we could come back," Coleman said.

Linebacker Kirby Hocutt, who had his second career interception in the first quarter, said the team has a tendency to strike fast but then let up.

"This week and last week we came out with some adrenalin, and then we let it die down," Hocutt said. "We thought maybe it was a little easier than it was supposed to be, and we might have relaxed a little. We can't do that. We've got to be mature enough as a football team to realize that you've got to smell blood when you've got a team down. We have to put them away."

The Cats gave up just one more touchdown, an 18-yard pass from Bob Stockham to Randy Gatewood with 1:27 remaining. K-State's defense buckled down in the third period and hasn't allowed a touchdown in the third quarter of any game this season.

"I think if you look at our stats, we haven't been scored on in the third quarter," Snyder said. "You could sense it got the crowd in the ballgame and our players excited."

UNLV, which dropped to 1-3, was hindered by extensive penalties throughout the game, and five that resulted in K-State first downs. The Rebels totaled 11 miscues for 106 yards.

"We got in situations where it seemed like penalty after penalty, and we made some critical mistakes," UNLV coach Jim Strong said. "Situations where mistake after mistake led to a lot of self-inflicted wounds that stopped us from ever getting some momentum that could have turned the ballgame around."

K-State does not play next week and will begin preparation for the University of Kansas game Oct. 9. The Jayhawks (1-3) were idle this week and face Colorado State Saturday at home.

ANNIVERSARY

KSU Stadium begins its 25th year of existence

Dev Nelson Press Box DAVID MAYES/Collegian

A recent addition to the KSU Stadium is the Dev Nelson Press Box. Nelson did play-by-play of K-State football and basketball games from 1954-79 and was the K-State sports director from 1966-72.. The press box is on e of the many changes that has happened at KSU Stadium, which turned 25 years old this month.

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The year was 1965. Once again fans were ready to pack into the 22,000-seat Memorial Stadium, where the traffic was terrible, and there was no place to park as fans went to watch the K-State football team play.

However, the situation was not as bleak as it may have seemed. On May 23, 1965, the Kansas Board of Regents approved a plan to build a new football stadium.

James A. McCain, then president of K-State, said an anonymous alumnus had made a donation of $25,000 to finance the preliminary plans of the stadium.

The plan for the stadium was not finalized without criticism.

In a letter to the editor written to the Dec. 6, 1966, Collegian, a student wrote: "Many other students and I feel an improved team is a prerequisite for a new stadium. During the last two games I stared at the nearly empty west end of the stadium and thought how desperately we needed a stadium to pack all these people into the game."

The Wildcats were 8-41 from 1960 to 1965.

The proponents of the new stadium made their voices heard as well. In another letter to the editor, a student wrote: "Unless students vote in favor of the new stadium, K-State's athletic hopes in all sports appear doomed."

Ernie Barrett, who was assistant athletic director then, spearheaded the fund-raising drive in 1966, which raised the $1.6 million through gate receipts, student fees and contributions for KSU Stadium.

"There was a lot of apathy about building the new stadium," said Barrett, director of develpment in the athletic office. "We had to overcome a tremendous attitude because we weren't filling the old stadium."

Jay Payton, who was the public-address announcer, said conditions were so bad in the old press box he couldn't even face the game. He had to sit sideways and turn his head in order to fit all of the equipment into the room.

"I remember games when it rained, I collected seven empty Pepsi cups full of water because the roof leaked so bad," Payton said.

Finally, the benefits seemed to outweigh the detriments, and ground was broken for the new stadium Oct. 16, 1967, with completion for the stadium scheduled for the beginning of the 1968 season.

The football team came into the 1968 season with only one victory in the previous three seasons for a record of 1-28-1. Barrett said he was surprised to see the crowd at the first game.

"On the day of the first game, 30,000 people attended, which is almost twice what the old stadium would hold," Barrett said. "That made me feel like we did the right thing."

At the first game against Colorado State on Sept. 21, 1968, 216 chair-back seats underneath the press-box were available for a season ticket and a $500 contribution. Another 2,030 chair-back seats closer to the field were sold for a season ticket and a $250 contribution.

Season tickets were $25, single-game reserved tickets were $5, and general admission was $3.50.

The stadium seated 34,000 compared to 22,000 at Memorial Stadium, and there were 8,500 parking spaces, compared to 900 at the old stadium.

Payton said he liked KSU Stadium when he saw it.

"(KSU) Stadium was far more elaborate than I ever thought it would be," Payton said. "Even the 'temporary' press box was better than anything we had before."

Since the initial construction, several improvements have been made on the stadium. The first changes came in 1970 when the natural grass was replaced with artificial turf and bleachers were added above the student section.

Barrett said the bleachers were added to accommodate larger crowds that were attracted during the time former coach Lynn Dickey was here.

Dickey and former coach Vince Gibson led K-State to its first winning season in the new stadium that year with a record of 6-5.

"Dickey really improved the attendance that year. He could do it all," Payton said.

The stadium received a new artificial turf in 1980 and again in 1990. The $796,000 surface in 1990 was paid for completely by Dodge City resident and K-State alumnus David Wagner, who won $35 million in the lottery that year.

The final improvements came this season with the addition of the $3.3-million, five-story Dev Nelson Press Box. Construction workers tore down the temporary press box after 24 years of use.

"When I went into the new press box for the first time, I couldn't believe what I was seeing," Payton said. "I've been in press boxes all over the nation, and this is the best I have ever seen."

Barrett said having fan support is great.

"KSU is lucky to have the alumni support that it has," Barrett said. "We compete in one of the nation's best conferences, and now we can say that we have some of the best facilities in the nation."

Haskell's case resolved

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Junior distance runner David Haskell, who was charged on May 6 with battery of a law enforcement officer and obstruction of legal process, settled his case out of court.

Barry Wilkerson, prosecuting attorney for the case, said the trial was resolved, but action was be taken against Haskell.

"There was an informal agreement between his attorney and the county attorney," Wilkerson said. "He had to pay a court fee of $96.50 and a $100 fine that has to be paid within 30 days after Aug. 26, 1993. For 12 months, he can't be in any criminal activity to remain a full-time student or have full-time employment.

"I know the track coach (Cliff Rovelto) has taken some disciplinary action on him," Wilkerson said. "That's what I understand from the cross country coach (Terry Drake). We don't expect any more trouble."

Wilkerson said Drake has been talking with him.

If Haskell had gone to trial, he could have faced one year in jail, Wilkerson said.

According to police reports, on May 6, seven nude men were running down Moro Street in Aggieville around 12:40 a.m.

A Riley County Police officer grabbed a subject who ran by him, and then the officer was struck by several other runners, knocking the officer down. A chase ensued down Moro, and Haskell was caught.

Haskell is a native of Lake Elsinore, Calif. He transferred to K-State from El Camino Community College in California.

Rovelto said Haskell was punished by not attending an invitation.

"He will miss one meet, and it would be the first one," Rovelto said of Haskell, who missed the Nebraska Invitational on Sept. 18 in Lincoln, Neb.

Golfers in 7th place after two rounds of action

Jacksonville, Fla. — The K-State men's golf team has completed two of three rounds at the First Coast Intercollegiate Golf Tournament. The tournament is being hosted by the University of Jacksonville.

The Cats are being led by sophomore Jason Losch, who is currently in a tie for 11th place after shooting rounds of 74 and 75.

"He's played pretty well the whole time," Coach Mark Elliot said. "He's made some mistakes here and there, but he's playing pretty well overall."

Chad Judd is currently in a tie for 19th place after posting scores of 77 and 76. Troy Halterman, a transfer from Oklahoma State, fired scores of 79 and 78, putting him in a tie for 42nd place.

Health system to change

Primary-care physicians to play larger role

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Editor's note: This is the last story in a four-part series about how the Clinton health-care plan will affect Kansans and, specifically, K-State students.

Changes in health-care service procedures will change the routines of Manhattan doctors and specialists under the Clinton health-care plan.

The plans will mean a larger role for primary-care practitioners at the expense of specialists. Also, the number of medical specialists, traditionally the highest-paid doctors in the country, will be decreased dramatically to save money.

"Primary-care physicians are going to be the gatekeeper — it sounds like," Larry Moeller, medical director at Lafene Health Center, said.

Directing health care to primary doctors is one problem to deal with, Robert Cathey, a Manhattan specialist in dermatology, said.

"I don't feel in many cases the primary care can do it better and cheaper," Cathey said.

Complications might surface after the health plan is put into effect, said Walter Adams, assistant professor of anthropology and American ethnic studies.

Lack of resources to educate primary-care practitioners may cause a problem in maintaining a consistent quality of care, Eugene Klingler, Manhattan general surgeon, said.

"The thing that concerns me is teaching and research," Klingler said.

The majority of doctors said they agree some sort of health-care plan should be initiated for those who are not covered, Cathey said.

"I think that basically it would be good to bring in the people that are somehow not covered now," Cathey said.

The premise for basic health care is excellent, Moeller said.

Cathey said something needs to be done but said complete reform won't be necessary.

"I don't think we need to totally overhaul the system," Cathey said.

Klingler said he doesn't think a health-care program could help small cities such as Manhattan.

"It may work in big cities, but I don't know about Manhattan," Klingler said.

Moeller said he admires both President Clinton and first lady Hillary for addressing the health-care problem.

"It is good that the first lady takes such a responsibility in the White House," Moeller said.

Klingler said he agrees radical changes must be made in terms of a national health-care program.

Harmony week events to raise awareness

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Students interested in broadening their horizons should attend events during Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, Oct. 4-8.

The week is designed to make people aware of issues including race, ethnicity, religion and human sexuality, Phil Anderson, chairman of Racial Ethnic Harmony week, said.

"Speeches, workshops and panel discussions are trying to lead towards the idea of human understanding and human awareness. That's what we're stressing," Anderson said.

Racial/Ethnic Harmony week started because of a racial incident in an Aggieville bar, Anderson said.

"The University recognized that kind of racist incident could not be left unchallenged; so, a week was started to focus on issues about race, ethnicity, religion and human sexuality," he said.

Racial/Ethnic Harmony week was first started in the fall of 1988 and has grown year by year with more events, Anderson said.

"The stuff is interesting, entertaining and fun to learn about," he said.

The week provides opportunity to increase awareness, Gary Pierson, assistant director of new student services, said.

"It's a personal awareness type thing. If a student had not come from a diverse background, it's an event that will open your mind and develop an understanding of other cultures," Pierson said.

By going to the events, people learn to appreciate the earth, Anderson said.

"We're becoming a global economy, if you are racists, it will cost you in the market place," he said.

Pierson said he is hoping for a lot of participation, but that is not the important thing.

"Participants and numbers are not as important as promoting awareness on campus. If someone goes to one event, that's achievement," he said.

Anderson said they are trying to reach students who think the week has nothing to do with them.

T-shirts for the week will be sold, and rainbow colored ribbons will be given to promote the week, Pierson said.

"The ribbons signify different colors that make up a rainbow-come together to make something beautiful. Different colors of people signify different people coming together to help the campus." Pierson said.

The week begins with an open lecture "Current issues facing Native Americans" with guest lecturer Alfonso Ortiz. Following the lecture, President Jon Wefald and Ortiz will be guest speakers at the kickoff luncheon.

Ortiz will be the keynote speaker at 7:30 p.m. Monday on the issue of preserving Native American Sacred Sites.

On Wednesday, an open forum about improving greek relations will take place in the K-State Big 8 room and Bryna Weiss will star in the one-woman play, "Lily," at 7:30 pm.

The play is an Israeli woman's story of survival.

"It's a wonderful piece which combines humor with pathos," Anderson said.

Thursday will be filled with lectures, games, films and a concert.

Collidascope, a game that has been developed to promote discussion in different areas, will be played, Pierson said.

The game involves placing students in positions that deal with issues such as sexism, heterosexism, racism and contemporary issues, Pierson said.

"It gets the students to see how they would respond and change those issues," Pierson said."

Money for computers to be allocated

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Student Senate tonight will approve a week-old authorization to purchase a $15,000 computer system for the Office of Student Activities and Services.

The allocation, which was lost following the Sept. 23 Senate meeting, will be included as part of the minutes from that meeting.

DeLoss Jahnke, student senate chair, said every senator will know the details of the allocation.

"We're going to attach a final copy of the bill to the minutes," Jahnke said. "It will be brought up during approval of minutes.

Eric Henry, student body vice president, said attaching the bill to the minutes is not ideal, but is acceptable if it clears up misunderstandings about the proposal.

"We're doing the best we can with what we have on it," Henry said. "I think everyone would have wanted to see it go through without any confusion."

In other business, Senate will decide on a proposal to provide $419 for a K-State International Cultural Night, Oct. 23. The money would be used to defray advertising, printing and rental costs for the event.

Senate will also discuss a $497 allocation to the Student Environmental Action Coalition. The money would allow five SEAC members to travel to Ames, Iowa, Oct. 1-3, for a national convention.

For the first time, senators will hear a $2,300 request to bring award-winning novelist Tobias Wolff to K-State.

The money would be used to bring Wolff to campus for an Oct. 19 reading, film and panel discussion.

Fire in Haymaker Hall causes evacution

A fire Tuesday morning in Haymaker Hall caused damage to furniture, walls and carpet in the lobby of the ninth floor.

Haymaker Hall Director Kim Alfano said the fire, which happened at approximately 3:30 a.m., was started by a cigarette in the cushions of a loveseat.

The amount of damage at this time is unavailable.

Alfano said the fire was contained in the ninth floor lobby because the wing doors where kept shut in accordance with the fire code.

Damage was mostly smoke and soot damage, Alfano said.

The entire hall was evacuated for 1-1/2 hours while the firefighters put out the fire and cleared the smoke.

The evacuation process went quite smoothly, and there were no injuries, she said.

Alfano said she wished to commend the hall staff and the residents of the hall.

"Most of the furniture will be recovered and some of it replaced, and the carpet will be redone, although I don't know when," Alfano said.

New HDR's are MRE's for civilions, are A'OK

WASHINGTON — Soldiers might grouse about them, but the Pentagon is proud of its Meals Ready-to-Eat and now has invented similar packaged meals to feed hungry civilians — starting in Bosnia, the Humanitarian Daily Ration, or HDR.

Designed for emergency-relief missions abroad, they are cousins of MREs, or, the much-maligned but dependable field rations U.S. troops ate during the Persian Gulf War.

The new version is cheaper — a day's ration is less than a third the price of the military package. And they are culturally correct, providing a vegetarian diet that complies with religious prohibitions. Bosnian Muslims, for example, don't eat pork.

The Defense Department ordered 2.15 million at a cost of $8.5 million for its expanding role in humanitarian relief.

The first shipment of 200,000 began arriving at Dover Air Force Base this week, bound for war-ravaged Bosnia, said Pat Irvin, deputy assistant secretary of defense for humanitarian and refugee affairs.

The HDRs copy some of the best traits of MREs: They are compact, durable, don't require water or heat and literally can be delivered on the fly — some will be tossed out of airplanes.

Bankruptcy doesn't help Basinger

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Kim Basinger got no break in bankruptcy court from a judge's order that she pay $8.1 million for failing to appear in the film "Boxing Helena."

A Superior Court jury had found in March that Basinger broke a promise to star in the movie about obsessive love. It eventually was made with actress Sherilyn Fenn and was a box-office bomb.

The jury ordered Basinger to pay $8.9 million to Main Line Pictures, the producers of "Boxing Helena." Superior Court Judge Judith Chirlin later reduced the verdict to $7.4 million but ordered Basinger to pay an additional $713,522 in attorneys' fees and costs.

The actress filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition on May 26 in an effort to avoid payment. But on Tuesday, U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Geraldine Mund ordered Basinger to pay 100 cents on the dollar on the money she owes, plus 10 percent interest.

Chirlin also had ordered Basinger to post a $12.1 million bond or face having her assets seized. By filing for bankruptcy, Basinger avoided paying the bond and any asset seizure, said Main Line attorney Patty Glaser. Now, if Basinger is unable to make the payment, as claimed by Weitzman, it is possible her assets could be seized. Weitzman has said the actress' net worth is $5 million.

Clear beer a no go, repeat business low

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Now you see through it, now you don't: Clear beer is history.

Miller Brewing Co. has halted a three-city market test of its see-through brew, saying sales dropped as the novelty waned.

"We're not manufacturing it any longer for the near term," Eric Kraus, a representative for the Milwaukee-based brewer, said Tuesday. "We had a tremendous initial trial, but repeat business was not necessarily as good."

The beer that has been made will be sold, but no more will be brewed, Kraus said. It was sold in bottles as well as on tap in bars.

Clear beer was part of a "clean" products fad that includes clear deodorant and clear Pepsi. In April, Miller began test-marketing the industry's first clear beer in Richmond, Va., Minneapolis and Austin, Texas.

Miller Clear was billed as a "regular" beer without the heaviness. Its 122 calories per bottle was midway between regular and light beers. A special filtration process removed the color and 40 percent of the carbohydrates but left in all the alcohol.

House rejects Senate grazing moratorium

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. House of Representatives on Wednesday rejected a Senate-passed moratorium on higher federal grazing fees, strengthening President Clinton's effort to charge cattle ranchers more to use government land.

The 314-109 vote instructed House negotiators to oppose the 1-year moratorium when they meet with their Senate counterparts to resolve differences between spending bills to finance the Department of the Interior.

Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt said he was pleased and encouraged with the House vote.

Babbit said those opposing the moratorium recognize that simply waiting for yet another year would do nothing to resolve this issue.

The interior department has the legal authority to increase the grazing fees administratively.

Clinton staff reduction announment Friday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Aides who helped President Clinton keep a campaign promise to reduce his staff by 25 percent are preparing to defend their numbers when the results are disclosed Friday.

"We are not going to wave banners and shoot off fireworks. This is what we promised we would do, and we did it," Deputy Chief of Staff Roy Neel said Wednesday.

As part of a pledge to reduce payroll and salaries, Clinton promised in February to shed 350 positions from his staff by Oct. 1, the first day of the new fiscal year.

Clinton's team used a benchmark of 1,394 White House employees as the target for the 25-percent cut.

REVIEW

International economic policies and trade negotiations. Boring stuff, right?

Wrong.

The San Francisco Mime Troupe's production of "Offshore" or, "Why You Should Read the Business Page," was an entertaining lesson in both.

The Tony-winning performance troupe began their 1993 tour Wednesday at McCain Auditorium, bringing their special blend of farce-melodrama and political satire.

The combination of hi-tech scenic effects, traditional Japanese Kabuki dancing and American comedy was seamless. The fact the playwright, Joan Holden, and her collaborators managed to throw in some serious political commentary was nothing short of amazing.

A computerized message board, similar to those used to quote stock market prices, welcomed the audience with Japanese characters and a short lesson in macroeconomics and acronyms: GATT, NAFTA, IBM, CIA, NFL.

A tsunami menaced the three musicians dressed in Harlequinesqe shirts.

The characters use mime, dialogue and musical numbers to tell the story of the negotiations between a Japanese tycoon, whose ancestors were rice farmers for 18 generations, and a slick, cellular-phoned U.S. trade negotiator from Detroit.

The tycoon wants to continue to sell his semiconductors to the United States, undercutting the price of domestically produced semiconductors, and the Clinton-appointed negotiator wants the Japanese to permit imports of cheap American rice, which would threaten Japanese rice farmers.

Sounds like a simple deal, but there are enormous consequences to the Pacific rim, as well as to a whole range of characters: an American call-girl with her own version of "free-trade" and her lover, the tycoon's idealistic artist daughter; a self-styled "underground entrepreneur" who lives in a cardboard box in Sacramento, Calif., and a Chinese-born American, a would-be dealmaker looking to sell China a deal with an American factory owner who has just a little problem with the Environmental Protection Agency.

The action was as smoothly integrated as the cast.

The play did pose questions it couldn't answer, but they are questions most politicians and economic experts can't answer either. It reminded the audience to ask those questions when they read the business page.

It is hoped that when booking the McCain Performance Series for next year, the San Francisco Mime Troupe will not be forgotten.

EDITORIAL

Streamlining, other factors can make overlay successful

As our nation moves toward a more diverse future, so does K-State. We have done our job so far making certain the needs of multicultural students are met.

The next step in K-State's move toward a more diverse future should be the implementation of the multicultural-overlay program.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, by the year 2010, white people will be the minority in America, hispanics will replace black people as the largest minority group, and the Asian population will triple.

General-education courses describe the criteria a course must meet, saying nothing about the content of what is taught. Faculty Senate's main opposition to the proposal is the overlay program proposal states its courses are about cultures, thus defining the content covered.

However, many colleges require students to take at least one economics class. The same textbook is required for all macro and microeconomics courses.

A required textbook defines content. Yet, instructors are still allowed the freedom to choose the areas of the textbook covered in the course.

This situation could be applied to the overlay program. There could be a required textbook, but instructors could still choose what areas of the text are covered in the course.

The cost of the program is also a concern. If important introductory courses, such as Introduction to Sociology, were mainstreamed so they met both general-education requirements and overlay requirements, there would be no need to hire additional faculty, thus eliminating the financial burden associated with the program.

If the proposed overlay program could be designed so its courses would fulfill both the overlay and general-education requirements, then the mandated 18 hours of general-education courses and 12 hours of electives could remain the same, benefiting students.

Faculty Senate should take these factors into consideration before turning down a workable program.

Sorry, but we are experiencing technical problems

Human beings have been communicating for hundreds of thousands of years.

So, it should come as no surprise communication has taken numerous forms, many of which we still use today. Although language, or the spoken word, is probably the most obvious form of communication, there are also less apparent means of communicating.

For example, my wife quite frequently uses an ancient form of covert communication (that nearly all men eventually learn once married) consisting of pinches, jabs, kicks, or pokes to the lower extremities while seated at a table in the presence of total strangers. My wife thinks her actions are discreet, but I can assure you men everywhere recognize the restrained (eye-popping) whimper resulting from an under-table kick to the shin or groin.

Communication, of course, has evolved over time from the "muted grunts" and "hand signals" of prehistoric humans to the use of accurate, high-speed, worldwide, satellite-transmitted grunts and hand signals. Ha! Just a little "telecommunication" humor there. No, actually we have today at our very fingertips the latest in modern communication techniques: telecommunication via computer screw-ups — I mean "satellite link-ups."

A Brief History of Satellite Communication

It is a little-known "communication fact" that one of the earliest forms of satellite communication was inadvertently discovered 20 zillion years ago by two brothers, Gorg and Magorg, otherwise known as The Gorg Brothers.

According to early pictographs on the stalls of stone-age lavatories located somewhere in Willard Hall (which vaguely resemble my 5-year-old's most recent attempts to communicate with sub-space aliens), the discovery occurred while they were out separately looking for supersonicflamebroileddoublepterodactylburgers (without tomato). Gorg saw, from a distance, that his brother Magorg (whose intelligence quotient was only slightly higher than that of a small cup of tapioca pudding) was about to be eaten by a large prehistoric slug (couchus potatomus). So he quickly drew a picture of this unpleasant event on a large rock and hurled it in the direction of Magorg.

BRAD SEABOURN

This very first "satellite transmission" was quickly received but unfortunately struck Magorg in the head, thus rendering him unconscious. He was quickly devoured.

Despite this early setback, "rock technology" flourished and was the rage well into the fourth or fifth centuries, where even the slightest mention of prehistoric slugs (or a disbelief in God) in mixed company brought a hail of stones down upon the individual.

Anyway, modern satellites, as you well know, are simply rocket-propelled computers equipped with cellular telephones and leather interior. And as you probably also know, computers are notorious for responding with the "one-fingered salute" when told to perform certain commands. Why, just the other day I told my computer to order out pizza, and it responded by telling me I had just given it a "Bad Command." Ha! (computers can be so funny sometimes.)

Try it sometime.

In an attempt to test this theory, the United States and Russia have been sending satellites into space for more than a quarter of a century now. However, I recently read the Russians have had more of their satellites give them the one-fingered salute than we have, mainly because we use a "back-up" system in our satellites.

We therefore have fewer failures, but when ours fail we get two one-fingered salutes on our terminals instead of one.

Probably the greatest loss in satellite history came last August when the Jet Propulsion Laboratories in Pasadena, Calif., lost contact with the Mars Observer spacecraft, a $980-million mission. .

This was a three "one-fingered salute" satellite.

The Observer was sent to Mars more than a year ago, and when it got there it just kept right on going.

Well, last week (in solemn conjunction with the national Rush Limbaugh-Humpty Dumpty Look-Alike Contest) a group of 250 people, which included one former astronaut with a Ph.D. in astronomy, joined together at the annual National New Age, Alien Agenda and Cosmic Conspiracies Conference in Phoenix, Ariz. For a minute of silence and meditation in one last effort to "communicate" with the lost spacecraft and entice it to beam signals back to Earth.

However, a representative said they won't know for several days whether their telepathic message worked because a radio signal from Mars takes that long to reach Earth.

I really don't think there is any need to attempt to communicate with the spacecraft. It seems to me the mission was actually a huge success. Obviously the Mars Observer is on a special mission. ... to be the first satellite to go outside the solar system for pizza.

Oh, by the way ... make mine pepperoni.

Maybe NOW should just sit back and listen to what he has to say

Editor,

I find it incredible to believe that a nation that prides itself on the First Amendment to the Constitution fosters such intolerant groups as the National Organization for Women.

Apparently, NOW is bothered that an "anti-choice" speaker, Pat Robertson, has been invited to speak at the K-State Landon Lecture and intends to protest his speaking. As a graduate student, I take pride in being a part of academia, an institution that teaches every possible side of an argument. A university should be a place where anybody and everybody may speak his or her mind on any subject. And NOW wants to squelch that.

All of you college students should be very angry over this protest. NOW is attempting to deprive you of hearing a viewpoint, of freedom of speech.

What I submit to NOW and everybody else who supports this protest is to let Pat Robertson speak. If his conservative views are so wrong, then surely that will be apparent to anybody who listens to him. You don't need to shut up a person to prevent people from agreeing with him or her. Why don't you just calmly and intelligently listen to what he has to say? Then if you find he has said something so horrible, come out with a public rebuttal.

Use your First Amendment right and don't deprive others of the right to use theirs.

▶ SOCIALISM

Take a look around: American socialism is everywhere you turn

Editor,

Normally I can accept a few errors in an article and move on, but the gross inaccuracies and misrepresentations in Sara Smith's Sept. 28 column compel me to respond to some of her statements.

Contrary to an argument made in the column, the National Socialist (Nazi) Party was no more socialist than the German Democratic Republic (East Germany) was democratic. In the real world, the Nazis were violently anti-communist and got the bulk of their financial support not from the workers they supposedly represented but from rich industrialists.

And despite what Ms. Smith seemed to imply, socialism and democracy need not be incompatible. If they were, Sweden would be one of the most totalitarian states on the face of the planet.

Further, welfare does not represent "the first budding stages of socialism;" socialism has in fact existed in this country for a lot longer than that. I don't know what Ms. Smith's definition of socialism is, but my definition (government involvement in the private sector) would include such things as the Social Security Act, the Tennessee Valley Authority, minimum-wage laws, child-labor laws, anti-trust laws and government subsidizing of such non-vital industries as fire protection, mail delivery and education.

Next time, Ms. Smith, don't give us opinions and half-truths and try passing them off as facts.

▶ GRADES

The rule of 'no work, no grade' must not be entirely clear to all

Editor,

This is for all of the K-State professors who hand out grades on a silver platter. If you are a student, you may think I'm crazy, but trust me, it happens routinely. You see, there are two types of students at K-State: those who are here to learn, and those who are here for some undetermined reason. You might ask yourself which group you fall into.

Most of us probably know to which group we belong. Why is it so difficult for many professors to make the distinction? I have seen several cases where students do not participate in class, yet receive grades indicative of someone giving it the old college try. Copying previously written papers is routine at K-State. I have both seen and heard of this on several occasions, but it somehow remains a secret from most professors. I've seen students show up for class just the first and last days, feed the professor some hard luck stories, and receive B's! How can this be? What about those who bothered to show up and do the work? Shouldn't they be entitled to A's?

I am about to graduate with a masters degree, for which I am proud. I can honestly say that I have never cheated in any respect while pursuing my degree. Even though I feel that my degree does not command the respect that it should. How can it, when these quasi-students receive the same accolades as K-State's dedicated students? I don't blame the half-hearted students, necessarily, for they are simply following the path of least resistance. I blame the professors allowing it to happen. Wake up people.

After 25 years, a lost father finally comes home

Air Force Col. Carl F. Karst, a 1954 K-State graduate, will be buried at Arlington National Cemetery with full military honors on Oct. 1.

On that Friday, the family of Carl Karst will officially, formally and finally tell him goodbye — a process they began in 1968.

On Nov. 16, 1968, he was flying a Cessna O-1F reconnaissance plane on a routine mission over South Vietnam. He was serving as Deputy Commander of the Second Direct Air Support Center at Pleiku. He did not return from the flight.

A few days later, his family in Russell, Kan., his wife, Ruth, and his children, Cathy, 13; Tom, 9; and Doug, 4, learned he was missing in action. They began years of waiting, praying, committed to going on with their lives. They saved report cards to show him, took pictures for him at birthdays and Christmas, wrote weekly letters to him that went into the void of North Vietnam.

CARL KARST
Air Force Colonel
1954 K-State graduate

MIA TO BE HONORED

Karst was changed from Missing in Action to Presumed Killed in Action in 1974.

In 1989, human remains found in Karst's plane were returned to the United States.

Last summer, the remains were identified as those of Karst.

On Friday, Oct. 1, Karst's caisson-borne body, accompanied by a military band and an Air Force fly-over, will be taken to Arlington National Cemetery for interment.

Ruth moved her family to Manhattan in 1971, partly because it is close to Fort Riley, partly because there were still college friends in town. Carl had been active at K-State in the Beta Sigma Psi fraternity, Student Senate, Spiritual Emphasis Week and the Lutheran Student Association. Royal Purples of the 1950s show a slim, young man with a smile and a crew cut, usually wearing a suit and tie.

Cathy, Tom and Doug went to school in Manhattan. They made good grades and were involved in lots of activities. Ruth was active in church work. She took classes at K-State. And they waited and wrote to him and doubted and hoped.

In 1973, North Vietnam released a list of prisoners. Late one snowy Saturday night in February, two representatives of the armed forces came to the Karst's home in Manhattan to say Carl's name was not on the list.

Ruth Karst said she couldn't go to sleep after they left, so she and her sister sat up and folded the Sunday newspapers Tom would have to deliver on his route the next morning. "That night," she said, "for the first time, I really felt like a widow."

In 1974, Karst's status was changed from Missing In Action to Presumed Killed in Action.

The family had the first of its formal goodbyes at a memorial service in Russell. Hundreds attended, including relatives from Galatia, where he grew up, friends from Hoisington, where he was president of his high-school senior class and graduated in 1949, as well as many of the friends Ruth and the children had made in Manhattan.

Ruth eventually remarried and moved to Nebraska. All three children graduated from K-State. Tom majored in agricultural journalism and once wrote wrote a column for the Collegian about what it had been like to grow up as the son of an MIA. Cathy, Tom and Doug all married. There are seven grandchildren, including a little boy whose middle name is Carl.

NANCY HAUSE
GUEST COLUMNIST

Last summer, part of the Karsts' farm at Galatia was sold. Tom, now a professional writer, wrote a letter to his father about how hard it had been to sell some of the land Carl had loved as a boy. Tom was in Nebraska, sharing the letter with his family, when the word came that remains, found in the wreck of the Cessna and turned over to the Americans in 1989, had finally been positively identified as those of Carl.

On Friday, there will be a military band accompanying the caisson with the casket. There will be an Air Force fly-over. Russell native Senator Bob Dole has said he will attend if it's at all possible. And Carl's family will be there to end 25 years of goodbyes.

Nancy Hause is an assistant professor in journalism and mass communications.

SUGGESTED CRITERIA FOR DIVERSITY OVERLAY COURSE SELECTION

There will be an open meeting from 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesday, oct 6, in the Union Big 8 Room for anyone interested in working with the Diversity Overlay Committee. The course must be designed to produce at least two of the following outcomes:

1) Students know the challenges implicit in diversity and recognize the strengths and complex dynamics of the United States as a muliticultural society.

2) Students learn about one or more groups different from their own and the ways in which other groups' values, attitudes, experiences and ways of doing things may be valid even though different.

3) Students learn how perceived differences, individual prejudice and institutionalized practices can result in iequalities in opportunity, quality of life and privilege.

4) Students learn appropriate and effective ways for communicating across cultural and ethnic boundaries for implementing change and for achieving personal empowerment in multicultural settings.

5) Students develop the intellectual tools for understanding and interpreting cultural similarities and differences.

Fraternities trade living space

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

The Alpha Kappa Lambda's, Phi Gamma Delta's and Pi Kappa Phi's all have new places to live this year.

Last year the Pi Kaps lived in Royal Tower apartments, and now they live in the old Fiji house. The Fijis moved into the AKL house, and the AKLs have moved into Royal Towers.

"Everyone has taken a shift to the right," said Jimmy Gibbs , senior in parks and recreation administration and president of AKL.

"It's a benefit to all the fraternities. We've gone through a change the last couple of years," Gibbs said.

Membership numbers have declined for the AKLs.

"It's not cost-effective for us to live in our house anymore. We got the opportunity to retain our house and get back into it once our numbers increase," he said.

They are operating as they have in the past. Chapter meetings take place on Wednesdays in the Council Chambers of the K-State Union.

We're working on improving programs and increasing membership, Gibbs said.

It has spaced us out, but overall it has brought us together. The common goal is to reoccupy our house, he said.

The AKL house is still owned by the fraternity, but the Fijis are living there now.

"We're leasing for a year. In six months we have the option to lease for another year," said Greg Kemp, senior in finance and president of the Fiji house.

The plan is to build a new house in an empty lot on McCain Road. Construction will start in the fall of 1994, and in the fall of 1995 we can move in, he said.

Fundraising to build the new Fiji house began this summer.

"Alumni hope to have fundraising done by the end of this year," Kemp said.

The old Fiji house was bought by Pi Kasppa Phi Properties, who also purchased the Tatarrax apartments. The Tatarrax were previously owned by the Fijis.

The Pi Kaps were living in Royal Towers because their house was destroyed by fire in June, 1991.

The Tatarrax was renovated this summer. They are being rented to the public until the Pi Kaps membership is high enough to occupy the house and the apartments.

"It provides them space to grow," said Tim Lindemuth, faculty adviser to the Pi Kaps.

Student help wanted in creation of overlay

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

The Diversity Overlay Committee is seeking student participation in drafting the overlay requirements for K-State curricula.

The committee met Wednesday in Union 209 to review the issues surrounding the proposal, form committees to develop publicity and student interest, and to establish a time frame for submitting the diversity overlay requirement proposal to the Faculty Senate Committee on Academic Affairs.

The primary concern of the committee, which is made up of faculty and student volunteers, is to get more support and involvement in various subcommittees to work on the final draft of the proposal, collect data from other universities and write course descriptions.

Raiders to smoke Montana, Chiefs

When I picked up the paper on Tuesday and checked the odds on Sunday's Raiders-Chiefs game, I almost fainted.

The Chiefs are favored by 6-1/2 over a Raiders team that has one of the most dominating defenses in in the NFL.

I don't care if the game is in Arrowhead — the odds-makers are either stupid or high.

Please, I beg you fans not to get caught up in all that Joe Montana, great-Chiefs-defense hype. That's all it is — hype.

What you've seen from Montana in the past two weeks is that he is either ineffective or injured, and I expect one of those two scenarios to be the case for this game.

Forget about the season-opening game against Tampa Bay. The offense-less Chicago Bears put up 44 points against the Buccaneers — who have the worst defense in the NFL— last Sunday.

It's proof that any quarterback with an elbow, much less a surgically repaired one, could have a 300-yard passing game against Tampa Bay.

I won't even mention the Oiler game. Montana didn't play, but don't you believe for a minute he couldn't have.

Conservative Marty Schottenheimer, coach for the Kansas City Chiefs, conceded the game to a conference opponent because he knew his weak offensive line couldn't protect his frail quarterback from Houston's relentless pass rush.

If he thought their pass rush was bad, what is he going to do this week?

The Raiders boast a defensive line that leads the league in sacks per game with 4.3 a contest.

Defensive end Anthony Smith is tied for the league lead with six, while teammates Howie Long, Greg Townsend, Aundray Bruce and Chester McGlockton have made life a living hell for opposing quarterbacks.

If Marty lets him play, Montana will be next.

On the defensive side of the ball, the Chiefs seem to be more respectable, but I have my doubts. For instance, who couldn't stop that anemic offense of the Bucs?

And for the most part, they did a good job against Houston, but the Saints, Chargers and even the Rams have done much better against the Oilers.

And then there's the Denver game.

Everyone was excited about the fact that the Chiefs prevented Elway from ripping their hearts out in the final two minutes.

But how tough was that when the Broncos were self-destructing with two fumbles lost and a whopping 14 penalties for 75 yards?

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI

They won't cut it against the Raiders.

Starting tailback Nick Bell returns this week. If you don't remember the name, think back to the 1992 playoffs when he ran over, around and through Chiefs' defenders for 100-plus yards.

Behind the best left side in football, led by tackle Gerald Perry, expect the same or as good a performance this week.

Unfortunately for the Chiefs, the passing game is in sync for the Raiders as well. Quarterback Jeff Hostetler is everything the Raiders thought he would be and more.

He's mobile, accurate, and most importantly, he doesn't make mistakes. But to be a real Raider quarterback, you've got to be able to throw the deep ball, which he proved he could do against the Seahawks in week two.

As long as he stays away from cornerback Dale Carter — the Chiefs' best defensive player — he'll be able to deliver the ball to the fastest set of receivers in the league, such as Rocket Ismail, Alexander Wright and Tim Brown.

Chiefs fans entered this season with awfully high hopes, and I don't want to ruin that for them. But the Raiders will win this Sunday because they're better.

My prediction: Raiders 27, Chiefs 7.

FAREWELL

Royals win in Brett's finale

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — George Brett, the most enduring sports figure this city has known, bid farewell in pre-game ceremonies prior to Wednesday's game when the Royals beat the Cleveland Indians 3-2 .

Brett, who played his entire 20-year career in a Royals uniform, was honored before the game with taped highlights of his career played on the giant Kauffman Stadium television screen. Among the special moments were the Pine Tar game and the home run in Game 3 of the 1980 championship series that put the Royals in their first World Series.

He was given a standing ovation when his name was announced in the lineup and a longer ovation when the tape was over and he was shown live in the dugout.

His teammates then took the field and presented him a pair of jet skis, a piece of the Astroturf that Brett hates and a signed jersey.

"You're the greatest person we've ever known," said Jamie Quirk, a Royals coach and Brett's best friend. "It's been an incredible honor to have been able to play with you."

Brett was in a jolly mood, thanking the fans; Muriel Kauffman, the wife of late owner Ewing Kauffman; and the board of directors, with whom he will now work as vice president of baseball operations.

"And I want to thank the Cleveland Indians," Brett said, turning to the Indians dugout. "Somebody had to be here."

Then, turning to point at Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove, he said, "It might as well have been you, Hargrove."

Brett then searched out Indians lead-off man Kenny Lofton, who was on base four times in a 3-2 Royals loss Tuesday.

"Where's Kenny Lofton," Brett said. Finding him, Brett joked: "I hate you, Kenny Lofton. I really hate you."

It was the last game in the only home stadium that Brett has known.

A sell-out crowd was on hand and the number of media credentials issued was triple a normal game.

The atmosphere was festive.

Long lines formed well before game time for the 5,000 general admission tickets — the only seats left. When the gates opened, fans ran for the choice seats.

"I was here the day (in 1980) he went over .400," said Phillip Burruss of suburban Independence, Mo. "I may have seen George play a hundred times or more. I can't believe I'll never see him play again. I wouldn't have missed this game for the world."

Tennis star returns in 1994

NEW YORK (AP) — Martina Navratilova, one of the greatest players in professional tennis history, said 1994 will be her final year.

She said her schedule next year will include a return to the French Open, a Grand Slam tournament she has not played since 1988.

Currently ranked third in the world, Navratilova has won 165 singles titles, including four this year. But she has not won a Grand Slam singles crown since 1990.

Navratilova was in New York to promote the Virginia Slims Championships, to be played Nov. 15-21 at Madison Square Garden.

Navratilova has won at least one singles title every year since 1973. Since 1975, she has won at least two tournaments for 19 consecutive years.

Her 1,394 match victories are the most of any pro player, man or woman, and she has earned more than $19 million in her career.

A decade ago, Navratilova changed women's tennis with her attention to fitness and diet. She dominated the sport in 1983, losing only one match — that in the fourth round of the French Open, a loss that kept her from winning all four Grand Slam singles titles in a calendar year.

▶K-STATE MEN GOLFERS TAKE 9TH PLACE IN FLORIDA TOURNAMENT

Jacksonville, Fla. — The K-State men's golf team ended with a score of 928 to take ninth place out of 14 teams at the First Coast Intercollegiate Golf Tournament. The tournament was held hosted by the University of Jacksonville.

The five-member golf team combined to shoot a 313 today after carding a 307 and a 308 in the first two rounds.

The leading scorer was sophomore Jason Losch, who moved from 11th place at the start of the day to a tie at sixth place. In his three rounds, Losch had rounds of 74, 75 and 75 for a total of 224.

Golf coach Mark Elliott said he had mixed emotions after the tournament.

"We did some good things, but we made too many mistakes," said Elliott, whose team played in its tournament of the year.

Chad Judd and Brett Waldman tied for 31st with scores of 233, while Sean Robertson carded a 243 to tie for 56th and Troy Halterman dropped from 42nd at the start of the day to finish tied at 59th with a score of 245.

The men's next tournament is the Grand Canyon Invitational Oct.4-5 at Phoenix, Ariz. The next tournament for the K-State women's team is the Shocker Fall Classic Oct.12-13 in Wichita.

▶KARINA KUREGIAN LOSES IN THIRD ROUND AFTER WINNING EARLIER

Jacksonville, Miss. — K-State tennis player Karina Kuregian won her second-round match, but was defeated in the next round of the Skytel National Clay Court Championship on Wednesday.

The junior won her second round match to No. 5 seed Branaca Elsberry of Northwestern 6-4, 6-3 earlier in the day. She lost in the third round to Valerie Sprenger of Mississippi 3-6,4-6 to be eliminated from the tournament. A win would had qualified Kuregian for the main draw of the clay court championship

Kuregian is a native of Armenia, a former Republic of the Soviet Union, who transferred to K-State this year.

K-State's next tournament is the Wildcat/Travelers Express Invitation this Saturday and Sunday at the L.P. Washburn Tennis Courts.

SEPTEMBER 30, 1993 A COLLEGIAN SPECIAL SECTION ABOUT K-STATE FACULTY AND STAFF KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

PEOPLE & PROJECTS

■ Dance programs gets instructor from abroad

The K-State dance program's newest faculty member has just arrived from Europe.

Vera Orlock, assistant professor of dance, performed, taught and traveled throughout Europe for two years before coming to K-State three weeks ago.

"I took this job because I felt lots of my creative energy was going into making travel plans," Orlock said.

She teaches ballet, modern dance and improvisation. Her classes range in size from eight to 25 students.

Orlock said she feels the most difficult part of her job is evaluating the progress of 25 individual students.

"It's not like you take an exam and grade it — most of it is based on students' physical skills, and that takes a lot of paying attention," she said.

A native of Philadelphia, Orlock had never been to Kansas before May when she came for an interview.

"I'm impressed by the openness of spirit and the genuine kindness of the people in Kansas," she said.

Orlock, a dance student since age 5, received both her bachelor's degree in harp and music education and her master's degree in dance and theater from Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio.

She has taught dance at Indiana University and the University of North Carolina and performed with various dance companies.

She has also been a faculty member at the School of Body-Mind Centering in Amherst, Mass.

"She has a good national and international reputation as a teacher, choreographer and performer," Achmed Valk, director of the dance program, said.

■ K-State alumnus returns to practice at Lafene

Lafene's newest doctor has returned to K-State after a 38-year absence.

Dr. Delbert Larson received his bachelor's degree in 1955 and his master's degree in 1956 from K-State.

The student health center, called the College Hospital, was located in a surplus military barracks about 150 feet from Anderson Hall when he attended K-State, Larson said.

"Things have changed a bit since I was here," he said.

Prior to returning to K-State in August, Larson practiced at a family health clinic in Hiawatha for 28 years. He has experience working with patients of all ages, from newborns to the elderly.

"It's nice to work with a more healthy group," Larson said. "There are certain things I miss, but I enjoy the young, active people here."

He decided to return to K-State because he felt it was time for a change.

"I wanted to do something different, and student health was something I looked into," Larson said. "I liked the more regular hours, and I was interested in the college community."

Typically, about 30 students enter Larson's office each day, he said.

Larson's extensive medical experience was a key advantage when considering applicants, Moeller said.

"He's a physician that has a wealth of good medical experience," Moeller said. "He has practiced for almost three decades."

■ Small business center gives financial advice

If you want to start a business, a couple of people at K-State-Salina can help you.

Patricia Mills, regional director of the Small Business Development Center at K-State-Salina, and administrative assistant Pat McCollum provide business counseling to clients who have or want to start a small business. They give assistance in the areas of marketing, finance, personnel and accounting, Mills said.

"Ninety percent of our business counseling is one-on-one to help solve business problems," Mills said. "We've taken about 500 clients since school started."

The center's services are free except for seminars, which have a small fee.

"Low-cost seminars are $13 each," Mills said. "We get speakers — experts in the field of need."

Reading new literature on the small-business field is another one of the center's duties, McCollum said.

"Someone may come in with new information, and we have to research it," she said. "The information we get in for entrepreneurs is changing all the time."

The center serves nine counties, and there is also one associate center at Cloud County Community College.

The center gets funding from several organizations, McCollum said.

"We get grant money from Small Business Administration and from Kansas Department of Commerce. The University also gives us money."

The money goes for wages, reference materials and travel. However, the center does not advertise; it relies on word of mouth, McCollum said.

"We'll go around to the Chamber of Commerce and banks and business associations to let them know we're here to help," she said.

McCollum began at the center in July 1992. Mills has been the center's director since 1989.

University employees work the night shift

Spending a late night on campus is a regular occurrence for some. Several campus workers stay awake during late-night and early-morning hours because their jobs require it.

K-State Police is one department that works all night.

For Lt. Rick Howard, such late evenings are a regular part of his schedule.

Howard said he and five others work the shift from 4 p.m. to midnight, but he has worked the graveyard shift before.

"I applied for the evening shift when I first got on with the department eight years ago. Although I don't work past midnight now, it isn't your traditional 9-to-5 job," he said.

Howard said he feels sometimes people take for granted those who work late at night.

"I work until midnight, but I know what it's like to work even later — you get used to it, but until you do, it's tough," he said.

"Sometimes people shun at the idea of working that late, but they sympathize with it and know it's a necessary thing to keep a facility functioning 24 hours a day.

"Traditionally, we're the busiest shift for the department, criminal-wise.

"Most of the time for the day people is spent with traffic, parking and occasional criminal activities. Needless to say, the late shift keeps everyone on duty busy," Howard said.

Campus police handles incidents involved on campus, greek houses, KSU Foundation properties or any other location affiliated with the University, Howard said.

One disadvantage to working such a shift could be the loss of family time, but in Howard's house, the night shift suits his family's needs.

"I work until midnight, but I know what it's like to work even later— you get used to it, but until you do, it's tough."

"It works out well in our household. My wife works during the day, and with me working at night, we don't have to send our children to day care," Howard said.

Directly across campus, in the basement of Farrell Library, another group of people work throughout the night.

Computing and Network Services has a staff on hand day and night to help with administrative work.

Nowland has been working the shift five days a week for the past four years. She has been with CNS for 13 years and said she doesn't mind the late shift.

"I didn't choose this shift, but it really isn't that bad. We keep very busy on this shift, because we process more jobs at night than the day people.

"Basically, what I do is handle any business transactions and different administrative work for the University, whereas most of the day work is spent dealing with machine problems throughout campus, and they tend to have more paper work," Nowland said.

She works with two students and a superviser, who usually come in at 11 p.m.

"There are a few people I work with; so, it's not like I work totally alone," Nowland said.

K-State faculty, staff and graduate teaching assistants competed in a faculty/staff golf tournament last Friday at Rolling Meadows Golf Course in Junction City.

Steve Martini, assistant director of recreational services, was in charge of the event.

Martini said the tournament was played using Texas Scramble rules with four-person teams.

"Each person tees off, and you play the best shot throughout the hole. You always play the best shot and record one score from each hole," Martini said.

The teams were co-ed, and they were flighted into three different groups, so there is a winner in each flight, he said.

"The faculty and staff really enjoy it. It is a chance to get together with their friends, play golf and have a good time," Martini said. "That is what intramurals are all about."

Diana Robertson, area coordinator for the Department of Housing and Services, has participated in the tournament for three years.

"It is a chance to do something recreational and fun with colleagues in our office and a chance to meet other faculty and staff members across campus," Robertson said.

Thirty-eight of the 45 teams showed up to play, but some of the teams did not play because of the weather, Martini said.

The winners in the first flight, Bruce Snead, Harry Rainbolt, Rollie Sears and Martini, shot a 64. The second flight winners, Susan Butterfield, Diana Robertson, Patti Hagemeyer and Andy Fink, shot a 70. The third flight winners, Keith Ratzloff, Randy Griffith, Mel Klinkner and Priscilla Roddy, shot a 75.

Gift certificates were given to the winners of each flight from their entry fee, Martini said.

The University has three tournaments a year in the fall spring and summer. They are specifically for faculty, retired faculty, staff and GTAs.

LEGAL

Attorney associaton educates public on ethics, ads

KIM DILLON
Collegian

The American Bar Association is trying to improve the images of both the legal system and lawyers.

The ABA has four programs that are part of a new communications plan going into effect this fall.

A public opinion poll conducted in January by the ABA showed a negative impression of attorneys, Mike Scanlon, director of Communications for the ABA, said.

The Client Relations Program is a project designed to help improve communications between lawyers and their clients and to improve the business practices of law firms.

An educational program to inform the public about the attorney ethics disciplinary system, a process that allows complaints against lawyers to be addressed, will also be put into effect.

The poll showed the public has the impression lawyers, alone, are policing themselves. The ABA wants to show that state judicial systems are largely involved with the disciplinary system.

Another program the ABA is implementing is based on spreading public education about attorneys. They want to educate people about pro bono services, which are time and skills donated to needy people or organizations by lawyers.

The Kansas Bar Association and the ABA give awards to attorneys that do a great deal of pro bono work, Dan Hejtmanek, Topeka attorney, said.

He said he is in favor of what the ABA is trying to accomplish.

A policy to regulate legal advertising is also on the ABA's list. It is a First Amendment right for lawyers to advertise, but the ABA has the right to regulate the advertising, Scanlon said.

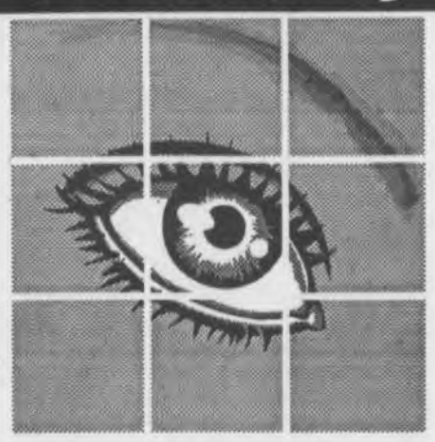
He said the poll found sleazy advertisements on late-night television are the main contributing factor to the negative opinion of lawyers.

The regulations will be stricter, and a panel will judge whether an advertisement is dignified and professional before it gets on the air. There will also be stronger enforcement of the advertising regulations, he said.

"I do agree that all of those are worthy projects from the standpoint of the Bar and the public," Richard Seaton, University attorney, said.

However, not all lawyers feel the effect of negative opinions from the general public.

Stan Morgan, Manhattan attorney, said the firm he works for has positive relations with its clients.



He said he has not been in contact with negative feelings from the public.

Very little TV advertising is done by Manhattan lawyers. The legal advertisements are usually done in larger cities, Morgan said.

Gubernatorial candidate speaks on women's roles

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Gubernatorial candidate Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, Wednesday afternoon spoke about the changes in the attitudes toward women in politics.

"As the faces of power have changed, it has affected issues and the style of governing in the legislature," Wagnon said.

Wagnon, who has been elected to six concurrent terms to the Kansas Legislature, spoke to K-State students in the Union Little Theatre as part of Young Democrats' political-awareness week.

She said initially she was the only woman member on committees.

The men in the committees had been inclusive and at first had stereotyped her, she said.

"They would ask me, 'What will the women think,' as if I was the representative for all of femininity," Wagnon said.

"I was the first woman to be head of the tax committee, a subject not normally thought to be a woman's issue," she said.

Wagnon worked to pass a gender-balance bill in the house that would have required equal representation for women on Kansas governing boards, but it failed in Senate.

Wagnon

However, Wagnon said people are more sensitive to having women on governing boards.

Wagnon discussed her battle in the Legislature for pay equity for women.

"When I first looked at the issue, women made 59 cents on the dollar compared to men. Now they make 73 cents, but that is still a 27-cent deficit," she said.

Wagnon said 1994 was going to be the year of women governors. There are only three female governors in the United States today, but there are 27 women running nationwide for governor in the next election year.

Wagnon was asked if Joan Finney's governorship had spoiled other women's chances for the position.

"We had 43 male governors, and when one of them didn't do a very good job, no one suggested, let's get a woman," she said.

Wagnon said her No. 1 priority if elected governor would be jobs.

She said promoting a good business climate, good schools, safe communities and good health care were all factors in creating jobs in Kansas.

"We can't balance the budget unless we control health-care costs," Wagnon said.

On national health-care reform, Wagnon said she had been skeptical of the feasibility of the plan but felt it could be achieved.

Wagnon said she hoped the Legislature would take action on the issue in the next session.

"There are things that we can do to control costs to help position us for national reform,"she said.

Wagnon discussed gathering people into community health-care buying groups, the use of nurse practitioners and keeping clinics open later to cut emergency-room costs.

"Children never throw-up until 5:15. Keeping clinics open later hours would cut down on visits to expensive emergency rooms.

"When you don't have health care, it is the worst thing," she said. "Our goal is for you never to have to feel like they do."

Pi Kaps new residence to fill needs

"We're hoping to put people there next fall," said Andy Larson, senior in geology and president of the Pi Kap house.

After the fire the Pi Kaps wanted to rebuild, but the city denied their request to build a larger house. The next option was to build on an empty lot, but the Fijis already has made an offer for that lot. A request to build a new greek house on campus was proposed, but funding wasn't available. The best solution was to buy an existing house, said Lindemuth.

"The downstairs will be completely new and different than the Fijis," Larson said.

"There's still a lot of work to be done," said Lindemuth.

Pi Kap alumni and parents had a fundraiser to buy new furniture, he said.

"Alumni are pitching in to buy some really nice furniture," said Stan Sugden, senior in accounting and Pi Kap treasurer.

"We've had a lot of help from nationals. They've got a lot of confidence we're going to grow," he said.

The Pi Kaps are planning a grand opening during the K-State vs. KU game, Oct. 9.

Student adjusts to class size, self-dependence

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

A transfer student to K-State said she wants to be a role model for others someday.

Angela Overmiller, a transfer student from Butler County Community College and junior in elementary education, said she loves all sports and hopes to coach basketball.

"I love working with kids and people," Overmiller said. "I want to be a teacher because I want to make a difference in someone's life. I want to be a positive role model."

"When I worked at a day care center those kids looked up to me for everything," Overmiller said. "I think everyone deserves a good education. I also think activities are important. That's why I want to be a coach."

Overmiller had adjustments to make in coming to K-State.

"K-State forces you to do more things on your own," she said.

Overmiller

This is different from Butler, Overmiller said.

"There they did more things for you, but here you're more independent," she said. "At Butler, teachers know your name."

Part of this can be attributed to the size difference between the two.

"The biggest thing is the size of classes and campus," Overmiller said. "At Butler, my biggest class had 30 students. Here, it's my smallest class."

Overmiller said when she visited K-State in high school, she knew she would eventually end up at the University.

"When I came here in high school for Future Farmers of America activities, I liked the campus and the town," Overmiller said. "It's big, and the campus is pretty. The first thing I noticed was what it looked like."

While at Butler, Overmiller had a full scholarship in livestock judging and has continued this activity at K-State.

"Right now I am a junior judger, but in December I will be a senior judger, if I make the team," Overmiller said.

Award-winning play explores modern problems

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Ebony Theatre Co. will present August Wilson's Tony award-winning play, "Fences" starting tonight.

"The play addresses the plight of the African American male in modern-day society," Director Shirlyn Henry Brown said.

"Fences," set in 1957 in Pittsburgh, Penn., features Troy Maxson, played by Sean Parks, junior in computer science, as a strong patriarch who believes in taking responsibility for his family and those he cares for.

Troy was a star in the Negro baseball leagues, where only the ball and the fence were white. He adopts this as a symbol of "I did it!" and begins to build fences around those he loves, Brown said.

While some people build fences to keep people in, others build them to keep them out. Troy keeps people out. He is a parent who loves too much and pushes his family away.

"This play has a message that speaks to everyone, whether that be a parent, spouse, child or friend," Henry said.

"Fences" opened on Broadway in 1986 and won many acclaimed awards. Wilson received the Pulitzer Prize, and James Earl Jones won the Tony for best actor as Troy. The production also received a Tony for best directing.

"August Wilson is one of the premier black playwrights. This is one of the best scripts in American Theater," Ayne Steinkuehler, graduate student in speech, said.

Walter Dallas, the artistic director of Philadelphia's Freedom Theater, will be at K-State Sep. 30-Oct. 2 to critique the production. Dallas has received an Emmy nomination for his first play, an Audelco nomination for Best Director and a proclamation, "Walter Dallas Day," from Atlanta's Mayor Maynard Jackson.

SHOW INFORMATION

- "Fences" will be performed at 8 p.m. Sept. 30-Oct. 2 and Oct. 7-9 at Nichols Theatre.
- Tickets are $5 for students and senior citizens and $7 for the general public. They can be purchased at McCain box office between noon and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Sanitation one duty of county government

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Riley County Commissioner Karen McCulloh had lunch with six students and one professor Wednesday as part of political-awareness week.

She talked about the youth task force and the Unified School District 383 school bond issue to be voted on Oct. 5. McCulloh said she was surprised at the public response to a new sanitation code.

"It's one of the things we have received a lot of public input on," McColloh said. "We did not realize it would be such a hot potato."

She also said she got the opportunity to gain knowledge about lagoons and septic tanks.

"Before I knew it, I was knee deep in you know what," she said.

She talked at length about how more and more people have made it necessary to increase health regulations.

"It's a lot different now from 1860 when people could just throw their trash in the river," McCulloh said. "The business of government has grown incredibly complicated. It's like a lawyers dream."

A youth task force is researching juvenile crime, targeting those older than 18 years of age who are not K-State students. She said the group is examining conditions such as recreation for these residents in the county.

McCulloh also said she supports the school bond issue for USD 383 and said there is a need for a new jail facility.

"As a county commissioner, I support it," she said. "I would like to see it get settled and get it out of the way so people aren't taxed to death funding these projects."

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?
If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.
There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.
Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.
All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

Numb needs a big hug, new professor

Dear Cassandra,

I think I'm going to evaporate.

Here's my problem: I haven't slept in like, three days. I think I'm starting to hallucinate. This week has been and continues to be hell. With four tests, a large project and a paper, I'm just about ready to break into little tiny person pieces.

Further, I'm having surgery on Friday, and so, my mind is preoccupied with that. Doing much else is difficult, but I have been plugging away. I have to.

To top it off, I went to one of my profs and asked if maybe I could hand in my paper next week. I even mentioned my surgery. He was callous and nonchalant with his lack of concern. Essentially it was, "no way, slacker."

I left his office and just started to cry. All of my anxiety about the surgery and exhaustion from the week just came out all at once. I still can't think straight.

So, how do I cope with this unrelenting stress? My professor certainly didn't understand. You'd think he'd have the capacity for empathy somewhere in that crusty Ph.D.-professor heart of his.

I just want to crawl into bed and not emerge for a week. I'm losing the stress battle, big-time.

Signed,
Numb and losing ground

Dear Numb,

First, you need a big hug, friend. You didn't say, but I'm hoping next week will be easier for you. And with surgery approaching, you will definitely need time just to relax and heal — physically and mentally.

As for your schoolwork, we're still early enough in the semester — you won't mess up your grades too badly if you need to let something go.

A word to your prof: Students aren't just students. They have lives too, with bumps in the road. Maybe you could try, just once, to understand that.

STICK generationally conscious

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

STICK is rising to the top of the rock 'n' roll woodpile, but the group's debut release of "Heavy Bag" carries a mighty weight.

That's because the Lawrence-based rock group is challenging an intimidating and sometimes indifferent group. Like slapping a cold, wet washcloth over the face of a snoozing giant, the STICK mission involves a re-awakening of American society.

"People are complacent and don't challenge themselves," Mark Smirl, vocalist for STICK, said. "There are a lot of special, motivated people, but the masses are growing."

At age 25, Smirl said he feels his own generation is letting the human species down.

"We're the twenty-something group," he said. "We're the slackers."

All individuals have the power of creativity and destruction, Smirl said, but only motivated people are getting the job done.

Smirl said he blames television for most of today's apathy, although he admits a few shows are still appealing.

"Television is pretty stupid. It's OK in moderation, but right down to the clothes you wear? It really is crap," he said.

Most of the lyrics from the band's debut album reflect this dynamic opinion. Smirl said songs such as "Stoning" attempt to combat overpowering and influential establishments.

"We're throwing it in the face of the system," he said.

Part of the system, however, is helping the band state its point of view. Arista Records has guaranteed STICK two album releases and has provided a salary to cover living, recording and equipment expenses.

"What I would now like to see is ourselves set up financially, and although that may sound materialistic, we need to pay the bills," Smirl said.

Despite covering the tab, Arista Records has implemented a hands-off policy for STICK's music.

"We have complete creative control," Smirl said. "We feel very fortunate."

STICK

- Live at The Bottleneck, in Lawrence.
- Friday, 9:30 p.m.
- Featuring their debut compact disc, "Heavy Bag."

Gang-bangers start young

Manhattan schools not immune to effects of gangster culture

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

When hearing about gangs, the first thought is often of Los Angeles or New York. Now, Manhattan can join those cities.

"The big difference between Manhattan and cities like Denver, L.A., and Wichita, is Manhattan has a gang problem. The big cities have a gang catastrophe," said detective Frank Moldrup, Juvenile Officer for the Riley County Police Department Criminal Investigations Division.

Moldrup has been working in the division for three years. He said citizens should not worry. The problem is not near "catastrophe level" since the citizens of Manhattan have not done what many towns and cities have. That is, deny the fact there is a gang problem.

"Denial is the worst thing a community can do when there is a gang problem," Moldrup said. "The big cities admit denial was the greatest factor in creating their gang catastrophe."

Gangs mainly start in two ways, he said. Gang members from big cities may be given a choice to go to jail or leave town. They come to the small town and have immediate status.

Many gang members started gangs in the Midwest after cities like L.A. threw hundreds of them out.

Another way gangs begin is in the mentality of the youth population, Moldrup said.

"MTV promotes gang activity with rappers like ICE-T and Ice Cube. What they model and influence through the media is awful. The kids pick up on it and they decide to do the same thing," said Moldrup.

Second and third graders at Manhattan schools have been heard calling each other Crips since they think it is cool, Moldrup said.

"The child may not be an actual 'gang-banger,' but he is getting the mentality," Moldrup said. "By fourth and fifth grade, he will be more likely to hang out with hardcore bangers."

Each day bangers are getting younger, Moldrup said. They see their brothers and sisters in gangs. They see it as a way to get the attention and respect they cannot find at home.

Gang activity is slowly evolving in Manhattan, Moldrup said. From month to month, it has peaks and valleys of liveliness. Some gangs break up as soon as they form.

Nevertheless, he said, the community needs to be aware the influence is growing.

"It would be naive if we believed some of our youngsters aren't involved in gangs," said Marvin Marsh, principal at Manhattan Middle School.

Manhattan schools have already taken measures to confront the gang problem.

Both Jim Rezac, principal at Manhattan High School, and Marsh said they have implemented restrictions on wearing certain items of clothing which show gang affiliation by the color or some type of insignia.

The most popular item of clothing for this purpose is bandannas, which have been restricted at both the middle and high school level.Moldrup said pagers also should be outlawed in schools. Pagers are widely used by gang members for drug transactions.

Also, he said, the only phones students should have access to should be rotary dial phones. That way it is impossible for them to contact a pager.

Solutions go beyond banning material items.

Larry Liotta, principal at Lee Elementary School said he invites lecturers to school to speak on gang activity.

Liotta said his school makes use of the DARE (Drug Awareness Resistance Education) program put on by the RCPD. Also, Lee implemented a violence intervention program after a fight occurred last year.

Manhattan Middle School has many similar programs.

Alpha Phi Alpha, a K-State fraternity, puts on the Mentor Program at the middle school. They tutor children after school, participate with them in sporting activities, and lecture them on the evils of gang involvement.

Alpha Phi Alpha member, Omar Davis, sophomore in environmental design, said his fraternity has a lot to offer, since many of their members grew up in low-income areas where gang activity was high. He said the Mentor Program gives the kids motivation to better themselves and get an education.

"At this age, we can educate them before they are set in their ways," said Davis.

Most of these are preventative solutions. The tricky thing is dealing with someone who has been a gang member for years, Moldrup said.

Moldrup said the justice system fails to instill the fear in gang members caught committing crimes.

"I see the same kids come in time and time again for various crimes," Moldrup said.

The average gangbanger begins at age 12. As a result, most are tried as juveniles.

Moldrup said when a juvenile is tried, it will usually be six to nine months from the time of committing the crime. During that time the juvenile is allowed to go home and live his life as if nothing happened, he said.

"The kids need to have immediate repercussions for their activities," said Moldrup. "You don't spank a dog a couple of months after he has pooped on the floor."

Punishment usually does not change a gangbanger. One solution is to remove the "banger" from the gang, Moldrup said. The problem is in destroying the mentality and lifestyle the gang member has become accustom to.

Estimating the number of gang members in Manhattan is difficult since their numbers are continually fluctuating, he said.

"All we can do is keep trying to educate the children and accept the fact there is a problem," said Moldrup.

Vince Gill, Willie Nelson spotlighted at CMAs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Vince Gill captured five trophies at the Country Music Association's annual awards show Wednesday, but Willie Nelson won the audience's heart as he was inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame.

Gill received the entertainer of the year award, ending Garth Brooks' string at two straight, and the best male vocalist award.

His impassioned version of "I Still Believe in You" was voted song and album of the year, and he was among 11 country stars who shared the vocal event of the year award.

He took the honors in stride.

"I've always operated under the theory that I don't feel like I'm an entertainer," he said. "I just feel like I'm a musician and I sing songs."

Nelson, who shunned his trademark T-shirt, jeans and bandanna for formal attire, received a prolonged standing ovation as he was inducted into the country Music Hall of Fame.

"I really thought you had to die to get here," he said.

"So I went ahead and dressed up just in case," Nelson said.

Nelson sold Bibles and vacuum cleaners before his career as a singer and songwriter took off. On Wednesday, he became the 54th person inducted into the country Music Hall of Fame.

"I'm way ahead of the game," he said backstage. "Country music has given a lot more to me than I've given to it. I get to do what I want to do, live the way I want to live."

New diversity proposal to be ready by semester's end

"It is fairly urgent that we have some event to which people can come and get involved," Sandra Coyner, associate professor of women's studies, said.

The first draft of the proposal was read before the Committee on Academic Affairs last spring and sent back for further evaluation.

The draft proposed every student be required to complete at least three credits from a designated course list drawn up by the Diversity Overlay Requirement Committee.

The committee would be made up of faculty from each of the undergraduate colleges, representatives from American Ethnic Studies and Women's Studies and two at-large members.

Coyner said the committee should have an open structure so everyone has an opportunity to participate.

She said the advantage of having an explicitly representative committee is that people not only represent their own viewpoints but also the concerns of the students they represent.

"Some of the objections that I've heard are points very well taken," Coyner said.

"There are some people who are listening and who care about what they have to say."

Dan Lewerenz, student body director of multicultural affairs, said he was concerned the diversity-overlay requirements were better suited to students in arts and sciences than to those in other colleges because they have more elective requirements.

"Everyone admits that this would work much better for students in the other colleges if they had more student representation," he said.

Lewerenz said the new draft should be written by the end of this semester to be voted and passed by Faculty Senate in the spring.

Harriet Ottenheimer, professor of anthropology and director of the American Ethnic Studies Program, said the proposal needs fine tuning, but it is not likely to take a long time.

Interested students and faculty can make suggestions and volunteer for committees at an open meeting Wednesday night.

Front face damage

Henry Vogel, Manhattan, studies the damage to the front of his Oldsmobile after rear-ending another car Thursday afternoon at the intersection of Sarber Lane and McCall Road. Vogel hit Terri Crump, who was making a left-hand turn onto Sarber, after Vogel's sun visor swung down, blocking his vision. Even though the visor cut his forehead on impact, he refused treatment. Both drivers were able to drive their vehicles from the scene.

Gas tax rises today

Gas price up
4.3 cents/gallon

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

Gasoline consumers across the nation will have to reach a little deeper into their pockets beginning today for the petrol they use in their vehicles and equipment.

This extra expenditure is due to a new 4.3 cents-per-gallon federal gasoline tax leveled by the Clinton administration. The tax is planned to fund such social programs as welfare and health care.

Originally, President Clinton had proposed a tax that would increase taxes on all types of power. This plan was rejected by Congress, and what stands is a scaled-down model.

The tax, which will cost the average vehicle owner anywhere from $25 to $40 more each year than what he or she now pays for gasoline, will bring the federal tax on fuel up from 31 cents to 35 cents per gallon.

"The general feeling is that it is not fair," Allen Schwerdt, general manager for Tri-Lakes distributing Inc., a Manhattan gasoline-supply company, said. "The problem is that it goes to things like welfare and medicine. Before, gasoline taxes always went for roads."

Schwerdt said hidden costs will exist from the trucking industry in the form of increased product prices passed onto the consumer. Consumers will begin to pay more for products that are shipped.

"It will cost you more all the way around for items such as bananas and lumber, which are shipped by truck," he said. "A good truck averages around 5 miles per gallon, and they will have to pass the additional costs on. "The trucking industry may not pass on these costs right away, but they will eventually," he said.

The average price for a gallon of unleaded gas in Manhattan is about $1.08. This price is, on average, higher than surrounding communities such as Junction City and Topeka. Under the new tax, Manhattan prices will increase even further.

For example, at Frank's 66 service station in Junction City, a gallon of unleaded gasoline costs 95.9 cents, a full 13.9 cents cheaper than gasoline in Manhattan.

"Lots of people tell us that gas is cheaper in Junction City than it is in Manhattan," Russ Nixon, assistant manager at Franks 66, said. "I guess it's because it's a college town, and they know that gas must be bought there."

"I think it's because of the college," Gloria Moyer, manager at Woods, said. "They know they will pay for it. But we have the military, and we don't. We get a lot of Manhattan customers, and they all gripe about the prices in Manhattan."

However, Schwerdt said there is another reason why fuel prices are so much higher in Manhattan.

"Junction City is a cash market," he said. "They sell their gasoline at cost half the time. Their markup is on items such as pop and beer. They get you to stop with the gas prices and then make a lot more once you're in the store."

Schwerdt also said this system of using low gas prices to lure customers is popular in Ogden and Topeka, but the Manhattan market is different.

"Manhattan is more of a credit-card market," he said. "Overall, I'd say the market in Junction City is about 80 percent cash and 20 percent credit, while in Manhattan it is just the reverse," Schwerdt said.

New grading policy raises campus concern

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

A new grading policy at K-State will be implemented in the fall of 1994.

The plus/minus grading system will take the place of the current traditional grading system.

"The system is a modification of the existing grade system, intended to give faculty and students a chance to report performance more precisely," said Ken Brooks, Faculty Senate chair from the College of Architecture and Design.

Brooks said the system was the result of a split vote in Faculty Senate and is intended to better serve the students.

In addition to the regular grades, this system will add pluses and minuses, Brooks said.

Each plus or minus grade will have a numerical value attached to them, Aruna Michie, president of Faculty Senate, said.

For example, an A- would receive 3.7 points, a B+ receives 3.3 points, B receives 3.0 and B-, 2.7.

Brooks said there will be no A+ or D-.

"I am happier with the new system," Michie said. "I have graded under both systems and prefer the plus/minus scale. If a student is doing strong B work, I think they should be rewarded for that by giving them a B+."

Brooks said he has taught under the plus/minus system.

"I found that many students improved grades in my courses. It takes less effort to raise a grade three-tenths of a point than a whole letter grade," he said.

The overall GPA of the students stayed the same, Brooks said.

Concerns about the new system have been raised.

Students who are highly competitive for scholarships have raised some questions, Michie said.

"Those students who had a 4.0 might now have a 3.7," she said.

Students with low GPAs were also a concern.

"The system will help out those students. They would be more likely to get a C- than a D if they have been working hard," Brooks said.

Senator alleges intern selection process unfair

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

A student senator suggested Thursday that impeachment charges be brought against Student Senate intern coordinator Trent Ledoux.

Elsa Diaz, engineering senator, said Ledoux should be removed from the position because she believes he treated interviewees unfairly during the Senate intern selection process.

"The process was unfair," Diaz said. "Out of 83 different applications, he cut 40 to 45 by himself without consultation."

Ledoux denied the allegations.

"I was the only person who could sit in on all 45 interviews," he said. "After I made the initial cut, my decision was not final. I received input from committee member Rachel Smith, who picked two people I cut and said we should interview them."

Diaz also said the same criteria was not used to evaluate all those who were interviewed.

"It is my opinion that the questions asked the interviewees weren't consistent," Diaz said. "I don't think that's the way you interview."

Ledoux said the process was consistent because Diaz, who sat in on seven interviews, made it so.

"She misled the Student Senate body," Ledoux said. "She did ask the same question. She asked, 'What do you perceive the position of intern to be?'"

Matt Reed, Graduate School senator, said he thought a few questions should be consistent.

"The others should be structured to bring out the unique qualities of the applicants," Reed said. "All people are different, and they respond differently. In the interest of fairness to the interviewees, a canned interview is not right."

Diaz said the inconsistent questioning allowed Ledoux to discriminate against some people.

"Two of the people who were selected were from the same hometown as Trent," Diaz said.

Ledoux said place of residence played no role in the selections.

"At no time during the interviews did I allude they were from my hometown," Ledoux said. "I'm after quality people."

Clayton Wheeler, business administration senator and selection committee member, said he did not know where any of the interviewees were from.

"I had no idea," Wheeler said.

Sarah Caldwell, arts and sciences senator, said the proper way to deal with the problem is to establish a committee to review flaws in the process instead of Ledoux, who administered the interviews.

"We could do this instead of trying to impeach a person who had good intentions," Caldwell said.

Diaz said a committee was an option if Ledoux was willing to delay a revision in the Senate bylaws that raised the number of Senate interns from 18 to 25.

Students join in politics and fun

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Students with an appetite for free pizza and an interest in politics met Rep. Tom Sawyer, D-Sedgwick, who is also the minority leader in the Kansas House of Representatives, Thursday night.

"Pizza and Politics" was organized by K-State's Young Democrats to provide an informal atmosphere to ask questions, said Mike Smith, senior in nuclear engineering and secretary of KSU Young Democrats.

"We wanted something that was more informal so students would come," Smith said. "Anytime you mention free food, it's a calling card for students."

Sawyer said he was involved with a young democrats organization while attending Wichita State University. He said he thinks it is important for people to get involved in the government at an early age.

"I'd get involved now and take an interest in the government because it does affect our daily lives," Sawyer said.

Richard Baier, senior in political science and economics and president of the KSU Young Democrats, said it is a privilege to have Sawyer speak at K-State.

"He's really good with young people," Baier said. "We appreciate him coming."

Sawyer said it's easy to relate to K-State students and the younger generation because he was elected into office at 26 years of age.

Martha Shosa, Manhattan resident, said Sawyer is an impressive young man.

"I'm hoping that with leadership such as Tom's, things will change," Shosa said. "When you have that kind of leadership, you can count on it."

"Pizza and Politics" was an opportunity to get acquainted with the KSU Young Democrats.

"I really just wanted to meet some people and see what the organization was about," Dan Parcel, junior in economics, said.

"I've been trying to get involved in the Democratic Party," Russell Fortmeyer, freshman in architectural engineering, said. "I've been to a meeting before and went to see Jim Slattery."

"Pizza and Politics," was the fifth event of the political-awareness week.

The week will conclude with a speech by Rep. Joseph Kennedy, D-Mass., who will speak at 3:30 p.m. today in Union Forum Hall.

EARTHQUAKE STRIKES INDIA

The quake, which measured at least 6.0 on the Richter scale, ripped through southwest India at 3:56 a.m. It was felt at least 400 miles from the epicenter and caused a wide swath of damage.

Authorities feared the death toll would rise substantially in India's worst quake in a half century.

Many villages were leveled so quickly as the earth shook violently and opened crevices that people were crushed inside their homes while sleeping, news agencies reported.

An estimated 3,000 people were killed in each of two districts, Umarga and Killari, and the total death toll was more than 6,200.

United Way challenges Student Senate

A challenge was made to Student Senate Thursday night to raise thousands of dollars for the United Way of Riley County.

To start the fund-raising effort on campus, Michelle Smith, chairperson of Student Senate's United Way committee, challenged all senators to raise thousands of dollars within their respective colleges.

The goal for K-State is $19,054.

Derek Kreifels, student representative on the University's United Way committee, said the United Way will be conducting various fund-raising events throughout campus.

On Oct. 4-6, the committee will have a table set up outside the Union Stateroom for student donations. The Alpha Chi Omega sorority house has offered to help, Kreifels said.

The committee also will present information about the benefits of giving to the organization at the dining halls, Kreifels said. Tables will be set up to take donations.

"It is our right, as citizens of Manhattan, for the nine months out of a year to give back to the city," he said. "With the money, we will be able to help flood victims and others in need."

Many senators said they believe the University's effort is a positive fund-raising cause.

"I feel this is a good thing," Angie Mohr, human ecology senator, said. "Everyone who has should help those that do not have."

Eric Schmutz, arts and sciences senator, said he feels this is one of a few times Senate has put money toward a positive goal.

"In the year and a half I have been involved in Senate, this the second time this year I feel that we're giving money to a legitimate cause."

Vet med to sponsor animal conference

K-State will be host to the third annual Midwestern Exotic Animal Medicine Conference Oct. 2-3 at Frick Auditorium.

The conference, sponsored by the College of Veterinary Medicine, will give veterinarians and veterinary students the chance to learn the most recent information on the medical and surgical management of exotic pets.

The population explosion of these animals, especially among reptiles and birds, has created a need for more education in the field of exotic-animal medicine, James Carpenter, associate professor of clinical sciences, said.

Exotic animals offer pet owners an alternative to the typical dog and cat, Carpenter said. They are a little more compatible with apartment life and usually take up less space.

Unfortunately, Carpenter said, some animal owners don't have an adequate understanding of the environmental and nutritional requirements of these animals.

"Many times reptiles aren't provided with proper heat," Carpenter said.

"Reptiles kept in low heat often develop digestive problems and are more prone to disease," he said.

Another misconception among exotic-bird owners is that birds can function on an all-seed diet, Carpenter said. Birds on an all-seed diet are susceptible to disease. Carpenter advocates a diet strictly of nutritional pellets. Seeds are fine, but they account for about 20 percent of avian nutritional needs, he said.

Problems are much harder to detect with exotic animals than domesticated animals, Jeff Baier, part-time intern and researcher, said.

"Exotic animals hide their symptoms of disease," Baier said. "In the wild, if they appear diseased or sick, they are the first to go."

"I considered impeachment because I tried to go to you and ask for this to be tabled, and you refused to do so," Diaz said to Ledoux. "If you're not even listening to what my concerns are, I'll go ahead."

Ledoux said if Diaz was concerned about how he coordinated the selection process, she should have told him.

"If the Student Senate feels I am not doing my job correctly, I expect to hear about it," Ledoux said. "If I'm messing up, I expect to be told."

"I will not apologize about how I run this program. I know I did it right."

In other business, senators were updated on the expansion of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?

If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.

There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.

Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.

All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

Put Army National Guard in your college plans. Call:

Delena Dyson (right), sophomore in sociology and pre-physical therapy, helps Geraldine Strauss, Manhattan resident, pick out patterns for a new quilt Monday afternoon at Strauss' house. Dyson volunteered with the Homeserve program after seeing flyers around campus. Strauss needed someone to help her mark sewing patterns.

Homeserve: piecing together friendships

Students learn values by helping elderly neighbors

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Delena Dyson and Geraldine Strauss have formed a deep friendship through quilting.

It has been a life-long hobby of Strauss, and with Dyson's help, it is one she can continue.

Dyson, sophomore in sociology and pre-physical therapy, is a first-year participant of the Homeserve project and spends three hours a week helping Manhattan resident Strauss with her quilting projects.

Homeserve is a service project of the Community Service Program.

It matches students with older residents who need regular home maintenance, small repairs and companionship, Carol Peak, director of the program, said.

"Participation is a really special experience and develops a special friendship as well as meeting needs," Peak said.

The Homeserve service project offers students an opportunity to learn from older generations, develop friendships and to give of themselves.

"I do all of the quilting," Strauss said. "My friend does the blocking and binding, because I can't see very well. Delena helps me to mark, match and cut out the material.

"I started quilting when I stayed with my grandma as a young child. I knew how to quilt before I even knew how to spell. My first project was a baby quilt for my cousin. I have always had it in my head."

Strauss said that the quilts she constructs are put to good use.

"I give them to my children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. I also make doll quilts and give them to the neighbor kids and my friends' grandchildren."

While spending time together, Dyson said she has grown very fond of Strauss.

"It makes me feel good to spend time with her," Dyson said. "She is not a complicated person. She's easy to be with, and we can talk about anything."

Dyson said spending time with Strauss makes history come to life.

"She has told me some great stories about what it was like to give birth at home. She told me about having premature twins without the aid of a doctor. It is a really exciting story.

"She also talks about growing up on a farm, the chores and activities."

Strauss inspires Dyson, who said she is amazed by her determination and zest.

"Geraldine has a lot of spunk in her," Dyson said. "She tries so hard to keep up with life. She puts out a lot of effort to fight growing old. She's determined to stay in her house and stay productive."

The program offers a form of escape for many of the students.

"I can just leave the school worries behind," Dyson said. "I can sit, cut material, and everything seems so simple."

Because of the time Dyson contributes, Strauss can continue the hobby she has always loved, and she is very appreciative of the time commitment.

"She thought of giving up quilting because of the burden on other people," Dyson said. "I told her not give it up, that I want to do it. I love coming over."

Peak said that many of the project's volunteers are close with their grandparents and place value in spending time with their elders. She encouraged students to apply for a match, because the program is still trying to meet the community's needs.

Dyson also encourages others to apply.

"It is a good program," she said. "You're given to someone, and you get so much out of it."

A free public education forum
Depression is an illness, not a weakness
A person with a depressive illness can't just "snap out of it." Depression is an illness involving physical symptoms, moods, and thoughts. Without treatment, symptoms can last for months, or even years. And depression is as common as it is misunderstood. It affects more than 15 million Americans each year.
The good news is 80 percent of people with depression are treated successfully with medications, psychotherapy, or a combination of both.
As part of National Mental Illness Awareness Week, The Menninger Clinic will present a free public Depression Education Forum that features
■ A presentation on depression by Don Rosen, MD, and Meredith Titus, PhD
■ The 30-minute film Depression: The Storm Within
■ A question and answer panel with Drs. Rosen and Titus; B.D. Ehler, psychopharmacologist; Bryce Miller, president of the National Depressive and Manic-depressive Association; and Flynn O'Malley, PhD, child psychologist
■ A voluntary, self-administered questionnaire, and
■ An opportunity, if you choose, to meet privately with a Menninger mental health professional. (This five-minute screening is designed to be informational and will provide free professional guidance, but it is not a substitute for a detailed, psychiatric evaluation.)
At Menninger we've been helping people with depression for 68 years. We invite you to learn more about this widely misunderstood and very treatable illness. This is an opportunity for you to help yourself or someone you know. No reservations required.

Clinton gas tax defies his promise of deficit reduction

In what is being called a deficit-reduction effort, a 4.3-cent-per-gallon gasoline-tax increase goes into effect today, bringing the tax to 18.4 cents per gallon.

Whatever happened to reducing the deficit? During the election, there were screams from the Clinton camp to reduce the deficit. Now the Clinton administration is doing quite the opposite.

This may be a way to pay for welfare and health-care reform. It is also a way to add to the troubles of the people who voted Clinton-Gore.

The gas-tax increase will cost the average driver between $25 and $40 more for gas each year.

This may not seem significant to a guy whose transportation is provided for by the taxpayers, but $40 means a lot to college students and struggling middle-class families.

These two groups, which were the backbone of Clinton's success as a presidential candidate, could use this money for such things as food.

The Clinton administration may think it's doing us a favor with this tax increase. It may even think this will reduce the deficit.

Others have suggested, and we agree, that this increase will have as much of an effect on the deficit as a glass of water has when added to Lake Michigan.

CAMPUS ESCORTS IMPROVE STUDENTS' SAFETY, AWARENESS

Three years ago, I was in Aggieville on Halloween night. I was walking with my cousin when some guy stepped out of the alley, grabbed my arm and tried to pull me into the alley. All I remember clearly now is how his hand was so big it fit completely around the upper part of my arm.

So, when I read about the women who were attacked in lots B-2 and B-3, I empathized with them. Luckily, Haymaker and Ford halls have combined escort services, and the campus should be safer now because of it.

To work for Haymaker/Ford escort service, you must live in those residence halls. They are also incorporating West Hall. Strong Complex (Putnam, Van Zile and Boyd halls) has its own escort service, as does Goodnow.

At Haymaker/Ford escort service, there is a woman present at all interviews and, beginning today, during all escorts.

In an interview with Lillian Beebe and Chris Ediger, the heads of Haymaker/Ford escort service, I learned the escort service is well-regulated, and records are kept of who goes out on call, the time of departure, time of arrival and who the person needing an escort is.

The escorts also are going to wear armbands with numbers for easier identification.

The escorts are not allowed to carry any weapons while on duty, and they are not allowed to exchange phone numbers with the woman while wearing the armband.

I asked if escorts were going to include places off campus, and Lillian and Chris told me because there are no car escorts allowed, it was unlikely. They did say, though, that escorts are available anywhere on campus, including the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the Veterinary Medical Center.

They also said reservations can be made to have an escort at any time, even in the middle of the night. Don't be afraid to wake the escort up, because they would much prefer that to having someone be attacked on campus.

As for the B-2 and B-3 thing, Chris told me if people get home late at night, they can go to Haymaker before going to the parking lot and pick up an escort. Although those parking lots are well lit, attacks can and do happen.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

If you still feel you don't want to contact an escort service, then Chris and Lillian had some suggestions to keep safer at night on campus.

The first is to take off the Walkman.

The second is to have your keys in your hand.

That way you're ready to get in your car, and you don't have to dig through your purse or backpack.

The third is to walk as if you have somewhere to go, and walk in well-lit areas.

If you don't screw around and look at the trees and the squirrels, you seem less vulnerable.

Finally, if you think someone is following you, go to one of the buildings that have people in them at night, such as Seaton or Durland.

If someone does approach or call to you at night, and you don't know or completely trust that person, then get away as best as you can.

It could mean your life.

Monumental changes merit more than brief story in the paper

Editor,

The most miraculous news came from South Africa, that after decades of oppression and untold brutalities, the black people of South Africa would be given a role in government, working toward the goal of the total end of apartheid. It brought tears of joy to my eyes. As in all just causes in an unjust world, the struggle may be long, but victory is certain.

I believe such a momentous occasion of color being given the right of self-determination in their own country deserves more than just a brief story. There was no story or headline that appeared on the front page more noteworthy, more world-impacting than this. I hope this was an oversight on the part of the Collegian Editorial Board and not a blatant case of "It's black people — who cares-itis."

Editorial makes assumptions about Faculty Senate's view

Editor,

With reference to your editorial regarding the diversity-overlay proposal (Collegian, Sept. 30), I would like to point out that Faculty Senate has expressed no opinion neither for nor against the proposal.

It has not been taken by Academic Affairs, is still with the sub-committee that is finalizing it and will be brought to the full Senate when those two groups are done with it. It is inaccurate to ascribe any feelings to Senate at this point.

Senate officers are always happy to work with the Collegian and provide information about the status of this or any other issues. My own office is just above yours. Please clarify our positions and process before attributing "viewpoints" to us.

Readers' 'open-mindedness' not as open as they believe

Received Sept. 28, 1993

Editor,

I would like to set a few things straight for those who are calling me ignorant for opposing Pat Robertson while congratulating themselves for their open-mindedness.

1) Just because you don't know who or what Pat Robertson is doesn't mean I am as ignorant.

2) No one is trying to censure him or keep him from speaking.

3) We disagree with Robertson's views. We also feel a better choice could have been made for a Landon Lecturer.

4) The rally will be take place before the lecture. We are as interested in hearing what he will say as you are.

So, if you are really interested in diversity of opinion, come to the rally at 9:30, the lecture at 10:30 and the lecture at 4:00 p.m. in the Union Forum Hall about the Christian Right, all on Oct. 12. See you there.

Excuse the Collegian for not printing your first letter right away

Received Sept. 30, 1993

Editor,

Thank you for ignoring my previous letter and printing another one by an "open-minded" and yet drastically misinformed reader. I thought the Collegian was here to provide information and not to let the campus wander blindly in ignorance.

National Organization for Women is planning a rally, which is not necessarily the same thing as a protest.

The rally will be before the lecture.

The rally is an opportunity for students to find out who Robertson is and what he stands for before they attend the lecture. It is also an opportunity for those who disagree with Robertson to express their views.

Robertson has every right to speak, and we will listen. But we will not "sit back" and let his views go unchallenged.

There are more sports out there than just football, you know

Editor,

I am very disappointed with the sports section of the Collegian. Correct me if I am wrong, but isn't the Wildcat Watch put out so there will be space to report on other sports besides football?

Well, where are they?

The coverage of the volleyball team has been getting a lot better lately, and there has even been some good articles on the rowing team.

But, what about cross country? What other sports are there that we are not hearing about?

In Wednesday's paper, there was an "oh, by the way" article about Jeanene Rugan, who is September's Big Eight Runner of the Month. This is a big deal!

Not only that, but her time of 18:12.3 for 5 kilometers (3.1 miles) is excellent!

Also mentioned was that, not only did she place second, but the team also placed second in the meet. I am assuming Rugan must be backed by a pretty strong team to have accomplished this.

I can only hope in the future the Collegian will see fit to report stories on the fine athletes we have running on the men's and women's cross country teams here at K-State.

K-State has a good tradition of excellent cross-country runners, and I am sure they will do us proud on the hills at Oklahoma University! Good luck, harriers!

'Give me a burger, fries and 5 years in the pen'

Quick quiz: What do you get if your McDonald's receipt comes complete with an obscene comment?

Answer: If you're John Leo Laetch, as much as five years in prison.

It seems that Laetch, a 65-year-old Arizona resident, recently got more than he bargained for when he ordered two Big Macs and a Happy Meal from the Golden Arches — a nasty message, apparently programmed into the cash register by a disgruntled worker, was scrawled on his receipt.

Quick quiz No. 2: What do you do if your McDonald's receipt comes complete with an obscene comment?

Answer: If you're John Leo Laetch, you order the restaurant to pay you $1,000. And you tell them if they don't pay you $1,000, you will leak word of the receipt fiasco to the public and tell McDonalds, "I am going to hurt your business."

And then, after the McDonalds' manager reports you to the property authorities, you face a possible five-year jail sentence for extortion.

Quick quiz No. 3: Once again, what do you get if your McDonald's receipt comes complete with an obscene comment?

Answer: If you're John Leo Laetch, a lawyer.

No wonder there's no 'Divorce Court' in India

In India, a Muslim man can divorce his wife by simply repeating the Arabic word for "divorce" three times — "Talaq, talaq, talaq!"

A quick example: Hasina Mehboob, a New Delhi housewife, accidentally spilled a glass of milk on her husband. Her husband, bucking the American tradition of signing up for group counseling and talking it out with a high-priced therapist, tri-talaqued her.

There is just one problem with the instant divorce — it seems that, every year, thousands of men divorce their wives in a fit of anger and then want them back. But it's not that easy. For that to happen, Muslim rule requires the divorced woman first marry another man, have intercourse once and then get a divorce.

Some clerics and a growing feminist movement are, strangely enough, challenging the divorce custom.

But all of Islam does recognize two other, similar kinds of divorce. Each requires a waiting period that gives the couple time to reconcile.

In the first, the man says "talaq" once a month during his wife's next three menstruations. In the second, he says "talaq" only once, but the divorce is not effective for four months and 10 days.

Weekend doesn't even want to ask about the child-custody battles.

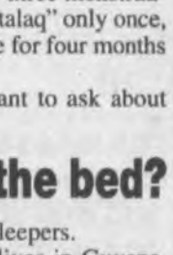
Wrong side of the bed?

Talk about your heavy sleepers.

James Peters, who lives in Guyana, recently awoke to the sound of what he thought was a noisy hen underneath his bed. He peeked under to check — his fingers no doubt tightly clenching the blanket as if to ward off any possible boogieman — and found something quite different.

Staring him in the face was a snarling 80-pound jaguar.

Does anyone else wonder how a snarling 80-pound jaguar sneaks into a man's bedroom and stays there all night?



"I didn't panic," Peters was quoted as saying.

Of course not, James — you were probably still sleeping.

Here's a challenge for you, Mr. Peters. Come out to the K-State campus the day Pat Robertson gives his Landon Lecture. I bet you won't be able to sleep through all that hubbub.

Heck, will any of us?

Place: K-State Union.
Number of rings: 13.
Answerer: Matthew Reynolds.
Year and major: Freshman, undecided.

Q. Why did you answer the phone?
A. "Because it rang and rang and rang and rang. Somebody even tried to pick it up and hang up, but it just kept ringing. I had to answer it. It was getting on my nerves."
Q. What were you doing before the phone rang?
A. "Just reading the Collegian."
Q. Oh, really? Do you read the Collegian every day?
A. "I try to."
Q. What do you think of it?
A. "It's pretty dull today." (That's because there is no phone tag on Thursday!)
Q. As a rule, what do you like about the paper?
A. "Well, I like Cassandra." (Long, awkward silence.)
Q. Is that it? Cassandra?
A. "I never miss Calvin and Hobbes." (Something tells me we aren't doing our job over here.)
Q. Cassandra and Calvin, huh? Is that it?
A. "Pretty much. But I'll stop and read something if it looks interesting."
Q. Is that often? (Do I want to know the answer to this question?)
A. "Yeah, it's pretty often. The paper isn't all that bad." (Whew.)

Karaoke Craze

A Japanese pastime sweeps the United States

You've done it in the car. You've done it in the shower. Now it's time for you to try it on stage.

Karaoke, Japanese for "empty orchestra," began showing up in the United States several years ago. Now, it appears in several local bars.

It's the latest in a sing-along fad that lets folks substitute their voices for those who professionally sing. The machine allows you to read the words from a songbook or off a large video screen with a microphone in hand, taking you into your own fantasy world of being a singing star.

Bob Limbocker, owner of Bobby T's Bar and Deli, said Karaoke brings in the customers.

"A lot of people come in and let their hair down," he said. "We have a lot of fun with it, and anything goes."

Last Saturday, Karaoke participant James Trout, junior in mechanical engineering, sang "Limbo Stick Rock," while his friends did the limbo.

"It was fun torturing the rest of the crowd with my terrible singing," Trout said.

However, Tim Hill, freshman in elementary education, said Trout and his friends made the night interesting.

"This was a very fun night to be at Bobby T's," he said. "There was some very cool guys doing Karaoke, and they made the bar happen."

Bobby T's, located in Candlewood shopping center, has Karaoke night every first and third Saturday of every month. On the third Saturday, they provide a first- and second-place prize.

"We have had a lot of really good singers come in," Limbocker said. "Sometimes, we even buy them a beer when they are good."

One singer who stuck out in Limbocker's memory was an Elvis impersonator.

"He absolutely looked like the real Elvis," Limbocker said. "He came boppin in here wearing a red suit, black wig and a patch of black hair on his chest. He was absolutely great."

He said they have had several entertaining Michael Jackson impersonations.

Impersonation contests are used as a way to add variety for the Karaoke participants in Flashback Lounge, located below Memory Lanes.

Kay Runion, Flashback bartender, said they offer contests such as the best impersonation of Elvis. Prizes have ranged from a trip for two to Las Vegas to K-State items and T-shirts.

Flashback is known for its Karaoke machine, which costs 50 cents a song to use.

Runion said the machine brings in customers.

"We have a lot of regulars," she said. "On slow nights, we hear a lot of slow songs, but on crowded nights, the customers like to dance and raise a little hell."

"Our competition nights bring in a lot of business," Runion said. "It is a lot of fun."

However, customers and employees who have to listen to a shrilling voice don't always fun isn't.

"We had this boy come in, and no matter what song was requested, he would try to sing. The guy could not move, he could not sing, and he was not attractive, even though he thought he was Captain Macho."

KIM RILEY
OWNER OF CHARLIE'S NEIGHBORHOOD BAR

Runion said a guy, who works for the ambulance department, comes in as a regular, and she begs him not to sing.

"The first time he tried the Karaoke machine, it hurt the customers' ears because he squeaked so bad," she said. "I had customers that were going to leave if he sang another song."

Runion said she paid him $3 not to sing anymore.

"Now, it is a joke between us," she said. "We have this agreement. If he comes in and stays until the bar is about to close, I will let him sing one song even though it is still awful."

There isn't just one guy out there who can't sing, said Kim Riley, owner of Charlie's Neighborhood Bar, located at 1800 Claflin Road.

"We had this boy come in, and no matter what song was requested, he would try to sing," he said. "The guy could not move, he could not sing, and he was not attractive, even though he thought he was Captain Macho."

Charlies has Karaoke night about every third Thursday of the month. The bar also leases its machine and will set it up for functions or individuals anytime, Riley said.

Runion and Riley said Karaoke is addictive.

Runion said she has never seen someone go up and sing and then quit. They always go back for at least a second time, she said.

Mark Innes, graduate student in history, was one of those who got addicted.

"Once I tried it at Flashback, I couldn't stop," he said with a laugh. "I ended up spending two hours on it."

Ed Moody, Bobby T's bartender, said they are always reluctant to sing at first.

"I will start by singing a couple of songs to get others to do it," he said. "By the end of the night, there is a waiting line."

Riley said they always start out in safety numbers by going up in groups, but once they start singing, they're there all night long.

Trout, who participates in Karaoke at Bobby T's regularly, has some advice for individuals who haven't tried the sing-along trend.

"For all the people who think Karaoke is for good singers, get a clue. Get a little shit-faced, and have fun," he said.

Black males honored

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

Black Student Union and Black Pan-Hellenic Council are sponsoring the second annual African American Male Symposium. It will take place 10 a.m.-3 p.m. Saturday in the K-State Union.

"There are so many negative stereotypes about African American males," said Carlotte Moore, senior in pre-law and social work and BSU member. "People are always saying negative things. Even here at K-State, I think there are a lot of negative stereotypes."

Shirlyn Henry Brown, adviser of BSU, said the symposium will help K-State recognize the positive aspects of black males.

"The purpose of the symposium is to understand the importance of the black man, the importance of the African American male to the community," she said.

The event will include a selection from the play "Fences" by Ebony Theatre Co., and a workshop will examine the origin of black role models.

In addition, Eric Abercrumbie will be the keynote speaker at a luncheon in the K, S and U ballrooms. He spoke at K-State's Black History Month last year.

Abercrumbie is the creator of the Black Male Think Tank.

"It's the idea that progress is based on mind over matter," Moore said.

Abercrumbie will speak on "Mountain Get Out of My Way," Brown said.

"It's about defeating statistics," she said. "Do you know there are currently more black males in prison than there are in secondary education institutions? It's about turning those statistics around. It's about realizing that if you want it, it's yours."

A second workshop will follow the address. Brown said it will examine black males as professionals, entrepreneurs and military officers.

"It's a way to learn about another culture," Brown said. "Maybe it will help people celebrate their own culture even more than they already do."

Student returns to college, leaves other life behind

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

This is the fourth in a five-part series on students' first impressions of K-State.

Going back to school was a tough decision for Billy Wilson.

Wilson is a re-entry student from Memphis, but before going back to school, he had to leave a career and a part of his life behind.

Returning to school is something Wilson said he wanted to do, but he was caught up in a career.

He said he had a difficult time leaving his job because he dealt with students he cared about, but he knew he could not work and go to school.

"My job there was too demanding to go to school and work," Wilson said. "I was the administrative assistant to the vice president at LeMoyne-Owen College in Memphis.

"I'm determined to make school work because I've given up a lot," he said.

Wilson

Wilson said he has returned to Manhattan and has lived here a year with his brother.

"I still believe if my brother didn't invite me back to Manhattan, I would have eventually had to leave because I was in a job that would have eventually gotten old," Wilson said.

Wilson is majoring in pre-nursing, something he said he has wanted to do all of his life.

"It's been a lifetime goal, and it is challenging," Wilson said. "I've always wanted to be a police officer or a nurse."

He said he planned to attend college because of his fear he would have nothing to fall back on.

"I've always wanted a degree because I was insecure," Wilson said. "I wanted the security of a degree in the event I couldn't do my job."

Despite the drawbacks of having to leave a well-paying job, Wilson said his first day of school went smoothly.

"My first day was something I had never experienced," Wilson said. "I was excited to do what I had to do to get good grades and to get to know people.

"My classes are going better than I had expected."

Wilson said K-State has made his transition back to school easier with help of Academic Student Services. He said he does not feel intimidated and feels at home.

"I don't want special treatment," Wilson said. "I want people to look at me as an individual who wants a good education.

"As a black man, this is reality. Walking through campus to see black and other races interacting is a highlight of my day."

'Pink Flamingos' is dynasty of filth

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

"Pink Flamingos" is a film that has prompted many critics and one prominent K-State Union projectionist to mutter the declaration, "Disturbing."

John Waters is a director who has always been fascinated with the more sordid aspects of American culture, though two of his most recent films, "Hairspray" and "Cry

REVIEW

Baby," have appealed to more mainstream tastes.

Taste is not a word that can even remotely be applied to the X-rated "Pink Flamingos," however.

Made in 1973, it is a parody of tabloid freakism and the burgeoning porno-film industry. The star, Divine, is one of the cinema's most well-known drag queens.

The film is narrated by a plastic flamingo in front of the "luxury" mobile home of Babs Johnson (a.k.a. Divine). Babs is one hot, pistol-packin' mama who knows the value of a good piece of meat. The proud owner of the title "Filthiest Person Alive," she's hiding out from the police, her fans and those covetous of her glorious filthiness.

Connie and Raymond Marble know they are more filthy than Divine. After all, they keep young girls locked in their basement, impregnate them and sell the babies to lesbian couples. Raymond is an entire delicatessen unto himself. Connie, played by the incomparable Mink Stole, has a filthy foot fetish.

The Marbles are out to get Babs/Divine, who seems to have everything a girl could ask for: a fulfilling career in filth and a loyal family. Her beloved son Crackers is a worthy heir to her filthy dynasty. See Crackers and his date, Cookie, perform perversions with poultry. White Rose of Sisterhood

She is a sister
Surrounded by the scent
Of the White Rose
We will watch that sister grow
Into a wonderful and beautiful being.
The sun which brightens her life
Will encourage her to reach higher
For the honorable and beautiful things.
As sisters, we will wipe away the tears
Of love and pain;
Which water the soil around our feet
And water our lives
With the thoughts of Kappa Delta;
And together we will show the world
That one rose alone cannot exist;
But together, with love,
The scent of one rose becomes stronger
When surrounded by other roses;
Just as one sister becomes stronger
When surrounded by her sisters.

Intramural wrestlers wrap up meet today

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

It's all over in 4-1/2 minutes.

After just 270 seconds of intense, unrelenting physical exertion, a winner is declared.

Any wrestler will tell you those seconds can seem like an eternity.

Each night, the gym has been full of competitors pacing, stretching and grappling. The bleachers have been packed with supporters waiting to unleash a barrage of whoops, yells and cheers.

The intramural wrestling meet is in progress at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Division finals were Thursday night, and wrestlers will compete for all-University titles beginning at 7 p.m. tonight.

The meet draws a large number of spectators.

"We get a good crowd out here every night," John Walter, senior in secondary education and head referee, said.

"Most of the wrestling is pretty good. Some of these guys come out because they wrestled in high school. Others are just here to get intramural points."

Walker said the meet's officials are well-trained. They attended a meeting before competition began.

"They've all wrestled before," he said. "Some are also registered."

The 10 weight classes range from 118 pounds to heavyweights.

Wrestlers compete in the fraternity, residence hall or independent division. There is also an open class for women.

"A wrestler has to be quick," Troy Williams, senior in feed science, said.

"They have to have good balance. And they need to have physical strength. If you have those three things, you'll do all right."

Williams has competed in the meet for four years.

"It takes a lot of mental preparation," Scott Tucker, senior in pre-optometry, said. "It's harder than it looks."

Scott Leonard, sophomore in park resource management, wrestled at K-State for the first time this year. He previously wrestled in high school.

"Before the match, I go through some moves and think about strategy. Wrestling involves technique a lot more than muscle."

Some participants, such as Steve Hemmer, junior in biology, had never competed before.

"I've never wrestled before. I don't even watch wrestling. I'm just out here for the fun of it."

Mark Whitson, senior in ag business and animal science, said the competition is pretty fierce.

"After you get past Wednesday, everybody here has probably placed at state," he said.

K-STATERS TO GRAPPLE FOR TITLES

- The all-University intramural wrestling championships will take place at 7 p.m. tonight in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.
- Ten weight classes will vie for the individual titles in weights ranging from 118 pounds to heavyweights.
- There are four different classes—fraternity, residence halls, independent and women's.

COLUMN

Chi-Sox have personnel to take it all

Looking at the American League playoff teams this year, the competitive edge has to go to the Chicago White Sox.

This is an easy conclusion to come to. Just look at the personnel. The White Sox have the most talent, young and old, of either league.

Any discussion of the White Sox has to begin with Frank Thomas. You cannot say too much about him and what he means to this team. The Big Hurt is sixth in the league with a .316 batting average, third in home runs with 41 and is the league leader in runs batted in with 126. He will be named the league's most valuable player, and he should be.

BOB LEHMAN

There is a general consensus, though, that pitching — and not offensive power — wins championships. The South-Siders have that covered, too.

Leading the staff is the odds-on favorite for the Cy Young award, Jack McDowell. Black Jack is erratic at times, but the bottom line is he wins. His 22-10 record and 3.40 ERA are indicative of those qualities.

Supporting McDowell are Alex Fernandez (17-9), Wilson Alvarez (15-8) and Jason Bere (11-5). When McDowell got off to his terrific start, he took the pressure off this trio of young arms. Consequently, they were allowed to develop, pressure-free, into as solid a starting rotation as there is in all of baseball.

The weak spot of this staff is middle relief. Most of the problem in this area is the middle relievers don't get to throw much. A combination of good starts and the coming of age of closer Roberto Hernandez oftentimes has eliminated the need for a setup man.

Hernandez blossomed this year, at one point cashing in on 15-straight save opportunities. He is more than a solid replacement for former Sox closer Bobby Thigpen.

After pitching comes defense. Ron Karkovice is the best defensive catcher in the league. The addition of Ellis Burks solidified the outfield. And the return of Ozzie Guillen from season-ending knee surgery a year ago changed a questionable infield into one of the league's best.

Guillen's return has meant more to the White Sox than solid defense, though. If Thomas is the leader on the field, Ozzie is most definitely the team leader in the clubhouse. He, more than Thomas, keeps this team focused and hungry.

Another ingredient of a championship baseball team is the bench. Can the guys riding the pine come in and start or pinch hit, if necessary? Between stars such as Bo Jackson and Steve Sax, and utility men such as Dan Pasqua and Craig Grebeck, the Chi-Sox bench is solid.

With all of this talent on the field and on the bench, there must be a manager who knows how to handle the players, their egos and the distractions that are likely to arise throughout the season.

Gene Lamont has done these things. He has done them well enough that he deserves to be named the American League manager of the year.

Gene Lamont? Manager of the year? You better believe it. He may not get it, but he sure does deserve it.

He was able to keep his team focused through numerous distractions. Just to name a few: the Bo Jackson circus, the Carlton Fisk fiasco and the benching of star players like Steve Sax and George Bell.

Do the Chicago White Sox have what it takes to win their first American League pennant since 1959 and perhaps their first world championship since 1917?

The league manager of the year, Cy Young winner and most valuable player think so.

I agree with them.

Young steps up in home state

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Yolanda Young couldn't help looking forward to playing the No. 5-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers in Lincoln, Neb., last Wednesday.

Young finally had a chance to show the Huskers what they lost when they opted not to recruit her out of her own home state.

"I was very anxious to play, and I wanted to do very well," said Young, a freshman from Omaha, Neb. "They were trying to recruit me, but things didn't work out. I just wanted to show them what kind of player they lost."

She wasted no time in making her presence known.

Even though the Wildcats were eliminated in three straight games, the outside hitter recorded six kills — tying her with Angie McKee to lead the team — and had five digs in three games.

The Cats fell asleep in the first game, losing 15-5. But in the second contest, Young came up with four timely spikes that converted to points, jump-starting her teammates. K-State narrowed its 6-0 deficit to 13-7 on Young's last kill of the game.

"She came up with some really big plays," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "I was really proud of her concentration. I think it had a lot to do with being back in Nebraska. But I know that she is smart enough that she will know she has the ability to do that Friday, too. I think it was a learning experience for her.

"For a program that really hasn't had one player like that in our history, for her to be the first one to show the rest of the team that's how you treat big plays proves she is a role model."

Young also had another source of motivation.

Among the 2,429 in attendance, about 15 gathered were wearing K-State apparel and cheering the Wildcats. The fans, who got constant glares from Husker faithfuls, made the 45-mile trip from Omaha to watch Young and the Wildcats play.

"They were excited, and they've been K-State fans from the get-go," Young said of her family members and friends. "It was nice to have them in the crowd."

The Cats pulled closer game by game, and in the third contest, Young stunned the Huskers with a kill that tied the game at 7-7. K-State knotted the score again at 9, but Nebraska pulled away to win 15-9.

"I think we kind of got started slowly, but once we got going together, we played very well," Young said.

Young said the experience of playing a top-10 team could only improve the Cats' program.

"It will push our program and make us play like we can," she said. "We're good enough to beat Nebraska and any other team, I think."

SOCCER

Cats to defend 6-0 record

The K-State soccer team will kick off the fall season Sunday with a game against the Missouri.

The Cats were undefeated last year with a 6-0 record.

"Practices are going well," Coach Viktur Atughonu said.

Last year, K-State defeated MU 6-0.

"We went out and played strong," Atughonu said. "They gave up after three goals."

There are nine returning players, including eight starters. The team has 16 new players on the roster.

"This year, we might go undefeated again," Atughonu said.

"We need to play well and not get carried away."

The next home action for the team will be Oct. 10 against the University of Nebraska at Frank Anneberg Park.

RUGBY

Columbia Outlaws next for men's rugby

The K-State men's rugby team will play two games on Saturday, traveling to Missouri to play the Columbia Outlaws.

The A team will play the first game, followed by the B team. The first contest is scheduled for 80 minutes, and the second is 40 minutes long.

The rugby team is played at two levels, collegiate and club.

Collegiate rugby is played by full-time college students. Club rugby is played by people older than 18. Practices are on Tuesday and Thursdays at 5:30 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

Rugby is a cross between soccer and football. The field is 100 meters by 60 meters with goal posts at both ends. The purpose is to cross the end line by running, kicking or laterally passing the ball. No equipment is worn for the sport.

Fall rugby continues through November.

LACROSSE

Tourney to honor former coach

The K-State men's lacrosse team will play host to the first Donnie Tillar Lacrosse Classic this weekend at Memorial Stadium. The tournament will have eight teams, including all the Big Eight teams and squads in Kansas.

The tournament is in honor of its former coach Donnie Tillar. He flew a helicopter and was killed in the Persian Gulf War. Tillar was a first lieutenant, Company D, 4th Battalion, First Aviation.

Curt Thurman, coach and president of the men's lacrosse team, said Tillar's unit will be flying helicopters over Memorial Stadium and will land on the field prior to the championship game on Sunday.

Competition will begin at 8 a.m. on Saturday with the K-State B team playing against Kansas. The A team will compete against Missouri at 12:30 p.m

New scale helps some, hurts others

Brooks said he has gone through the change of one system to the other before, and the concerns raised before are similar to those on the K-State campus.

"The most apprehensive were those with high GPAs who thought they would be penalized," Brooks said.

After getting comfortable with the system, there was more satisfaction than dissatisfaction, he said.

Michie said she feels the grade system will not make much difference.

"Lots of people in the B-C range may be helped," she said.

Faculty will also be affected by the new system.

"Because of the style of teaching, making judgments on something will take a lot of thought and energy. Having more choices will make it harder," Brooks said.

Other faculty will find it easier because they would not have to choose between grades, Brooks said.

Many other schools are currently under this system, Michie said.

"Almost a quarter of schools similar to K-State are on the plus/minus system," Brooks said. "There has been a huge increase, and more are expected to move toward the system."

Some students feel the new system will be unfair.

"The pluses are great. The minuses are not. I would rather have a B, not a B-. It will hurt the average student," Mindy Gardner, junior in secondary education, said.

Jane Slind, senior in human ecology, said she feels it will harm the majority of the students.

"Next year, when you are doing the exact same work, you might get a 3.7, instead of a 4.0, which you would have received the year before," she said.

Kelli Schram, junior in secondary education, said she feels that it will benefit those students who are serious about school.

"It will help those students who are on the line between grades. Students who have worked hard throughout the semester and then screw up one test would have received a B instead of an A," Schram said.

"With the new system, they would have an advantage of getting a B+ instead of a straight B."

'Fences' portrays real life of tough people

SARA SMITH
Collegian

"Fences" paints such a realistic picture of the lives of its characters it leaves you gasping for air.

Most theatrical productions are two-dimensional, with some higher meaning below the surface that you have to figure out. "Fences," an Ebony Theatre Co. production running through Saturday, is three-dimensional from start to finish.

There's no question about higher meaning or undercurrents. This is a portrait of hard-edged, clean reality with no time for philosophizing or weaving fancy sentences about the meaning of life. There is meaning to it, but the main characters tell you. They don't show you in abstractions or leave you guessing.

Because of this, there's very little left to the imagination. The acting and portrayals are so strong you can see the intricacies of the plot in the faces and mannerisms of the actors and actresses. This play is about people who wear their emotions on their sleeves, and the cast doesn't hold back. You can look on the face of anyone on stage at any time and know what that character is thinking.

The plot is both the strength and downfall of "Fences." Although there is a very genuine feeling to what people say and do in "Fences," it's genuine to the point of alienating any audience member who can't directly relate. All you can do is sit and watch, open-mouth in awe, as "Fences" speeds past you.

The plot leaves plenty of time for its main characters to sit around and talk. This is, in fact, a play consisting of people sitting around and talking. Their lack of physical

Lovemaking is no laughing matter

Dear Cassandra,

I have a problem that I hope you can help me with, because I don't know where else to turn.

You see, I've been dating this guy for eight months now, and things have been going perfects until a few weeks ago.

One night we were at my house. While we were in bed, things started to get very intense. We both knew we wanted it, so we decided to have sex. As we passionately tore off each others' clothes, I couldn't help but notice that his penis was crooked. Without even thinking about it, I began to laugh hysterically and I asked, "What's wrong with you?"

He proceeded to tell me that it was a birth defect, but I was still laughing and he got up and left. Now, he refuses to talk to me.

Cassandra, I really do care for him, and I know I hurt him deeply. Please give me some advice on how to get him back,

Signed,

I'm straight and he's not

Dear Straight,

My, my, my, my, my.

Oh girl, what have you done. Please tell me you've heard the Rule. Please tell me you've heard it. Please, please, please.

The Rule that says you never, never, never laugh at your partner's anatomy. Somehow, it just isn't conducive to fantastic or romantic love-making. It doesn't work real well with just plain sex either.

See, ideally, you would have noticed his curvy Willy, not mentioned it, and then later it would have become a little intimate, inside secret for you both. Besides, penises work rather nicely whether they're straight or crooked or upside down.

Try to talk to him. After eight months, you probably have a strong foundation to work from. Start over and make sure you tell him how much you care about him.

And, please remember the Rule.

O'Conner pays tribute

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

The Country Music Association's 1993 "Instrumentalist of the Year," Mark O'Connor, will perform at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

"The concert is not a recital, where we agree on a program in advance. He will play whatever he wants when he gets here," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said.

O'Connor is a 1992 Grammy winner for the "Best Country Music Performance" and CMA's "Musician of the Year" in 1991 and 1992. He is also the music director for the American Music Shop on The Nashville Network.

Ellen Pryor, O'Connor's publicist, said he was a child prodigy. He first learned to play the guitar, she said, but through his fiddle work he has made a name for himself. Pryor said O'Connor grew up playing a Texas-style fiddle and is largely self-taught.

"O'Connor is a virtuoso," Mitch Ulrich, owner of Vital Vinyl, said. "He plays every string instrument. He is incredible. He does everything from classical to country. Everyone who goes to his concert is going to be totally amazed and get their money's worth."

O'Connor's latest album, "Heroes," was released Sept. 14. On the album, O'Connor performs with 14 of his childhood violin heroes, some of whom include Pinchas Zukerman, Jean-Luc Ponty, Doug Kershaw, Charlie Daniels, Stephane Grappelli and Benny Thomasson, Pryor said.

"The concept of the album was for him to pay tribute to his violin heroes," she said. "The liner notes contain 28 pages of detail on who these people are and why they influenced him," Pryor said.

The album also includes "The Devil Comes Back To Georgia," a re-make of the 1979 hit "The Devil Went Down To Georgia," which O'Connor recorded with Charlie Daniels.

The song will later be released on single.

REVIEW

'Hot Shots' offers humor, entertainment long overdeux

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

Once in a while, audiences deserve to be entertained by a film with no deep social meaning, purpose or mission. "Hot Shots: Part Deux" is undoubtedly characterized by such a description.

In the tradition of other slapstick classics such as "Airplane!" and the "Naked Gun" flicks, "Hot Shots: Part Deux" is a hilarious and thoroughly entertaining parody of rescue missions.

Charlie Sheen plays Topper Harley, a former pilot in angst over a painful break-up with his girlfriend, Ramada, played by Valeria Galino from the original "Hot Shots" movie.

Harley has escaped to Thailand since the original film and sworn-off war altogether. That is, until a rescue mission to save hostages in Iraq requires his assistance. So Topper, beefed up and geared in guns a la Rambo, heads with the rest of the clumsy clan to Iraq for an explosive adventure filled with murder, mayhem, madness and a whole lot of gut-busting gags.

"Hot Shots: Part Deux" is silly, facetious and remarkably innovative. Physical comedy routinely dominates the art of slapstick comedy, but other details in this film deserve a round of applause as well.

Noticeable parodies of "Lady and the Tramp," "Basic Instinct," "No Way Out," "Star Wars" and "Terminator 2" have their place in this film. So do cameos by Bob Villa and Martin Sheen.

This film trivializes violence and really makes no sense. There are stupid lines and even stupider characters making unbelievably irrational choices. That's slapstick, though.

By being so indiscriminate about whom or what the film makes a mockery of, it makes no legitimate judgment calls. By being offensive to everyone it really offends no one. Besides that, "Hot Shots: Part Deux" will make you laugh out loud.

Singers to raise funds for cancer research

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

While listening to lively jazz tunes, Broadway musical hits and a barbershop-quartet harmonizing, people will be able to help others breathe easier.

The Better Breathing Club of Manhattan will sponsor a night of musical entertainment entitled, "As I Live and Breathe," at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

Proceeds from the show will go to the American Lung Association of Kansas for lung-cancer research.

"This is the second year that we have done the show," Ruth Clifton, secretary of the the club, said.

The Better Breathing Club is a support group sponsored by the American Lung Association. Members of the group are people with lung ailments and their respective family members.

"We meet once a month," she said." The American Lung Association provides us with educational materials and new findings in research."

James Gardner, board member of the American Lung Association of Kansas and producer of the show, said this year's show has a better variety of performers than last year.

"Last year, we did not have enough time," Gardner said. "But this year, I think it will turn out better. We started about four months in advance."

Dr. Eugene Klinger will be masters of ceremonies.

Clifton said the groups will perform separately, and the music will have no direct theme with lung cancer, but she said the lungs are a powerful musical instrument.

"It is an expression of singing and a showcase for the lungs," she said.

The K-State Jazz Ensemble will perform first, followed by the Manhattan High School Pops Choir.

Shelly Holle of the Manhattan Civic Theatre will sing songs from the musicals "The Sound of Music and "Nunsense."

The Manhattan High School Chamber Choir will be singing a medley from the musical "The Music Man."

TICKET INFO

■ Tickets for "As I Live and Breathe" are $4 in advance, $5 at the door, $3 for groups of 25 or more and $15 for a family. They can be bought at the McCain Auditorium Box Office, the Bramlage Box Office and the K-State Union Bookstore.

The choir will be followed by the Little Apple Chorus and Quartets. A duet, titled "People Will Say We're in Love," from the musical "Oklahoma," will be performed by Chad Pap and Kelli Kuhn.

The chorus will end the show.

Gardner said he hopes people will contribute more to the American Lung Association in addition to buying tickets.

"We hope people donate a dollar or two at the performance, but we hope people enjoy the show anyway," he said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Track down your market with the Collegian classifieds.

Target the 20,000 students and 5,000 faculty/staff with a classified ad. It's only $5 for 20 words.

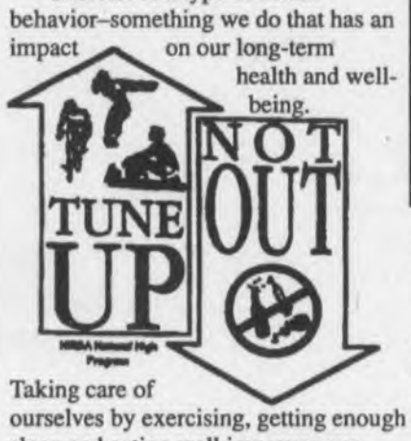
The Rec Report

Your Fitness Connection



Recreational Services, Kansas State University, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex

Watch for our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

"Natural High" Too Busy to Not Exercise

According to Fitness Management Magazine, people who manage to stick to their exercise programs for several months almost always find an improvement in their ability to manage stress. A good workout provides some perspective and helps them feel more relaxed and n control. As one exercise enthusiast put it, "When you think you're too stressed to exercise, the truth may be that you're too stressed to not exercise!"

Exercise is a type of health behavior–something we do that has an impact on our long-term health and well-being.

Taking care of ourselves by exercising, getting enough sleep and eating well improves our ability to cope with stress. Cultivating a commitment to a healthful lifestyle helps create habits that are less likely to break down during high-stress periods.

Exercise

Exercise is the cornerstone of a healthy lifestyle. Regular exercise helps you look and feel better, gives you the extra energy you need to eat more without gaining weight and provides an island of pleasure in a busy day.

Sleep

When there aren't enough hours in the day, we often steal a few from the night. While most people can tolerate a few short nights, the heavy fatigue of regular sleep deprivation increases your stress level.

Responding to stress requires energy, which must be replenished with adequate rest. Regular sleep habits that allow you to awaken rested and refreshed are critical to a high-energy lifestyle.

Caffeine

Caffeine is a powerful stimulant found in coffee, tea, cola beverages and in some drugs. Caffeine's action mimics the stress response: increased heart rate and blood pressure, muscle tension and blood sugar. Remember that while a little caffeine may give you a burst of energy and enhance creativity, too much simply leaves you tired and wired, unable to either think or sleep.

Cigarettes

If you need another reason to quit smoking, consider your stress response. Like caffeine, nicotine replicates the stress response. While smokers claim that a cigarette relaxes them, the momentary relaxation comes only from satisfying a craving for nicotine.

Alcohol

Like caffeine, alcohol is a powerful drug. Many people ayoid alcohol because they find its depressant effects unpleasant, or because they tend to drink too much. But some people find that a drink or two at an appropriate time helps them relax. Danger comes when alcohol becomes the preferred method of relaxing.

Diet and eating habits

Regular healthful meals and snacks keep your blood sugar and good humor on an even keel. Skipping meals can lead to hunger, fatigue and an impulse to eat whatever treat is nearest at hand. Sugary foods consumed in lieu of a meal may give you a temporary shot in the arm as blood sugar rises, but then the inevitable crash leaves you even more tired and hungry than before. Low-fat meals composed of delicious, wholesome foods help keep you healthy and give you the energy you need for an active lifestyle.

Recreational Services will be hiring officials for the upcoming Volleyball season. KSU students who are interested in becoming an official must attend these mandatory meetings:

-Mon., Oct. 18, 6:30 p.m. K-State Union, Rm 212
-Tues. Oct. 19, 6:30 p.m. Recreational Complex

What's NEW & What's Coming!

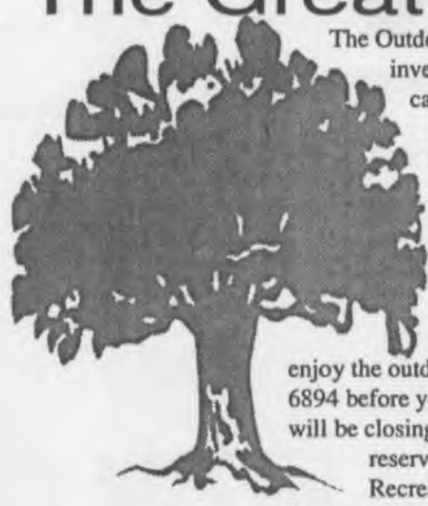
Have you been to the Rec Plex lately and seen the new exercise machines?

Two new Woodway treadmills are already here and located in the upstairs lobby. These are the "cadillacs" of the treadmill industry and can take you to top running speed, as well as give you up to a 15% incline. The Woodways are much smoother and quieter than many other treadmills. We suggest you come see for yourself!

More equipment is coming our way in October. Two Crossrobic machines from Randall (the company who produces Stairmasters and Windracers) will be arriving shortly. These machines offer both cardiovascular exercise as well as muscular resistance all in one. Thus the name... Crossrobics. The cardiovascular component consists of a stepping motion and the muscular resistance consists of a leg press. Keep your eye out, the Crossrobics should be arriving shortly.

Also slated to arrive are approximately 16 pieces of new Cybex variable resistance weight machines. Out with the old Universal, in with the new Cybex. Cybex offers state of the art weight machines. Get psyched and get pumped!

Just a reminder... if you want to learn how to operate this equipment or want help starting an exercise program, there is a person on staff who can help you. Call 532-6950 and leave a message for our Fitness Consultant, Corey Long.



My Favorite Workout!

Jeff Peterson, senior in Animal Science and president of Farmhouse, uses the Rec to help him get into shape for the upcoming basketball season. His current workout is three miles on the power trainer followed by 15 minutes on the roller machine. Afterwards, Jeff spends an hour working on his basketball shot.

"I just started playing basketball in Topeka for the Wheelhawks. I come to the Rec to work out so I'll be in better shape when the season starts in November."

The Great Outdoors!

The Outdoor Rental Center provides a large inventory of outdoor equipment, including canoes, sleeping bags, tents, ice chests, lanterns, stoves and more. This equipment may be rented by the University community and is available for reservation up to two weeks in advance. You must present a validated KSU student ID, KSU Faculty/Staff ID, or current facility use card when making reservations and renting equipment. October is a great month to enjoy the outdoors! Call the Outdoor Rental Center at 532-6894 before your next outing! The Outdoor Rental Center will be closing November 1 for the winter. Winter reservation requests will be handled through the Recreational Services office.

Oldest son receives picture of father

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Robert Kennedy's oldest son was presented with a photograph of his father Friday after delivering a speech to K-State students.

Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy, D-Mass., was given a photo of the man he said he last saw boarding a plane for Kansas. That trip, during which Robert Kennedy delivered a Landon Lecture at K-State, marked the beginning of RFK's campaign for the presidency in 1968.

"David von Riesen captured an historic moment, 25 years ago when your father, Robert Kennedy, announced his candidacy for the presidency at Ahearn Field House," said Michelle Smith, vice president of the KSU Young Democrats.

The photograph was presented by David von Riesen, Richard Baier, president of Young Democrats, and K-State President Jon Wefald.

Kennedy was visibly pleased with the picture of his father.

"I appreciate the invitation to come here, and as Jimmy said, it does mean to me in particular because of the history of Kansas State and Robert Kennedy," Joseph Kennedy said. "I think the last time I saw my father it was when he was getting on a plane to fly to this University. I very much appreciate the reception."

The photograph was taken by von Riesen for K-State Photographic Services when Senator Kennedy came to K-State. He said the photograph was one of many he took during his coverage of the speech. What makes the photograph exceptional was the way it captured the interest of the students in Kennedy.

"The interest within the picture itself, everybody, young people are looking at Kennedy. They're trying to talk to him. They're trying to touch him. He just really captivated all of the people in the picture," von Riesen said.

The event itself was not that memorable for von Riesen.

"They thought that he was going to announce his candidacy here at K-State. But, he announced it two days before he got here. So, that was sort of anti-climatic. But because he was Robert Kennedy, he made a big impact on the audience,"he said.

Kennedy: Youth involvement needed

Environment, national debt named top issues

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Rep. Joseph Kennedy, D-Mass., was the keynote speaker Friday afternoon in the K-State Union for the conclusion of KSU Young Democrats political awareness week.

Representatives Jim Slattery and Dan Glickman, both Kansas Democrats, accompanied Kennedy.

"Young people today get a feeling deep in the pit of their gut that somehow things in America aren't going so well," Kennedy said. "And it's not just in our country, but problems all across the world.

"Our very land, our very way of life as human beings, is threatened as we enter this new century. Much of the burden for those ills that our world faces falls upon your shoulders," Kennedy said.

Kennedy said young people see economic and environmental concerns as top issues. He said it is easy to feel overwhelmed by media coverage of these problems. The national debt illustrates the trouble America faces, Kennedy said.

"The interest payment alone on the national debt in 1980 was 72 billion dollars. Last year it was 214 billion — just a transfer payment from working class Americans to the wealthy bond holders who own America's debt. The difference between that 72 billion and the 214 billion pays for national health insurance, pays to educate our kids, pays to clean up our cities," Kennedy said.

The country has refused to deal with the problem, Kennedy said. Politicians have refused to hear the cry of the American people. He said as a consequence the debt has simply been passed on to a future generation.

"Now there is a way the country has chosen to handle many of the issues that young people in college are facing. It is to simply send the bills of the nation to you. It's an insidious problem that I think only real involvement by today's young people in the system will solve," Kennedy said.

Kennedy said young people are more aware of political issues today than ever before. But, he said awareness is not the same as involvement.

"When Jim Slattery stands up here and tells you that in our country today only 20 percent of the younger people under the age of 25 actually go out and vote. It isn't just an idle statistic. The fact is your generation isn't getting into it," he said.

Older Americans do get out and vote, Kennedy said. The voice of those people is known when issues arise concerning Medicaid, health insurance, and national defense. But the voice of the younger generation is not heard.

"So, when tough choices have to be made, guess who loses? You do," Kennedy said.

"Ladies and gentlemen, you don't have to accept it. You have to feel that you count, that you're important," Kennedy said.

"You can make a difference, that by you going out and getting involved in our nation's affairs, we can begin to turn around and except the challenges of the new generation, and except it gladly and proudly."

Kennedy's father, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, visited K-State in March 1968 to deliver a Landon Lecture. Kennedy said his father left him a strong legacy to follow.

"I think that the single greatest legacy has to do with the moral commitment of the individual towards our fellow countrymen. We all have an obligation as Americans to look out for one another and to care for each other."

His father's legacy dealt with issues of the underprivileged, Kennedy said.

"I think his commitment towards having all of us as Americans pull together was really what his legacy was all about," Kennedy said.

Slattery said he thought Robert Kennedy also motivated young Americans to take an interest in public affairs.

"I know more than perhaps any other single individual, Robert Kennedy motivated me to give a big part of my life to public service," Slattery said. "I think that the legacy lives on with literally hundreds of people in this country, maybe thousands, that are involved with public service. I think that's a very important part of his legacy, too."

Accident injures 2

WESS HUDELSON

A major-injury, major-damage accident occurred Friday afternoon on U.S. Highway 24 near the K mart entrance.

The accident occurred when Terry A. Sprecker, 8660 E. U.S. Highway 24, was driving westbound on U.S. 24 and struck Diane L. McKlelland, 1311 15th St., Wamego, in her passenger-side door as she tried to make a left-hand turn into the K mart parking lot.

A police officer said McKlelland's car was thrown about 30 feet into a ditch. McKlelland was transferred to Memorial Hospital with a broken leg, facial lacerations and a shoulder injury. Memorial Hospital could not divulge any further information.

Sprecker was transported to the Saint Mary Hospital with head lacerations. Sprecker was treated and released.

The passenger-side door of McKlelland's late-model Dodge was smashed into the driver's side of the car.

The front end of Sprecker's late-model Ford pick-up was heavily damaged.

ASK conference debates debt payment

FHSU, ESU and PSU ask KSU, KU and WSU to pay

RHONDA WILSON

K-State students were asked Friday to pay $2,665 to an organization of which they are no longer members.

Student representatives from Fort Hays State, Emporia State, Pittsburg State and K-State spoke to board members of the Association of Students of Kansas via a video conference at 3:30 p.m. Friday.

Ed Skoog, Eric Henry, Michael Henry and Patrick Robben represented K-State at the conference, which was facilitated in Dole Hall.

The topic of the conference centered around a $15,000 debt, which ASK members said they have just found but was incurred when Wichita State, Kansas University and K-State were members.

Wichita State withdrew from the organization in 1990. K-State withdrew in the spring of 1993, and KU followed suit at the same meeting.

Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator and former KSU representative to ASK, said K-State withdrew from the organization because the students felt it was no longer accomplishing the goal it set in the 1970s.

Membership was also beginning to be too costly for K-State students, and students said K-State could accomplish much more on its own or under a new organization, he said.

Henry said ASK started as a grassroots organization that lobbied the Kansas Legislature for student services and rights.

Records show ASK has accrued a $14,000 debt in the past three years. The first proposal divides $4,093.63 (the debt that was incurred before any members withdrew) by the six universities which were members three years ago. The remaining $9,915.82 of debt accrued the following years would be divided by the five schools that were members after WSU dropped out of the organization.

ASK board members presented three options for alleviating the debt.

The first option, and the option most sought after by the board members, was to split the debt between the university members.

With this option, K-State and KU students would owe ASK about $2,665, even though neither university is a member of the organization.

"It will take a great deal of information for us to make up our minds. But at the present time, with the information we have, I do not see K-State paying for this debt."

ED SKOOG
STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

"It will take a great deal of information for us to make up our minds," Skoog said. "But at the present time, with the information we have, I do not see K-State paying for this debt."

Board members reminded K-State that under ASK bylaws, Article 8 under Budget and Dues states that (universities) are responsible for the debts even though they may not be aware of them.

Board members said they were never made aware of the debt until recently, and then they were told ASK generally ran a debt of $4,000 every year, but WSU allowed the debt because there was an assumption it would be paid in the fall.

They also said there was a $1,400 debt from closing the main office at WSU and moving it to Fort Hays State.

At this point, the board members are not sure where the entire debt was incurred, but they are researching the possibility of the misuse of funds by the former executive director of ASK Tim Nimz.

Members said they are trying to itemize credit-card debts because receipts show items were purchased from Target™ stores and bookstores, which were not accounted for in the budget, and trips to Denver were also unaccounted for.

Certain financial records from April, May, October and possibly February are also missing, Nate Halverson, chairman of the board of ASK, said.

"According to the budgets I've seen, I just question the fact that a $9,000 debt exists," said Jim Allen, last year's vice chairman of ASK and student at Pittsburg State.

"There is no doubt about it; the debt is there," Halverson said.

U.S. helicopters shot down, vehicle mined

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Two American helicopters were downed Sunday in Somalia, a Pentagon spokesman said. There was no immediate word on casualties.

"I can confirm we have two helicopters down," said Lt. Col. Mike Stepp, a Pentagon spokesman in Washington.

Stepp said he had no additional information and did not know the circumstances surrounding the incident. He said he could not confirm any casualties. U.N. officials in Mogadishu could not immediately be reached for comment.

Earlier, the Pentagon had confirmed that there were military operations "underway" in Somalia.

On Sunday morning, a mine explosion ripped through a military vehicle in Mogadishu, wounding three U.S. Marines and killing a Somali U.N. employee, a U.N. spokesman said.

Somali gunmen ambushed the Humvee utility vehicle following the explosion, Maj. David Stockwell said by telephone from the Somali capital.

Stockwell said the mine was remotely detonated and apparently specifically targeted the American vehicle. He said the Humvee was about a quarter-mile from the United Nations' port complex when the mine exploded.

A Blackhawk helicopter was shot at when it arrived at the scene but managed to land and rescue the survivors, Stockwell said.

The Marines were hospitalized in stable condition Sunday evening with shrapnel wounds and burns.

Aspin: U.S. won't leave Somalia right away

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Les Aspin rejected suggestions Sunday that the United States immediately withdraw from U.N. peacekeeping efforts in Somalia, saying such a move would lead to a return of famine in the African nation.

"The trick is to withdraw ... in a way in which at least enough security remains behind so that the famine does not return. And that's what we're wrestling with," Aspin said.

There has been growing sentiment among some lawmakers to get U.S. soldiers out of Somalia because they have become increasingly targets of hit-and-run attacks by warlord Mohamed Farah Aidid's loyalists.

"I think we ought to leave now," Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., declared Sunday on 'Face the Nation.' "I don't think we ought to be spreading troops all over the world."

Toddler steals car, crashes it three times

LAND O'LAKES, Fla. (AP) — "I go zoom!" was all a 3-year-old boy had to say after grabbing his parent's car keys and taking a wild joyride.

Florida Highway Patrol troopers remain stumped as to how Mikey Sproul, who stands just 30 inches tall, was able to hit the gas pedal and maneuver at the same time.

The toddler's steering was a bit suspect. He hit three cars in less than a half-mile during the ride Friday. But no one was hurt, including him.

"It never dawned on me he would drive a car," said Paula Sproul, his mother. "Not as a 3-year-old anyway."

Mikey's trip started just after midnight when, as his parents slept, he climbed their 5-foot bedroom dresser and snatched the keys. Dressed in nothing but his underwear, he hopped into the 1979 Mercury and fired it up.

While backing out the driveway and shifting into drive, he hit two cars at an auto repair shop next door. After a spin through a convenience store parking lot, he swerved onto busy U.S. Highway 41.

When Warren Wise saw the car coming toward him, he pulled off the road into a ditch. But that didn't prevent a third collision.

"It was like he made a sharp turn and ran right into me," Wise said.

That's where the ride ended. Mikey's parents found out about it when troopers came knocking on their door. No charges were filed.

As punishment, Mikey wasn't allowed outside Saturday, meaning he couldn't play with one of his favorite toys — a battery-operated truck.

Accused assailant feels no remorse

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — The woman accused of shooting a doctor outside his abortion clinic said in handwritten letters she pulled the trigger and feels no remorse about it, according to a report published Saturday.

The Grants Pass Daily Courier said Rachelle "Shelley" Shannon admits in the letters to shooting Dr. George Tiller on Aug. 19 in Wichita, Kan., leaving him wounded in both arms.

"I'm not denying I shot Tiller," Shannon wrote in one letter. "But I deny that it was wrong. It was the most holy, the most righteous thing I've ever done. I have no regrets."

Shannon, a longtime anti-abortion protester, is being held on $1-million bail at the Sedgwick County jail pending a Dec. 6 trial on attempted murder and assault charges. She has pleaded innocent. Sedgwick County District Attorney Nola Foulston told the Daily Courier the law prohibits her from commenting on evidence, including letters and documents obtained in the search Monday of Shannon's home.

Pope releases guide for Catholic conduct

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The release of the Vatican's long-awaited encyclical reaffirming traditional church precepts was timed to offer clear moral guidance amid growing challenges to the teachings, Pope John Paul II said Sunday.

He said the Roman Catholic Church feels obligated to guide followers who are disoriented between so many discordant voices.

The encyclical was started six years ago and is considered one of the pope's defining documents. It sets an uncompromising tone against theologians and others questioning fundamental church teachings such as bans on birth control, divorce and homosexuality.

It urges the world's bishops to adhere to strict church tenets and warns theologians they have a grave duty to train the faithful on them, according to a text published Sunday in the New York Times.

Germany celebrates 3- year anniversary

SAARBRUECKEN, Germany (AP) — Germans marked three years of unification Sunday with a huge street party and river parade, but the celebrations were subdued by a growing malaise over the merger.

By mid-afternoon, about 50,000 people — far fewer than the 200,000 organizers had predicted — had gathered under overcast skies for a day of food and performances by artists, most of them German.

The only disturbance was a small but noisy protest by about 44 anarchists, some with orange and green streaks in their hair. They were herded from the city center by police and taken away in a bus.

Three years ago — on Oct. 3, 1990 — East Germany and West Germany fused amid widespread euphoria.

Speaker says life is a two-sided mountain

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

One of today's leading black minds demanded that black students "stop standing on the outside of history looking in."

Eric Abercrumbie, keynote speaker for the second annual African American Male Symposium, spoke to about 150 people Saturday in the K-State Union Ballroom.

His topic was the "Celebration and Survival of the Black Male."

Abercrumbie is the facilitator of the University of Cincinnati Black Man Think Tank, now in its ninth year at the African American Cultural and Research Center in Cincinnati.

"We originated history. The whole wide world is in our black hands and minds," Abercrumbie said.

Abercrumbie pointed out that males aren't men until they have demonstrated manhood.

"It's time for the black man and woman to take their rightful place on this earth," Abercrumbie said.

Abercrumbie talked about the mountain each person symbolically climbs during their life.

The mountain has two sides, he said, a good side and a hard side.

"When you get to the top of the mountain, you can fall one way or the other. I want you to stay there on top. Remember, there's a hand to hold on to up there," Abercrumbie said.

Abercrumbie also praised the play "Fences" put on by the Ebony Theater Co.

"As people, (the play) shows us the way home," Abercrumbie said.

At the close of his speech, Abercrumbie said there are eight points the Creator wants in young black men — transform, control, cleanliness, abstinence, obedience, education, thankfulness and the feeling of being proud.

ADVICE FROM THE CREATOR

P. Eric Abercrumbie, keynote speaker for the second annual African American Male Symposium, said there are eight characteristics that the Creator believes young black men should possess.

1. Transform — The Creator wants all of us to move from maleness to manhood. Like a caterpillar to a butterfly, our lives need change. You must learn to be bigger than other people.

2. Control — The profanity and the gestures have to go.

3. Clean — Mentally and physically. Just because I took a shower this morning doesn't necessarily make me clean.

4. Abstinence — Not just from sex but everything bad. We must teach the young males that until you come to manhood, you can't handle it.

5. Obedient — The Creator wants us to be obedient. That means learning to be respectful.

6. Educated — This is 1993. Dumb folks get nowhere. The Creator gives us the basics. You do the rest.

7. Thankful — When I wake up, I don't take it for granted. I'm thankful.

8. Pride — Let's be proud of who we are. The Creator wants you to be beautiful.

Week focuses on fire safety

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Manhattan fire department will promote fire safety the week of Oct. 3-9.

The fire department would like to focus this week on fire escape plans, Charles Tannehill, assistant director of the Manhattan fire department, said.

"Escape plans are not required, but it is good to have a plan of what to do in the event of a fire," he said. "It could save someone's life."

Fire-prevention week is a part of a bigger attempt by the fire department to make people more aware of fire safety and regulations.

"They build new beds so they can store more things in their rooms, and they don't leave a way for people to get out if there is a fire."

CHARLES TANNEHILL
ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE MANHATTAN FIRE DEPARTMENT

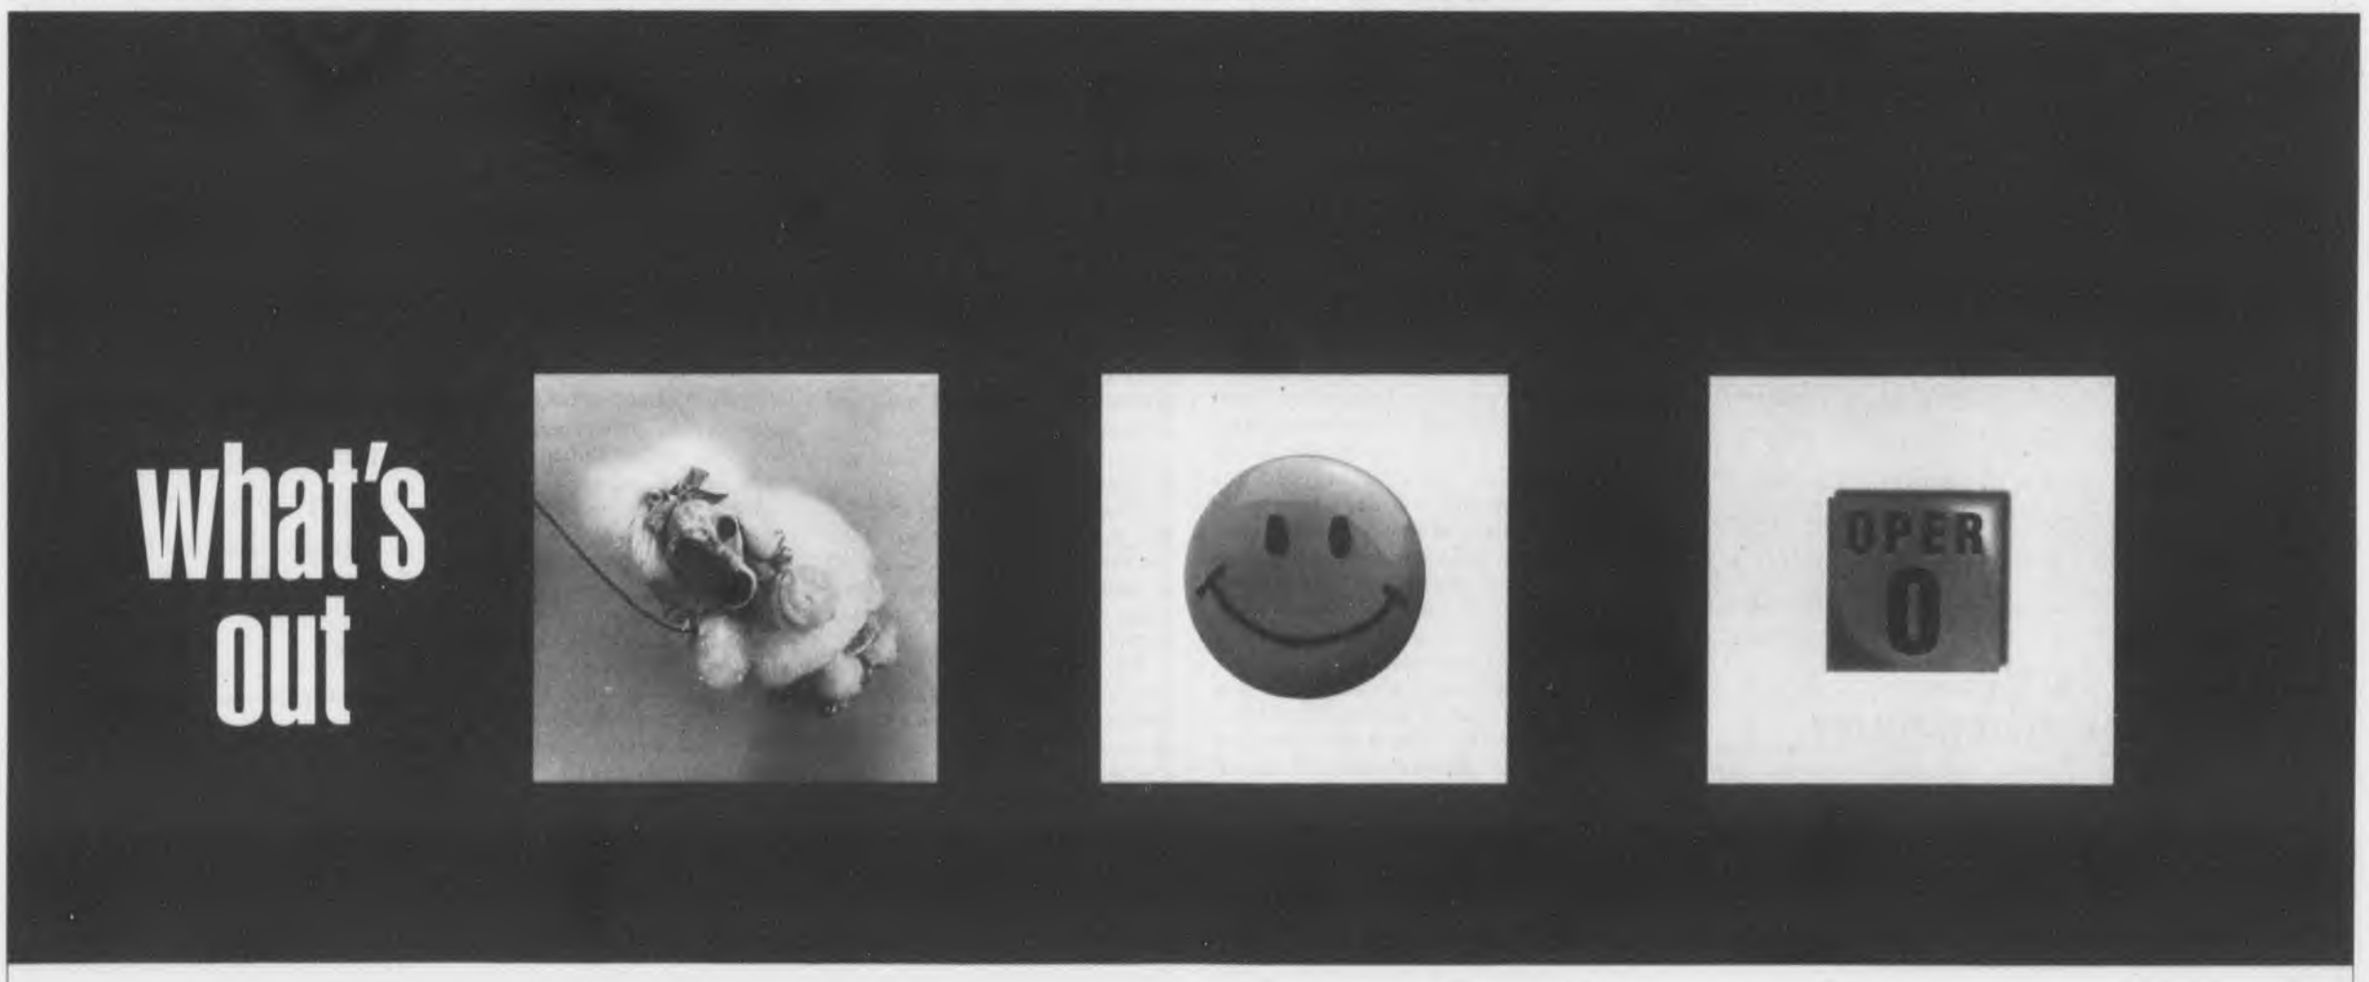
The fire department met with fraternities, sororities and the Aggieville Business Association earlier this month to talk about fire regulations such as maximum capacity. The fire department has targeted Aggieville bars, fraternities and sororities because Tannehill said those are the areas with the most problems.

"We have been talking to different groups — anyone who has a place of assembly," he said. "It is not our interest to prosecute anyone. We just want to make people aware."

Tannehill said fraternities and sororities have created fire hazards by trying to cram too many belongings into a small space.

"They build new beds so they can store more things in their rooms, and they don't leave a way for people to get out if there is a fire," he said.

Tannehill associated a lack of awareness with a series of recent fires.



He said some students tried to burn the Beta rock earlier in the semester.

The students filled a plastic trash can full of gasoline, carried it to the fraternity house, flung it on the rock and lit it on fire, he said.

"When we interviewed one of the participants, the smell of gasoline on him was so bad, we had to open the door of the office to let it air out," Tannehill said. "It was lucky for everyone that no one was hurt, and there was no property damage."

Tannehill described non-injury fires last week that included a person burning paper in a car and a man burning his girlfriend's clothes.

Members of the fire department will be available throughout the week to help residents and businesses develop escape plans and find places for smoke detectors.

Turmoil in Russia very important to interests of U.S

Weekend political turmoil in Moscow has underscored the problem of instability in the former communist nations and shown the limited power of the United States to react to such events.

President Clinton has been unable to offer much more than statements of support for Russian President Boris Yeltsin and continued confidence in his government.

Clearly, the power struggle between Yeltsin and the Parliamentary hardliners is a Russian problem and will need to be resolved by the Russians themselves. However, the outcome of the crisis will have a profound effect on the United States.

To greatly simplify the situation: A reformed, democratic Russia can be expected to emerge from Yeltsin's programs with the passage of time. Such a Russia would be a valuable trading partner with the United States and a force of stability in Eastern Europe.

If control of Russia were to revert to the hardliners, billions of dollars of aid and investment by the United States and other Western governments would go down the drain. The world could see a return of Russian imperialism — a "super Serbia" with a proud history to recapture and nuclear weapons to recapture it with.

The uncertainty of the events in Russia teaches us the valuable lesson that things change in world politics. Two years ago, the United States claimed a euphoric victory in the Cold War with the break-up of the Soviet Union.

Today, we watch as Eastern Europe tears itself into even more pieces, hoping that Russia can remain outside of the chaos and build a stable nation-state almost from scratch.

And all the mighty United States can do to help keep Russia on the right road is offer words of support, promises of gold and crossed fingers for luck.

Hypocrisy reigns in ranks of protesters

JOHN HART

The hypocrisy being displayed by the groups planning to protest Pat Robertson's Landon Lecture on Oct. 12 is approaching epic proportions. It is true, as the disclaimer goes, that it is the right of every American to participate in angst-filled protest. But to protest Robertson under the umbrella of tolerance, diversity and intellectualism is only demonstrating intolerance, narrow-mindedness and self-righteous indignation.

The protesters don't object to Robertson's presence — out of respect for the First Amendment god— but his message. This is an issue of ideological warfare.

The foundation of the protesters' platform is firmly rooted in a double-standard. They have judged Robertson's views to be intolerant based on a standard relative to their own personal agendas. Yet, they have elevated themselves to an intellectual, moral and spiritual highground in which the absolute superiority of their perspectives gives them the exclusive right to practice unbridled intolerance.

As a symbol of their overflowing arrogance, the protesters plan to wear black armbands symbolizing the death of the intellect at K-State. Come next Tuesday, however, it is the protesters who will forsake their intellectual credibility by promulgating all forms of stereotypes, propaganda and lies about Robertson's views during their hate orgy.

Kevyn Jacobs, a key protester and president of the Flint Hills Alliance, an advocacy group for gay and lesbians, manufactured this malicious judgment about Robertson: "He may have never met me, but he hates me because I'm gay." Pat Robertson has simply never said he hates homosexuals. Such statements demonstrate the protesters willingness to resort to fraud and deceit to justify their cause.

Robert Littrell, chairman of the Riley County Democratic party, made this condescending statement about the lecture: "We are tired of having one conservative lecturer after another for the Landon Lecture here at K-State."

In a University where liberal Democrats dominate the English, theater, anthropology and philosophy departments, as well as the majority of all other classrooms, it's only fair that conservative lecturers dominate the Landon Lecture Series. It provides balance and diversity.

The most pitiful aspect of the planned protest is the support the protesters are receiving from Ecumenical Campus Ministries and Don Fallon, Lutheran pastor and K-State coordinator of religious activities. These groups criticize Robertson for mixing his religious beliefs with his political aspirations. Yet they are guilty of the same thing by giving their religious stamp of approval to the protesters' political and social agendas.

Robertson is fiercely criticized for trying to impose his values on society. The harsh truth of our pluralistic society, though, is that the question is not is it right to impose your values on society, but whose values are going to be imposed on society.

Pat Robertson has the same right as the next American to participate in the political system, although many anti-Christian bigots feel otherwise. As you will see next Tuesday, the protesters are just as eager to impose their values on society as Robertson may be.

In yet another statement of intolerance, Fallon said Robertson's ideas were not representative of the University goals of equality and diversity. This statement is obvious proof the University goal for diversity is narrow-minded. For a perspective to not be representative of that goal clearly demonstrates that their orthodox standard is defined in the context of a limited social agenda, one that excludes certain views from the arena of debate, such as those espoused by Robertson.

Fallon also added that Robertson's views of Christianity were not representative of the Judeo-Christian society. Is the validity of one's views on Christianity now to be judged in accordance to the nebulous "Judeo-Christian society" instead of the Bible?

I'm not a member of the "Religious Right." I'm a Christian who allows the enduring word of God to be the guiding force in my life, instead of transient culturally-determined concepts such as liberalism, conservatism, the University goals for equality and diversity or the Judeo-Christian society.

I don't necessarily agree with everything Pat Robertson says or does, but as a University student in pursuit of an education, I plan to base my conclusion on his lecture — not the self-righteous, hypocritical rantings of a few arrogant protesters.

READERS WRITE ABOUT PAT ROBERTSON

It's not a question of free speech, but of the quality of the speaker

Editor,

Recent letters uncomfortable with the widespread outrage in the K-State community about the forthcoming Landon Lecture by Pat Robertson are off the mark.

The issue is hardly one of free speech or the suppression of viewpoints. You may have noticed that if any viewpoints have been suppressed in the Landon series, they are the comparably intolerant views of the opposite extreme, perhaps (to use a colleague's example) those of Louis Farakkhan. Does anyone want to bet me that he, or someone like him, will ever be invited for "balance?"

Radical views are, of course, important to be considered in a university, which tests all ideas, even repellent ones. I myself could find it valuable to hear Hitler lecture, or Satan for that matter, if we could get one of them here.

But the problem would be to do so under the auspices of the Landon series, which has always up to now had an honorific character to it, conferring some academic legitimacy, with the honor of the K-State academic community, on its speakers. It's not just a political stump and news opportunity.

Now, I often strongly oppose the views of the many right-wing speakers we have had, such as William Bennett, Lynne Cheney and George Will, but those cases are different than Robertson, whose views represent an explicit intolerance that is anti-intellectual and inimical to any university.

Anyone who would send out a letter to supporters saying feminists will teach women to leave their husbands, practice witchcraft, become lesbians, etc., should never have been honored for such a series. Robertson is now saying he signed the letter without reading it, but do you think you'll hear him denounce those ideas? Give me a break. And what does this say about the intellectual quality of his organization?

I commend the Collegian for recent reporting that turns more scrutiny on how such invitations are made and on what the whole series stands for. I predict that after the speech there will be a flurry of letters to the editor, irritated at some of the forms of protest and arguing in the abstract for the right to be heard, while ignoring what Robertson says – like the current batch of letters.

But it should be remembered that in any of its forms, the motivating outrage is much the same and is coming from groups with remarkably divergent beliefs. This shows that what we have here is not a free speech issue and attempt to stifle the views of this "religious broadcaster" – to use the feeble title that the advertising for the speech came up with for him. Rather, it is an outrage at the University stooping to this level of quality, not to mention casting doubt on our rhetoric of diversity and tolerance.

The controversy the invitation produced may ironically be beneficial for a while, but let's not pretend that Robertson's ideas are educational.

If you're debating whether or not he can speak, grab a clue

Editor,

A number of letters have been published concerning the upcoming Pat Robertson Landon Lecture. In these letters "liberals" have condemned "conservatives" and vice versa. The arguments have been interesting and at times humorous. Unfortunately, both sides have based many of their attacks on over-generalizations and biased categorization of the other camp's viewpoints.

A central goal of an university education is to foster open debate and critical thinking — to promote dialogues that focus on the central issue of our times, that encourage questions about what is right or wrong and that challenge the unspoken assumptions that underline our attitudes and values.

True debate is based on a clear understanding of your opponent's arguments and respect for your opponent's viewpoints. The challenge is to move the debate concerning Pat Robertson to a higher level. Particularly during a week set aside to promote diversity and harmony, let us avoid discussions that bounce the labels "liberal" and "conservative" around like tennis balls.

A rumor has been circulating that suggests no questions will be allowed from the audience at the end of Robertson's speech. This is inconsistent with the usual format followed by Landon Lectures and in light of the above should cause concern for "liberals" and "conservatives" alike.

The tenets of free speech and open dialogue imply not only that Pat Robertson be welcomed at K-State but that students and faculty also be allowed to ask questions of him and discuss his viewpoints with him. To do less suggests a disrespect for the K-State community and a disregard of the University's role in society at large.

assistant professor in Department of Management

▶ GUESS WHO AGAIN

Speaker, ralliers and protesters are all free to speak their minds

Editor,

Judging from letters to the editors, I assume Pat Robertson's supporters either misunderstand the First Amendment themselves or pretend to misunderstand and hope readers really do misunderstand. They have reached the remarkable conclusion that those who disagree with Robertson are interfering with his right of free speech.

On the contrary, the First Amendment protects not only the speech of Robertson and his supporters but also the speech of those who disagree with him. That means the protesters (and those who protest the protesters) may exercise their right to free speech by speaking and peacefully demonstrating as much as they like, so long as they do not keep Robertson from being heard, interfere with classes or do anything of that sort. Incidentally, the U.S. Supreme Court holds that wearing armbands is protected speech, too.

We should all celebrate our right to free speech by making ourselves heard and by listening to others.

▶ PAT ONE MORE TIME

Robertson's rhetoric is hardly the mirror image of Republicans

Editor,

I wish to make a statement concerning the upcoming Landon Lecture and Pat Robertson's standing in the Republican Party. First, however, I would like to commend Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., for defending the lecture committee for choosing Pat Robertson, not because he is a conservative but because college students should have an opportunity to hear other points of view.

Secondly, I would like to address John Exdell for mistaking Pat Robertson as a majority representative of the Republican Party. This is clearly not the case. True, Pat Robertson has run for president as a Republican, but he and his loyal followers make up only a small fraction of the party, and they should be regarded as such. Sen. Kassebaum definitely does not echo the views of Pat Robertson; so, accusing her of defending him on political grounds is completely unwarranted. Furthermore, Pat Robertson and many Republicans, including myself, differ with him or many issues.

I urge all students to attend Pat Robertson's lecture because he does offer a different point of view, not because he offers an ultra-conservative point of view. I also urge Exdell to take a better look at the Republican party and realize that as a majority, we are hardly like Pat Robertson.

Ambassadors stand for KSU

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

The search for the 1993 K-State Ambassadors has begun.

Applications were due last Friday, but for candidates, applying is only the start of the process.

Amy Renz, vice president of the KSU Alumni Association, said every student who applied will be granted an interview in front of an eight-member student panel, which includes current ambassadors Heather Riley, senior in English, and Todd Johnson, senior in agribusiness.

After the student interview, an equal number of men and women are selected to go to an interview with faculty members. During the faculty interview they also give a three minute presentation based on the Homecoming theme, Renz said.

The theme for 1993 is "The Spirit of the Cats is Back."

From the faculty interview, three to five pairs of students are chosen as finalists.

The finalists are then voted on by the student body, and the winners, one man and one woman, will be announced at halftime of the Homecoming football game on Oct. 30.

During the two weeks leading up to Homecoming, the finalists are also involved in the Homecoming pep rally and parade, as well as attending a reception in their honor.

Although the number of applicants varies from year to year, the type of ambassador the Alumni Association looks for remains the same.

"We're looking for articulate people who can represent the student body to alumni and prospective students. They need to be outgoing," Becky Klingler, director of constituent programs at the Alumni Association, said.

"It's very much an honor just to be selected as a finalist," Renz said.

Becky Keller, junior in human ecology, was a finalist in 1992 and reapplied this year.

"I've bounced back and forth between if I should reapply or not. But the process is so fun. It just makes Homecoming all that more memorable," she said.

Once Homecoming is over, the ambassadors' duties include attending in-state alumni events, visiting prospective students, attending K-State reunions, and being host to older alumni who return to K-State to visit.

"They basically serve as a representation of the student body," Klingler said.

"The more we can expose alumni to current students, the more they stay interested," she said.

The ambassador program not only helps K-State but the ambassadors themselves. The experience provides them with good contacts and leadership skills, Renz said.

Renz has been involved with the ambassador program since its beginning in 1977.

At that time, Blue Key Honorary sponsored Homecoming and approached the Alumni Association about helping with the event. At the same time, the Alumni Association was have difficulty finding students available to meet with alumni and prospective students.

So, the ambassador program was formed along with the Student Alumni Board to have a definite group of students whose purpose was to attend the alumni events and college nights.

During the last 16 years, the ambassador program has grown in its outreach efforts.

"I remember the first two students who won. They were so excited that they were going to be attending about two dozens events. Now they go to well over 75 to 100 events per year," Renz said, "It's a prestigious program that has really grown."

String artist fiddles with American style

COLLEGIAN STAFF

If you saw Mark O'Connor play Friday night at McCain Auditorium, you spent the rest of the weekend looking for your jaw.

Well, it's at McCain on the floor in front of your seat — right where it dropped when he mesmerized the audience with his blazing fiddle, guitar and mandolin virtuosity.

REVIEW

O'Connor, a stringed instrument wizard, has some of the most impressive musical credentials in the world. Chet Atkins calls O'Connor one of the "greatest musicians on the planet."

Hyperbole? Hardly.

His ability to integrate bluegrass, country, jazz, blues, swing, Cajun, gospel, Appalachian folk and even bebop into a classical, seamless and often blistering style may eventually earn him a spot next to Aaron Copeland as a true spokesman of American music.

A highlight of Friday's show was O'Connor's tribute to French jazz violinist Stephane Grapelli. O'Connor, who played with Grapelli after finishing high school, perfectly emulated Grapelli's swinging, gypsyish fiddle-strung-with-silver-and-gold-rubberbands style.

O'Connor's guitar playing likely surprised those who went to hear him on the violin. His first guitar medley teetered dangerously near the edge of the New Age tar pit, but soon turned into some of his fastest and most bluegrass-oriented playing of the evening. His short mandolin medley, while not as impressive as his fiddle and guitar work, was on the level of the great bluegrass mandolin players of our time.

But O'Connor's musical mastery is rivaled only by his incredibly boring stage presence. O'Connor hemmed and hawed his way through song introductions and trite tributes to his musical heroes. He played most of Friday night's show sitting center stage flanked only by his sound equipment, guitar and mandolin.

The only drawback of the concert was a noisy lighting crew. Patrons in the top rows of the orchestra section were repeatedly bothered, even after requests for quiet, by loud voices in the booth.

Cats oust WSU for championship

JEN MESSELT
Collegian

The Donnie Tillar Lacrosse Classic was won by the K-State A team, which defeated Wichita State 6-4 in the final game at Memorial Stadium on Sunday afternoon.

With eight minutes remaining in the fourth quarter, Brandon Aslin connected on one of his two goals for the game to increase the Cats' lead to 6-4.

The Shockers threatened to score in the last minute of the game but were unsuccessful. Attackers Tondo Waldron and Jed Dunhame and mid-fielders Stu Robson and Jeremiah Ryden each scored a goal to complete the scoring for the Cats.

The Cats, who were 11-1 last year, sought revenge from Wichita State. The Cats lost to the Shockers in the post season finals last year.

"It was a grudge match today," said Waldron, a senior in public relations. "We feel it was very successful."

The A team started the tournament by defeating Kansas City 14-3 in their first match and beating Missouri 9-1 in the second contest Friday.

Waldron said the team is very talented.

"This tournament shows that we can play like a team — we had 10 different people score," he said. "Every time we huddle up, we always say the score is 0-0, then we just go out and try to score."

The tournament was organized by Curt Thurman, coach and president of the lacrosse team. The tournament is named after their late coach Donnie Tillar. He was a helicopter pilot who was killed in the Persian Gulf War.

Tillar's unit from Fort Riley flew helicopters onto the field before the championship game.

Waldron said the team praised the soldiers.

"The men told us about the helicopter and read a poem. We had someone sing the national anthem, and they flew away. We saluted them as they left," Waldron said.

The Cats captured the tournament crown with hard work in the final contest, Waldron said.

"The squad won with a team effort, and that is just what he (Tillar) tried to instill in us. That is why we shined and meshed together," Waldron said. " We played as a team."

The seven-team tournament had a weekend attendance of more than 800 people.

Karina Kuregian led the way for K-State's sweep of both No. 1 singles and doubles titles Sunday at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Kuregian won the singles by defeating Laura Nhavene, from Tyler Community College, 7-5, 6-4.

"She has made some changes and taken her mistakes from the past and learned from them," Coach Steve Bietau said.

Kuregian joined with teammate Masha Meidell to take the No. 1 doubles championship by defeating Nhavene and Tracia Barnes 6-3, 6-4.

"Nhavene and Barnes are an awfully talented team and tough competitors," Bietau said.

Alexandra Thome placed third in No. 2 doubles, topping Rakel Nielson of Tyler Community College 6-3, 6-4.

Thome teamed up with Karen Nicholson and qualified for the championship match, where they were beaten by Tamsin Wainright and Kym Hazzard, 6-1, 6-2.

"The competition has been very good at the meet this year," Bietau said.

The field included Kansas and Oklahoma State, who placed first and second in the Big Eight last year.

Tyler Community College, from Tyler, Texas, was last year's junior college national champion.

"KU and OSU are always at the top of the conference, and the addition of Tyler really strengthened the tournament field," Bietau said.

Summer Ruckman and Karen Nicholson finished fourth and fifth, respectively, in No. 3 singles to round out the top placers for K-State.

VOLLEYBALL

Netters get back on track

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, MO. — Last Friday the K-State volleyball team did something they had not done this season — they won on the road.

The 3-0 win over the University of Missouri-Kansas City gave the Wildcats their first win outside of Manhattan this season to give them a 5-8 overall record.

Volleyball coach Patti Hagemeyer said the win was a big one.

"It was a pretty big win for us," Hagemeyer said.

"After the matches against Colorado and Nebraska, the team made the decision to play hard, and they wanted to win."

The Cats used a total team effort to put away the Kangaroos 15-13, 15-11 and 15-5. Hagemeyer said an important factor in the match was the Cats jumped out ahead of UMKC in all three games.

"In most of our matches so far we have started out slow," Hagemeyer said. "Getting out ahead of them allowed us to set the tempo. I think that sparked us to play better."

Another important part of the Cats' effort against the Kangaroos was the play of freshman middle-blocker Kate DeClerk. DeClerk recorded 12 kills and led the team with a .600 attack percentage.

"I thought that I played better than I usually do," DeClerk said. "I found that going over the top was a lot easier tonight."

DeClerk also ended game one after UMKC ran off five straight points with a booming spike for the kill.

"Chi Dau set the ball really high," DeClerk said. "I just hit it as hard as I could."

Hagemeyer also said DeClerk played more confidently.

"When I told her that she was going to start tonight, she didn't get scared," Hagemeyer said. "She really did some nice things tonight. She played really confident tonight, and I think that made a big difference."

Senior outside-hitter Stephanie Liester led the Cats with 13 kills and 14 digs. Liester said she wanted to carry the intensity from the third game at Nebraska into this match.

"I think that I played excited," Liester said. "I wanted to bring the intensity from the third game at Nebraska and bring it into to this game."

Liester had three service aces, but she had to abandon her jump serve because she recorded six service errors.

"I really wish that Steph could have kept with her jump serve," Hagemeyer said. "Other than that she played really good defense, and she passed really good."

Senior middle-blocker Angie McKee continued to play well as she finished tied with Liester for the team lead with 13 kills. Dau also contributed to the offensive attack with 41 assists and one kill.

"I think that we are starting to gel," Liester said. "We showed our desire tonight. Before the game we talked about not letting the ball hit the floor at all."

Hagemeyer said the next step for the team is to play well again in the next match.

"Our next step is to do it again," Hagemeyer said.

The Cats will travel to Lawrence on Wednesday to play rival University of Kansas.

"We will be ready to play KU," DeClerk said. "We want to win our first Big Eight game."

▶BRETT ENDS CAREER WITH HIT

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — George Brett didn't end his career with a home run, like Ted Williams did. Nor did he end it the way he had said he wanted to — running out a grounder to second base.

Instead, with Nolan Ryan watching from the Texas dugout on his final day as a player, Brett finished his 20-year run with a ninth-inning single in the Kansas City Royals' 4-1 victory over the Texas Rangers.

"It was as emotional as I've ever gotten on a baseball field," said Brett, who was 1-for-4. "I knew it was my last one. I was nervous. I was shaking."

With Ryan tipping his hat and players from both teams giving a standing ovation in front of their dugouts, Brett led off the ninth. He was hitless in 11 previous at-bats, but singled up the middle on a 1-2 pitch from Tom Henke.

"It was a good way to end my career," Brett said. "I wanted to stand on first base one last time."

Henke said he didn't mind giving up Brett's last hit.

"I'm going hard after George. He's a tough competitor, and I'm sure he wouldn't want it any other way," Henke said.

CROSS COUNTRY

Women capture 1st meet of season

Paulette Staats and Jeanene Rugan led the K-State womens' cross country team to a championship finish Saturday at the Oklahoma State Cowboy Jamboree.

Staats covered the 5,000-meter course in 17:46.39 for third place, and Rugan finished fourth overall with a 17:54.47 time. The Cats won the meet for the second-consecutive year.

All five K-State runners finished in the top 15, as Irma Betancourt (18:25.08) finished eighth, followed by Amy Marx (18:46.04) in 12th place and Janet Magner (18:57.47) in 14th.

The women combined for 50 points in the overall scoring and 27 points in the Division I scoring, winning the meet in both areas.

"It's certainly nice to get the win, and I feel we made the statement that we are a team to be reckoned with," Coach Terry Drake said. "The type of race we ran today was not out of the ordinary."

On the men's side, K-State all-American Francis O'Neill placed 11th (24:25.92) to lead the Wildcats to a third-place team finish behind No. 1-ranked Arkansas and host Oklahoma State in the Division I category.

"Today was a positive first outing of the season for Francis," Drake said. "He stayed with the lead group, which consisted of some of the best runners in the nation."

Ryan Clive-Smith placed 20th with a 25:05.65 time; Billy Wuggazer ran a 25:28.65 to place 28th; David Haskell (25:42.62) placed 33rd, and Eric Esau (27:40.76) rounded out the scoring for K-State, finishing 92nd.

REVIEW

STICK dances, dazzles, dominates

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Brutal, hard-core grunge packed a serious message.

STICK celebrated its album debut Friday night at the Bottleneck in Lawrence. In front of a capacity crowd of more than 250, STICK began the show with a wailing police siren and a vocal warning to all.

"This is not a fucking test! This is the real thing," said Mark Smirl, vocalist for STICK, as the band took the stage.

As the first chords echoed through the bar, stage diving and an aggressive mosh-pit formed in front of the stage. STICK, mingling playfully in the crowd just moments before, dominated early and led the crowd for an aggressive 90-minute set.

Most material from their new album "Heavy Bag" was played, as was a cover of Black Flag's "Drinking and Driving."

The band was tight as a musical unit despite the commotion on and off the stage.

Smirl, using his fully extended mikestand as a makeshift pulpit, growled and shouted messages of social unfairness. When he wasn't singing, Smirl stomped and rigidly danced from one side of the 25-foot stage to the other, offering the audience handslaps and handshakes.

Non-stop stage diving, along with members of the audience hoisting the band members on their shoulders, didn't stop a formidable display of musical talent.

Bassist Darrel Brannock, guitarist Mike Tobin and drummer Tim Mohn played a firm, tight groove that exceeded the sound on their album "Heavy Bag."

Although they remained fairly stationary on stage, it was understandable. The chaos they created with their music prevented any further movement.

After a rowdy diver bumped into Brannock, a comical plea to be more careful had the mob in an uproar. Smirl, inciting the crowd to shout down his bandmate, began an risque chant that drove them into a frenzy.

STICK provided a solid live performance by taking the anger of youth and effectively presenting it with outstanding music. Only the fans could make the inspiring lyrics a reality.

Students, residents become familiar with classics through orchestra

LORI ARMER
Collegian

The Kansas State University Symphony Orchestra will be giving its premier performance of the season at 8 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium, under the direction of conductor David Littrell.

The three classical compositions to be featured include Respighi's "Ancient Dances and Airs for Lute, Suite No. 2," followed by Mozart's "Symphony No. 40 in G Minor," and Dvorak's "Symphony No. 8 in G Major."

Molly Lewis, sophomore in pre-nursing and member of the orchestra for three semesters, said the concert will be enjoyable for people of all ages, including both the residents of the University and the surrounding community.

K-STATE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
■ They will be performing at 8 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

"It's an opportunity to learn and become more familiar with the classic pieces. Decades and centuries worth of music will be played," Lewis said. "It's important, especially here in Manhattan, for people to become acquainted with this type of music. It can really open people's eyes."

Littrell said the classical music will be entertaining and educational.

"The music is great and has a wide variety. It's educational, even for the members of the orchestra," Littrell said.

The strong dedication of the orchestra members has made the opening even more exciting.

"We've worked really hard this year in preparation. The director has a lot to do with it," said Suzanne Kraus, senior in pre-medicine and member of the orchestra.

"We're the best we've been since I began playing here four years ago."

The opening concert is free and will last about 1-1/2 hours. It is the prelude to four more concerts at K-State, another at Clay Center and a tour to be arranged later.

TRISHA BENNINGA
Collegian

About 7,000 people browsed through the booths of the 20th annual pumpkin patch.

The craft show, which ran all day Friday and Saturday in CiCo Park, is a festival sponsored by the Memorial Hospital Auxiliary as a fundraiser.

Craftmakers from Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Colorado, Missouri and Minnesota made up more than 135 booths that appeared at the pumpkin patch this year, Liz Hudec, chairwoman of the event, said.

"We've always had a waiting list," she said. "We've had a waiting list since the first year."

Dana Miller, junior in health information management, said she came Friday afternoon.

"I thought it was a lot better than in years past because they've extended it and there is more to see," she said.

Some of the crafts at the festival included clay miniatures, ceramic pottery, dried flower displays, wooden crafts, hand-designed sweatshirts, jewelry, sand dough Christmas ornaments, decorated stuffed animals and a variety of holiday decorations. Some new items this year, Hudec said, included hand-made wooden clocks and willow furniture.

Besides the crafts, food such as chili, sloppy joes, hot dogs, sandwiches and pies also was sold at the event.

"We're known for our homemade pies," Hudec said. She said 200 pies were made, and only about 50 were left at 11 a.m. Saturday.

She said all of the food is donated by the auxiliary members.

A dinner on the Friday night of the festival included pumpkin patch potato casserole, green beans, coleslaw and rolls.

Hudec said the event requires year-round planning. The 268 auxiliary members meet each January to plan the pumpkin patch and the ice cream social, the auxiliary's other annual fundraiser.

Members are then called and asked to donate food and volunteer time. She said more than 80 members volunteered their time this year.

Hudec said each department in the hospital makes out a wish list and submits it to the hospital's chief executive officer, who then gives it to the auxiliary.

The auxiliary buys items from the lists according to the needs of the hospital.

She said in the past few years the money has been used to refurnish the waiting rooms.

Lecture to highlight week

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Fun, exciting, a commanding presence, were words Phil Anderson, chairman of the Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week committee, used to describe Julianne Malveaux, the speaker at the upcoming Lou Douglas Lecture.

"She can dominate a discussion with her ideas while at the same time not be overbearing," he said.

Gloria Rumsey, coordinator for the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, said Malveaux was chosen to be a speaker because of her impressive credentials and because her field of expertise fit in well with the activities associated with Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week.

"The Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week committee asked if we would help bring Dr. Malveaux in to speak," Rumsey said. "When we saw her credentials we were very excited to have her come to K-State."

Malveaux received a doctoral degree in economics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. She is a member of the visiting faculty in the African American Studies Department at the University of California, Berkeley.

Her research involves studying the labor market and the effects of government policies on women and minorities. She is co-editor of "Slipping Through the Cracks: The Status of Black Women."

Malveaux will speak at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

CLASSIFIED DIRECTORY

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

ASK debt in limbo

The second option would be for the debt to be turned over to the WSU controller's office. Universities that are still members would pay their share of the debt, and it would be WSU's responsibility to collect the rest of the debt.

"You realize the comic implications of that," Skoog said.

That option could have WSU suing all the students of K-State for $2,665, he said.

The controllers office at WSU handles the financial account of ASK. Dues are sent to the account there, and vouchers are approved through the office.

The final option brought up by the board members was for ASK to declare bankruptcy and dissolve the organization.

Previous board members may be personally liable for the debt if this occurs, Halverson said.

Student governing associations in Kansas would not be allowed to work together under the ASK title, but nothing would prevent these associations from working together under another organizational title.

Pittsburg State students voted to pay their part of the debt, but Emporia State declined to vote until more details of the debt were found.

"Under no circumstances will the students of K-State be asked to pay for somebody else's Whitney Houston tapes," Skoog said.

U.S. sends stern warning to Somali captors

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon ordered fresh infantry, aerial gunships and top-of-the-line tanks to Somalia Monday to bolster U.S. forces after at least 12 Americans were killed, 78 wounded and others captured in the fiercest fighting since the mission began.

The casualties, inflicted by the forces of warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, were the most for the United States in such a short period since the Persian Gulf War. The battle began late Sunday and stretched into Monday.

On Capitol Hill, some lawmakers called for U.S. withdrawal, but President Clinton insisted American forces would remain until order was restored.

Reinforcements were being sent, he said, because "I'm not satisfied that the folks that are there now have the protection that they need."

"We will respond forcefully if any harm comes to those who are being detained."

LES ASPIN
DEFENSE SECRETARY

Disturbing pictures of dead and captured American soldiers filtered back from Mogadishu. Television footage showed a frightened, wounded soldier being questioned by his captors — prompting a warning from Clinton.

If any U.S. soldiers are mistreated, he said, "the United States — not the United Nations — will view this very gravely and take appropriate action."

Pentagon officials declined to specify the number it believes are being held.

The captured soldier identified himself as Army Chief Warrant Officer Mike Durant, a Blackhawk helicopter pilot. The Pentagon said his unit was based at Fort Campbell, Ky.

A gruesome photograph showed cheering Somalis dragging by rope the body of an unidentified American through the streets.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin announced at the Pentagon that a mechanized company of Army soldiers with an armored platoon was being dispatched to Mogadishu to reinforce the U.S. force there. The company will be composed of about 220 soldiers, officials said.

The Army company will be equipped with heavy armor, including four M1-A1 battle tanks and 14 Bradley fighting vehicles, which are armored troop carriers, Aspin said.

Aspin said the Pentagon also was sending two AC-130 gunships, replacement helicopters and 200 other troops to replace the wounded and others due to leave. There are about 4,700 U.S. troops in Somalia.

At the State Department, spokesman Mike McCurry said the administration remained firmly committed to its mission in Somalia, which began last December as a humanitarian venture but took on a more military style as the U.N. became determined to arrest Aidid.

A U.N. official in New York said the two men who were most wanted after Aidid were captured in the battle.

Clinton expressed his condolences for the families of those killed and his determination to see the mission through.

"They were working to assure that anarchy and starvation do not return to a nation in which more than 300,000 people had lost their lives, many of them children, before the United States led the United Nations mission there starting last year," he said of the U.S. soldiers. "They were acting in the best spirit of America."

Senior military leaders, briefing reporters on the condition of anonymity, said most of the U.S. casualties occurred when the Americans came under heavy fire from several hundred Somalis after they raided a meeting of Aidid supporters at a hotel. Two Blackhawk helicopters attempting to aid the soldiers were shot down and surrounded by opposing forces.

As for the new armor being sent in, the officers said the tanks will be used to clear roadblocks, while the armored vehicles and aerial gunships have night-vision scopes that will allow them to operate at all hours.

One of the military officers said the reinforcements were needed because Aidid's men have become more capable after honing their guerrilla-type tactics against the U.N. forces.

The fighting came as United Nations forces launched a new attempt to destroy Aidid's military command structure in Mogadishu.

The fresh troops will come from the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), based in Fort Stewart, Ga. The forces were expected to be flown from Hunter Army Airfield near Fort Stewart to Somalia.

The M1-A1 tanks to be sent to Mogadishu will be specially outfitted with plows to detonate mines. Such heavy weaponry hasn't been available to the U.S. forces on the ground in Somalia since the Marines left several months ago.

Clinton said the United States must not waver from its commitment to help erase brutality and anarchy in Somalia. Even so, the latest casualties sparked new calls on Capitol Hill for the administration to take another look at its policy in Somalia.

"Americans by the dozen are paying with their lives and limbs for a misplaced policy," Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said.

St. Francis honored in celebration; creation and scientific research affirmed

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Pet owners brought their cats, dogs and other animals Monday night to a blessing on Danforth Chapel lawn in honor of St. Francis.

St. Francis is known to many as the patron saint of animals. According to legend, he was such a gentle, caring man that even the fiercest animals were tame to him.

Father Keith Weber of St. Isidore's Catholic Church said they bless all animals in the world today in honor of St. Francis.

The blessing of the animals was in honor of St. Francis, who gave up all personal possessions and dedicated his life to spreading the word of God.

The purpose of the celebration is to thank God for creating all animals, wild or tame, in the world, said the Rev. Cathy Chittenden-Bascom of St. Francis Canterbury Episcopal Church.

"It's mainly a celebration of creation," Chittenden-Bascom said.

The occasion was celebrated with an opening song, readings, prayers, petitions, blessing of the animals, final blessing and a closing song. Fallon said the celebration implies more than blessing of pets and animals — it implies sense of affirming God's creation and the work of our University, which explores and does scientific research.

"Our emphasis was to celebrate the creation and also to give affirmation to scientific research and studies of the University, as well as to look at human relationship with the ecosystem, including the animal world," Fallon said.

A variety of animals were brought to the blessing by owners.

Nancy Swihart, Keats resident, said she brought a sheep to the celebration to represent her flock at home.

"They needed someone to represent the larger animal kingdom," Swihart said.

Linda Matthew, Manhattan resident, said she brought her two dogs after hearing about it from her church.

"They're just members of the family," Greg Matthew, Manhattan resident, said.

Task force proposes tobacco sales

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

The Union Governing Board's tobacco task force met for the second time Monday to discuss the sale and consumption of tobacco products in the K-State Union.

The committee met last April to address students' concerns and comments about not being able to smoke in the Union.

Trent LeDoux, chairperson of the task force, said Thursday he would propose to UGB the sale of tobacco products in the Union. LeDoux said he would wait on a plan to provide an area for smokers within the Union.

"The sale is something that doesn't require us to revamp the physical structure of the Union," he said.

If tobacco products are sold again in the facility and sales go well, the committee will consider the construction of a smoking area, LeDoux said.

At the meeting, he proposed the petitioning of a tobacco company to provide the funds for such a project. LeDoux said he was approached by students who suggested building an enclosed room for smoking.

"I would think a tobacco company would jump all over this," LeDoux said.

"It seems almost to good to be true. It would make both sides happy, if only we can get the money."

Beth Trimmer, president of UGB, said she is against the consumption of tobacco products in the Union and feels the designated area for smokers may not alleviate the problem.

"This is not a right or wrong answer. It's a health issue," she said. "I would like to find a compromise."

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said if there is a need for a room, it should be looked into.

Freshman student dies on Saturday

Cory D. Riedy, a freshman at K-State, died Saturday from a self-inflicted gunshot wound at his home in Woodbine.

Riedy participated in intramural volleyball at K-State and enjoyed playing racquetball at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex several times a week, said Travis Williams, Riedy's roommate at Marlatt Hall.

"He made friends quickly and got along with everybody," Williams said.

Riedy was born Nov. 29, 1974, in Junction City, the son of Gary and Pamela Riedy. He graduated from Hope High School in 1993.

Riedy was a member of the Army Reserve 482nd Engineering Platoon's firefighting unit at Camp Forsyth in Fort Riley and was a member of the Jolly Jayhawker 4-H Club of Woodbine.

Services were held Monday at the United Methodist Church in Woodbine. A prayer service was also held at St. Phillip's Catholic Church in Hope.

A memorial fund has been established for the math and science department at Hope High School. Contributions may be sent to the Donahue Funeral Home in Herington.

Russians back Yeltsin and hope for peace

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin won a bloody victory in the battle for Russia's future Monday, his tanks and paratroopers flushing his hard-line opponents from a flaming Russian parliament building. Scores died as Yeltsin crushed the strongest power bid yet by remnants of the old Communist regime.

The mass surrender of lawmakers and their armed supporters seemed likely to allow Yeltsin to move ahead with plans to elect a new parliament in December and pursue long-frustrated economic reforms. But he still faced daunting challenges in his effort to transform Russia's economy and society.

Parliament leaders gave up after 1,000 soldiers raked the white marble parliament relentlessly with fire from T-72 tank cannons and heavy machine guns, but at least some holdouts remained at large.

After nightfall, red and green tracer bullets streaked across the sky as flames shot up the sides of the parliament, known as the White House. Armored vehicles and heavy trucks rumbled through the city, and Muscovites rushed home to beat a new military curfew.

Snipers continued to fire from the White House and surrounding buildings. The search for holdouts was difficult because the 19-story parliament building is an often-confusing labyrinth of twisting corridors and hidden rooms.

The storming of the White House broke hard-line opposition in parliament, but many people harbor deep resentment against the soaring prices and other painful changes under Yeltsin's reforms. The attack also could make martyrs of his opponents.

President Clinton and other Western leaders were quick to support Yeltsin, but they can be expected to closely watch how he treats his foes in the coming days and weeks.

Parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov, Vice President Alexander Rutskoi and other leaders of the two-week occupation of the White House were taken from parliament to the high-security Lefortovo Prison.

Escalating their defiance of Yeltsin's dissolution of parliament on Sept. 21, armed hard-liners captured the Moscow mayor's offices and tried to take Russia's main television center Sunday. Parliament leaders urged supporters to topple Yeltsin, whose reforms had been continually undermined by the Communist-dominated legislature.

Yeltsin spent the day closeted with his closest aides in the Kremlin, where he had remained overnight since rushing there by helicopter during Sunday's street fighting. Late Sunday, he returned to his country dacha.

He struck back just after dawn Monday with the assault on the parliament building.

"All that was and still is going on in Moscow ... was an armed revolt planned in advance," he said on nationwide television, explaining the attack while it was still raging.

"It was organized by Communists seeking revenge, by

KSDB receives top awards in radio competition

KSDB-FM 91.9, K-State's radio station, has captured top honors in a statewide radio-station competition.

Twelve K-State students sent in items they recorded from the previous year to the annual competition sponsored by the Kansas Association of Broadcasters.

The KAB split the competition into four categories of stations. The four categories are small market, medium market, metro market and non commercial/educational.

KSDB competed in the non commercial/educational station category, which is a station that cannot sell commercials. The New Hampshire Broadcasters Association judges the entries for the quality and the presentation of the recordings.

The winners will be recognized during the KAB Convention at the Awards Luncheon at noon Thursday, Oct. 14, in the Wichita Airport Hilton. Award plaques will be presented to first- and second-place winners.

"My goal was to let the students have an opportunity to compete in this event as much as possible," Joe Montgomery, station manager for KSDB, said. "This gives them good opportunities, because they receive critiques from their recordings, and this gives them an assessment of how they have accomplished their work."

ENROLLMENT FIGURES

The registrar's office recently released the 20-day enrollment figures, which reflect a decrease in enrollment from 1992.

FALL TOTAL	21,222	20,775

DEREK THOMAN/Collegian

Enrollment figures down slightly from fall 1992

Gunile Devault, associate registrar, said 4,990 freshmen were enrolled for fall 1993 and 5,313 freshmen for fall 1992. The total number of enrollment for fall 1993 was 20,775, and fall 1992 was 21,222. He said it is a modest drop in the overall enrollment.

"There were more freshmen this year than ever before. The main reason for the 1.5-percent drop was due to the flood for the part-time students. Also, we had the largest class of graduates in May 1992."

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and enrollment management said a small drop in the enrollment is not a big concern for the University right now.

Alliance feels threatened by reform

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Fear of a government dominated by Nelson Mandela's African National Congress has created an unlikely black-and-white alliance that is threatening everything from strikes to civil war.

So far, the pro-apartheid whites and conservative blacks have been helpless to stop reforms spearheaded by President F.W. de Klerk and the ANC, the nation's leading black group and likely winner of South Africa's first free election on April 27.

The holdouts have boycotted political talks, challenged negotiated agreements in court and threatened to take up arms, all to no avail.

Parliament last month approved bills giving blacks a governing role for the first time, ignoring the cries of "Traitor!" from right-wing whites.

But efforts continue to get the outsiders back aboard the negotiating process. Analysts consider them able and willing to wage an effective terrorist campaign even if they are too weak to carry out a full-scale civil war.

Observatory moved to higher orbit

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA started nudging its massive Compton Gamma-Ray Observatory to a higher orbit on Monday to prevent it from drifting too close to Earth and burning up in the atmosphere. At 17 tons, the observatory is the heaviest satellite ever sent into space. It was launched in April 1991 from the space shuttle Atlantis.

Engineers at Goddard Space Flight Center near Washington fired on-board thrusters for one minute shortly after midnight. They will repeat the maneuver nine more times, on Wednesday and Friday, and then every day next week through Oct. 17. A second series of firings will be made from Nov. 22 to Dec. 3.

Pizzeria's better after 2nd visit

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

The first meal was poor, and a second opportunity to prove the "gourmet pizza" motto almost failed.

Pizza Chef, 1200 Moro St., opened about a month ago and should have perfected its product and service by now. A recent late-evening purchase, however, was miserably bungled.

REVIEW

The menu board was a jumble of words and catch phrases, and it offered a plethora of choices. Ciao Bella was here, and Calzone was there. The selections were numerous, but help in finding a suitable dish wasn't.

The first visit brought about little assistance, so a basic order was placed.

A junior, 8-inch pizza with traditional cheese, pepperoni and mushrooms provided a clue as to how Pizza Chef would perform in the food category. The total was under $3.50.

There wasn't anyone else in the restaurant, so it didn't take long for the order to arrive. The pizza was cut, boxed and quickly ready for carry-out.

Back at home, the box was opened to reveal an unpleasant sight.

The cheese toward the middle of the pizza wasn't completely melted. Picking up the slices was a messy affair. Obviously, the pie hadn't cooked thoroughly, because every slice was stuck to the bottom of the box.

Because the crust was oversized on the end and paper-thin in the center, individual pieces had to be wrestled free. That only led to the toppings sliding off of the crust.

Ugh.

Luckily, after scooping everything together, the pizza tasted pretty good. Although the pepperoni topping was barely adequate, there were plenty of mushrooms. The sauce was good with a rich tomato flavor. Adding grated cheese and red peppers did the trick.

Because the first trip to Pizza Chef was almost a disaster, another meal was ordered to see if this mistake was a one-time occurrence.

Lunchtime presented a new staff and a different perspective of the restaurant. Sunlight highlighted the new marble wallpaper, chairs and carpet. Plants, normally overlooked at night, helped with the overall atmosphere. Wall hangings were just as nice and helped support the Italian mood.

Unfortunately, entertainment alternatives prevent Pizza Chef from completing the Italian scene with style. Noisy, large and distracting video games overwhelm the guest. It would be nice to see some of them removed in favor of more seating or larger tables.

After placing the same order as the night before, the wait of 20 minutes was not fun. The Super Nintendo game blared from across the room, and it was either "Sesame Street" or a soap opera on the two televisions.

Even though I was the lone customer, the wait was eventually worth it.

The pizza was delicious and was completely cooked. It was nice to eat the toppings on the crust for a change.

Although it made mistakes, Pizza Chef has good food to eat. Just make sure the order is planned sufficiently beforehand and is specified for carry-out.

Kennedy supports Clinton's proposal for health care

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Congressmen Joseph Kennedy, Jim Slattery and Dan Glickman spoke about the nation's health-care system for veterans and students at a press conference Friday.

Rep. Kennedy, D-Mass., said he believed veterans have been treated badly under previous government health-care plans.

"I think that veterans have had a terrible, terrible time," Kennedy said.

"Under the Clinton health proposal, the veterans' system, I think, will be changed dramatically," he said. "Many of the dollars that are needed in the system will finally be pumped into it.

"A great many more choices will become available. Their dependents will be taken care of. But, most importantly, the quality of care in the veterans' facility will, in the short term, rise dramatically," he said.

Kennedy said both he and Rep. Slattery, D-Kan., were frustrated that in many instances the quality of health care veterans received was secondary to that of other Americans.

Both Kennedy and Slattery serve on the Veterans' Affairs Committee.

Hospitals will compete with each other as a result of health-care reform, Kennedy said.

"As with all hospitals, once they have had the injection of money to get them up to speed, they will have to compete with other hospitals in order to attract patients," Kennedy said.

"Over a period of time, I think that will weed out some of the poor hospitals, and it will strengthen the better hospitals. In the end, I imagine over the course of the next decade, our veterans will get much better quality and good health care than they receive today."

Slattery affirmed Kennedy's remarks and spoke about Kansas veterans and how they will receive new freedom under the proposed plan.

"The veterans that aré living here in this area and in the Topeka area are going to have all of the services that they currently have, plus an option to contact other providers," Slattery said. "So, if they don't like the services in the VA hospital, they potentially will be able to participate in the other hospital. It'll give them choice."

Students are typically included in their parents' health plan until they turn 21. Those who are not will also receive advantages under the health plan, Slattery said.

"To the extent today that students are not covered by plans their parents have, they will be included in the package. They will be required to pay something, too," Slattery said. "This whole idea of universal service is going to require everybody to contribute something. There isn't any free lunch out there for anybody."

Rep. Glickman, D-Kan., said students are typically healthy. Money will not inhibit unhealthy students from receiving care through the plan.

"They are just past the immunization age, and most of them are pretty healthy. Some of it is because either they or their parents don't have health insurance at all. So, they don't get any of the good preventative care when something goes wrong, and then their health deteriorates.

"This plan puts everybody in a covered plan," Glickman said. "There won't be the financial disincentive not to get medical care for kids and students."

fascist leaders and some of the former lawmakers. ... There can be no forgiveness, because they lifted their hand against peaceful people," he said.

Authorities had no firm figures on casualties from the 10-hour battle at the White House, but soldiers stacked dozens of bodies outside the building.

Russian television reported that Sunday's battle at the TV complex alone left 62 dead and 400 wounded.

In comparison, only three people died during the failed August 1991 coup attempt that led to the demise of the Soviet Union.

U.S. officials in Washington said one American was killed in the Moscow clashes and five were wounded. The injured were a Marine guard at the U.S. Embassy, who was shot in the neck by a sniper, three journalists and a civilian, who was not a journalist.

Yeltsin at first told Russians and the world he would not use force to break the deadlock with the Soviet-era parliament, which for 18 months has stymied his free-market reforms. He changed course after the hard-liners rioted Sunday and tried to seize the television center.

The army struck the White House with deliberate and overwhelming force at 7 a.m.

The price is now too high for U.S. to stay in Somalia

It's time to get out.

"I don't believe in simply getting out. I don't believe in setting a date and saying we are going to get out by Dec. 1."

That was the word on the U.S. mission in Somalia from Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Sounds like the rhetoric Americans heard 30 years ago when the United States began its mission in Southeast Asia.

In an attack on Monday, 16 families lost a loved one, 75 obedient soldiers were wounded, and Defense Secretary Les Aspin said a "small number" of troops were captured.

The game is over. Too many have died so the United States can play Rambo.

As Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said, "Americans by the dozen are paying with their lives and limbs for a misplaced policy."

The mission must stop now, before the escalation becomes a vicious circle where more Americans must die to justify the deaths of those who fought before them.

Come on, Mr. President, you don't want to be known for the 1990s version of the bloodiest and most divisive conflict of our time — Vietnam.

And, to Mr. "I don't believe in simply getting out" Nunn and anyone else with that attitude, your floundering is what will continue to kill Americans in Somalia.

There is one way to stop this: Congress can vote to cut funding for the mission in Somalia if Clinton refuses to pull out.

Call your congressperson. Let that person know we want our loved ones to be taken out of Washington's war game.

Our dilemmas with the TP dispensers

Writing a column is strange.

Though I've been at K-State forever, and though I've worked at the Collegian most of that time, since my face now appears in the paper, weird things happen to me.

Complete strangers furtively look at me around grocery-store displays, over mugs of beer or through dirty car windows. They look for a second, look away, look again and whisper to their friends.

Sometimes, it stops at that, and I wonder, "Do I have a booger hanging out of my nose?" or "What is my hair doing now?"

The braver ones, after trying to check me out without my noticing, come up and say things like, "Hey, don't you, like, write articles for the Collegian, or something?"

"Why, yes I do," I say. And, so as to fulfill my journalistic responsibility to dispel common misconceptions about opinion pages, I go into an explanation of the subtle differences between articles, columns and editorials.

"Uhh ... yeah," they say. "So ... you are that person who writes articles for the Collegian."

This is usually followed by some strange comment about porches or Cosmo or something I didn't write at all.

A couple of people have insinuated I never write about anything important. So, I've decided to tackle a topic that's been heavy on my mind.

Dysfunctional toilet-paper dispensers.

Everyone has their bathroom pet peeves — stalls with no doors, empty soap dispensers and those bizarre towel dispensers, where the towels look like little white hammocks, and you wonder if there's a little elf inside who washes the portion inside the dispenser before it comes back out again.

Some people even have bathroom fetishes. They'll argue for hours about whether the paper should go over the roll or under, or what's the funniest bathroom cliché — talking to Ralph on the porcelain bus or sitting on the thundermug.

My friend Neil even told me he knew a farmer who rationed toilet paper to his wife and kids because he was obsessed with wasting the stuff.

LAJEAN RAU

But my favorite bathroom story is called "WHY DON'T THEY WORK?"

Tell me why, in a country that can send a man to the moon, fewer than one out of every 10 toilet-paper dispensers works properly.

We have interactive television, video conference calls, talking cars with passenger-specific climate control, virtual-reality sex and karoake.

Our children play Sega and Nintendo like they're dodgeball and tic-tac-toe. Hell, some of them even write the software.

Some day, they tell us, we'll live in space.

So why the heck can't we find someone who knows how to build a better toilet-paper dispenser?

Here are some of my favorites:

Toilet-paper dispensers that house two rolls, one on top of the other. They say things like, "push button to release second roll." But they never mean it. Have you ever been able to successfully get to that second roll? I really want to know. I don't think it has ever happened. They just sit up there for eternity or until someone decides to go with a new model, which undoubtedly won't work either.

See? I get irate. And that's only my first example.

How about the kind that stop three-quarters of the way around, so as to only let you have two sheets of toilet paper at a time. This is stupid. Everyone knows you're going to take as much as you want no matter how hard it is to get it. And when they break, they go all the way around anyway. So everyone who yanks on it will get three or four hundred sheets, instead of two.

I especially like the super-sized rolls that weigh about 50 pounds, so every time you try to pull off a few sheets the sheer weight of the roll makes the paper break off about a centimeter from your thumb. Then, they expect you to to turn that massive roll with a 2-inch-diameter knob without breaking your hand.

On campus, many toilet paper dispensers are padlocked closed.

Why?

And there's the little square, folded toilet-paper sheets that wouldn't wipe Barbie's butt, and the kind they must make out of wood chips or fiberglass or something.

Every woman friend I've told about this idea says, "Yeah, and don't you hate ... ." Every guy friend I've told says, "What do you mean?"

Why is that? I don't think I want to know.

▶ STUDENT SENATE

Here are a few ideas for realistic progress

Editor,

I would like to thank our student government for representing the students so well. I cannot imagine the time they took to put an agenda together. Then stick with it. I remember the students' outcry last year for a hotel to be built on campus. The many ways students can benefit from a hotel are infinite.

I think the students are also very thankful you are strongly considering spending three quarters of a million dollars to get a shuttle service up and running. Especially with the ratio of faculty to parking spots and students to parking spots so equal. I'm sure the students are saying, "Why not spend our student money to allow faculty to park in more convenient spots?" Heaven knows Faculty Senate listened to you when it passed both the dismissal policy and the plus/minus GPA policy. They knew you were just kidding when you voted both bills down.

We sure would not want you to apply some economic principles to the parking matter. I'll throw out a suggestion in case you do. The Weber lot is never full. Here is a thought: Why don't we allot parking like they do at a certain sports complex in Kansas City. The closer you park (the lots in demand), the more you pay (rationing the supply). Quit thinking of wasting money on a shuttle service no one will use.

Wake up, Senate! We need a hotel about as much as we need an airport on campus. Oops. Don't take that suggestion seriously, Senate. But a suggestion I would offer and you can take seriously is that you get an agenda, solve the first problem on it and go from there.

Universities are no place for foul mouths

Editor,

I find it a pleasing experience, after so many years away from the educational environment, to be here at K-State. For me it has been 27 years since those high-school days, and I can see many differences between then and now. Many of the changes I find appealing and challenging, as I am sure others do. However, there is one change I am having great difficulty accepting.

It seems it is acceptable on this campus, not to mention much of our society, for some young men and women to express themselves by the use of vulgar language. It appears to be prevalent everywhere, but I am most affected by it in the Union. I was under the impression that the Union was common ground, where students of varying ethnic, cultural and academic backgrounds could gather and mingle in order that they might share each other's company or ideas.

It appears there are some who feel it is their right to gather at the cafeteria or at the head of the stairs and behave in a loud, boisterous and infantile manner. This I am sure they feel is their right, but I take exception to their intrusive use of vulgar expletives in a public gathering place.

It would seem to me that once an individual had attained the level of academic achievement it takes to successfully navigate through a college curriculum, their vocabulary would be indicative of such an accomplishment. I shudder to think that the bulk of the student body views this form of expression of free speech as cute or passé, let alone put up with it. I am no lawyer, but I believe it is even against the law.

I could be wrong, but I wonder what kind of leaders these people will be tomorrow. Where is their sense of self-respect or their moral values? Where is their concern for the rights of others? I would suggest that it is in the gutter along with their mouth. I am quite certain that this letter will not be as offensive to them as their language is to me, as it is quite obvious that they have not yet learned to communicate intelligently and probably don't even know where the editorial section of the paper is.

The 1990s: Bound to be a decade of reruns

SARA SMITH

Some causes are lost from the beginning.

Take, for example, the revival of the '60s.

The truly great aspects of that decade are history and can't be revived. We won't get the Beatles back. Pete Townshend isn't going to magically regain his hearing. What's done is done.

All we can do now is try to settle the age-old question of whether "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" is better than "Rubber Soul." Forget the rest.

The genre of the '60s has been done before, and the ground just isn't fertile for a counterculture crop right now. There's nothing to protest. Desert Storm was no Vietnam. We have it easy.

So why keep digging into the past? If the idealism and culture of the '60s had worked, we wouldn't need to drag them out of the old attic trunk again. The truth is that they didn't work. And they didn't stick.

The ultimate '80s culmination of late '60s idealism was the BMW. All you need is love — and a law degree.

This goes to show how sincere and heartfelt the movement of the moment was back then, and probably, I'm sad to say, how genuine it is now.

If the '80s was the decade of excess, what are the '90s going to be? The decade of copycats? The decade of reruns?

I'd rather have the '80s back. True, that hairstyle with the perm and the huge puffball above the forehead was monstrous, but think what it did for the hairspray industry. The '80s were also a very good time for blue mascara stock. If the '80s are ever revived, I hope they leave that stuff in the museum along with Pat Benatar and Brooke Shields.

But thankfully, they're letting the '80s rest. They'll probably wait until we have another recession before they break out the Ollie North for President campaign shirts. But give it a little time. In the 21st century, is Ronald Reagan going to be like JFK? Wait, does that make George Bush the equivalent of Lyndon B. Johnson? Oh, the world is a sick and twisted place.

For now, the grave-robbers of past trends are trying to bring back bellbottoms and platform shoes. I'm not so sure about this. They're trying to revive a lot of ugly things. I don't want to open up an Elle and see a polyester leisure suit. I thought the whole point of progress was to get rid of ugly things like that.

And then there's the most disturbing prospect of all – disco. I may have been born in the '70s, but I don't have to like it.

Why do people have to bring anything back? If it was any good, it stuck around. You can still turn on the radio and hear the Rolling Stones. The Grateful Dead are still on tour, if that's what you crave. And I'm sure you can bribe a beautician to give you a perm like she used to in 1986.

But the world is different. Have a little originality. Come up with a new movement. Flip a benzine ring or something.

Or better yet, figure out your own identity. There's no need to cling to any ideological school of thought from the past or present to determine who you are or what you stand for.

I actually know of some people who think for themselves, and determine their opinions through reason and experience, not party affiliation, chocolate-chip cookie recipes or what Dan Rather tells them to think. I wish this trend would catch on.

We could call it the anti-movement movement. A mass of individuals who feel no bond with each other, no brother love (or sister love, for that matter). They'd be the kind of people who did what they wanted just because they wanted to. What a concept. Think of the implications.

They'd have nothing to scream about, protest or rally about. The silly concerns of the day would just wash over them as they lived their lives, and they wouldn't have to get upset over much of anything. Not even a Landon Lecture.

Coaches downplay records

It could be worse for Bob Stull. Unlike the unhappy day he once experienced in a previous job, nobody at Missouri has thrown food at him.

In the meantime, Stull said he is telling his players to ignore the increasing salvo of criticism aimed at him and the unexpected 1-2-1 start the Tigers have made.

"That's the way our business is," Stull said Monday.

"I've been in a situation at Washington when after our fourth game we were 1-3. I had one guy throw food at me coming off after the game. Then at the end of the season we tied for the championship and went to the Rose Bowl. The same guy carried me off the field."

After getting clobbered on successive weekends at Texas A&M and West Virginia, the Tigers last week only could tie SMU 10-10 at home. With a trip to No. 20 Colorado looming Saturday, a chorus of criticism is developing in Stull's fifth season.

Stull confirmed during the Big Eight coaches teleconference that he felt a need to address his squad on the subject.

"That's just our profession. I told them don't worry about that stuff — concentrate on paying attention to the business at hand," he said.

"If you can't stand that type of pressure, you shouldn't be in our business, because everyone knows he's going to be faced with that."

Another Big Eight coach with reason to feel embattled is Iowa State's Jim Walden, whose Cyclones have lost four of their first five. The 1-4 start is the worst in Walden's tenure.

"I feel bad because we're 1-4," Walden said. "But I don't look at it like we're letting everybody down. We're not getting beat by the Sister of the Poor. We're not that far away. We're truly not that far away from beating half the teams we've played."

The Sooners are 4-0 and ranked No. 10 and would seem to have their best shot at the Longhorns this week that they've ever had under Gibbs.

"We don't live in the past," Gibbs said.

"We remember those games. But this game will be decided based on our preparation and how they play on Saturday. What happened last year or two years ago won't have any bearing."

One difference this year is that natural grass has been installed in the Cotton Bowl in Dallas, where the game always is played.

The Sooners play their home games on artificial turf.

"We practice on grass through the week, so that won't be a big factor in our preparations," Gibbs said.

Jayhawks sweep honors

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas players swept Big Eight player of the week honors Monday, with quarterback Asheiki Preston earning the offensive award and linebacker Don Davis taking the defensive award.

Preston started in place of Fred Thomas, who had been ineffective in the first four games.

Preston completed 12 of 14 passes for 164 yards and directed three scoring drives.

Preston was given the honor in a split vote over quarterbacks Toné Jones of Oklahoma State and Cale Gundy of Oklahoma.

Davis had eight solo tackles among his 11 tackles as Kansas held Colorado State to 65 yards rushing in a 24-6 victory.

Davis had a quarterback sack and caused two fumbles. He won in a split vote over Missouri's Rick Lyle.

CHIEFS

Injury to keep Montana out

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — First it was Joe's wrist. Now it's Joe's leg — specifically, the hamstring muscle in his left leg.

That's the latest injury nagging Joe Montana, the Kansas City Chiefs' 37-year-old quarterback, who was injured in Sunday's game against Los Angeles.

Montana may not play this week when the Chiefs play winless Cincinnati in Kansas City, although coach Marty Schottenheimer said Monday nothing was certain.

"He could be out a week," Schottenheimer said after Montana had a light workout. "He could be out a month. I just have no idea. He's got a pulled hamstring. I'll let Father Time address that and see what unfolds."

Montana hurt his wrist in the season opener and, after a week of uncertainty, sat out the next week as backup Dave Krieg struggled through a 30-0 loss at Houston — the Oilers' only victory thus far.

The next game was a Monday night match-up against Denver, through which Montana came unscathed.

Against the Raiders on Sunday, he was injured midway through the second quarter after hitting seven of his first nine passes and throwing for two touchdowns.

"It's aggravating to me, one little thing after another," Montana said Monday.

In the three games that Montana has started, the Chiefs are 3-0.

He has hit 42 of 66 passes for 587 yards and five touchdowns and not a single interception.

Although Krieg played every down at quarterback for the Chiefs last season and signed a huge contract — $2 million — as backup this year, the offense seems much crisper and sure-footed with Montana at the controls.

For one thing, Krieg does not have the familiarity with the Chiefs' new San Francisco-style passing offense.

"Joe knows this offense," said Willie Davis, who has become Montana's favorite receiver. "He perfected this offense. This is Dave's first year in it, and he's like all of us. He's still trying to learn it."

Schottenheimer said the Chiefs needed to hold on to Krieg.

"We felt when we acquired Joe that it was important to keep an established, veteran quarterback," Schottenheimer said of Krieg. "We're delighted David's here."

Schottenheimer said he is not worried about Montana appearing, thus far, to be injury-prone.

"The questions were posed early on about 'Are you worried or concerned that he might be injured,'" Schottenheimer said. "At the time, I said very specifically 'No.'

"There's no reason to be concerned," he said. "We get paid to line up and win football games, and we'll play with the guys who are available.

"I'm not concerned about him being injury-prone more than I am any other player who's nicked. Those things happen. It's a contact sport."

Pike Bret Harrington, junior in journalism and mass communications, and Sigma Chi Matt Aupperle, junior in construction science, race for a loose ball during an intramural soccer match Monday night at the Chester E. Peters Rec Complex. The Pikes beat the Sigma Chis 1-0.

HUNTING

Time to hunt for doves

MIKE HIND
Collegian

What is the most popular game bird in Kansas?

It's mourning dove, and Keith Salmans of the Kansas Department of Wildlife at Tuttle Creek State Park said the time to hunt these birds is now.

"Most of the birds that are around here right now are Kansas residence birds," Salmans said. "Doves are migratory, and when cold weather sets in these birds will fly south towards Texas. Birds of Nebraska and the Dakotas will then make their way into this area.

"These birds are often times a little bigger, and this gives them a little better means in which to protect themselves from the cold."

Dove habitat is much different from that of quail and pheasant, Salmans said.

"Doves like an open field," Salmans said. "They like open areas where they can pick on small stuff. They are primarily seed eaters, and most of the seeds they eat are around the size of a pin head."

Because of the dove's migratory status, it is a federally protected bird, which means there are some differences involved in the way they can be harvested.

Hunters must have a plugged shotgun with no more than two shells in the magazine and one in the chamber, Salmans said.

Travis Greenwald, junior in business at Highland Community College, had to pay for his violations.

"My first trip out, we were dove hunting and were stopped by a game warden who asked to see our guns and licenses," Greenwald said.

"I really didn't think anything of it until he asked me if I had a plug for my shotgun, and of course, I didn't. This cost me three and a half hours in court and $55."

Travis, who eventually returned to dove hunting — this time with a plug — sees some definite advantages dove hunting offers that quail and pheasant hunting just don't have.

"It's a way to get out into the nice weather on a boring day," Greenwald said.

K-State's football team defeated the University of Kansas at Lawrence three times last week.

The women's flag football team, that is.

The team is called Leftovers, and they swept the 13th annual Greg Wilkerson Memorial Tournament in Lawrence with a 3-0 record.

Melissa McGraw, defensive rusher, said the tournament had a true K-State–KU feel to it.

"It was KU vs. K-State, not sorority versus sorority," McGraw said. "We were the only team there not from KU. They were totally against us.

"It was so funny how it just turned into another KU–K-State thing."

The Leftovers blew past Alpha Chi Omega 22-0 Sunday for the championship trophy, playing on KU's Memorial Stadium Field.

The team received a bye on the opening day, then advanced by defeating Pi Beta Phi 28-0 in the quarterfinals and Alpha Delta Pi 7-0 in the semifinals.

In the semifinals, the Leftovers used a last-second touchdown pass from Michelle Kuhns to Allison Mott for the win.

"That was the toughest game in our entire lives," McGraw said.

"Allison caught it between two defenders, and they missed her flags, and she ran it in," Amy Burgess, cornerback, said.

The Leftovers formed their team this season, which McGraw said is mainly composed of fifth-year seniors.

"A lot of us were in different sororities, and we used to be rivals," McGraw said.

The team plays in the intramural league on Sundays, as well as the Tau Kappa Epsilon powderpuff division, which is played on Tuesday nights, center Margie Meyers said.

The Leftovers sport a spotless 8-0 record and have outscored their opponents 243-12.

"We got together and thought we would just have a good time, and it would be sort of laid back," McGraw said.

Fashion team models for mall

It is Carol Mikinski's responsibility to coordinate fashion shows and interview volunteers for the team board. Mikinski is the fashion coordinator for Manhattan Town Center.

Mikinski uses several guidelines to choose models during an audition.

"I judge them on their general grooming. I'm looking for someone who is definitely taking care of themselves," she said. "They need to have a certain amount of confidence."

The applicants have a better chance of being chosen if they have some dance experience, she said.

"I'm not here to be like a modeling agency that trains them. I will help them, but I don't want to give the impression that I am a modeling agency."

Team-board models need to be dedicated and dependable, she said.

"The models can't continuously say they won't be able to be in the show," Mikinski said.

Applicants have to come in for a personal interview and audition on a runway. Interviews and auditions are not done on a daily basis, she said.

"I don't do interviews or auditions until I have a opening on the team board. However, anybody can apply for a team-board position," Mikinski said.

Team-board members receive rewards and benefits for being a volunteer, she said.

"Sometimes, it gets people involved in retailing, if they enjoy fashion merchandising, and it looks good on their resumé," Mikinski said. "It has also led to some

Drug problem on the rise

WASHINGTON — The number of patients showing up in hospital emergency rooms with drug-related problems jumped 10 percent in 1992, with many big cities among the hardest hit, the government reported Monday.

Cocaine figured in more than one-quarter of the 433,500 emergency room visits blamed on illegal drug use.

The number of cocaine episodes rose 18 percent from 1991 to 119,800, the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration said in its Drug Abuse Warning Network survey.

Heroin-related visits jumped 34 percent to 48,000, according to the survey of hospital emergency rooms. Marijuana-related episodes soared 48 percent to 24,000. Marijuana is often used in conjunction with alcohol and cocaine, according to the survey report. Cocaine users ages 26 to 34 turned up in hospital emergency rooms more than any other age group.

But hospitals saw a sharp spurt in the number of drug abusers 35 and older seeking help. More than half the heroin episodes and a third of the cocaine problems involved the 35-plus age group.

"The people who use heroin and cocaine are getting older and (facing) greater health problems," said Daniel Melnick, an official of the substance-abuse agency.

Some of the nation's biggest cities have been hardest hit by the surge of cocaine and heroin-related cases. Between 1990 and 1992, the number of heroin-related emergency-room episodes more than doubled in New York and Boston, and tripled in Baltimore.

Cocaine episodes also soared by 170 percent in Baltimore during those two years and by 115 percent in Boston while increasing more than 60 percent in New York, Chicago and Detroit.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Instructors encouraged to be sensitive

Dear Cassandra,

I've never written to you, but I felt I had to respond to the letter printed Sept. 13.

To Numb: Don't worry about your classes. You have far too much to think about now. Concentrate on your surgery. Your classes can wait. Cassandra gave you some good advice. If your instructor doesn't understand about your surgery (assuming it isn't elective), he's an ass.

I think surgery is a valid excuse (at least it has been since I've been here) for an extension on your homework. After all, it isn't your fault the doctor said you needed surgery. Your grades should not suffer, and you should not be penalized for needing medical attention requiring surgery.

One final word: If you cannot get this professor to work with you, then I believe you have solid ground on which to "bitch" to the University. Good luck on it!

I realize most professors are understanding about such things, and I don't mean to imply they are all callous and unfeeling.

Unfortunately, those that are unfeeling more than make up for those who aren't.

For all you uncaring professors out there: If you are that insensitive to your students, you shouldn't be a teacher! How would one of you professors like it if a child of yours needed to travel to another state to receive surgery that had to be done now, and the University said you could not go? That is outrageous, and I'm quite certain none of you would stand for it!

Signed,
Concerned handicapped student

Dear Concerned,

Thank you for your validation of Numb's problem. You're right — most professors do understand. Unfortunately, there are some who check their sympathy gland at the door upon reaching professor status.

CD frightens listner

ED SKOOG
Collegian

There are two types of people in this world. There are those who can sit through two-hour meetings about petty policy matters, wearing a suit and saying the word "proactive" without flinching.

And there are those vile few who dig the Scorpions.

Here is what I remember:

There were a lot of really loud guitar sounds coming from my speakers. I was scared and confused. Then I was bored and listened to some Bill Monroe to recover.

I made a pot of coffee and put the Scorps CD back in. The scan function is the greatest element of CD technology.

After 15 years of struggle, Klaus Meine, the group's singer and licensed Ethel Merman imitator, still hasn't learned correct pronunciation of the "ay" sound. It comes out as "ee," which was endlessly amusing back at Potwin Elementary's upper playground when we shouted Klaus' blunder on the "World Wide Live" at each other.

It was the chorus of the album's smash hit, "Bad Boys Running Wild," and Klaus tried to sing "so you better get out of their way," but he substituted, "so you better get out of their wee."

Those nutty Germans.

I'm also sorry to announce there are no cuts on "Face the Heat" that can quite match the high quality of the Scorps' panzer Gulf War anthem, "Winds of Change."

Rudolf "Ravi" Schenker's blinding guitar riffs all sound the same. And have for years.

Matthias Jabs, the group's cutie pie, plays a Talk Box effect on the song "Nightmare Avenue," and it sounds cool. Talk Boxes always sound cool.

Should you buy this album? Don't be silly. Of course not.

DeNiro leads first-rate film

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

"A Bronx Tale" easily could have been just any coming-of-age film, but first-time director Robert DeNiro, who also stars, brought to the screen a deeply meaningful story with an authentic look, an exceptional cast and a lot of heart.

DeNiro stars as a bus driver whose neighborhood in the Bronx is the site of disturbing acts by a local crime boss. This proves to be a bit of a challenge for hard-working Lorenzo when his curious 9-year-old son, Calogero, becomes intrigued with the esteemed control of the underworld.

As the tale ensues, Calogero gets in good with Sonny (Chazz Palminteri), the most powerful man in the neighborhood. Eventually, he trades off his devoted father's love for the lucrative opportunities awaiting him with Sonny.

Calogero, nicknamed "C" by Sonny, soon becomes educated by both men's wisdom and is later forced to realize on his own what is most essential in his own life.

This film is about values. It is about gaining and giving mutual trust and respect, and using whatever is inside you to make it through complicated dilemmas.

At first, "A Bronx Tale" seems a delicate and bittersweet drama. The philosophical advice given to Calogero by both father figures allows a certain warmth to come from the film. In other instances, it is about the harsh reality of a world turned sour because of a lust for power and a raging contempt for fellow man.

Certain members of an impressive cast deliver outstanding performances. Notably, DeNiro handles the role of Lorenzo with sensitivity and conviction.

Francis Capra, who plays the older version of Calogero, effectively depicts the youthful inexperience of his character, and Palminteri shrewdly leads the audience both to fear and pity volatile Sonny.

"A Bronx Tale" is an unexpectedly first-rate film with a significant and timely purpose. Undoubtedly, this is one of the year's very best films.

THE NEW GAS TAX: MORE MONEY IN THE TANK, LESS MONEY IN THE BANK

A gasoline tax went into effect Friday to the tune of 4.3 cents to the gallon. This brought the total tax on gas to 18.4 cents per gallon. Below is an unscientific survey of gas prices in northeast Kansas in relation to what Manhattan residents pay for one gallon of unleaded gasoline.

SARA SMITH/Collegian

FIRST IMPRESSIONS of K-State

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

This is the final story of a five-part series about students' first impressions of K-State.

An international student said she is enjoying her stay in a new country.

Katrin Toepser, Chemnitz, Germany, is attending K-State this year on a Fulbright scholarship. During her year at K-State she plans to study marketing, as well as take a foreign language class.

Toepser's first impressions of Manhattan came when she stepped off the plane in August.

"I knew Manhattan was a city of about 60,000 people, but I wondered where they were," Toepser said.

She said she likes the University and said there are differences between American and German school systems.

"I like the old buildings and the trees," she said. "The campus is very pretty.

"Classes here are different. In my country, we have one test at the end of the semester, and we don't have to attend class all the time. I am not used to having to go to class," she said.

Katrin Toepser

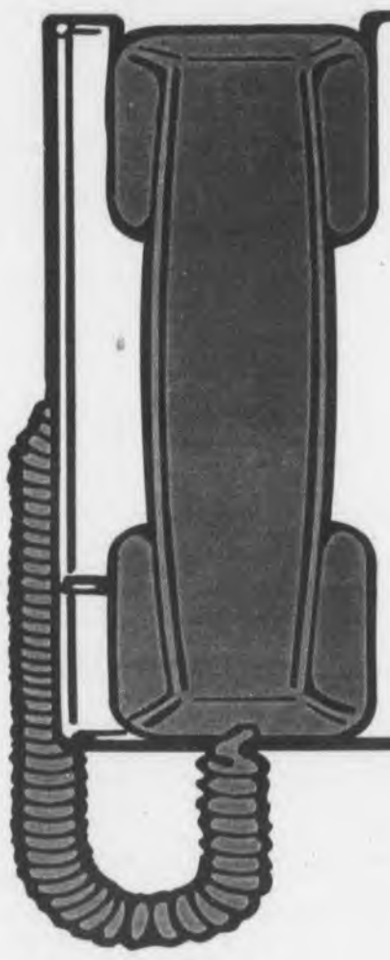
Some nights, Toepser and other international students meet and talk about their new experiences.

Now that she is settled in and accustomed to the campus, Toepser said she is enjoying her new life here. Though she did not choose to come to Manhattan, she said she wanted to study in the Midwest.



"I knew I wanted to come to the Midwest," she said. "I believe there are more European influences on the East Coast, and I didn't want to see that."

Toepser said she likes the people here. Germans learn about Americans from watching American films, she said.

There is more to life than studying or learning in a classroom setting, she said.

"I don't want to spend all my time studying," she said. "I want to meet new people and go to new places."

New fighting erupts in Bosnia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — New fighting broke out Monday in the Bihac region of northwestern Bosnia between Muslim-led government troops and supporters of a maverick local Muslim leader.

Both sides reported casualties and accused each other of shelling their positions in Johovica, a town close to the stronghold of Bihac's rebel leader Fikret Abdic.

"Blood is flowing again," Bosnian radio reporter Mirza Sadikovic said in a report from army headquarters in Bihac.

He said forces supporting Abdic had shelled army positions in Johovica. Two soldiers were wounded, Sadikovic reported. Bosnian radio said some of Abdic's supporters had surrendered in Johovica.

A report from the local news agency ZBTA said the Bosnian army opened up with automatic weapons and mortar fire on Johovica. It said at least five civilians were killed.

The casualty reports could not be independently confirmed.

A U.N. spokesman in Zagreb, Croatia, also reported clashes Monday in Sturlic, nine miles south of Abdic's stronghold of Velika Kladusa. The spokesman had no other details and spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Abdic and his supporters want Bihac, which borders Croatia on three sides, to be autonomous rather than part of the Muslim mini-state that would be created under a peace proposal to divide the country into ethnic regions.

The fighting further taxes a government army already outgunned by Bosnian Croat and Serbian fighters.

ZBTA reported that Abdic has written to international mediators who are seeking to negotiate a peace to end Bosnia's 18-month war and to U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, charging that Izetbegovic has no authority in the region.

The town of Bihac is completely isolated and like a concentration camp, Abdic reportedly said in the letter. Bihac is about 20 miles south of Velika Kladusa.

A local parliament called by Abdic declared autonomy last Monday, and tensions heightened in the area when the pro-Sarajevo regional army corps then tried to restore order.

Known for his good contacts with Croats and surrounding Serbs, Abdic is credited with sparing Bihac from most of the fighting that ruined the rest of Bosnia. Most local residents believe they will be better off as an autonomous region trading with neighboring Croats and the Serbs.

Neither the Serbs nor the Croats have commented on the Bihac region's autonomy declaration, but the Serbs have been monitoring the situation closely, and Croatian media have given broad coverage to Abdic.

Merchants show appreciation for models appearances in mall advertisements."

Merchants do a couple of things to show models their appreciation, Zandra Axelton, a fashion trend setter for the mall, said.

"They'll go the extra mile for the trend setter. Some of the stores give us discounts, and if a model likes something she has worn, the store might let her wear that outfit to a prom or special event," Axelton said.

Mikinski said the window displays and fashion shows are a visual representation of the mall.

"For instance, when I go into Maurice's I look at the whole sales floor and try to represent most of the fashion designs there," she said. "Most of the stores have their own look for the season. I'll represent them as much as I can."

Mikinski coordinates the outfits, accessories and shoes the models will wear in the show. She writes the script, chooses the music and choreographs the program.

"I want to make sure everyone looks totally put together. That's what the mall is all about," she said. "You can find anything you need for one outfit under one roof."

Axelton said she volunteered for the team board because she has always liked to model.

"It's fun to be a team-board member for the shopping center because you get to model all the great new styles, and it gives you an opportunity to interact with the public," she said.

Mikinski said she needs more male models.

"Men is the category I have the hardest time finding," she said.

Applications for team-board membership can be picked up at the customer service desk at Manhattan Town Center.

Speaker attacks U.S. inequalities

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

The United States may be left behind in a rapidly restructuring world if fundamental societal inequalities are not corrected, Julianne Malveaux said Tuesday night.

Malveaux, who spoke as part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, presented a lecture titled "The New World Order or the Same Old Stuff" in conjunction with Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week activities.

She intertwined energetic, lively humor into a serious lecture about basic unfairness that is intrinsic to American society.

"George Herbert Walker Bush was the first to talk about the new world order," Malveaux said. "But he didn't lay out what it was supposed to be, which left it open to become the same old stuff."

An example of the status quo is the exclusion of countries, comprised mostly of people of color, from international trade agreements and organizations, Malveaux said.

"The Caribbean is part of North America, but no one talks about including them in NAFTA," she said.

Another prevailing attitude is women and minorities are taking jobs away from white males, Malveaux said.

"Since when did jobs come with names on them?" she said. "They never have had names on them, so you can't say that I took your job since it didn't belong to you in the first place."

Malveaux emphasized the importance of taking care of the inequalities present in the United States before criticizing other countries.

Our society and economy are changing rapidly, she said. And few institutions are effectively dealing with the change.

"We are missing an opportunity," she said. "We need to change how we deliver social policy. We must deliver it directly to the individual, not through the work place as we have in the past."

There is something wrong, Malveaux said, when blacks make up 13 percent of the population, but only control 3 percent of the wealth.

"All we are asking for is simple fairness," she said.

"The rules of the game are changing," Malveaux said. "The United States will be passed by in the new world order, unless it deals with the evil of inequality."

Voters pass school but say no to pool

Planning for new buildings to begin immediately

LEIGH NEVANS

Passage of a bond issue question Tuesday gives Unified School District 383 funding for two middle schools and an elementary school.

This question passed by 1,725 votes and includes provisions for funding improvements to existing facilities and for meeting the Americans with Disabilities Act requirements.

The second question of the issue failed with 4075 people voting no, to 3401 voting yes. The failed proposition would have allowed an enclosed swimming pool to be built for the school district and community use.

The total number of voter turnout was 7514 people from 29 precincts, and about 250 absentee ballots turned in.

The Board of Education President, Meryl Wilson said, "This is a tremendous relief. This has been an issue for five years. It's been a long process. I'm disappointed in the pool not passing. We lost a golden opportunity."

Planning for the new schools will begin right away, Wilson said.

"Tomorrow night we will start the planning. We'll talk about designs and start getting bids. We're putting together a process to involve the community with the design. The faculty, staff, and administration will be included also," he said.

"Construction of the elementary school should begin next summer," said Dan Yunk, Superintendent of the school district said.

Wilson was pleased with the number of people who voted. The school board tried to get out and make everyone aware of the issues, he said.

"It was a very good turnout. It's a reflection of what the community feels is needed," Wilson said.

"This is a tremendous relief. I'm disappointed in the pool not passing. We lost a golden opportunity."

BOARD OF EDUCATION PRESIDENT

Other than the three new schools being built, the first question will provide air conditioning, remodeling of science and performing arts class spaces, new computer labs, and six new teaching classrooms at the current high school.

Other improvements include re-roofing, asbestos abatement, and new systems for computer and video technology for existing buildings. Also in compliance with the Americans With Disabilities Act, modifications meeting two-thirds of the requirements will be met.

Troops sent to bolster forces

U.S. threatens captors, mission duration debated

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — American reinforcements headed to Somalia Tuesday as President Clinton warned of swift retaliation if captured U.S. servicemen are harmed.

Congress debated whether it was time for the White House to end the mission.

Infantry and heavy Army armor left a Georgia base to begin the trip to Africa. The soldiers were sent to bolster U.S. forces that suffered 12 deaths and 78 injuries in weekend battles with forces loyal to Somali warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

The Pentagon declined to comment on reports that up to eight Americans were being held. One was shown on a videotape being interrogated by his captors.

Pentagon sources said the total number of U.S. soldiers being sent to Somalia would number about 650. That includes 200 replacement troops, a mechanized infantry company of at least 200 men, and the remainder made up crews for the helicopters and AC-130 gunships and support personnel.

The AC-130s will be brought in from Brindisi, Italy, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity. They said two flights of reinforcements had left their base in Georgia today and more would be leaving throughout the day.

With the heavy armor en route, Army Maj. David Stockwell, the United Nations military spokesman, said American forces would be better equipped to evacuate soldiers who are in need during skirmishes with Aidid's supporters.

Clinton planned to meet later Tuesday in the White House with his top national security advisers to discuss the crises in Somalia and Russia. White House Communications Director Mark Gearan said Clinton was returning early from his three-day trip to California for the session.

There has been a continuous stream of phone conversation between Clinton on the West Coast and officials here, Gearan said today.

Clinton's decision to send in reinforcements won an influential endorsement today in Congress, but many other lawmakers joined the chorus urging the president to order American forces home.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., a leading member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, echoed Clinton in saying additional troops were imperative for the safety of those that are there now.

"There are things that can be done to make things safer while we debate the policy," Lugar said on Fox television. Sen. Sam Nunn of Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, also said the deployment was necessary to protect American troops while the overall policy is debated.

But Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz, said the humanitarian mission to feed starving Somalis and the more difficult job of restoring political order should be left in the United Nations' hands.

"I think we ought to secure the release of our prisoner or prisoners and make every effort in that direction and then get out as rapidly as possible." McCain said on ABC.

The United Nations said today it was seeking the release of the captured Americans. On Monday, Clinton warned of appropriate retaliation if the captured Americans are mistreated, and said it was no time to end the deployment he inherited from the Bush administration.

"I do not want to do anything which would imperil the

Riley troops to stay

The Pentagon ordered additional forces be sent after at least 16 Americans were killed on Sunday and Monday.

Mark Meseke, Fort Riley media relations officer, said 170 Fort Riley troops are in Somalia.

The Fort Riley forces in Somalia include the 977th Military Police company, composed of 130 troops; the 82nd Medical Detachment, composed of 35 troops; and three or four troops on routine rotation, Meseke said.

Four Huey helicopters from Fort Riley are in Somalia in order for the medical unit to provide air ambulance services.

Meseke said 130 Fort Riley troops in the 24th Transportation Company returned from Somalia in June after a five-month stay.

U.S. soldiers integral part of U.N. mission

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAIROBI, Kenya — No president wants to preside over the deaths of American boys in strange, faraway places, but a pullout of U.S. troops could sound the death knell for U.N. military and humanitarian operations in Somalia.

There is little doubt that the 4,700 American soldiers in Somalia are the glue that holds together the 28,000-strong U.N. peacekeeping force from 33 nations.

Without the 3,000 U.S. troops performing logistics work under U.N. command, it would be impractical or impossible for many nations to send troops to Somalia. Their units depend on the U.S. contingent for water, food and transportation.

About 1,300 other U.S. soldiers, bolstered recently by 400 Rangers, make up the Quick Reaction Force, designed originally to provide rapid relief for other national units that might find themselves in trouble.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali has shrunk from Clinton administration suggestions that it might withdraw U.S. troops. He said a pullout would mean the abandonment of southern Mogadishu to fugitive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

And that, Boutros-Ghali said, would condemn the people of Somalia to the resumption of civil war and all the horrors that would result. Somalia was torn by war among Aidid and other warlords before U.N. intervention, and U.N. relief workers depend on U.N. military protection.

When U.N. troops took over from the U.S.-led force in May, one of their mandates was to disarm the warlords, who inherited a huge arsenal of weapons after the fall of dictator Mohammed Siad Barre in January 1991. The weapons were supplied by the Soviet Union and later the United States during the Cold War.

The U.S. Quick Reaction Force, known locally as the QRF, is one of the most essential parts of the U.N. military effort. It is

Pedestrian hit by car near Ackert, Goodnow

A K-State student sustained minor injuries when he was hit by a car Tuesday afternoon.

Auby Ninemire, junior in animal sciences and industry, was struck by a southbound car on Denison Avenue.

Ninemire was crossing Denison Avenue at the crosswalk between Ackert and Goodnow halls at about 2:30 p.m..

He was about halfway across the street when the car hit him. No citations have been filed against the driver. Ninemire had the right of way, as he was legally within the bounds of the crosswalk.

Riley County Police Department officers and an ambulance arrived on the scene. Ninemire walked away with cuts on his face, and a bloody nose and lip, but was told to seek medical attention if necessary.

Man seeks to recall Kansas City mayor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A man who led two unsuccessful petition drives to force an election on renovating the city's Union Station is gathering signatures again — this time seeking the recall of Mayor Emanuel Cleaver.

Clay Chastain filed a recall affidavit with the city clerk Monday and now has 30 days to get about 18,800 signatures on his petitions.

Chastain has accused Cleaver of failing to satisfactorily resolve a Union Station lawsuit, among other issues. Cleaver representative Luther Washington said the mayor had nothing to say about the recall effort. Washington said he thought some people wanted to see a mayoral election before the next regularly scheduled one in early 1995.

Congressional leaders question involvement

WASHINGTON — Senators frustrated by setbacks in Somalia asserted Tuesday that no American forces should be sent to Bosnia without congressional approval.

"As a practical matter, this is going to require a congressional vote. It won't happen without a vote," said Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., a senior member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Members of the committee, in hearings on the situation in the former Yugoslavian republic, also questioned the Clinton administration's commitment to supply up to 25,000 troops in a NATO peace-keeping force of 50,000 if the warring factions in Bosnia reach a peace accord.

U.S. forces should not make up more than one-fourth or one-fifth of the total, said Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., the chairman of the committee. "I hope that before we are through that would be knocked down to about 5,000."

Virginia woman to plead insanity

WASHINGTON — The Virginia woman who cut off her husband's penis will try to prove in court she was temporarily insane at the time, her lawyer said.

Attorney James Lowe said Lorena Bobbitt was repeatedly beaten and raped by her husband, John Wayne Bobbitt. After he attacked her in their Manassas, Va., apartment on June 23, she was seized by an "irresistible impulse" that caused her to reach for a knife and cut him, Lowe said in an interview in the November issue of Vanity Fair magazine.

She faces trial Nov. 29 on a charge of malicious wounding.

U.S. troops to be sent to Haiti this week

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — As American troops battle in Somalia under the United Nations flag, hundreds of U.S. servicemen are heading off on another U.N. operation, this one in Haiti.

The Americans have been invited by Haiti's exiled president and its weak provisional civilian government. Many in its powerful army and police force, including the chief of police, oppose the United Nations' presence.

However, U.S. officers insisted that there are few parallels to Somalia. In Haiti, they say, the Americans are on a non-confrontational mission and have taken appropriate steps to defend themselves.

The USS Harlan County sailed into the Roosevelt Roads Naval Station on Puerto Rico's east coast Tuesday, where 103 Haiti-bound troops will be joined by 82 Navy engineers, 25 Canadian air-force carpenters and hundreds of tons of heavy equipment.

The ship departs Thursday for Haiti, where it is expected late Sunday, said Army Maj. Jim Hinnant, who is among a 25-member advance mission flying from the U.S. mainland to Haiti on Wednesday.

Fighting continues in occupied territories

GAZA CITY, Occupied Gaza Strip — Blood spattered the alley wall, and a torn piece of clothing lay on the spot where Israeli border police caught up with two wanted Palestinian men Tuesday.

One fugitive was killed, and the other escaped. Palestinian activists said both were believed to belong to the Fatah Hawks, an underground group loyal to PLO chief Yasser Arafat.

The fatal clash in a dead-end alley was part of a cycle of violence that has continued despite last month's signing of a peace accord between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Technology helps keep food healthy

Derby dietitians aided by new computer program

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Cutting back does not mean cutting out. K-State's Derby Food Center is working on cutting the fat in residence hall students' diets.

"We want the students to eat nutritionally and still enjoy what is served," Michelle Pickert, dietitian, said.

The dietitians and menu creators have been trying new things to lower the fat and cholesterol in the foods Derby serves.

"We use vegetable oil for the frying that we do, and if we can, we try to avoid frying at all," Pickert said.

"We have our purchaser look for items that we can bake instead of frying."

"It is important that we keep the students informed as the how much fat and cholesterol is in the foods that they are eating," she said.

The dietitians are able to place the type of foods into a computer program, and the program will tell them the amount fat, cholesterol, protein and calories in the food, Pickert said.

This program gives the dietitians a printout listing the day's menu. This is distributed throughout the Derby Complex, she said.

The students are able to make informed decisions by knowing what is in the foods they choose to eat.

"The students really use these lists," said Jennifer Whiteside, Moore Hall staff assistant and senior in pre-med.

"They ask me for them if they aren't up Sunday morning."

The students can also check the lists before they make their selections in the lines.

To further combat high-calorie products, Derby tries to use skim milk in the recipes whenever possible.

"Skim milk is always available to the students at meals," Pickert said.

"The capacity of our machines only allows for skim, whole and chocolate milk, so the students must mix milk for two percent."

Derby has increased the number of specialty-food lines recently to include a deli line and a pasta line.

"I really like the deli line for lunch since I don't always like what they are serving," Tiffany Wolfe, freshman in interior design, said.

"The meat is pretty good, and the selection isn't too bad."

The vegetarian plates and the salad bar are good because a lot of people do not like meat at all, Wolfe said.

"At the pasta line we always have a meat sauce and a marinara sauce to accommodate our students who do not eat meat," Pickert said.

"This line has been popular with the students because we also provide low-fat dressings at the salad bar and fruit that is in season."

The dietitians are always trying to find ways to improve the meals, Pickert said.

"We are hoping to begin a heart-healthy meal," she said. "We will designate the best choice for the students and let them know that this is especially better for them."

Students like the dietitians' input.

"The dietitians are willing to listen to the students' suggestions," said Casey Carlson, Derby student representative and freshman in political science. "They let us know why they do things a certain way so we can help with complaints."

The dietitians want to accommodate the needs of the students as much as they can.

"We try to have a large variety and low fat, but sometimes the students would rather have their favorites," Pickert said.

"If we stopped having chicken-fried steak because of the fat content, the students would be really upset."

Tai Chi taught by local master

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Ping Wei, graduate student in chemistry, teaches Tai Chi, a Chinese martial art, through the University for Man on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Wei has been teaching the class since last fall and has been practicing Tai Chi for 10 years.

CRYSTAL GOERING
Collegian

In a large room in the Senior Center, people moved with a fluid-like precision called Tai Chi.

The instructor, Ping Wei, a 28-year-old graduate student in chemistry, moved freely among his students, correcting a movement or offering encouragement before resuming the exercise.

The structure and the actions of the martial art have been a part of Chinese lifestyle for hundreds of years, Wei said. Movements require a high level of concentration, and exercises are performed in a set pattern.

"It's a beauty and a meditation," he said. "It looks graceful. I'm not in it for defense. It's like an art."

Wei, who teaches the class through the UFM, learned Tai Chi 10 years ago at Nanjing University in China. Wei originally learned Tai Chi so that he could relax and escape from daily pressures. He also practices other forms of martial art, like Kung Fu, used for defense, and Shao Ling, a form of long boxing.

He taught Tai Chi for more than two years at Nanjing University before he came to K-State. This is his third semester teaching for UFM.

"I came to K-State and found the UFM catalog," he said. "I said 'I think I can teach Tai Chi here, too.'"

Tai Chi can also be used for medicinal purposes, said Laura Imel, a homemaker and a student of Wei's.

"It's a gentle form of exercise," she said. "I heard how Chinese doctors use Tai Chi to heal patients, but I just use it for general health."

Last semester, Wei taught a woman who was recovering from a car accident.

"The Western doctors couldn't help her stand up with stability, so the Eastern doctors suggested Tai Chi," Wei said. "And it helped."

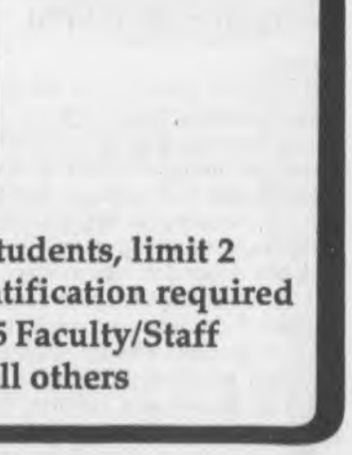
"I heard about it, and I just wanted to try it," he said. "I think I got what I want out of it. I do it for exercise and to relax."

Wei and his students use Tai Chi for relief from the stresses of everyday life.



"Kung Fu is the defense of the outside of the body," Wei said. "Tai Chi is the defense of the inside of the body."

Classes are held every Tuesday and Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Senior Center.

Public has been silent in Denny case

Carved in our brains is the nightmarish image of four men yanking a defenseless man from his vehicle in a deliberate act of hatred and racism.

We saw the videotape again and again and watched in awe as his body was bludgeoned.

Violence hinges on the outcome of the verdict — this time a guilty verdict might cause the rioting.

This time the man is Reginald Denny, who had the misfortune of driving his truck through a warzone during the Los Angeles riots and was viciously beaten beyond recognition.

The jury in this case is deliberating right now and will decide if the two defendants are guilty of the attempted murder of Denny.

Denny's case is strikingly similar to King's, except for one thing — public outrage.

There hasn't been a forum in the K-State Union to discuss the implications of the Denny verdict.

There is no plan to march down to Aggieville as there was after the first King verdict.

Students, acting under the guise of concern for human rights, have not asked K-State President Jon Wefald to cancel classes when the verdict is handed down.

We have not heard the cries of "no justice, no peace."

Where are they now?

We heard activists such as Jesse Jackson ponder nightly on national television how ignorant and racist the jurists were. It was on tape, they said. How could you look at that tape and not hand down a guilty verdict?

Where are they now?

Just ask one question: Are we willing to accept rationalizations for the acquittal of the men standing trial for Denny's beating that we would not accept for the beating of King?

After all, how could the jury acquit them? It was on videotape.

We must condemn actions that violate the rights of all humans, or none of us will have rights at all.

Let's hope the verdict in the Denny case is an example of that.

INSIGHT FROM SOMEONE WHO HAS BEEN OUT ON THE STREET

Autumn snuck up on me. I had noticed the trees becoming beacons of lemon, russet and pumpkin, and I have been watching the squirrels go about their nut-burying business with a single-minded purpose that makes me envious.

Silhouettes of witches and ghosts have found their ways into the windows of some neighborhood houses, and everyone seems to be talking about their Thanksgiving break. But it was not until I felt the frigid air at dawn that I noticed fully autumn was indeed here.

And it scared the hell out of me.

It is an irrational fear, really, like the fear of monsters in the closet and the fear of the number 13. It is the fear of not having a warm bed, a place to wash, something to eat.

Even though I have a checking account and a room that legally belongs to me, there is the fear of freezing to death in a car somewhere or in a doorway that I might have to take refuge in.

These are the fears of the homeless. They are the nightmares that still haunt me of the homeless adolescent that I was.

I will not bore you with the details of how I, and my family, ended up out on the streets. It is the same story that you have probably read in every major newspaper and heard on every major newscast at one point or another.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Perhaps you turned the channel or flipped to the funnies when you saw my story. Perhaps you donated your old heavy coat in July to me one year or sent the remains of your Thanksgiving dinner to the shelter I was living in. Regardless of where it was or how you responded to the sounds and sight of homeless life, regardless of the gender or the age of one face that you may have seen, it was all me in one way or another.

Because when you are homeless, you have the same face as every other person. You are among the invisible population. You have an anonymity that makes you unnoticeable to the passersby, to the system set up to "save" you, and especially to the government that cuts aid and services almost to the point of nonexistence.

Those few that may see you as an individual when you are homeless may be the few that identify your body when you freeze to death beneath a bridge.

Am I being too hard?

There were more than 500,000 homeless people documented in 1986 by the U.S. Census Bureau. I was one of those numbers.

The estimates for this year have soared into the millions. Of those estimated 3 million, one-third are younger than the age of 5. Those are the facts that make me paranoid about balancing my checkbook.

Those are the figures that make me wary of a coolness in the air.

I know it could happen again. In a minute, with a degree or not. With a steady job or not. It could always happen again.

The truth is, when you are homeless, you never stop being homeless. If you are one of the few, the very lucky few, who maybe manage to make a home away from the streets and the shelters, you never stop thinking about your survival in terms of your next meal.

You never stop appreciating the feel of a shower, or of clean sheets on your very own bed. You never stop feeling appreciated when someone looks you directly in the eye. And you never forget. Never, ever.

Donate the coat before it gets too shabby to wear. Or maybe a blanket that you may not need. There is always a need for canned goods and hygienic supplies.

And cleaning supplies come in handy, too. The old dress shoes are nice, but how about some winter boots? And even if it's a quarter, it can mean a meal to someone who may not get it.

If you cannot donate time or money, the least you can do is look us in the eyes.

Look me in the eye.

Robertson is more than he appears

"We need $20 a month from every viewer, which is paramount in stopping this repeat of history. Just like what Nazi Germany did to the Jews, so liberal America is now doing to the evangelical Christians. It's no different. It is the same thing. It is the Democratic Congress, the liberal-biased media and the homosexuals who want to destroy all Christians. Wholesale abuse and discrimination and the worst bigotry directed toward any group in our history.

"And it is happening here and now. Same thing, but directed against Christians by the liberal government and media. Send money today or these liberals will be putting Christians like you and me in concentration camps."

Pat Robertson said this to his TV audience, as images of Nazis torturing and killing Jews played on the screen.

Collegian columnist John Hart has defended Robertson against the charge that Robertson hates homosexuals. Hart said Robertson "simply never said he hates homosexuals. Such statements demonstrate the protesters' willingness to resort to fraud and deceit to justify their cause."

But clearly in the statement above Robertson is fomenting hatred and fear of homosexuals, and does so in a blatantly dishonest way. Robertson is soliciting money from his followers by installing and manipulating irrational fear. It is plainly the televangelist, not his critics, who are resorting to fraud and deceit to justify a cause.

To describe him as a hate-mongering demagogue is neither fraudulent nor deceitful. It is a simple description of the facts.

John Hart contends Robertson's critics are seeking to "impose their values on society," and therefore have no right to accuse Robertson of doing so. Here I think Hart is overlooking some important differences between two sides.

Robertson's critics at least attempt to remain within the realm of rational political debate. Robertson does not.

For Robertson, God reveals all truth about politics and morals. "Do I know the will of God? Of course I do," he said, claiming God's endorsement of his presidential candidacy.

Hence for Robertson, getting the facts straight about the real world is not essential. Persuading people on the basis of public evidence is unimportant. Trying to see how the world looks through the eyes of others is morally dangerous. Robertson simply defines reality to fit his theological preferences.

Gays and lesbians are not a beleaguered minority concerned about their jobs and physical safety. They are sinners defying God's law. Well then, why wouldn't they be preparing concentration camps for Christians?

John Hart should worry about what Robertson's paranoid vision of the world does to the Christian religion. When Robertson and his followers twist reality to suit their politics, they are also inverting what appears to be one the central ethical values of the gospels — a concern for the rejected and the oppressed. If victims are cast as aggressors, and aggressors as victims, then for Robertson Christianity becomes a tool for the rich and powerful.

JOHN EXDELL
GUEST COLUMNIST

Consider, for example, what Robertson did when the Guatemalan army chief Rios Mont came to power in 1982 and escalated a reign of terror that took the lives of tens of thousands of Guatemalan Indians. In the midst of this carnage Robertson flew to Guatemala to set up a "Christian support network" for Rios Mont, who had declared himself an evangelical Christian. Through that conduit, Robertson funneled millions to a regime so brutal that even in the age of Reagan, the U.S. Congress had to shun it.

Pumping his audience for funds on the "700 Club," Robertson held up a check and said, "This donation will bless Guatemala, and show that when a nation turns to God, and God's people unite, his marvelous plan is fulfilled."

Of all the nations in our hemisphere today, Guatemala comes the closest to Nazi Germany, and there Pat Robertson has sided with the exterminators.

I think this example highlights the most fundamental difference between Pat Robertson and his critics.

Robertson's primary targets are generally victims of injustice. They are women fighting for equal opportunity and the right to self-determination, gays and lesbians struggling against discrimination and homophobia, and Third World populations trying to survive against deadly forms of exploitation.

Robertson's liberal opponents are not abusing the victims, but resisting the perpetrators of that injustice, whether they be unprincipled businessmen, deceitful politicians or right-wing televangelists.

In the case of Pat Robertson, we have all three in one.

John Exdell is an associate professor of philosophy

Here's why we are going to rally ol' Pat

Editor,

Everyone seems to be asking, some ranting, raving — "Why are you protesting Pat Robertson?" There are many answers to this question, and each group of people who are uniting to discuss and formulate their opinions will probably respond in various ways.

I do not attempt to speak for all of them. I do; however, speak for about 35 students who are planning an actual picket demonstration at the Pat Robertson lecture on Tuesday.

We as a group of students and community members have formulated our opinion of this lecture.

We have realized that the negativity that surrounds the protest is a result of many liberals and conservatives alike holding the belief that we are attacking Robertson's right to speak. That is not our idea at all. As a group, we have no problem with Pat Robertson speaking at K-State. We understand that freedom of speech and the freedom of expression involves those opinions that we do not find within ourselves.

We will; however, be expressing our opinions on the day of the lecture. We will be extending our freedom of speech and our freedom of expression. We have decided against using the term "protest" to delineate our actions on the day of the lecture. We choose to use the word "rally" to define a positive expression of our ideals to the students, faculty and administration of this University.

We are students who believe in pro-choice, anti-hate, pro-peace. We believe in separation of church and state.

We believe in equal rights for all. We believe that liberal is not a dirty word. Liberal is an acceptance of everyone, a tolerance for all. Those who are liberal do not oppose the right's right to speak; we do not wish to take any rights away from anyone.

We do, however, oppose their desire to control our lives, to determine what is moral for each and every one of us, to define family values for us as a nation, to prohibit a woman to make a choice about her right to follow through with a pregnancy or not. (We do not wish to force anyone to have an abortion — we want everyone to have a choice.)

These are the fundamental differences between what has come to be known as the left and the right — as we see them. We will be holding signs that display our beliefs, that make statements about our ideologies.

They will say nothing of Pat Robertson or about Pat Robertson. They will be positive messages. We will be there to express ourselves in a positive, non-violent manner. We would appreciate any support you, as a student, faculty or administrator might be able to give us.

Our next organizational meeting will be on Oct. 9. Watch for signs and announcements in the Collegian.

The solution is within our grasp, America

Editor,

It is an absolute outrage and complete throw-back to the ancient art of psychological warfare. I speak of the public debasing of dead U.S. soldiers in the streets of Mogadishu, Somalia. What next? Spiking heads and lining them along the streets like lamp posts?

OK, I have brought up the issue, now here is my recommendation! Bring back a leader with international respect and a sound decision-making ability, Gen. Colin Powell. Once again, we have piecemealed our forces, and they are at the disadvantage in this urban warfare. A company team of 12 Bradley Fighting Vehicles and four M1A1 Abrams Tanks? Give me a break! Get back to our fundamental principles of war: Mass, Objective, Offensive, Security, Economy of Force, Maneuver, Unity, Surprise and Simplicity.

I am sorry I do not agree with an "it's too hot, pack the bags, let's go" mentality. I am a veteran of Operation Desert Storm, and I can attest to the fact of strict adherence to the above-stated principles working.

We need to show Mr. Aidid that American lives are precious, especially those sent in a humanitarian role.

We did what we were to do in Southwest Asia and came home. Today's U.S. soldiers are great humanitarians, but also we are warriors!

Once again are we trying to hold our soldiers to some higher code of ethics than the enemy?

This is not an "eye for an eye" letter, but rather a soldier crying out to a nation to finally show some solidarity, unity and honor.

Self-defense workshops emphasize mental and physical strengths

TRISHA BENNINGA
Collegian

Self-defense classes at K-State teach women more than just to defend themselves physically.

Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said the workshops deal with the mental aspects of self-defense as well.

"A lot of what we do initially is mental work," she said. "We talk about our strengths and our fears and the ways in which we permit our fears to interfere with our liberty."

Lisa Emigh, senior in psychology and one of two workshop facilitators, said the group, which is usually limited to about 12 women, is like a support group for the participants.

"It's like a group for women to share with each other and learn from each other," she said. "It's designed for a small group to give the women a sense of security so they feel comfortable talking with each other."

Davis said interaction between the participants is vital.

"It's important to learn from other women," she said. "There is a real value in women relating to one another their own experiences."

The workshops teach women to be aware of their surroundings and what other resources they have available to them, Davis said.

One example she gave is if an attacker grabs her wrist, the woman should focus on the fact that she has her other arm, her legs and her feet free to use rather than the fact that the attacker has a hold on her, as many women do.

Many women said they feel it is up to them to move when someone corners them, Davis said. She said the workshops teach women to be assertive in these situations.

The workshop covers assertiveness training and vocal confrontation along with some physical training, Emigh said.

"We do practice moves, and we talk about what we as women have to defend ourselves, what we can use physically and where we can aim at our attacker," she said.

Emigh said the groups discuss what women have learned from experience and share success stories. They also talk about current assault cases in the media. She said the last session discussed the assault on the K-State student last month, which occurred in the Lot B-3 on campus.

SELF-DEFENSE TIPS

- Be aware of the surroundings and any resources available.
- Learn how to be confrontational using your voice.
- Learn how to be assertive.

"I've heard that a lot of women are more aware of their surroundings, like even the woman who was attacked in B-3," Emigh said.

"People see that as something bad. It's bad that it happened, and it makes us feel unsafe. But the woman got away, and I see that as already a success because obviously she fought back, and that is one of the main things we try to focus on — is that women do have the ability to fight back."

Davis said the workshop consists of six one-hour sessions. The workshop is usually offered three times each semester, although she said it might be offered six to nine times in the spring.

She said the workshops fill up immediately and women have been put on waiting lists.

The center is trying to recruit more facilitators, Davis said. If there were more facilitators, sessions would be opened in residence halls and possibly sororities, she said.

However, the first objective is to open sessions for the women on the waiting lists.

"We're working feverishly now to train new trainers," Emigh said. "We have a half-dozen women who are prepared to be trained so they can facilitate more sections. We have to get those women served."

TORONTO BLUE JAYS 7, CHICAGO WHITE SOX 3

Toronto first baseman John Olerude scattered three hits and scored three times as the Blue Jays outlasted the White Sox Tuesday night in game one of the American League Playoffs.

Jordan expected to announce retirement

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Michael Jordan will announce his retirement from basketball today, according to NBC and published reports.

"Dateline NBC," the Denver Post and the Chicago Sun-Times reported the news almost simultaneously Tuesday night.

Jordan, the NBA's scoring champion for the past seven years, leader of the three-time champion Chicago Bulls, two-time Olympic gold-medal winner and NCAA champion as a freshman at the University of North Carolina, is expected to cite his father's slaying this summer as the reason for his retirement at age 30.

"It's time for me to move on to something else," the Sun-Times said Jordan told friends. "I know a lot of people are going to be shocked by this decision and probably won't understand. But I've talked it over with my family and friends, and most of all I'm at peace with myself over the decision."

His father's death apparently robbed Jordan of his desire to play, the Post said.

"Dateline NBC" producer Neil Shapiro said the show learned of Jordan's plans from sources close to the NBA.

The Bulls have scheduled a news conference at 11 a.m. today to make what they called a major announcement.

Jerry Reinsdorf, owner of the White Sox and Bulls, said from the ballpark: "I have nothing to say tonight. We'll have something to say tomorrow."

The NBA refused comment, deflecting queries to the Bulls.

In a copyright story, the Post said Bulls coach Phil Jackson had confirmed Jordan was retiring.

The Post said Jackson would not say if Jordan had indicated his decision was irrevocable.

According to the paper, a source close to Jordan said he has told friends he just doesn't have the fire to play any more.

Jordan led the Bulls to their first NBA title in 1991. The Bulls won their second title in 1992, with Jordan again winning MVP honors. He made it three in a row when the Bulls beat the Phoenix Suns to win the NBA title in June.

Jordan also found nothing but success in the Olympics.

All of that team's stars subjugated their offensive talents for the success of the team, and none more than Jordan.

He even took a turn at point guard when Johnson and John Stockton were injured, proving that his skill went far beyond mere scoring talent.

JORDAN'S CAREER HIGHLIGHTS

- Member of 1982 NCAA Championship team at North Carolina
- NBA Rookie of the Year in 1985
- NBA Most Valuable Player in '88, '91 and '92
- 7-time NBA scoring champion
- 2 Olympic gold medals
- Three consecutive NBA Finals Most Valuable Player
- NBA All-Star Game Most Valuable Player in 1988
- Chicago Bulls' all-time leading scorer
- 15th all-time NBA leading scorer
- All-NBA first team for seven straight years
- NBA All-Defense first team for six straight years
- Scored 50 or more points in a game 34 times

VOLLEYBALL

Netters look for 1st Big 8 win at KU

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

After winning its first road game of the season, the K-State volleyball team will take its 5-8 record on the road again tonight to play intrastate rival University of Kansas.

Coach Patti Hagemeyer said winning on the road last week gave the Wildcats some confidence, and that should help the team when it takes the court in Lawrence to face the Jayhawks.

"We had some time to get ready, and we have been thinking about playing KU," Hagemeyer said.

"Winning on the road gave the team some confidence."

KU is 10-6, but the team lost last week to Oklahoma State 3-0. Hagemeyer said even though the Hawks lost, they should be ready for the Cats.

"I don't think that they should have a tough time getting up for us," Hagemeyer said. "They had some time to get ready, and they have forgotten about the loss. They should come out hard and strong."

The Cats and the Hawks are both winless in the Big Eight race this season. A K-State win could put pressure on other teams in the Big Eight to perform, Hagemeyer said.

"This match is pretty critical," Hagemeyer said. "A win would allow us to control our own destiny. It's really important."

The Cats haven't defeated the Hawks in eight straight matches, dating back to 1988.

"We take every match one at a time," Hagemeyer said. "We are not thinking about the past. Our team goal is to just play hard every match."

The Hawks are led this season by second-team all-Big Eight and co-captain Cyndee Kanadel. Last season, Kanadel recorded 301 kills and 105 blocks.

"Kanadel is a really good player," Hagemeyer said. "They also have some other good players. They really don't depend on just one player, though."

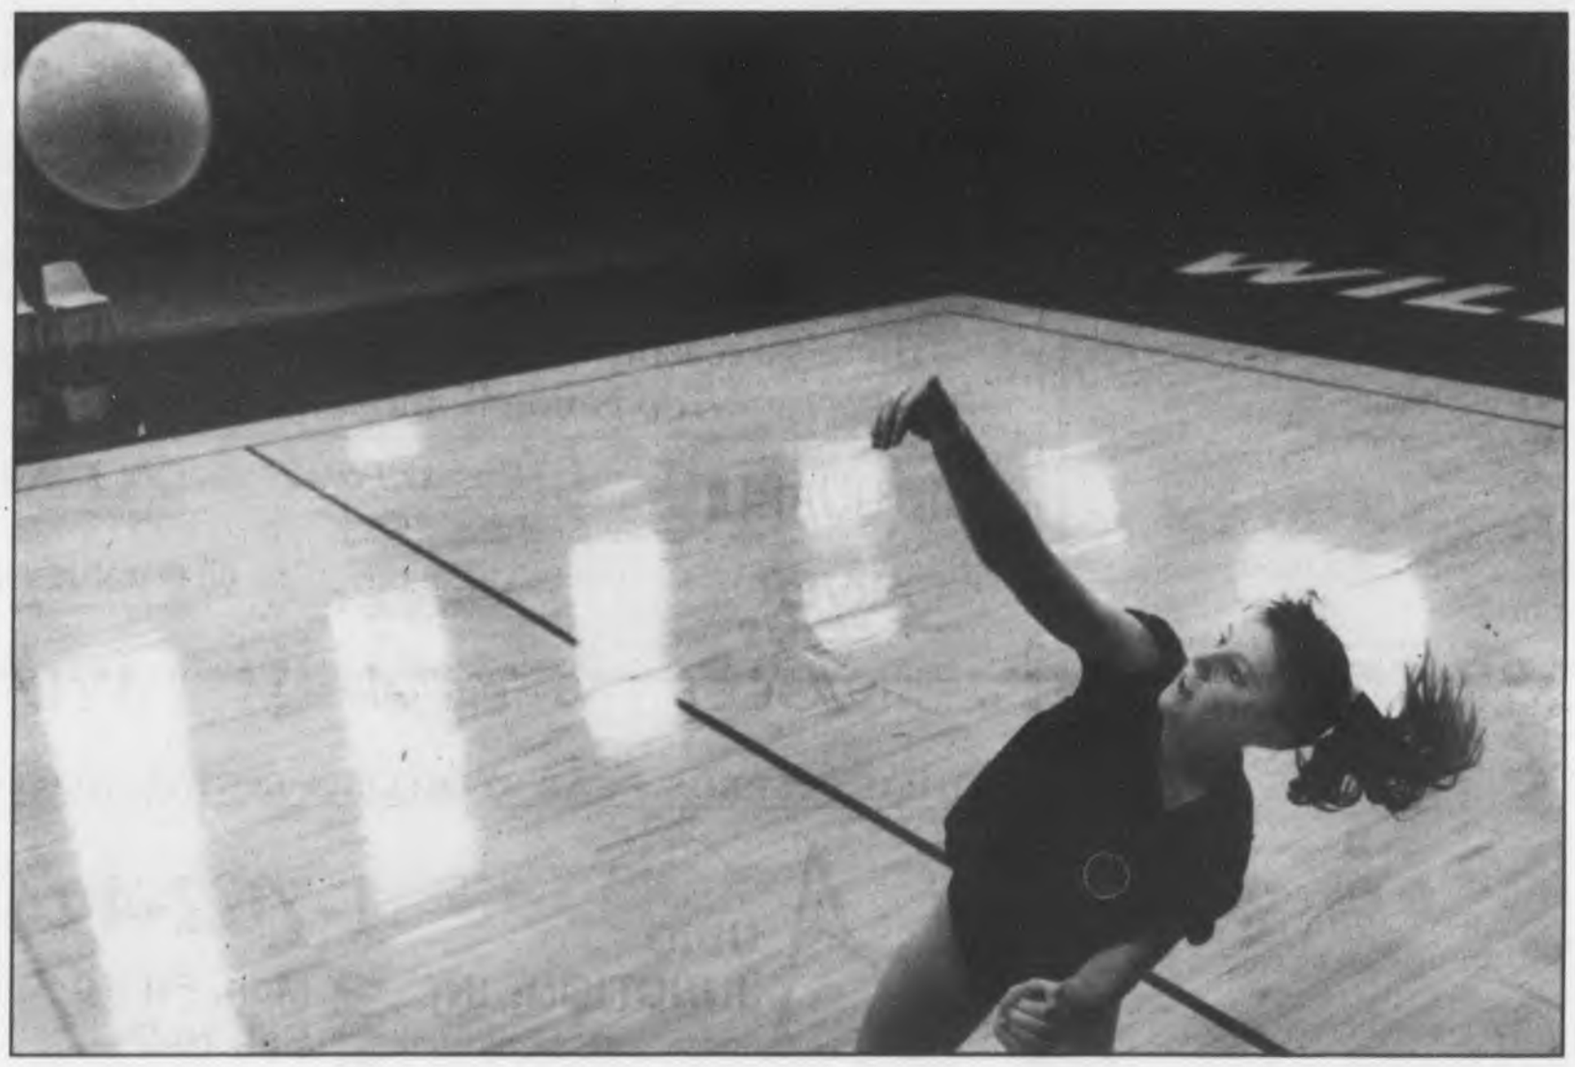
With the recent success of middle-blockers Angie McKee and Kate DeClerk, the Cats might have an advantage in the middle, Hagemeyer said.

"They are a lot smaller in the middle," Hagemeyer said. "But they are quicker. If we play good defense and pass well we should have an advantage."

Last Friday against the University of Missouri-Kansas City, senior outside-hitter Stephanie Liester had three service aces, but she also had six service errors.

Eventually, Liester abandoned her jump-serve, but Hagemeyer said Liester could return to her original style today.

"It really all depends on how tired her legs are," Hagemeyer said. "It's all up to how she feels."



Another part of the K-State attack this season has been setter Chi Dau. So far this season, Dau has had 303 assists, an average of 10.5 a game.

"Chi is really critical to our team," Hagemeyer said.

"She must make good decisions, and we have been working a lot on that this week."

Freshman Yolonda Young is also a key figure in the K-State game plan, as she has started in all 13 matches. She is third on the team in kills with 92.

Sophomore middle-blocker Jill Dugan has also contributed with 32 kills.

Kathy Wylie practices her serves during a recent volleyball practice. K-State will take on Kansas today in Lawrence. Both teams are winless in the Big Eight Conference.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶TICKETS STILL AVAILABLE FOR GAME

All reserved and general-admission tickets for Saturday's game against Kansas are sold out, including the additional temporary seats in the north end zone and on the south concourse Monday afternoon.

Because of the capacity crowd of 42,000-plus fans expected to show for the game, the Bramlage Coliseum ticket office will also sell standing-room-only tickets for the first time ever for a football game. Seven hundred standing-room tickets will go on sale at 8 a.m. Friday at the the ticket office.

Each person will be allowed to purchase no more than two tickets. The cost is $20, cash only, per ticket, and no phone orders will be accepted.

Because of several construction projects in and around the Manhattan area, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is encouraging fans to allot extra time for arrival to KSU Stadium on Saturday.

City officials said all of the traditional routes within Manhattan to KSU Stadium are fine, but several construction projects on I-70 could back up traffic coming into the city.

To expedite access to the parking lots, K-State officials are also encouraging fans with parking permits to enter through gates 1, 3, 4 and 5 to park in the west lot. Fans without parking permits should enter through gates 7 and 8 and park on the east side of the stadium.

▶PRICES TO INCREASE 5 PERCENT

The K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics announced on Tuesday a 5-percent increase in the cost of season basketball tickets, except to students.

Despite the hike, K-State still offers one of the most economical ticket packages compared to other Big Eight schools.

"We continue to be an attractive buy in the mainstream of sports marketplace with our athletic-ticket pricing," K-State athletic director Max Urick said.

K-State's 5-percent increase also affects the price of faculty/staff tickets, which is 80 percent of the regular open-public price. Therefore, this year's faculty/staff season tickets have increased from $152 to $159 for the 17 home games. The student season-ticket price of $75 remains the same this season.

Behavior has scarred image of University

TROY COVERDALE

As I was finishing up another Monday night at the controls of DB92's "Sports Talk," I was faced with trying to answer a question about image — the image of the K-State sports fan.

It seems that callers to another area talk show, and its host as well, all seemed to have the opinion that a K-State win this weekend would cause another infamous "Aggieville Riot."

The question from the caller on my show was, why do they think another riot is imminent?

In all honesty, his question is a good one, but it can be answered very easily.

Just view what has happened in recent years in conjunction with K-State sporting events: Riots No. 1 and No. 2 after KU–K-State games, torn-down goalposts after the Iowa State game on ESPN last year, two different instances of KU basketball players being hit with debris from the stands in Bramlage Coliseum over the past two years.

Is it any wonder why K-State fans get a bum rap around the state? The behavior of a few has put a bad image on the entire University in those instances.

Isn't it bad enough the other members of the media in the state have a love affair with KU, reporting about the Jayhawks like everyone in the state should be a Hawk fan?

Other papers tend to report stories like, "And, oh yeah, then there's that other school. You know, that one that smells like cattle when the wind blows out of the north."

That problem is one you, as a K-State fan, cannot change by your actions.

That problem can be solved by improvements in the football and basketball programs.

The problem that can be solved by your actions is the image problem of you and your fellow Wildcat fans.

I'm not telling anyone to not go out an enjoy the game or what happens after it. I'm just asking that everyone keep in mind that image problem.

Cheer, scream, be loud and obnoxious, and become the "12th Man" for the football team.

But remember that your actions reflect your fellow fans, the athletic programs and the University as a whole.

The image that has been cultivated by Bill Snyder and his troops is one of a winner on the field.

The image cultivated by the University administration is one of a winner in academics.

And remember, the entire state — and parts of the nation — are watching with interest.

Kuregian nets weekly honor

Karina Kuregian was selected the K-State Athlete of the Week Monday in a split vote against cross country runner Paulette Staats.

Kuregian, a sophomore tennis player from Armenia, won the No. 1 singles match and teamed with Masha Meidell to take the No. 1 match in doubles last weekend at the Wildcat/Travelers Express Invitational. She also had a 2-1 record at the Skytel National Clay Court Championships in Jackson, Miss.

Staats, who was ousted by Kuregian for the award, placed third out of a field of 102 runners to lead the women harriers to their second-consecutive OSU Cowboy Jamboree team title last Saturday.

Heredity is factor in cancer

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

October is National Breast Health Month at Lafene Health Center.

"What we're trying to do here is teach women to do breast self-examinations monthly," said Gail Senock, R.N. and supervisor of the Women's Clinic. "Most women will find breast cancer themselves before a doctor will. People need to be aware that breast cancer is one of the major women's health problems."

According to the National Institute of Health, 175,000 women and 900 men will learn they have breast cancer this year.

While all women are at risk for breast cancer, the most important factors are heredity and growing older, Senock said.

"One out of every nine women will get breast cancer," Senock said. "One out of every eight women older than age 50 will get breast cancer."

According to the the National Cancer Institute, heredity is an important factor when a woman's mother had breast cancer early in her life, such as before age 30.

QUESTIONS?
Anyone needing more information about breast health should go to the Women's Clinic at Lafene or call 532-6554.

The National Cancer Institute recommends a three-point plan of action for breast health:

1. Breast self-examination — Women older than 20 should perform a self-exam monthly. The best time to examine your breasts is two to three days after the end of your menstrual period.

2. Clinical exam by a health professional — Women should ask for a breast exam during a routine checkup. Women can ask to be taught how to examine their own breasts correctly during these exams.

3. Mammogram — All women should get a baseline (first-time) mammogram between the ages of 35 and 40. This is a low-dose X-ray that examines a woman's breast. A radiologist who has had special training in mammography should read the film.

Lafene is not equipped for mammograms but can provide manual breast exams.

Students should call first to make an appointment for a breast exam. Lafene provides breast exams at no extra charge.

HOW TO DO A BREAST SELF-EXAM

1. Lie down and put a pillow under your right shoulder. Place your right arm behind your head.

2. Use the finger pads of your three middle fingers in your left hand to feel for lumps or thickening. Your finger pads are the top third of each finger.

3. Press firmly enough to know how your breast feels. If you're not sure how hard to press, ask your health-care provider. Learn what your breast feel like most of the time. A firm ridge in the lower curve of each breast is normal.

4. Move around the breast in a set pattern. You can choose to move your fingers in a) concentric circles, b) in straight up-and-down lines, or c) by moving your fingers in a wedge-shaped pattern from the nipple to the outer edges of the breast.

Battle kills at least 12 soldiers fundamental success of one of the most successful humanitarian missions we've seen in a long time," Clinton said to reporters in San Francisco.

Reports from Mogadishu indicated at least 12 U.S. soldiers were killed Sunday in a fierce battle with Somali rebels. Defense Secretary Les Aspin ordered more U.S. troops into the country, along with two aerial gunships and several tanks and fighting vehicles. The current United Nations force is 28,000, including 4,700 Americans.

Asked why more U.S. troops were being sent, Clinton said: "I'm not satisfied that the folks that are there now have the protection that they need."

The fresh troops are from the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), based in Fort Stewart, Ga. The M1A1 tanks to be sent to Mogadishu will be specially outfitted with plows to detonate mines.

"The morale of the troops is excellent," Maj. Kelly Fitzpatrick said as the reinforcements began their trip. "They are very eager."

United Nations officials said late Monday that 12 Americans and one Malaysian were killed Sunday, 78 U.S. troops wounded and six crew members of the downed Blackhawk missing. Six Malaysians and two Pakistanis also were wounded.

QRF not being used for original purpose

a highly mobile light infantry unit, equipped with a squadron of helicopters. The Rangers brought at least a dozen of their own helicopters with them when they arrived in August.

While the QRF remains under U.S. and not U.N. command, its role has changed in recent months. Instead of being a reserve force, it is being used more and more as an operational unit.

That, perhaps, reflects a lack of faith by some commanders in other U.N. forces.

With almost half of the U.N. force pinned down in fortified positions in southern Mogadishu by militia loyal to Aidid, the QRF's helicopters have played an increasingly important — and visible — role.

They are almost constantly in the sky low over southern Mogadishu, patrolling mean streets on which the United Nations has become increasingly loathe to send its soldiers on foot — surrendering them, in effect, to Aidid.

Lightly armed foot patrols by U.N. troops all but disappeared after June 5, when 24 Pakistanis were killed and 54 wounded in a series of ambushes blamed on Aidid's militia.

After that, the United Nations began moving its peacekeepers around the city in vehicles. But the vehicles quickly became the targets of militia armed with rocket-propelled grenades and remotely detonated landmines.

It was the deaths of four Americans when their military vehicle was ripped apart by such a mine on Aug. 8 that prompted Clinton to send in the Rangers, along with a handful of Delta Force commandos, to capture Aidid.

Farrell tradition in its final year

Book sales to cease because of library renovation

KIM DILLON
Collegian

Friends of the Libraries is having its last book sale in the lobby of Farrell Library for a while.

This will be the last book sale this year, and possibly the last one for several years because construction on the library will begin this spring, said Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean and secretary of Friends of the Libraries.

In the past, there was a book sale in the spring to sell the leftover books.

"We'll probably donate them to other book sales around town that are held in the spring," McCulloh said.

The book sale started Sunday at noon and lasts through today. The sale hours will be the same as those for the library.

The prices will be $2 for hardback books and $1 for paperback books. The price for popular fiction will be slightly lower.

Today, all the books will be half price until 5 p.m., when the price will be $2 a bag.

Julie Hostetler, president of Friends of the Libraries, said the sale offers a large selection of books.

Types of books available this year include textbooks, sheet music, novels, Regency Romances, science fiction, mysteries and how-to books, McCulloh said.

Most of the books for the sale were donated, and a few of them are out-of-date textbooks from the library collection.

She said there are more than 6,000 books for the sale.

"Usually we make between $3,000 and $4,000 during the sale," McCulloh said.

The decision on what the money will be used for has not been decided yet, she said.

"The money is used to purchase various things for the libraries that state funds don't cover," McCulloh said.

Book donations for the book sale could be left at the library and other locations in town.

Dillons in Westloop and Claflin Book Store collected books for the sale, Pat Hughes, book sale chairperson, said.

"It's been a good opportunity for people to exchange books at a very low cost," Hostetler said.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Older female in search of mature male

Dear Cassandra,

I am an older student, who in most cases doesn't appear my own age. I am mistaken for being younger than I am by at least five years in most cases. This makes it very hard to find someone to date.

I am not age discriminatory to most younger people, but find guys aren't too keen on the idea of actually dating an older woman. I haven't dated anyone older than myself since my divorce. In fact, I have only run across one single guy older than me who seems to show interest.

I have close friends back home, and we go out when I go back. The guys I've known for quite a while usually come back with "you betcha" or "sure," when I ask them to dance.

I get compliments on my appearance from even my kids. I know there is room for improvement, but I have more going for me than a lot of those younger women. Yet they have dates and I don't.

I'm too picky to reply to the personals in the paper and haven't met a group of people at K-State I feel comfortable going out on the town with. The one time I did go out this school year, I met a guy who wants a sexual relationship, but not dating.

So, Cassandra, do I lose my morality for a while and keep my sex life active while looking for someone with the heart to look at the woman inside the pretty packaging?

Signed,
Tired, Horny and Depressed Student

Dear Tired,

First, don't sacrifice your morality for sex.

Second, expand your circle of friends. Find the groups you're interested in and get involved. You'll find folks (men) who will fit your dating criteria.

Third, don't try so hard. Love will come to you when you least expect it. It always does. Honest.

Film paints bleak life

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

The humor of cannibalism will be showcased when Union Program Council presents the French film "Delicatessen" as this week's Kaleidoscope film.

The film is a dark, comedic look at a post-apocalyptic society. Directors Jean-Pierre Jeunet and Marc Caro paint a futuristic scene so bleak that one can only use the humor of the situation to stay sane.

The movie's plot centers around a food shortage that has forced citizens to practice cannibalism to stay alive.

A butcher (Jean Claude Dreyfus), who conveniently owns an apartment building, lures victims by promising them a job as caretaker.

He then kills them and sells the meat in his delicatessen, located on the first floor of his apartment building. The residents all keep quiet about his practices in exchange for choice cuts from his shop.

When Louison, a former circus clown played by Dominique Pinon, is lured as the next victim, complications arise. He falls in love with Julie, the butcher's daughter, played by the beautiful Marie-Laure Dougnac. Julie enlists the service of a group of underground vegetarians to rescue Louison.

The film features an artistic style similar to that in Terry Gilliam's "Brazil," with a hideously dark environment brightened only by frequent close-up shots of the characters' charismatic expressions during dialogue.

The performances given are stellar, with Pinon's Chaplinesque portrayal of Louison particularly standing out. He athletically and dramatically portrays the would-be main course with a realistic flair.

"Delicatessen" poignantly remarks on our society, proclaiming the value of unselfish love over the greedy nature of mankind.

If you have never seen or heard a piano's interior strings strummed and plucked, stop by All Faiths Chapel at 8 p.m. tonight.

Virginia Houser, instructor of music, will present a recital of diverse piano works by J. S. Bach, Beethoven, Bernstein, Crumb and Granados.

Houser joined the music faculty at K-State in the Fall of 1989. She is director of group keyboard, pedagogy and preparatory programs.

REVIEW

"This is my fifth year at K-State, and I thought it was time for me to pull a solo recital together," Houser said.

Jack Flouer, head of the music department, said faculty recitals aren't unusual.

"Performing studio faculty are expected to perform annually as part of their creative research," he said.

Houser said when someone prepares for a solo recital, rehearsal on a daily basis is required, and it takes several months to memorize the music selected for the program.

The musical selections that will be performed tonight have interesting stories connected to them, she said.

"Capriccio on The Departure of His Beloved Brother," by J. S. Bach, is a programmatic piece, which means the music has an outside meaning to it. Each movement figures into the story and has a progressive title, she said.

Another classical composer represented in the recital is Beethoven. "Sonata in A Flat Major, Opus 110," was composed after Beethoven became deaf. The piece was one of the last sonatas he composed and departs from Beethoven's traditional composing style.

To add a contemporary finishing touch to the program, Houser has included a very different piece by Crumb titled,"A Little Suite For Christmas A. D. 1979."

"When I first started working on the Crumb piece, because the nature of the music was so different, I could only work on it for short periods of time," she said.

Kennedy calls for U.S. job-training programs

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Three congressmen presented their views and interpretations about the North Atlantic Free Trade Agreement while visiting campus Oct. 1.

"Many Americans are asking why we should go out and break down barriers," Rep. Joseph Kennedy, D-Mass., said. "Why should we go out and have free trade with countries like Mexico? All of our jobs are going to go to Mexico. The trouble, of course, is that they can already do that."

The real question, Kennedy said, is whether or not this will increase competition between the United States and Mexico.

If NAFTA doesn't work as planned, Kennedy said the social classes within the United States would be divided further.

"We have got to, as a nation, put together the kind of job-training programs that will allow us to compete in the area of state-wide care, top communications, computer sciences, hard plastics, and a whole range of industries that are going to be developed, environmental breakthroughs and the like, that are going to develop the high-wage jobs of the future."

Kennedy said if the United States doesn't come together on these issues, the country is going to undergo a significant economic decline.

"In terms of the fine points of NAFTA, I'm going to have to be real honest with you. I just have to decide," Kennedy said. "There is a part of me that is torn by the idea that we're going to turn our backs once again on the working people and the poor.

"But, I do believe that the United States has got to be able to compete internationally and that we have got to be aggressive about it, and we have to draw in those jobs. If we can find the right trading package, I'd probably vote for NAFTA."

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., said he thinks the United States needs some kind of agreement with Mexico. He said he believes it is wrong for jobs to leave the United States just because they don't have to meet the guidelines of labor and environmental standards.

Cheap labor, Slattery said, is also a reason jobs leave the United States.

"Over the last 10 years, I believe, the government of Mexico has pursued a policy to keep labor costs down and to prevent labor wages from going up," Slattery said.

Because of this type of politics, Slattery said he is convinced there needs to be some form of an agreement.

"I am like Congressman Kennedy," he said. "I have not made a final decision on this either. I know we have to have an agreement. I'm not yet convinced this is the agreement."

Slattery said he is unsure about the Mexican government's labor policies.

"I am not convinced, yet, that the Mexican government is prepared to change its policy of the last 10 years and really allow labor in Mexico to seek a living wage, to bargain collectively and freely and to strike freely, and to do all the things labor, in this country, was able to do over the last 50 years.

"I want to see some changes on the part of the Mexican government before I enthusiastically embrace this treaty," Slattery said.

Bottleneck exhibits local artists' diverse musical styles

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Not everything from Jayhawk territory is all that bad.

For years, the Bottleneck in Lawrence has been a major hub for live entertainment in Kansas. Mercy Records, in cooperation with the Bottleneck, has released a CD featuring artists from the Lawrence area. Bands were given a chance to record live tracks for an album titled "1993 Loaded In Lawrence — Live At The Bottleneck!"

This 16-song album displays a variety of musical styles ranging from bluegrass to aggressive grunge. Diversity of musical styles is the key to this compilation, and Mercy Records wastes very little time on the CD.

Nic Cosmos leads off with a mild pop rhythm. Their tune "Wonder" brings an easy melody and refrain with a catchy country/folk rock style. Basically a good song, "Wonder" doesn't offer much exploration nor anything that hasn't been previously offered in pop-rock music.

Additional captivating songs continue at the beginning of "Live At The Bottleneck!" with the Salty Iguanas' "Waiting Man."

Filled with several time changes and syncopation, this is probably one of the Iguana's least-popular live songs. This version presents a tight, clear sound despite a radical sound reduction of both Jesse Larson's percussion and experimentation from guitarist Barry Osbourn.

Sticking to the theme of alternative pop music, Love Squad also makes an appearance. Reminiscent of the old Rainmakers, Love Squad's "It's A Lie" is a dancable tune that would be fun to see and hear. The sound from Levine's live mandolin is excessively bright but is still a nice addition for the band. Although it dabbles with new melodic ideas, "It's A Lie," offers little musical testing.

The Psychovelvets' "Swear To God" is presented with lots of fuzzy guitar and simple chord changes. Unfortunately, this track does nothing for the listener except an occasional foot tap. The refrain "I swear to God" is constantly repeated, which might be considered comical or part of a punk image. "Swear To God" does

Depression is an illness, not a weakness
A person with a depressive illness can't just "snap out of it." Depression is an illness involving physical symptoms, moods, and thoughts. Without treatment, symptoms can last for months, or even years. And depression is as common as it is misunderstood. It affects more than 15 million Americans each year. .
The good news is 80 percent of people with depression are treated successfully with medications, psychotherapy, or a combination of both.
As part of National Mental Illness Awareness Week, The Menninger Clinic will present a free public Depression Education Forum that features
■ A presentation on depression by Don Rosen, MD, and Meredith Titus, PhD
■ The 30-minute film Depression: The Storm Within
■ A question and answer panel with Drs. Rosen and Titus; B.D. Ehler, psychopharmacologist; Bryce Miller, president of the National Depressive and Manic-depressive Association; and Flynn O'Malley, PhD, child psychologist
■ A voluntary, self-administered questionnaire, and
■ An opportunity, if you choose, to meet privately with a Menninger mental health professional. (This five-minute screening is designed to be informational and will provide free professional guidance, but it is not a substitute for a detailed, psychiatric evaluation.)
At Menninger we've been helping people with depression for 68 years. We invite you to learn more about this widely misunderstood and very treatable illness. This is an opportunity for you to help yourself or someone you know. No reservations required.

Slattery shies away from NAFTA

Slattery said he is leaning toward voting "no" on NAFTA. But, he said, the question then becomes what action should be taken. This is what Slattery said troubles him.

"I want to make a decision that is not only in the best interest of Kansas, but is in the best interest of the country," Slattery said, "and will also lead to justice and more acceptable working environment for the people of Mexico, too."

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., said he agreed there is a problem with the corruption of the Mexican government.

"There has got to be some form of political reform in that system, as the Europeans insisted when they brought Spain and Portugal and other countries into the common market," Glickman said.

If the agreement is rejected, Glickman said the big winner will be Japan.

"Japan is the economic enemy of the United States, not Mexico. They're the ones who have taken jobs away from the United States all over the world.

"So, we have to make sure that we don't open the doors for Japan and other countries to come into take advantage of Mexico and then to ship goods into the United States at lower tariffs."

Glickman said he is undecided as to how he would vote.

Album showcases diversity of talents

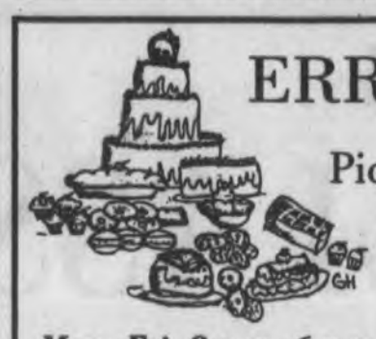
little else, though.

"Happy Dance," from the Mahoots, really doesn't sound happy at all. This song has its share of power chords, but too much emphasis is placed on sounding like a pop band. The liner notes mention that the band understands the importance of lyrics instead of just using the voice as a screeching instrument.

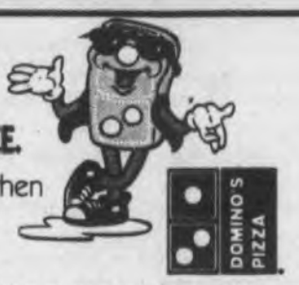
Oddly enough, the Mahoot's vocalist Steve Wilson is excessively loud and even produces a small screech himself.

So much for liner notes.

Intense grooving and intoxicating energy dominate the second half of the CD.



With a funky bass, bright guitar harmonics and breathy vocals, the Lonesome Houndog's "Come" drives with consistent intensity. The repetition of funk is used well and doesn't plod along.



"Hitchin' Blues" brings us some hillbilly bluegrass from Arkansas White Trash. Their song begins with a violin and takes off with some good ol' banjo pickin'.

"Hitchin' Blues" works well within the album and should get your feet steadily tappin'.

The soul connection continues as the L.A. Ramblers, formerly a Grateful Dead cover band, present a flowing tune titled "Alone at the Dock." The aura of the Dead is preserved, yet the band is altogether original. With vocalist Stephanie Turner, the Ramblers add sensuality to their extended jams. Experimentation occurs throughout "Alone At The Dock" with keyboardist Ken Lovern adding nice fills that really set the mood.

KANSAS JAYHAWKS

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

K-State cornerback, Kenny McEntyre, and strong safety Steve Hawks sandwich a University of Nevada-Las Vegas ballcarrier during K-State's 36-20 win over the Running Rebels in KSU Stadium. K-State ended the non-conference season with a 4-0 record and has a nine game home winning streak going into the K-State vs. KU game this Saturday. KU leads the series 61-24 with 5 ties.

Wildcats to score 'helluva lot'

Rock Chalk Jayhawk?

I think not.

It's time once again for the head-bashin', goal-post-destroyin', stadium-packin' K-State-Kansas football game. And for Jayhawkers, it's time to start thinking about the Final Four or maybe baseball season.

Kansas (2-3) travels to K-State (4-0) Saturday for the 91st meeting between these two intrastate rivals. The Jayhawks are coming off their first Division 1-A win of the 1993 campaign, a 24-6 drubbing of hapless Colorado State.

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian Sports Editor

One of my friends from high school attends KU, and lately he's been calling me for advice with his deep-seeded problems. Last night he called, nervously anticipating Saturday's game.

"Well, at least we got a real win before we go to Manhattan," Jason said. "It looks like we might turn this season around yet. What do you think?"

"To be quite honest, Jason, beating

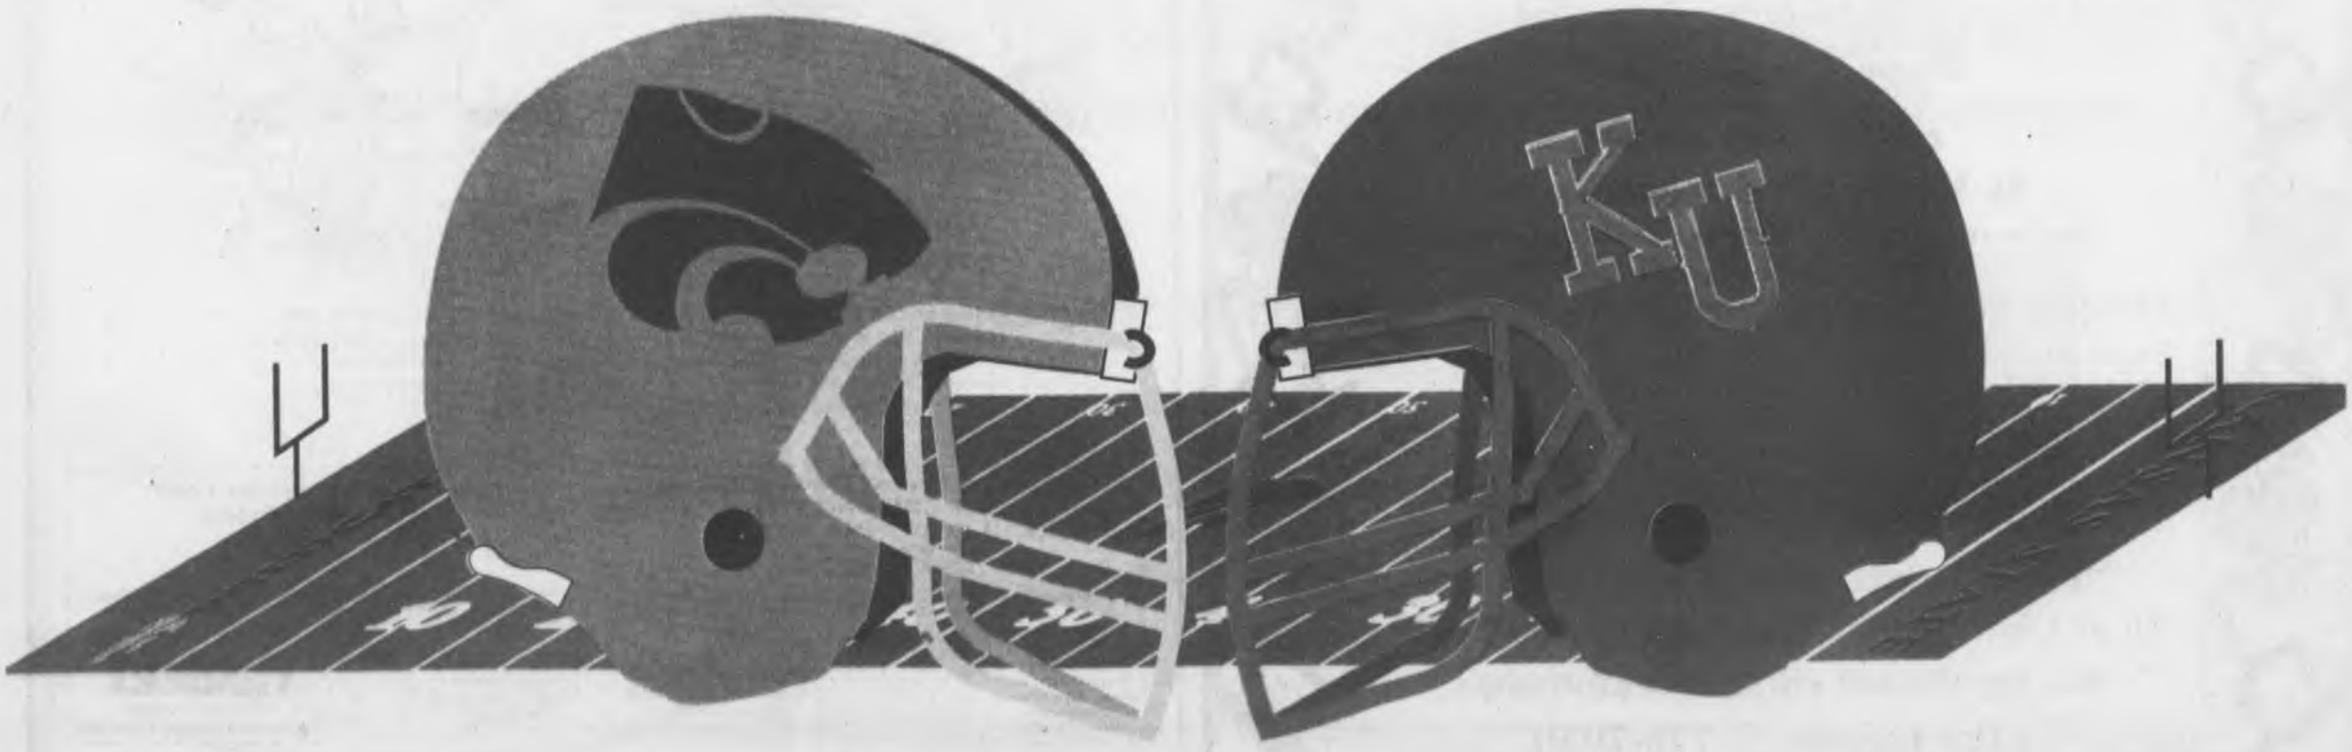
Jayhawks will claim game 17-14

All that matters is this game. The Kansas–K-State game.

Forget Kansas' Aloha Bowl victory last year. Forget K-State's 4-0 start this season. Forget Kansas' 2-3 start, which most Jayhawk fans have been trying to do.

This is the Governor's Cup. In the 1980s, when the winner claimed bragging rights as the state's best team, some high schools might have disagreed. However, the recent resurgence of both programs has given more beef to the bragging.



KRISTI FOGLER
Kansan Sports Editor

In this game, for which the Jayhawks are sure to be underdogs, the only odds that are sure are the ones in favor of an unpredictable game. Anything can happen and usually does. And despite both schools' improving football programs, the Governor's Cup in the 1990s has given both teams humiliating and unexpected moments.

Last year, who would have thought

THE MATCH-UP

A position-by-position look at K-State's game Saturday against Kansas. The Collegian sports staff compiled the information to pick the team with the advantage at each position.

DEFENSE

POSITION
LINE	The K-State front line has given up three rushing touchdowns in four games — the second lowest in the Big Eight next to Oklahoma's zero. Defensive tackle Tim Colston has the most tackles from the front four with 18. Kansas ranks fifth in the league as they allow opponents 160 yards a game. Daryl Jones takes over Chris Maumalanga's tackle position.	✔
LINEBACKERS	K-State has done a good job without linebacker Percell Gaskins. Laird Veatch has 32 tackles, including a team-high four sacks, while Kirby Hocutt has 46 tackles and two interceptions. The Jayhawks have given up 379.8 yards per outing to rank sixth in total defense. Larry Thiel leads the linebacking corps in tackles with 37 stops.	✔
SECONDARY	Through four games, K-State is second in interceptions with seven. Cornerback Thomas Randolph has two interceptions to tie for fourth in the league. Free safety Jaime Mendez tops the team in tackles with 47 stops. Passing efficiency for the Hawks ranks sixth in the Big Eight as the defensive backs have given up six passing touchdowns and just two interceptions. Cornerback Tony Blevins has broken up three passes.	✔

POSITION
LINE	K-State has the fourth-best total offense in the league averaging 365 yards per contest — 225 yards comes from the passing game — and tied for third in touchdowns in the conference with 16. The 32.5 points per game for the Cats ranks 23rd in the nation. Kansas has the fifth-best offense in the league at 338.2 yards a game but has 11 touchdowns through five games. Center Dan Schmidt returned last week against Colorado State.	✔
WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS	Andre Coleman is third in the Big Eight in the receiving yards per game category with 63 yards, while teammates Kevin Lockett and Mitch Running are in the top 10 of the same category. Robert Reed leads the Jayhawks in receptions with 12 catches and averages 11.6 yards a catch. All-Big Eight tight end Dwayne Chandler returns for the Jayhawks.	✔
RUNNING BACKS	The Cats rank sixth in the league with 140.5 yards a game. J.J. Smith leads all rushers in the Big Eight in rushing touchdowns with six, while teammate Rod Schiller has gained 232 yards in four games. Jayhawk running back L.T. Levine has gained 312 yards on the ground, replacing the injured George White. White was a second-team All-Big Eight selection last year.	✔	✔
QUARTERBACKS	Since Chad May took over the offense, he is averaging 209 yards of total offense a game to rank second in the Big Eight. If he keeps throwing at the pace of 221.3 passing yards per game, May will finish the regular season with 2,434 yards, which would rank second in the school's history behind Lynn Dickey's 2,476 yards in 1969. Kansas quarterback Asheiki Preston completed 12 passes out of 14 attempts for 164 yards. He replaced Fred Thomas in the second half of the Utah game, and he has racked up 363 yards of total offense in three halves.	✔

POSITION
PUNTING	Dan Eichloff is third in punting in the Big Eight and 23rd in the country with a 42.33 yard average after averaging seventh in the conference last year. Chad Romano is getting 39.78 yards a punt to place sixth in the league.		✔
PLACE KICKING	Eichloff is first in the Big Eight and sixth in the country in field goals with 1.6 field goals a game. Three years ago, he hit a 58-yard field goal to give KU a 27-24 win over K-State. Tate Wright is second in the Big Eight with 1.5 field goals a game. He has made six of his nine field goal attempts.		✔
RETURN	Andre Coleman is second in both punt returns, with 17 yards a return and kickoff returns at 30.43 a return. Also, Coleman is first in all-purpose yards in the Big Eight with 165.5 yards a game. Dorien Brew is behind Coleman in punt returns (15.5 yards) and kickoff returns (24.6 yards) but is 13th in total yards.	✔

AREA
MOMENTUM	K-State has won five of its past six games and looks to start the season 5-0 for the first time since 1931. The Cats are 18-2 at KSU Stadium since 1990, and a win over Kansas would tie the school's longest home winning streak of 10 games set in 1909-10. Kansas ended a two-game losing streak when they beat Colorado State 27-7 last weekend. Kansas has won four of its last five games against K-State but only one in Manhattan.	✔
COACHING	Bill Snyder's record is 22-26 in his fifth year at K-State. Since his 1-10 mark in 1989, Snyder has led the Cats to a 21-16 record. A win for Snyder would make him the fifth-winningest coach at K-State, surpassing former coach Jim Dickey. Kansas coach Glen Mason is 24-36-1 at Kansas and 36-46-1 in his career. He has improved Kansas from a 1-10 record in 1988 to a 8-4 record last year and a 23-20 win over Brigham Young in the Aloha Bowl.	✔	✔
THE EDGE	A week off can help or hurt a football team. The winners of the past two meetings were idle the week before the game. K-State didn't play last week, but Kansas got a rest two weeks ago and handled Colorado State last Saturday. The winner of the past three games has been the home team, and K-State has the second-best home record since 1990 with a 18-2 record.	✔

STADIUM

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

A fortunate few will sit high above the field in the Dev Nelson Press Box and witness the K-State-KU football game in the luxury of their suites.

The structure has at times been referred to by fans as being one of the best in Division I football, while it has been described by architect Mike Foss, a 1967 alumnus, as being a missed opportunity to have something very nice.

Each suite has a seating capacity of 16 people on average, with the second level of the press box containing two club level seating areas, the president's suite, the KSU Foundation suite and six private suites. The third level includes suites for the athletic director, head coach, KSU Alumni Association and 11 others for private use.

Each sky suite level includes a catering room and men's and women's restrooms.

Melanie Merrill Thompson, a guest at a suite, said the renovations could influence recruits to come to K-State.

"I think it is real impressive for recruits and it's one of the reasons why they have it," she said. "It has a great panoramic view and shows real spirit."

In buying a sky suite, owners reserve the right to customize their suite and have it accessible to cable television, a monitor showing K-State's game, an individual thermostat and a sound system that allows suite holders to choose between the P.A. system and the Wildcat Radio Network.

Foss said he likes the suites, but dislikes how the structure looks.

"One good thing about them is when you're inside them, you don't have to see the facility," Foss said.

"I think it's wonderful that we have them, but I'm disappointed that the architectural style isn't any better. I was disappointed that the architectural department didn't have a say in it."

The construction of the press box adds quality to the football program, Ron Bramlage, a 1990 K-State alumnus, said.

"I think it's a tremendous asset to our university, city and state," he said.

Jon Levin, owner of Varney's Bookstore, said he thinks it is a first class facility.

"Obviously, we haven't hit the bad weather yet, but when we do, it will be a great way to watch the football game."

The $3.3-million press box, constructed by the GE Johnson Co. and designed by architect John Shaver of Salina, opened Sept. 3, after seven months of construction.

Before the beginning of the season, 16 private sky suites were for sale in the second and third level for $50,000 for the first year and $10,000 for the next five years.

1991

THE COMEBACK

It would be hard to determine the turning point of the K-State football program, but a big step forward had to have occurred on October 12, 1991.

On that day 40,856 people jammed KSU Stadium for the 89th meeting between intrastate rivals K-State and the University of Kansas

Both the Cats and the Hawks were struggling to gain respect in the college football scene at the time. The Wildcats had a 3-1 record for the first time since 1982.

K-State also had come back from being declared the worst football program by Sports Illustrated in 1987, to winning five games in 1990 under third-year coach Bill Snyder.

The Hawks were also struggling for respect under Coach Glen Mason. The season before the Hawks had a 3-7-1 record but defeated the Cats 27-24 in Lawrence. In 1989, KU had a record of 4-7.

Senior free-safety Jaime Mendez said he knew there was something different when they met two years ago.

"It was an exciting environment," Mendez said. "There was a lot of people there. The game was really the first time that football had been big in the state of Kansas. The game meant a lot for both teams, because neither one of us had been any good before."

Even though the Cats were sitting with a 3-1 record, Snyder said he had a hard time getting the players to think they could win any game.

"In 1991, we had to get the players to believe that they can win," Snyder said. "We had to keep their expectations high. That was one of our first goals when I came here. I wanted to install in the players the belief that the team could win."

K-State's all-time leading receiver, Michael Smith, is tackled by two Jayhawk defenders.

Not only did the players have to learn how to win, but the fans also had to learn expect the Cats to win. As the Cats trailed 12-3 in the fourth quarter some of the fans headed toward the exit, counting on another K-State loss to the Jayhawks.

Then, K-State made a defensive stand. The Jayhawks were starting on the Cats 15-yard line, and the K-State defense held the KU offense on three-straight running plays.

It was fourth down and one at the 6-yard line, and the game rested on the play.

"Our only thought was to get out of there with just a field goal," Snyder said in a 1991 K-State Collegian story. "A touchdown probably would have put us under."

For that reason, the KU coaching staff decided to leave the offense on the field to go for the knockout punch. The only problem was that the KU running backs, who had been averaging 250 yards a game, had been held to just 76 yards rushing.

Another problem for the Jayhawks was that the Cats already had stopped them on two fourth-and-one situations.

For those reasons, the KU offense decided to go to the air. KU quarterback Chip Hilleary dropped back and found receiver Kenny Drayton open in the left corner of the end zone.

But Hilleary's pass floated just beyond Drayton's reach, and the K-State defense had succeeded.

"We were thinking in the huddle that we just had to hold them," Mendez said. "After we stopped them, that gave us the momentum and some confidence."

Snyder then went to senior quarterback Paul Watson, who he benched earlier in the game. Having just completed eight of his previous 21 attempts, Watson took over the offense and drove the Cats to KU's 10-yard line. Then on first and goal, running back Eric Gallon ran to left, broke two tackles and danced into the end-zone.

That cut the KU lead to two at 12-10, and Snyder went to his defense again to stop the Jayhawk offense.

"Coach came over to us (defense) after the touchdown," Mendez said. "He asked us if we thought we could stop them again. We said we could and that he shouldn't go for the on-side kick."

Mendez and the defense backed up their promise as an incomplete pass and two short runs set up fourth-and-one for the fourth time.

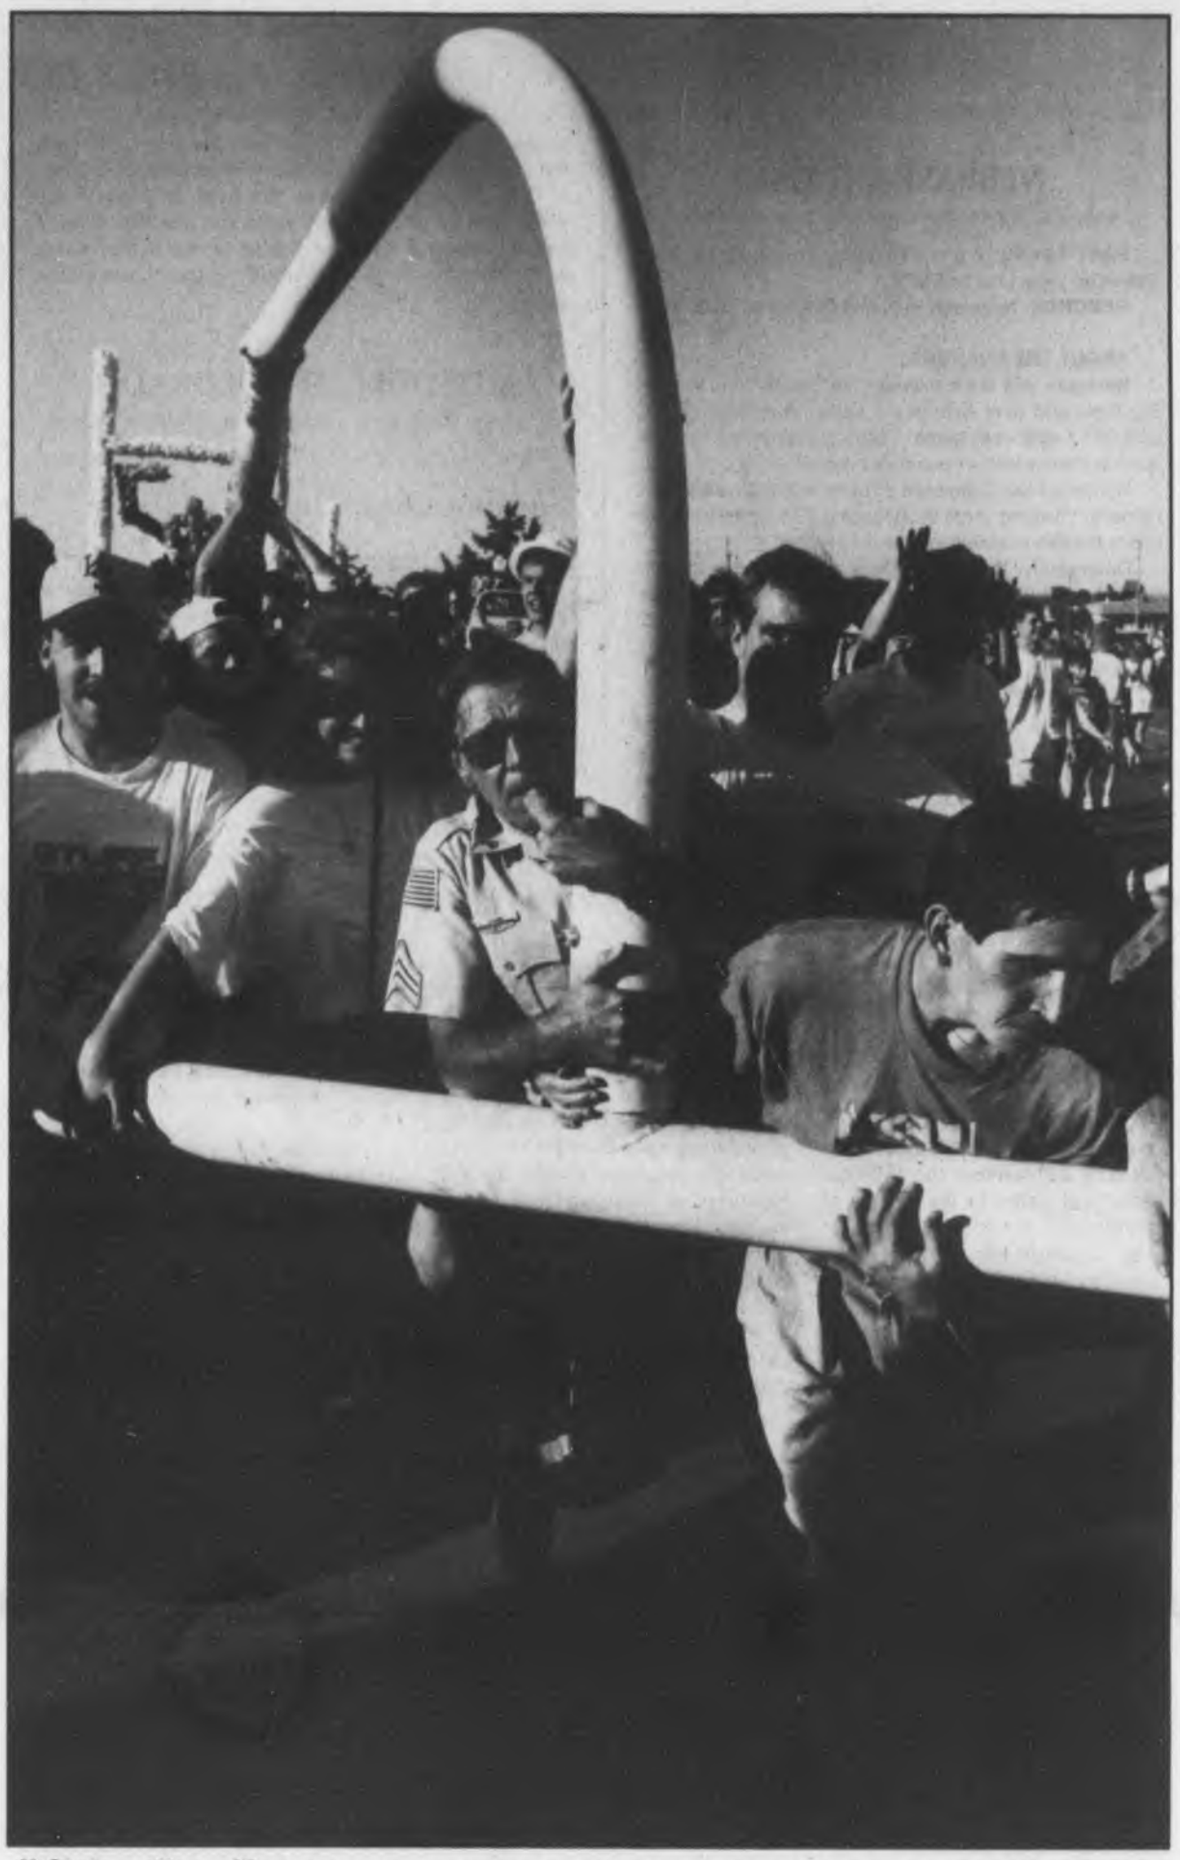
This time KU punted, and the Cats had to make one more drive with less than three minutes left on the clock to win the game.

Then, Waston drove the Cats down to the KU 34-yard line. The Cats needed just about 10 more yards to set up a game-winning field goal. On second down from the 34, Waston was flushed from the pocket and chased to the right side-line.

It appeared that Watson had decided to run with the ball, when he spotted wide receiver Andre Coleman with a step on a KU defender at the 15-yard line. As Waston was hit, he threw the ball toward Coleman.

Coleman said he tried to get Watson's attention.

"It was a stop route," Coleman said. "I just wanted to get in his eye sight because he was heading toward the side-line."



Coleman caught the pass, and he zipped into the end zone to seal the victory for K-State. It took just six minutes for the damage to be done — the Cats had come back to win the game.

Receiver Michael Smith said it was a turning point for the program.

"The win against KU was a big step for the program," Smith said. "For the first time, the players really realized that they were good enough to win."

Cornerback Rogerick Green said in a Collegian story that the win was big.

"Goodness, I think that this is probably the biggest win around here in a long time," Green said. "It goes back to when Coach Snyder arrived here. He talked about things like team goals. He said to believe in yourself and to never give up. It was kind of weird, but it was all so true today."

K-State police officer Jason Lenhe radios for assistance as he holds onto a goalpost as it is being carried away by K-State fans after beating Kansas, 16-12, in 1991.

K-State quarterback Jason Smargiasso is tripped by a KU defender. K-State won the 1991 game 16-12.

A Bad Day

for the 1992 football team

That is what former linebacker Brooks Barta said after the K-State Wildcats were pounded by the Kansas Jayhawks 31-7 on Oct. 10, 1992, in Lawrence.

The win for the Jayhawks moved them to 4-1, while the loss gave the Cats their first setback of the year after starting the season with a perfect 3-0 slate. The win for Kansas was also the 11th-straight series victory in Lawrence.

The Jayhawks were so dominant that afternoon in Memorial Stadium that —

■ When Kansas scored its final point of the game at the 4:22 mark of the third quarter, the Jayhawks had 19 first downs and 345 yards of total offense. At that same point of the game, the Cats had only one first down and minus-43 yards of offense.

■ Twenty of K-State's 54 plays were for negative yards — including nine quarterback sacks.

■ Running back Eric Gallon, who was the Big Eight rushing leader before the game, was held to 11 yards on nine carries.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said his team simply wasn't ready to play.

"I think Kansas proved to us what we have been saying for the past two or three weeks — we've haven't quite gotten it together yet," he said.

"I just did a poor job of getting our football team ready collectively, and that's where the fault lies."

The only K-State highlight came when cornerback C.J. Masters intercepted a Chip Hilleary pass and returned it 80 yards for the touchdown near the end of the first half.

The final statistics showed K-State had 69 yards of total offense, which was the sixth lowest for an opponent in a game against a Jayhawk team.

Kansas pounded out 295 yards on the ground and 156 yards in the air as they held on to the ball for 37 minutes.

K-State went 2-3 afterwards for to finish the year with a 5-6 record, and Kansas ended its season with a 8-4 record, including a 23-20 victory over Brigham Young in the Aloha Bowl on Christmas Day.

▶WINNER GETS GOVERNOR'S TROPHY

The winner of the University of Kansas-K-State game not only has bragging rights of the state, it takes possession of the Governor's Trophy for the year.

In 1969, former-Gov. Robert Docking established the Governor's Trophy, which would be awarded to the winner of the football game between K-State and KU each year.

In the trophy's first year in existence, the Cats nipped the Jayhawks 26-22 in Lawrence, and they were presented the trophy by Gov. Docking.

The last time K-State was in possession of the trophy was in 1991 when the Wildcat were victorious over the Jayhawks by a score of 16-12 in Manhattan. Gov. Joan Finney was unable to attend the game to present the trophy to K-State. Sue Peterson, governmental liaison for K-State, said she took Coach Bill Snyder and selected players to Topeka for a presentation of the trophy from Gov. Finney.

Kansas recaptured the trophy from K-State last year in Lawrence when the Jayhawks beat the Cats by a 31-7 score.

K-State has won the trophy seven times, Kansas has won it 16 times, and there is one tie in the 24 years of the trophy's history.

Police finalize security for game

JEN MESSELT
Collegian

Law enforcement officials are finalizing security plans for Saturday's football game between K-State and the University of Kansas.

The intrastate rivalry will bring together K-State and KU police, the Riley County Police Department and the Kansas Highway Patrol. All departments will be at the game and, if needed, in Aggieville following the game.

Lt. Buddy Mays of the RCPD said a fence will be put around the Aggieville business district that day.

"The City of Manhattan will be setting up a snow fence in Aggieville during the game so we don't have a problem with traffic," Mays said.

The fence will be set up on 11th Avenue between Bluemont and Moro avenues to North Manhattan Avenue, down to Laramie Street and back to 11th Street.

Police officers will control the number of people coming in and out of Aggieville. Identifications will not be checked at the fences, and open containers will not be allowed inside or outside of the fence.

RCPD will have 63 officers on duty for the game and postgame festivities.

There will be 16 auxiliary officers to help with the football traffic. Campus police will have 15 officers at the game and three security officers. These numbers do not include the officers who are already on duty.

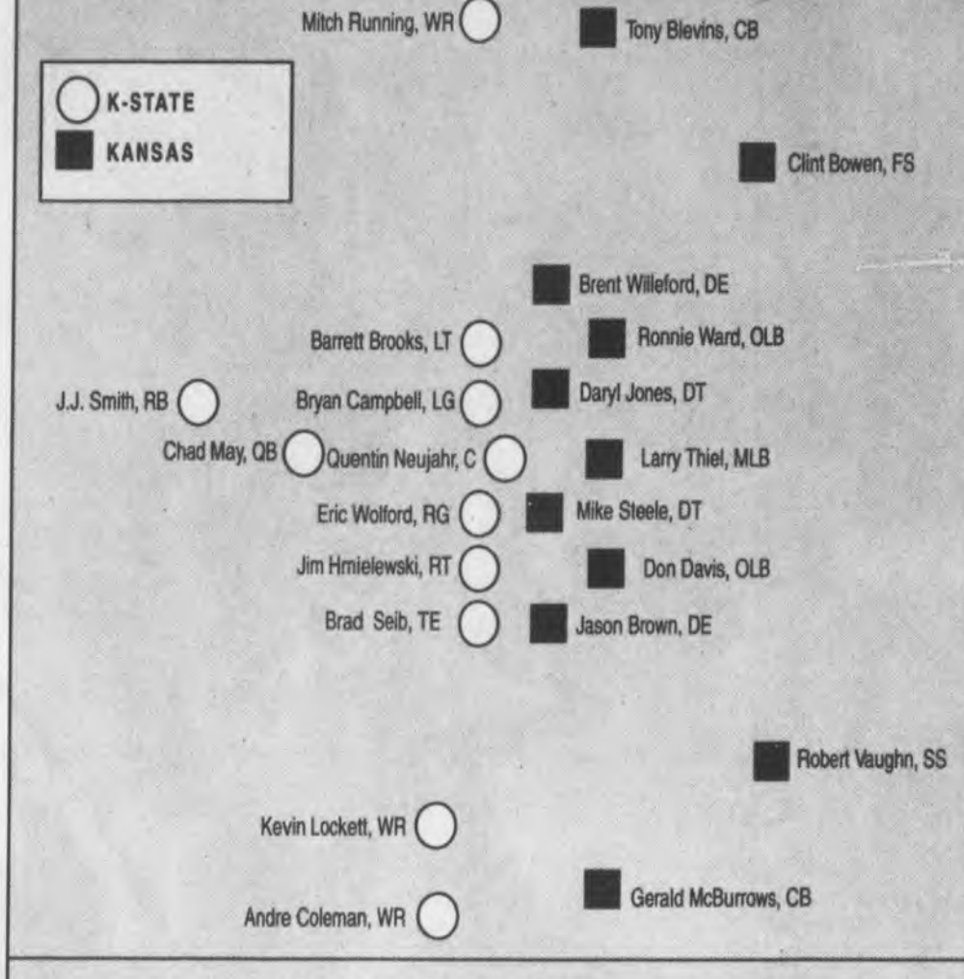
RCPD will have 12 officers on duty. There will be extra security on the campus throughout the day. The numbers of KHP and Jayhawk police that will be here on is not known.

"Everyone that is not on duty will be at the game," K-State Police Lt. Robert Mellgren said.

Preparing for the rivalry and actions of the fans is hard to predict, Mellgren said.

"We have to cover everything," Mellgren said. "We'll look for atmosphere of stadium, who wins and what happens the day of the game. We never know what to expect."

Mays said law enforcement plans to address problems that arise and deal with them accordingly. Two years ago the snow fences surrounded Aggieville, and it was effective the last time, he said.



"Sometimes people get intoxicated and disorderly," Mays said. "Occasionally, brawls come about, and we may have to make some arrests."

Mellgren said the snow fences enable police to monitor the safety of individuals and the security of businesses in Aggieville.

"We want people to celebrate in moderation with good, clean fun," Mellgren said. "We don't want them to destroy peoples' property."

The Donnie Tillar Lacrosse Classic was won by the K-State A team, which defeated Wichita State 6-4 in the final game at Memorial Stadium on Sunday afternoon.

With eight minutes remaining in the fourth quarter, Brandon Aslin connected on one of his two goals for the game to increase the Cats' lead to 6-4.

The Shockers threatened to score in the last minute of the game but were unsuccessful.

Attackers Tondo Waldron and Jed Dunham and mid-fielders Stu Robson and Jeremiah Ryden each scored a goal to complete the scoring for the Cats.

The Cats, who were 11-1 last year, sought revenge from Wichita State.

The Cats lost to the Shockers in the post-season finals last year.

"It was a grudge match today," Waldron, a senior in public relations, said. "We feel it was very successful."

The A team started the tournament by defeating Kansas City 14-3 in their first match and beating Missouri 9-1 in the second contest Friday.

Waldron said the team is very talented.

"This tournament shows that we can play like a team — we had 10 different people score," he said. "Every time we huddle up, we always say the score is 0-0, then we just go out and try to score."

The tournament was organized by Curt Thurman, coach and president of the lacrosse club.

The tournament is named after their former coach Donnie Tillar. He was a helicopter pilot who was killed in the Persian Gulf War.

Tillar's unit from Fort Riley flew helicopters onto the field before the championship game.

Waldron said the team praised the soldiers.

"The men told us about the helicopter and read a poem. We had someone sing the national anthem, and they flew away. We saluted them as they left," Waldron said.

The Cats captured the tournament crown with hard work in the final contest, Waldron said.

"The squad won with a team effort, and that is just what he (Tillar) tried to instill in us. That is why we shined and meshed together," Waldron said. "We played as a team."

The K-State B team lost their first match to the Jayhawks 5-3. Waldron said Kansas is a hard-working team.

"Last year was one of the first times we have beat KU. It is a new team, and they kept up," he said.

"It is our rival. It showed that we have a lot of new guys who can play."

It's K-State's time to shine

Colorado State isn't anything to get excited about," I said. "And as far as turning the season around, it's too late for that. Florida State initiated the tumble of KU, and Michigan State and Utah just added to the suffering."

I could tell Jason was becoming displeased with my taunting, and he began searching for answers furiously.

"Remember last year? K-State came to Lawrence 3-0, and we walked all over them," he said. "We won that one 31-7 and K-State's offense didn't even score a touchdown."

"You're right. It's going to be 1992 revisited," I said. "Only this time, KU's going to be the one getting walked on."

"What makes you so confident? K-State hasn't played anybody yet," Jason said.

"I'll admit the Cats' non-conference schedule wasn't that tough. But the win at Minnesota was colossal," I said. "K-State has won nine-straight games at home and with the win over KU, the Cats will break the school record. The Jayhawks just don't have the personnel to match up with us."

"Yeah, we're pretty beat up right now," Jason said woefully. "The rest of the season could be interesting."

"To say the least," I said. "I know it must be hard to go from 8-4 and a bowl game victory, to 2-3. Hey, I don't suppose you want to put a friendly wager on the game?"

"I don't think so. Maybe next year," he said. "I'll see you Saturday, I guess."

Obviously, I was the wrong person to call for support.

Kansas just has too many holes to fill and despite winning last Saturday, the Jayhawks will come to Manhattan still questioning themselves.

K-State, on the other hand, has a level of confidence right now that will be hard to suppress. The Cats average over 30 points a game and are 4-0 for the first time since 1931.

While KU had its week off before the Colorado State game, K-State has had two weeks to prepare for this game. Last season, Kansas had the week off to prepare for the Cats, and we all know the results that produced.

KSU Stadium is expected to reach capacity and then some, which will only add fuel to K-State's flame.

The Jayhawks' time to shine was last year and now, finally, it's time for K-State to sparkle.

So, what's my prediction for the game?

K-State a helluva lot. Kansas not very damn many.

This game is all that matters that a Wildcat team flying high on a six-game winning streak would be shot down in a 31-7 massacre. For that game, the Wildcats gained a whopping negative 53 yards on the ground and did not score on offense. It was an emotional low for the Wildcat season.

In 1991, the Jayhawks allowed two touchdowns in the final four minutes in the 16-12 Wildcat win, in which the Cats went from miserable to miraculous. Kansas could not take advantage of the Wildcats' four fumbles and failed on fourth-down conversions more times than it would like to remember. It was an emotional low for the Jayhawk season.

But all that matters is this game.

With its first Division I win under its belt — a 24-6 victory against Colorado State on Saturday — the worst is over for Kansas.

Granted, this has not been the most stellar year in Kansas' football history. A poor start and many injuries have taken their toll on the Jayhawks. A weak defense, sloppy play at times and quarterback problems have been headaches. Despite the problems, things are improving for Kansas. Junior quarterback Asheiki Preston replaced Fred Thomas on Saturday and completed 12 of 14 passes for 164 yards. His scrambling skills are also impressive.

Also on Saturday, a new Jayhawk defense held Colorado State to 65 yards on the ground and 267 yards overall. The resurgence was spurred by some key defensive players — tackle Chris Maumalanga and linebackers Don Davis and Larry Thiel — who returned from injuries. A Kansas victory in Manhattan looks more possible than it did two weeks ago.

Yes, K-State is undefeated. Sure, the team is coming off its best start since 1931. OK, the Cats defeated the Big Ten's Minnesota in Minneapolis. Why will Kansas win? It has history on its side. To be more accurate, K-State does NOT have history on its side.

K-State has not gone 5-0 since 1931. That was 60 years ago. Why break with tradition? This year will make 61. Kansas wins, 17-14.

Troop increase a possibility

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Deflecting calls for swift withdrawal from Somalia, President Clinton is preparing to authorize a short-term troop increase while setting a deadline for pulling out, a senior administration official said Wednesday.

"It is essential that we conclude our mission in Somalia but that we do it with firmness and steadiness of purpose," Clinton said at an East Room ceremony as aides discussed the direction of his policy.

Pentagon sources said one option under consideration calls for sending at least 2,000 new combat troops and more heavy weaponry. The possible deployment would come on top of the movement of some 650 troops and armored vehicles that are being flown to Somalia this week.

There are 4,700 Americans in Somalia, including a Rapid Reaction Force.

"We are anxious to conclude our role there honorably," Clinton said. "But we do not want to see a reversion to the absolute chaos and the terrible misery which existed before."

A senior administration official, commenting only on condition of anonymity, said Clinton planned to send additional troops to bolster protection for peacekeeping forces already in Somalia. The official refused to specify the extent of the troop increase.

Separately, White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said, "The president is going to make some decisions to respond to changing circumstances."

She said the president has not abandoned the mission and viewed the protection of U.S. forces as clearly a priority.

The president had intense talks with foreign policy advisers to review his options, spurred by congressional pressure and public horror over slain Americans being dragged through the streets of Mogadishu by supporters of warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

Should a decision be made to send in additional forces, they probably would come from Fort Stewart, Ga., the home of the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), a Pentagon official said.

Under that recommendation, there also would be additional tanks and several dozen Bradley Fighting Vehicles, the armored transports with night-vision capabilities.

Clinton underscored his determination not just to prevent mass starvation, the original purpose for sending troops to Somalia last December, but also to establish security in what recently was a thoroughly lawless land.

Inflamed by the deaths Sunday of 12 Americans and the capture of at least one U.S. pilot, Congress was torn over which direction to take.

Senate leaders put off consideration of a defense spending bill to spare the administration possible embarrassment from amendments demanding a pullout. Clinton said he would meet with congressional leaders Thursday and then announce his course.

"It is not time for panic," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said.

In a Senate speech, Dole reminded colleagues of a resolution passed two weeks ago asking Clinton to state a clear policy on Somalia by Oct. 15 and calling for a congressional vote on the deployment of troops by Nov. 15.

In a stinging rebuff to the administration, House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., and 64 GOP colleagues sent Clinton a letter branding his Somalia policy a failure.

Vaccinations given to help reduce influenza

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Vaccinations to reduce the risk of developing influenza are now being given at various locations in Manhattan.

Influenza is a viral respiratory infection, Larry Moeller, medical director at Lafene Health Center, said. Symptoms are a cough, sore throat, fever in conjunction with a headache and joint aches in some cases. A blood test can affirm the infection.

Outbreaks of influenza occur in late December, peak between January and February and disappear in March, Moeller said.

Individuals with asthma, cancer, HIV and roommates of these people should consider getting the vaccination, Moeller said.

Kathy Dickey, nursing supervisor at Riley County Health Department, said it is important for people of any age with chronic illnesses or lung problems to get a vaccination.

"Generally, they say elderly over 65, anyone with chronic illness — that would include children with that or anyone that wants to reduce their chance of getting the flu," Dickey said.

Moeller said many students at K-State won't need a flu shot, but the medical staff is not going to discourage anyone from getting one.

"We're dealing with a young, healthy segment of population," Moeller said.

Last year, 300 shots were given

K-State awaits word on waste

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

K-State will find out Oct. 16 if it will have a short reprieve from storing the low-level radioactive waste it produces.

The members of a compact that includes South Carolina will decide if Kansas and four other states in the Central Interstate Compact will be able to continue disposing of low-level waste at a South Carolina site until July 1994.

Either way, K-State and other producers of low-level radioactive waste in the state will have to store what they produce for several years until the compact can build a permanent facility in one of its member states, Charles Jones, director of the Kansas Department of Environment, said.

"We have no choice but to store the waste," he said.

The South Carolina disposal site refused to take any more waste from Kansas and the other states in the compact in July because the compact had not built its own disposal facility, Jones said.

About 15 different labs on campus produce low-level radioactive waste, Ron Bridges, sanitarian for K-State's Department of Public Safety, said. Some of the departments that produce low-level waste include

Hospice — helping the terminally ill

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

Someone to fluff a pillow, make a cup of coffee and alleviate the unbearable loneliness.

Life's little comforts are of special importance to terminally ill patients in the area. About 85 volunteers in a Junction City program called Hospice try to provide these comforts.

"Our goal is to assist the terminally ill individual to remain at home the final days of their life so they can stay at home with their family and have all their loved ones around them," Sandy Rogers, director of Hospice, said.

Meeting the spiritual, physical and emotional needs of terminally ill patients are what the volunteers involved with Hospice services are striving to fulfill.

"It's not hard for me to do it," said Madeline Sherraden, a Hospice volunteer from Junction City. "There but for the grace of God goes me — I have good health, and it's my way of saying thank you. It's never been difficult for me to do this."

Hospice began in 1979 and reaches out to patients from Geary, Riley and Pottawatomie counties.

"They end up being family by the time you're done," said Eric Jensen, Hospice volunteer from Junction City. "You have to be careful. There have been instances of individuals wanting to put too much time in."

Giving back the help given to them is how both Ryan Head and Joyce Jackson became Hospice volunteers.

"I first became involved when my niece's husband became ill, and Hospice came in and did such marvelous work," Head, a Manhattan volunteer, said. "I decided I wanted to help because I've been fortunate enough. I've always believed we can't always be takers — we've got to give something back in return."

Jackson began her volunteer work in Junction City in 1980 because the program, she said, helped her family deal with the loss of her terminally ill daughter.

"They are trained personnel," Jackson said. "They help the grieving family come to terms with the death and dying, and they keep in contact with the family, offering support, even after the death. Hospice helped me, so I helped them."

Hospice volunteers work three to four hours each week running errands, baby-sitting children and sitting with the patients. Three or four volunteers are assigned to each patient.

"Knowing them, you can't help but love these people," Head said. "You have to learn to be more considerate of them than you are of yourself."

Caring for Hospice patients requires certain personal characteristics, volunteers said.

"You need to be a good listener, see that their needs are carried out, and that you are indeed meeting their needs," Sherraden said.

When a patient dies, it is crucial for the volunteers to remain calm, Jensen said.

"You have to make it appear like you have a tough exterior," Jensen said. "You have to understand that if the patient has anger, it's not directed at you personally. You have to get around that, and give them the care and TLC they need."

Training for volunteers is provided twice a year through the Hospice program. The training takes 20 hours and covers topics such as death, bereavement and creative listening. In addition, the spiritual dimensions of Hospice are explored.

"We're real proud of the training we offer," Rogers said. "It's quite extensive."

But as extensive as the training may be, Rogers and the volunteers agreed that time spent learning Hospice procedures is insignificant when compared to the personal gains of the experience.

"You can receive a lot when you see the strength of dying people and experience the different ways people handle death," Sherraden said. "You see a lot of different situations, and you grow a lot. The faith in God has proved itself many, many times, and it has made a lot of differences in several cases."

Experiencing Hospice from a family perspective and as a volunteer, Jackson said, has made her more aware of what the patients appreciate most from Hospice volunteers.

"What's important to them is the assurance that someone is there and cares about them," Jackson said. "And that someone is willing to be there and go a long way with them."

Burglar breaks out of K-State Union Bookstore with merchandise; doors and locks damaged

The K-State Union Bookstore was broken out of, but not necessarily into, early Wednesday morning.

Richard Herrman, K-State Police investigator, said no one knows how the burglar got into the bookstore after store hours, but police know someone set off a second-floor emergency exit alarm at about 3 a.m.

Some items were stolen, and damage was done to locks and doors in the bookstore, Kay Farley, bookstore manager, said. She said the bookstore did not know at the time how much was taken.

"We are still assessing the damage," she said.

Campus police don't have any leads as to how many people were involved in the break-in, Herrman said.

He said campus police gathered evidence at the scene, including fingerprints.

Herrman said campus police are interviewing the custodians that were working in the Union that night.

"We haven't interviewed all of the custodians yet," he said. "We won't know until we interview them all if we have a witness."

Gun owners 3 times as likely to be killed by someone they know; intruders not deterred

BOSTON — People who keep guns at home nearly triple their chances of being murdered, usually by friends or relatives, but fail to protect themselves from intruders, a study finds.

The researchers noted nearly half of all Americans keep firearms at home and many cite self-protection as the leading reason.

The latest study, a large-scale investigation in three states, was intended to see if guns really do save their owners' lives.

The study found that, even when they took into consideration family violence, drug use and other factors associated with homicide, those who keep guns are almost three times more likely to be killed in their homes than those who don't. That's because they face a much higher risk of being shot to death by a friend, relative or lover.

Kellermann, a researcher at Emory University in Atlanta, based his findings on a review of 388 killings in the home in three urban counties in Ohio, Tennessee and Washington.

Each victim was compared to someone the same age and sex who lived in the same area. The findings were published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Dr. John McCabe, president-elect of the American College of Emergency Physicians, said the research "goes a long way toward breaking the myth that having a gun in the home protects you. Maybe it's just the opposite. A gun is a health risk.

"Individuals who have guns in the home should strongly consider getting them out of the home," Kellermann said.

'Hail Mary' strangler convicted of murder

PATERSON, N.J. — A former altar boy was convicted Wednesday of strangling a teen-ager who died after being forced to recite the "Hail Mary."

Wanger could be sentenced to life in prison with no parole for 30 years.

During the trial, Wanger denied he was present when Solimine was strangled in a car, but three other teen-agers who previously pleaded guilty said they watched him kill Solimine.

The three, along with Wanger and 18-year-old Frank Castaldo, said they considered Solimine a pest.

The youths, whose names were not released because they pleaded guilty as juveniles, said Wanger gave them all religious medals as a sign of unity and loyalty. Two were 14 years old at the time of the slaying, and the third was 17.

House member pleads guilty in bank scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former House Sergeant-at-Arms Jack Russ pleaded guilty Wednesday to three felony counts in the first criminal charges arising from the House bank scandal.

In a brief hearing, U.S. District Judge Stanley Harris set Dec. 17 for sentencing and permitted Russ to remain free without bail until then.

Russ pleaded guilty to embezzling funds from the House bank and other charges.

Russ, who as sergeant-at-arms from January 1983 to March 1992 was in charge of the House's administrative operations, faces a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison on the most serious charge and five years on each of the other two counts.

Caffeine pills replace coffee for late-night studies

LORI ARMER
Collegian

Most students have discovered the secret to conquering fatigue during heavy test weeks — taking caffeine supplements such as Vivarin™ and No Doz™.

However, these products don't always produce the effects the user wants. Often, students encounter detrimental side effects, not only with their health but their studies as well.

"The adverse reactions they cause are insomnia, restlessness, excitement and nervousness," Pam Spaulding, registered pharmacist for Lafene, said.

"They speed people up and keep them awake. I don't recommend them. With caffeine, there is always a withdrawal reaction. There are other methods available that would be more useful."

Dave Edmonds, manager of Kwik Shop in Manhattan, said his store sells both No Doz™ and Vivarin™.

"They use it when they don't want to drink coffee," Edmonds said of students.

"More often, though, they buy Mountain Dew™ and coffee. Mini-Thins™ are also popular, but we don't sell them."

Many students admit to using caffeine products to keep alert, such as in the events of big tests and finals week.

"I used Vivarin™ my freshman year for an all-nighter," Bill Tanner, junior in pre-optometry, said. "It raised my heartbeat and gave me the shakes, but it kept me awake."

BILL TANNER
JUNIOR IN PRE-OPTOMETRY

Mike Springs, senior in mechanical engineering, said he usually uses caffeine when he is stressed during the end of the semester — especially during finals week.

Springs said if he needed to stay awake, he would rather drink coffee. He has, though, tried both Vivarin™ and No Doz™.

"When you use it, it does more harm than good, especially when you take too much," Springs said. "It screws up your entire week, and you don't know when to sleep and when not to."

Angela Nattier, junior in elementary education, tried Vivarin™ when she moved into Ford Hall during her freshman year.

"It made me shaky, jittery and spacey," Nattier said.

"I was wide awake but too out of it to pay attention."

Nattier, Springs and Tanner all said that they would not recommend the products to others.

"I probably wouldn't use it again," Tanner said. "It works really good that night and the following day, but that next evening, it brings you down hard."

Both No Doz™ and Vivarin™ have warnings against taking more than one to two tablets in a three- to four-hour time span. Both also list the effects of taking the tablets with other caffeine products, warning of nervousness, irritability, sleeplessness and a rapid heart beat.

These caffeine products are, however, readily available and sold in most grocery and convenience stores alongside other non-prescription products.

NASA rife with fraud, rising costs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — NASA is plagued with contractors who overcharge, receive bonus payments while running up huge cost overruns and employ workers who frequently sleep on the job, the agency's inspector general told Congress Wednesday.

The space agency has more than 400 criminal fraud investigations under way, NASA's inspector general told the House Government Operations Committee.

"It is no wonder many people seem to have lost faith in NASA," said Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, at an oversight hearing into the agency's troubles.

Inspector General Bill Colvin said a review of subcontracts at three NASA centers showed 41 percent resulted in profits ranging from 28 to 288 percent. The audits showed 63 percent to 86 percent of the contracts were awarded non-competitively, at a cost of $40 million to the government.

Conyers referred to spectacular failures at NASA and formidable management problems.

Among them he said was "fraudulent certification of critical transistors and other electronic parts that could result in 'loss of mission and life.'"

The committee chairman said such electronic failures are believed to be responsible for problems with the $1-billion Mars Observer probe, which has not been heard from since it neared Mars, and a new weather satellite.

In the latest space problem, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration lost contact with the $228-million Landsat 6 satellite launched Tuesday on an Air Force rocket in California.

Conyers mentioned other NASA downfalls, including the $2-billion Hubble Space Telescope launched with a misground mirror. The agency reached a $25-million settlement on Monday with the Hubble's manufacturer.

Health-care workers have right to equal protection from AIDS

The Justice Department has filed two lawsuits against a Houston dental chain and a New Orleans dentist, accusing the parties of discrimination against people who are infected with AIDS.

And one can hardly blame these dentists for their actions.

The suits were filed after it was discovered that an HIV-positive patient of the Castle Dental Center in Houston received a letter from the dental chain. The letter stated it could no longer provide orthodontic treatment because of the patient's health problems.

Dr. Drew Morvant of New Orleans is being sued because it was discovered he refused to treat two HIV-positive men. One of the men has since died.

The Justice Department said both the American Dental Association and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention have found no medical or scientific justification for denying treatment to AIDS patients. Attorney General Janet Reno said discrimination will not be tolerated.

Yet, there have been cases in which the HIV virus is believed to have been passed from dentist to patient. Six people in Florida are thought to have been infected with HIV from Dr. David Acer. Three of the infected people and Acer himself have all since died.

Before her death in 1991, Kimberly Bergalis — one of Acer's victims — urged Congress to adopt mandatory AIDS testing for all health workers. This testing is opposed by many AIDS activists and the American Medical Association because many believe mandatory testing is an invasion of privacy.

Until further testing is conducted to determine the risk of AIDS spreading from patient to dentist, dentists should be allowed the choice to refuse treatment that would expose them to AIDS.

Without hard facts, it is not ridiculous for people in the health-care profession to protect themselves.

'I just can't get no interaction' theme for TV's future

New technology will let you wipe out all your irritants

The new cable TV laws that went into effect not long ago will supposedly allow you, the viewer, more latitude in selecting programming.

Well, I am all for latitude. Always have been a latitude-type person.

Which is why I think some of you engineering techno-weenies out there ought to get together and make a million bucks by designing a new gadget for adding even more latitude to TV viewing.

What I am talking about is "interactive" television.

Now, I am not talking about the kind of interactive "shop at home" stuff you read about occasionally in those magazines you find on commercial airlines right next to instructions on "How To Barf Into A Plastic Bag While Flying At 30,000 Feet" and "What To Do When All Of The Oxygen Is Suddenly Gone." Nooooo. What I am talking about is "Highly Interactive Television" or HIT, and it is based upon a very effective principle: The Sneak Attack.

I am sure you remember the old westerns where some cowboy is out chasing his doggies while looking for illegal picante-sauce manufacturing plants from New York City, when, just before he realizes he has unintentionally entered Injun Territory, he is hit by an arrow out of nowhere ... Phfffffft!

Well, that is what I propose to offer TV viewers.

The next time you are watching some slimy politician blather on about cutting expenses in Washington after he just gave himself a pay raise, you can push a little "hit" button on your remote control and .... Phfffffft! ... an arrow out of nowhere. You could "Phfffffft!" as many times as you like. Make a political pin cushion out of him if you want. My point is ... you have latitude.

This device, once made, would sell like cold beer at a church social on a hot Sunday in July. And you want to know why? Because it appeals to that fundamental desire in everyone: to have the last and final word.

I have been practicing using Highly Interactive Television, in an imaginary sort of way, for years, and it has given me enormous satisfaction. Here are just a few examples of how I use HIT:

"Hello, I'm Ed McMillion, and I am here to tell you how you can win $243 trillion in the New Publishers Scamminghouse Sweepstakes. That's right! You, Mr. or Mrs. TV Viewer, can win $243 trillion just like a Mr. Keating from an unknown minimum security prison in upstate New York. Or a Mr. Salvatore "Big Nose" Bambino from Philadelphia and many others that you don't know are actually involved in this nationwide scam.

Yes, you can be guaranteed an infinitesimally small chance to win! But only if you mail in your winning numbers today along with your order for 115 different magazine subscriptions. Wouldn't you like to have this check made out with your name ... phfffffft!"

BRAD SEABOURN

"Here at Reap-A-Soul Ministries, we want to reach out to all of you wretched, disgusting sinners out there with an opportunity to join forces with the Lord. We have, right now, a limited supply of a videotape, called "The Last Videotape Of The Resurrection," which we will send to you free for only $29.95 along with your donation of $100 or more. Don't miss this unique opportunity to own a copy of this extraordinary, never-before-seen documentary showing the actual resurrection of our Lord and Savior and filmed right here in our Holyland Studios.

Pray! Pray, dear friend, that you will find the money for this donation. And pray that the Lord doesn't send all sorts of disease, pestilence, floods, fires, earthquakes, tornadoes or door-to-door evangelists to your home if you don't send us what we are asking. Pray that ... Phfffffft!

"Welcome to the Late Show with David ... phfffffft!"

"Welcome to the Tonight Show with Jay ... phfffffft! Phfffffft!"

"Welcome to the Arsenio Hall ... phfffffft! Phfffffft! Phfffffft!"

"Liberal, Democratic scum have been in control of Congress for years! Now come on, folks. Are you also going to let this country go down the toilet by allowing it to be taken over by a bunch of liberal, feminist, homosexual, bleeding-hearts in the White House?

Why, capitalist, Republican predators are what have made this country what it is today! Get out there and show your disapproval of President Clinton every time he opens his mouth. Let him know we will bring back our beloved Ronald Reagan if we have to. I know and I'm right, because I'm Rrrrrush Lim ... phfffffft! Phfffffft! .... Phfffffft! Phfffffft! Phfffffft! ... Phfffffft!"

This is all only imaginary of course, but, as you can see, the possibilities are limitless. Who knows? Once implemented, Highly Interactive Television could bring on a new era of honesty and quality in what people say and do on TV. However, I realize it does nothing to promote freedom of speech, so my next invention is going to be bullet-proof underwear.

Coming soon to a store near you.

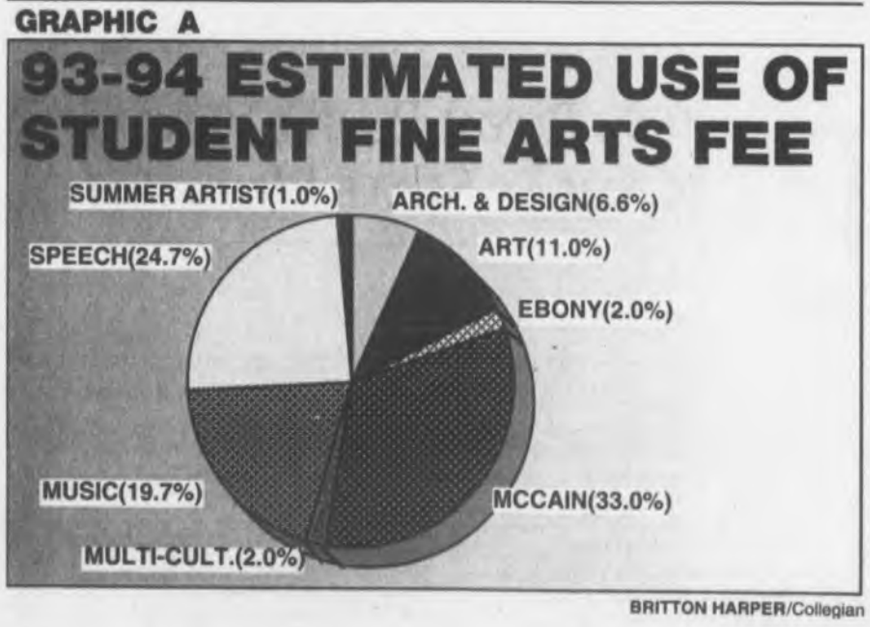
SOLDIERS

Mass media's respect for our casualities of war extremely lacking

Editor,

I am writing in response to the Oct. 5 edition of the USA Today and their printing of the two horrible pictures. The first picture was of an Army Chief Warrent Officer as he spoke on videotape. This man was beat up badly; yet, he was clear enough and close enough to be easily recognized by his family.

The picture right below him was of a United States soldier who had been drug through the streets and was later reported dead. This soldier was not as easily recognized (Thank God!) but he was stripped of clothing and was in very bad shape physically.



My question is where are our values? Do we as Americans value life so little as to show such disrespect? Do we not value the men and women who fight for us? Do we not care about the feelings of a mother or wife who might see this? Didn't we learn our lesson from Vietnam in the manner of which we treat our troops?

I am outraged by what I saw. I am a wife of a Gulf War veteran and I cannot imagine if I saw my husband on the front page or on the TV like that. I was horrified!

This letter was written especially for the future journalists (broadcast and print). I beg of you, for the decency of life, please use discretion about showing the horrors of war, military action and riotous events. You may not agree with the reasoning for having troops deployed overseas, but that does not excuse you from the blatant disrespect of our citizens. Next time you report something like this, think about the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

Sure is a lot of cash for 'stuff'

The Fine Arts Council needs a spouse like mine.

See, whenever I am in the mood to purchase something new, The Wife (as my spouse is affectionately known) pops in with important questions like, "You're going to buy that?" and "With what money?" Sometimes she says, "Wait 'til you get a job" or (she's such a kidder) "Like hell you are."

Ah. Love.

But I've been looking through this here stack of requisitions from the Fine Arts Council and wondering where The Wife is when the Fine Arts Council needs her.

A little background. In 1989, the athletic department needed money for several reasons. Because of the football team, K-State was being called "Futility U." in that bastion of higher thought on higher education, Sports Illustrated. The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics had a $5.4-million debt to pay off.

The athletic department did what any reasonable athletic department would do: It went to the students.

The athletic department and Student Senate got together and came up with an athletic-fee proposal that would go to the student body for referendum, or general election.

The proposal and fee passed by a majority of voters, but the bill failed.

It failed because of a rule stating a certain percentage of the student body has to show up at a referendum for that referendum to be valid.

That certain percentage did not show up, and, in turn, the athletic fee failed.

So, Student Senate and the athletic department wrapped themselves in a purple flag, whipped up a storm of purple patriotism and proposed another premium that would propel the price of the department debt payments into K-State's purple past by sending the people to the polls once more.

So, as happens in government, a task force was formed.

This Fine Arts/Athletic Fee Task Force looked at passing not just one fee, but two.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

An athletic fee — which had failed to generate enough student interest both times it went to a student vote — and a fine-arts fee as well.

And because no one can argue against the idea that this campus needs more arts, and because the majority of senators couldn't turn away a failed athletic fee because someone piggy-backed a needed fine-arts fee, Senate passed this legislation themselves.

That is the story of the original $17.40 Fine Arts/Athletic Fee of which 10 bucks went to the athletic department and the rest went to the Fine Arts Council. (See Graphic A for distribution)

Sidenote: The current athletic fee was raised last year from the original 10 cash dollars to 17 toadskins because the athletic department dangled extra support for the band and sports clubs. After all, who could argue against the band and the sports clubs?

Yes, I believe the correct term is "hornswaggled."

For some of the wacky ways the fine-arts fee was spent, see Graphic B.

The gray area here is that, while some of this is for performances, some of it is also for class projects. The other stuff is just stuff.

The argument goes that students may receive credit for the performances, but the performances are for the whole K-State community. Therefore, all students should help pay for the cost of the performance.

I disagree. If you are in a class and are asked to give a campus-wide presentation, it is doubtful you would receive monetary support for that performances.

Secondly, copies, glue guns, chair mats, sheet music, tuners, pencil compasses, extension cords and the like should be things for which the music and speech departments should be paying

We already pay tuition, for crying out loud. Those departments get money from that kitty.

And though the University and its administration may not be prioritizing the fine arts to receive more funds, it is not the responsibility of the student to buy classroom supplies.

After all, I didn't ask anyone for help to buy my textbooks. Neither did you.

There is a little hypocrisy involved in my argument, I guess. Student Publications gets a fee. Some students get credit for the work they do here, and some do not. I, myself, do not receive course credit for the work I do here.

If the fee were removed, however, the Collegian would go on. The newspaper would still come out, because the Collegian gets 70 to 80 percent of its money from advertising.

It might be smaller. There might not be a sports page or Calvin and Hobbes or a crossword, but, for better or worse, we would still put out a newspaper.

It is important, to me at least, that someone at Student Senate review these fine-arts expenditures and act on them.

More stringent guidelines must be established. If the speech and music departments need money for their productions and tournaments, fine. Sounds great.

But if those departments need cash for office supplies, they should talk to Dr. Wefald. And if he can't help, tough noogies.

K-State waste storage a potential problem

the nuclear labs, the veterinary clinic, biology, geology, anatomy and agriculture.

K-State waste consists of gloves, containers and paper products used in handling radioactive material.

Bridges said there isn't anything special about the way the waste is stored. Waste is sealed in plastic bags, placed in cardboard boxes and then packed in 55-gallon drums, he said.

Bridges said the waste contains such low levels of radiation that it is not dangerous. The radiation is not strong enough to dissipate through the air, he said.

However, he said there could be fire and rodent problems associated with storing what is essentially trash.

"It is a potential problem," Bridges said. "We have never had to store this stuff for that long."

He also said there could be a problem with chemical vapors escaping from the waste. He said the waste would have to be watched carefully and that the air is well ventilated. The possibility of a problem related to the vapors is small, he said.

Jones said there is little risk involved with temporary storage to the environment or people, but it is not a permanent answer.

"Storing waste for five to 10 years is no problem," Jones said. "Where we are going to keep it for the next 1,000 years is."

Most of the problems associated with this type of waste are due to leakage over long periods of time, he said.

"You could almost stand in it, and it would not hurt you," he said. "But it could be a problem if it got into drinking water, and you drank it for 50 years."

Before South Carolina refused to take Kansas waste, the waste was periodically gathered from the various labs on campus and picked up by a private contractor.

Bridges said K-State has enough storage area for about five years. The University has a storage facility for radioactive and other hazardous waste located near KSU Stadium.

Dean Eckhoff, head of the Department of Nuclear Engineering, said he does not think the storage situation would affect any of the projects in his department.

If storage became a problem the department would have to look closer at the types of experiments that could be used in the future, he said.

The departments that use radioactive material were required to go through an application process before obtaining the material, Bridges said. He said the labs were also inspected monthly.

"We would like to inspect more often, but we don't have the budget," Bridges said.

Eighty-seven institutions in the state produce low-level radioactive waste. They include medical facilities, industries and other universities.

However, 70 to 90 percent of the waste produced comes from the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant, Jones said.

Jones said Wolf Creek has added on to its storage facility within the past year at a cost of about $1.2 million.

He said most of the institutions that produce low-level waste in Kansas already had adequate storage facilities before July.

"We are not in a storage crisis right now," Jones said. "If we see later we don't have adequate space, we will make accommodations. Some facilities might have to add on."

John Lambert, director of public safety, said he thinks K-State has plenty of room, but if need arises, more room will be added to the facility.

Lambert said there will not be a significant cost for K-State to store the waste, but he said storage is only a quick fix.

"We are still going to have to eventually pay to have the waste transported and stored in a permanent disposal site," he said.

A federal mandate in the mid 1980s created state compacts to deal with low-level radioactive waste. The purpose of these compacts was to prevent radioactive waste all across the nation from being stored in the few existing permanent disposal sites.

A site had been chosen in Nebraska for a permanent disposal site for the Interstate Central Compact. However, within the past couple of years, Nebraska has shown reluctance to the construction of a facility there, Jones said.

Jones said that even if plans are finalized to begin construction in Nebraska, a permanent facility would take several years to build. If the compact had to find and develop another site, it would cost tens of millions of dollars and take up to eight years to complete.

standing must not be jeopardized by an indecisive and naive approach to foreign policy," it said.

Moreover, the letter asked Clinton how he intended to secure the freedom of any Americans held in Somalia and requested he state the intention to expeditiously withdraw our forces in a safe and orderly manner.

Clinton met twice Wednesday with senior national security aides, including Secretary of State Warren Christopher, Defense Secretary Les Aspin and Marine Gen. Joseph P. Hoar, the commander for the region. Later, in an appearance in the East Room for a bill-signing ceremony, Clinton referred to the talks as serious meetings.

"We are anxious to conclude our role there honorably, but we do not want to see a reversion to the absolute chaos and the terrible misery that existed before."

KICKING AND CLIMBING

Place kicker Tate Wright is 30 points shy of K-State's career scoring record

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Tate Wright has seen the goal post many times as a field-goal kicker during his three years at K-State.

The senior has faced the uprights 138 times as a Wildcat and has scored 166 points in field goals and extra-point attempts, placing him fourth on K-State's career scoring list.

Wright said he didn't know about it until late last season.

"I didn't realize it until the end of last season," Wright said.

"I didn't know how close I was. I found out in a program before a game and saw my name was on the list."

Wright scored 10 points against Nevada-Las Vegas nearly two weeks ago to pass Mike Porter for fourth place on the list. His 166 career points are just 30 points shy of the all-time record of 196 points set by Ralph Graham from 1931-33.

Also, Wright set a K-State career record for extra points with his 85th against the Rebels.

Wright has made his way to the top of the Big Eight and national kick charts.

He ranks second behind KU's Dan Eichloff in the league and 10th nationally in field goals per game with 1.5 field goals.

He is third in the league and 21st in the country in scoring per game with 8.5 points a game.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said Wright could make a difference Saturday when the Cats will take on intrastate rival Kansas.

"Tate has had his ups and downs, and I think he is hitting the ball rather well," Snyder said.

"It's quite possible that he could be a factor in the game. I'm pleased with the direction he has come."

Wright said he doesn't know why he is more accurate this year.

"I don't know if there is any explanation for it," said Wright, who has made six out of nine field goals attempts and has made all 16 extra points this season.

"I've been more consistent since the end of last year, and it carried on into this season.

"It's nothing I've done, but I think it was the competition factor that helped me be more consistent."

The competitive factor is kicker Warren Claassen, who was the place kicker for six games last year. It was the first time Wright had been replaced for the No. 1 position.

The holder for Wright is Brian Kavanagh. Kavanagh said Wright worked on improving in the off-season.

"He was up here this summer and was kicking on the field every day this summer," Kavanagh said. "He has a lot more confidence and knows this is his last year and wants to go out on a good note."

Holder Paul Watson situates the football for senior Tate Wright to kick during a game last year. Wright is ranked 10th in the nation in field goals per game with 1.5.

NBA

Jordan says goodbye to the game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DEERFIELD, Ill. — There were no tears, just that trademark twinkle in his eyes.

There were no nerves, just a bemused grin, wide enough to take in the whole mad scene of a basketball court overflowing with several dozen TV cameras and several hundred people.

Striding in purposefully, the tall man in the tan suit pulled out a chair for his wife, then sat down in front of the same red-and-black logo he made recognizable the world over.

Behind him, teammates look on, sporting sunglasses and shaved heads, shuffling their feet. Above, two assistant coaches leaned out of a second-floor office window to marvel at him one last time.

Smiling, Michael Jordan leaned over a microphone and told the world Wednesday that because he had done just about everything there is to do in basketball, he was retiring. Though maybe not forever.

"I've reached the pinnacle of my career," Jordan said in an announcement that shocked fans and teammates alike. "I just feel that I don't have anything else for myself to prove."

At a news conference packed with hundreds of reporters at the Bulls' training center, Jordan said he'd lost the motivation to play and had thought about retiring after leading the Bulls to their third straight NBA championship in June.

The 30-year-old superstar said the slaying of his father this summer was not the main reason behind his decision.

"I was pretty much decided at that particular time, but I think what it made me realize was how short life is," he said.

"I guess the biggest positive thing I can take out of my father not being here today is that he saw my last basketball game. That meant a lot," Jordan said.

He still loves basketball and did not rule out a comeback, but said he'd never play for an NBA team other than the Bulls.

"I'm not making this a 'never' issue. I'm saying I don't have the drive right now," Jordan said.

"Five years down the line, if the urge comes back, if the Bulls will have me and (commissioner) David Stern lets me back in the league, I may come back. But that's a decision I don't have to make at this moment," he said.

COLUMN

NBA won't be the same without Mike

Oct. 5, 1993.

Just like the line in "American Pie" when the singer was talking about Buddy Holly — this was the day the music died.

No more tongue-wagging. The bald-headed, former-Chicago Bull guard who jumped, leaped, rocketed and flew through the air to an orange rim while palming a basketball is gone.

BRIAN ANDERSON

Grown men cried, and children lost a hero when Michael James Jordan retired from professional basketball at age 30.

No more Air Jordan basketball shoes to be made, no more posters and no more commercials. Coke, Hanes, McDonalds and Wheaties will all have to find another superstar role model.

Even though he didn't rule out a comeback, we don't wish for him to come back.

No matter how hard it was to put on your black and red sneakers that resemble that basketball player suspended in air, we can't have him back.

We respect his decision to go on in life. His job is to take care of an ankle injury when he goes into surgery later this month, to be a father to his children, to be a husband and to have a normal life.

This retirement is not like Earvin "Magic" Johnson. We know Jordan will live for many years to come.

Magic might not have many years.

Jordan will be active at being the best father, the best husband, the best golfer or whatever. Magic won't be active as long as Jordan.

"It's time for me to move on to something else," Jordan said to close friends Tuesday night.

When Larry Bird, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Julius Erving retired from their careers, they were near the end of the rope. Jordan, however, would have started his 10th season as an NBA player.

He would be trying to get his eighth-straight scoring title and to get the Bulls back to the NBA championship for the fourth-consecutive year.

And that is what's upsetting us. He is leaving in the prime of his career. If he would keep on playing five or more years from now, people would agree and say he is the greatest basketball player ever.

Now, he will just be one of the greatest players.

How much did his father's death contribute to his retirement?

Very much. And when he spent his off-season with his newborn daughter, a person could see he wanted to have as much influence on his children as his dad had on him.

Jordan is not dead. There is more to life than dribbling a basketball.

He might come back to basketball as a coach, but we will have to pull out the videotapes, the posters, the cereal boxes and Air Jordans to remember just how great he was.

To paraphrase a comment from his press conference Wednesday, now he can go home and watch the grass grow. When it gets high enough, he can go and cut it.

The NBA won't be the same.

Golfers place 8th at Arizona Shootout

The K-State men's golf team used its best round of the season to move ahead of Wichita State and place eighth of the 18 teams at the Grand Canyon/Oak Craft Fall Shootout in Phoenix, Ariz.

The Cats trailed the Shockers after the first day of competition by one stroke. They used a 296 final round, and the Cats scored two sub-300 scores for the first time this season.

Sophomore Scott Hovis fired rounds of 77, 68 and 73 to finish fifth, leading the Cats. So far in his career, Hovis hasn't shot more than 77 in a tournament. Through the final 49 holes, he shot three-under-par.

A total of 90 players participated in the tournament.

Senior Chad Judd continued to improve by shooting rounds of 77, 71 and 76 for a 17th place finish. It was his best finish this season.

Jason Losch, a sophomore, shot rounds of 77, 78 and 73 to finish 36th. Chad Buckridge, a freshman, fired rounds of 78, 82 and 74 to finish in 56th place.

Coach Mark Elliot said he was pleased with his team's effort.

"I took three new people," Elliot said. "And they came through when they needed to. I feel really good about the play of the top three (Hovis, Judd and Losch)."

The Cats will be in action next on Oct. 11, when they travel to Lawrence for the Kansas Invitational.

AL PLAYOFFS

Toronto takes 2-0 lead home

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The Toronto Blue Jays had seen the stare so many times from Dave Stewart, they knew it meant only thing. Big game, big trouble.

That's why the Blue Jays went out and signed him after winning the World Series. They knew there would be more moments like this, and they wanted him on their side when those tight spots came.

Stewart did not disappoint them Wednesday. Pitching for his new team for the first time in the postseason, he worked out of a bases-loaded, no-out jam in the sixth inning and led Toronto past the Chicago White Sox 3-1 for a 2-0 lead in the AL playoffs.

He improved his playoff record, already the best, to an even better 7-0 and sent the series back to the Sky Dome for Game 3 Friday night. Pat Hentgen (19-9) will start for Toronto against Wilson Alvarez (15-8).

The loss made it a triply terrible day for Chicago sports fans. Michael Jordan retired in the morning, Cubs manager Jim Lefebvre was fired in the afternoon, and now the White Sox are mired in a slump that threatens to end their season.

By the end of day, the Comiskey Park crowd of 46,101 could take little consolation knowing that the White Sox had the best road record in the league this season. Instead, as the sun slanted across the outfield grass and hot dog wrappers were whipped around the infield by gusty winds, the fans were chanting "We Want Bo!" and left cheering for a rally that never came.

Leadoff hitters Rickey Henderson of Toronto and Tim Raines of the White Sox each scored in the first inning.

The Blue Jays, who got all their runs in Tuesday night's 7-3 victory on two-out hits, went ahead in the fourth against Alex Fernandez on Paul Molitor's two-out double, an RBI single by Tony Fernandez and a throwing error by second baseman Joey Cora.

Stewart left after escaping in the sixth, Al Leiter followed with two scoreless innings, and Duane Ward worked the ninth for a save.

NL PLAYOFFS

Phillies rally for 10th-inning win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia Phillies should have known better than to give the Atlanta Braves a second chance. The Braves' trouble was they gave Kim Batiste one, too.

Batiste nearly threw the game away in a ninth inning marked by another Mitch Williams' misadventure, then seized victory right back with the game-winning single in the 10th inning as the Phillies beat the Braves 4-3 Wednesday night in the opener of the National League playoffs.

The Phillies' biggest liabilities all season had been their defense, speed and erratic bullpen and all three cost them. But the worst-to-first Phillies have been amazingly resilient too and that's why they now lead the favored Braves.

The Phillies, who have now accomplished what the Chicago White Sox couldn't in the AL playoffs by winning at home, will send their best pitcher, Tommy Greene (16-4), against Greg Maddux (20-10) Thursday night in Game 2.

The Braves had a chance to win in the 10th with two on and two out, but Williams struck out rookie Tony Tarasco with the go-ahead run at third.

HOUSING

Center offers home-sharing

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

Tuition is rising; apartment rent is high, and people with disabilities need help.

Three seemingly unrelated problems share a common solution: home sharing, said Judine Telck, program coordinator for the head-injury program at Three Rivers Independent Living Resource Center.

Home sharing is a housing alternative offered by Three Rivers, an organization that provides people with disabilities the opportunity to remain active in their community.

In the home-sharing program, individuals with disabilities are matched to compatible individuals seeking a home.

Ninety percent of the applicants to the program are K-State students, Diane Eston, independent living counselor, said.

"Home providers are people with a disability who need some sort of service provided that they can't pay for," Eston said.

"Home seekers in turn receive free room; free room and board; a reduction in rent; a reduction in rent including all utilities; or, the final option, free room and board plus compensation for services provided."

The home seekers may prepare meals, clean or simply stay with their home-care provider at night in exchange for their residence, Telck said.

"Lots of times, they just want companionship, someone to take them shopping or just be there with them," Telck said.

The home-sharing program was established in 1991 and was patterned after a similar program offered by K-State's Community Service Program, Telck said.

"Their program was real similar to ours, but in ours, the home provider has to have a disability or limitation," she said.

The home-sharing program currently has 15 applicants for home providers and two for home seekers.

Telck said the increase in home-care providers is due to the state's movement towards de-institutionalization and the trend toward elderly independent living.

"People just seem to be more comfortable at home," she said.

Applicants are matched according to mutual interests, hobbies or gender, if preferred, Eston said.

A five-page application and an interview process must be completed before applicants can undergo a two-week trial period living together.

Both parties then sign a contract stating the services that will be exchanged for the living arrangement. A 30-day termination notice is also standard.

Eston and Telck agree it is a mutually beneficial program.

"I think it's a mutually beneficial relationship because it provides the student opportunities and provides the person with the disability the opportunity to stay out of an institution when they don't have to be there," Eston said. "It gives them a reason to keep going."

Kevin Boyd, graduate student in economics and participant in the home-share program, has been sharing a townhouse with an elderly blind woman since June. In exchange for cooking and small household chores, Boyd receives free room and utilities.

"For me, to have rented an apartment and paid utilities, I really couldn't have gotten by with $300 to $350 a month, and I'd still have to cook," Boyd said. "This is also a much less expensive way for the person with the disability because they don't have to hire someone to daily come in and do things."

" For me, to have rented an apartment and paid utilities, I really couldn't have gotten by with $300 to $350 a month, and I'd still have to cook."

Policing helps bond community

SHERRIE ELMORE
Collegian

A uniformed police officer strolling down the sidewalk, swinging his billy-club and tipping his hat to a passersby isn't just a memory from a bygone era.

Being a visible part of the community wasn't just part of a cop's beat — it was a lifetime commitment to family and home.

Community policing is a philosophy that the community and law enforcement should work together and resolve problems through community involvement as opposed to strict enforcement.

"Community policing and its concept are nothing new to law enforcement," said Riley County Police Department Capt. Steve French.

"In fact, community policing has been around as long as the elected sheriff's been around," he said. "If he doesn't become a member of the community and do what the community needs, he's not re-elected.

"Right now, policing as we know it is about 90 percent enforcement," French said.

The community policing philosophy is to have a reversal in those numbers — 80 to 90 percent community involvement and 10 to 20 percent enforcement.

Community policing is the problem-solving tool for the police department and the community.

"We really started in '74 with the rural officers and then with Odgen," French said. "Now, we are venturing into a community-policing concept in Aggieville."

The concept of community policing began in Aggieville with foot patrols, called beats, to get to know citizens and merchants.

"Everyone is making a bigger effort to be pro-active instead of re-active," Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville Business Association, said.

Police representatives attend the Aggieville Merchant Association meetings. This is one way to resolve problems without resorting to a task-force situation with officers in Aggieville only to enforce the law.

"We try to get to know the officers," Troy Warnken, manager of TW Longhorn's, said. "Having the same officers on the beat makes for better communication all around."

RCPD has had an officer living in the north county jurisdiction since the consolidation in 1974. Most north county residents know who their regular officers are. A good many residents know the officers by name.

"I feel completely safe," north county resident Kathy Lynch said. "Those guys are our own. I know Larry and Dale when I see them on patrol, and it gives me a secure feeling.

"The officers have been to the grade school to talk to the kids, so my son even knows who they are," she said.

Eventually, the entire Riley County jurisdiction will be broken into areas with their own officers. Those officers will be part of that community.

While the community will play the role of community problem-solver, the enforcement aspect still requires patrol officers, traffic officers, investigators and support staff. This is all taken into consideration during recruitment.

"We'll start recruiting officers that fit into the community-policing type of philosophy," French said.

The previous philosophy in law enforcement is one of the military style in which everything comes up and down a chain of command.

RCPD is very proud of the fact it is a progressive police department, and community policing is part of the progression, French said.

British criminals may lose silence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLACKPOOL, England (AP) — The British government proposed Wednesday to abolish a criminal suspect's right to silence, a basic principle of the country's justice system.

The move, announced at the annual conference of the governing Conservative Party, is one of a series of initiatives aimed at curbing a rising crime rate. It was denounced by trial lawyers and civil libertarians.

"The so-called right to silence is ruthlessly exploited by terrorists," Michael Howard, Home Security, said. "What fools they must think we are. It's time to call a halt to this charade."

Under the new system, suspects could not be forced to answer the questions of police. But prosecutors and judges would be permitted to tell juries they could draw a proper inference from a suspect's silence.

The government abolished the right to silence in Northern Ireland in 1988 — a change largely aimed at terrorism cases.

The change announced Wednesday would apply only in England and Wales. Officials in Scotland, which has a separate legal system, said they had not decided whether to make the change.

The government-appointed Royal Commission on Criminal Justice recommended in July that the right to silence be preserved. It said the possibility of convicting more guilty suspects was outweighed by the risk that increased pressure to talk would result in more innocent people being convicted.

Little progress in Bosnia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — U.N. and Bosnian government military commanders flew to the breakway Bihac area Wednesday in an effort to halt fighting between Muslim factions.

There appeared to be little progress. The local leader, Fikret Abdic, refused to meet with the envoys and continued to insist on autonomy from the Muslim-dominated government in Sarajevo.

With Bosnia torn by warring Croat, Serb and Muslim-led government forces, a splintering of Muslim solidarity in Bihac could complicate chances for an overall peace settlement.

There has been sporadic fighting between government and rebel forces in the Muslim district in northwestern Bosnia since local leaders declared autonomy and elected Abdic their president last week.

In a sign of the shifting loyalties in Bihac, U.N. officials said Tuesday about 2,500 government soldiers apparently went over to Abdic's side. The report could not be confirmed, but that would be a serious blow to Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, whose military resources already are thinly stretched against Serbs and Croats.

The U.N. commander in Bosnia, Gen. Francis Briquement, and the Bosnian army commander, Gen. Rasim Delic, went to Abdic's stronghold of Velika Kladusa on Wednesday for talks.

But the local ZBIA news agency, set up by Abdic backers, said Abdic would agree to meet only with Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic.

He also demanded the Bosnian army release all prisoners taken in the Bihac area and that any negotiations be broadcast live on television and radio, the agency said.

State-run Bosnian radio said rebel soldiers were sniping at troops loyal to Izetbegovic in Velika Kladusa and in the village of Johovica to the south.

Abdic has broad support in the Bihac area, which is home to more than 250,000 people, many of them Muslim refugees from fighting elsewhere in Bosnia. He is credited with using his pre-war business contacts with Serbs and Croats to spare Bihac from most of the warfare that has ruined the rest of Bosnia.

Bosnia's war erupted 18 months ago when its minority Serbs rebelled over a Croat-Muslim vote to secede from Yugoslavia.

A proposed peace plan would divide the republic among its three warring ethnic factions, with Bihac included as a detached part of a Muslim state. But Bosnia's parliament so far has rejected the plan unless Serbs give back captured Muslim territory, something they refuse to do.

Elsewhere in Bosnia, a woman and her 5-year-old child were killed, and five people were wounded when an artillery shell exploded outside a former school.

K-State Police Officer Robert Fenton and Sgt. Jim Lehne work at capturing a skunk late Wednesday evening at Seaton Hall. The skunk had crawled into the building through an open window. They received a call about the skunk at 11:00. The skunk was taken to the woods near B3 after it was caught.

Pepé Le Pew is going to school.

A skunk was reported going over the wall to get into a classroom in Seaton Hall Wednesday at 11 p.m.

K-State Police Officer Jim Lehne said the skunk fell into a classroom in Seaton.

"A student said a skunk fell into a window well, and it could not get out," Lehne said. "It crawled behind the sink and climbed in the drawer."

Lehne said the skunk already had sprayed before he and Officer Robert Fenton arrived on the scene.

"The room was smoky," Lehne said. "He was pretty well emptied when we got there. We had to wait a while for it to clear. With a high-powered flashlight we could see where it sprayed," he said.

Lehne said this is not the first time he had to deal with skunks. He said he did not know when the classroom was needed — so the officers had to get rid of the skunk.

"This is the first time a skunk has gotten in a room where we couldn't chase it out," Lehne said. "There were a lot of things it could hide behind."

Lehne said it took them an hour to get the skunk out of Seaton. Officer Mary Williamson arrived with a net for the capture, he said.

Matt Lynch, student security officer and a sophomore in sociology, said he heard the call from the campus police over his radio.

"Students were cheering as Officer Lehne carried it away in a plastic bag," Lynch said.

After the capture, the skunk was set free, Lehne said.

"We let him go in the woods by (Lot) B-3."

Finney opposes budget

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Joan Finney said Wednesday she opposes a large increase in the state ethics commission's budget, and her remarks caused members of a governor's task force to question her commitment to the issue.

The governor said a sizable budget increase for the Commission on Governmental Standards and Conduct is unwarranted. She also indicated she might reject other proposals from her Task Force on Ethics Reform. Her office also has yet to issue a final version of the task force's report.

The task force proposed that the commission's budget be increased by 68 percent, while the commission itself is seeking an increase of 73 percent. Some advocates believe increased funding is crucial to improved enforcement of lobbying, campaign finance and conflict-of-interest laws. Pete Loux, the chairman of the commission and a task-force member, called the task force's work a waste of time, given Finney's remarks.

U.N. to aid in reforming Haitian military

U.S., Canadian mission to rebuild infrastructure

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Thirty-one U.S. and Canadian security personnel hit the airport tarmac here Wednesday, the first wave of a U.N. military and police training mission that will number 1,600 by month's end.

The mission intends to focus on reforming Haiti's traditionally repressive military and rebuilding the nation's infrastructure, which was already deteriorating before the overthrow of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide two years ago.

The mission also is expected to pave the way for Aristide's return in three weeks.

The foreign troops have been told not to interfere in rising political violence.

The 26 U.S. soldiers, Marines and sailors and five Canadian police monitors were unarmed on arrival, but will be given weapons during their duty for self-defense, U.S. Embassy spokesman Stanley Schrager said.

"However, this is not a combat mission," Schrager said.

"They are not here in a security role at all. When they are engaged in construction, building clinics and roads, they will not be armed."

As the blue-bereted troops filed past Haitian police at the airport, a Haitian said, "We need them. I'm glad they are finally here." He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Meanwhile, sailors on a U.S. Navy base in eastern Puerto Rico loaded heavy equipment onto a warship that is scheduled to head to Haiti on Thursday, carrying 185 American military personnel and 25 Canadian air force carpenters.

On the giant cargo hold of the USS Harlan County were freshly painted troop trucks, bulldozers, earth movers, graders and tightly roped mounds of tents, electrical wiring and canned food.

Officials said the ship also carried M-16s, sidearms and ammunition, but only for defensive purposes by the troops, who were mainly engineers, medics and civic-affairs specialists.

At dockside, a group of Navy engineers said they talked with worried relatives after the chilling images of American losses on another U.N. mission in Somalia.

"I called my wife, and she's definitely upset over the killing and kidnapping in Somalia," said Jeff Conner, a 31-year-old electrician from Roanoke, Va.

But Conner said his wife said he has spent time building ball fields and doing other make-work base projects before this Haiti mission, in which he hopes to help rebuild schools and medical clinics.

"Although she's scared, she also told me, 'Finally you're doing something useful for other people.'"

■ Affirmative action gets psychology professor as interim officer

He was appointed interim affirmative action officer Sept. 18 after being nominated for the position.

Officially, he is working half time at the interim position and half time as a psychology professor.

He was appointed to the position after the semester had already started, and he is still teaching a full class load.

Frieman has been involved with the University committees that wrote the policies on sexual harassment and sexual violence.

He was also a six-year member of the K-State's commission on the status of women.

This is his second year as a minority mentor with the academic assistance center.

However, Frieman isn't interested in filling the position permanently.

"I have no interest in the permanent position," he said.

"I enjoy being a faculty member, and I want to go back to being a faculty member."

Provost James Coffman said this summer's reorganization of the affirmative-action office created the vacancy for an affirmative-action officer.

He said Frieman was selected because of his qualifications.

"He has had a lot of experience in personnel-related issues and a lot of background in University policy with regard to harassment issues, which constitute a high percent of concerns raised in affirmative action," Coffman said.

"He has experience with University governance. He had a good background and experience for the position."

The University will begin a national search for a permanent officer in November. Frieman will serve in the position until June 1994.

Frieman said it has, at times, been tough to meet his primary obligations to his students and have time to take on the responsibilities of the affirmative-action position.

"I can see a need there, and I see a contribution I can make," he said.

"I'm willing to take on this responsibility on top of everything else."

■ Physics researchers receive grant from Energy Department

A group of high-energy physics researchers have recently received a 20-percent increase in their grant from the U.S. Department of Energy.

The high-energy physics group, which moved its operation to K-State from Ohio State University this summer, has received a DOE grant at Ohio State for decades.

The group, which includes 13 people, is investigating the physical properties of the smallest indivisible subatomic particles known to man.

The group's research is currently focusing on strongly interacting particles known as heavy quarks and weakly interacting neutrinos.

This research may provide insight into the conditions present when the universe began and may provide some answers to its future, said Bill Reay, professor of physics and member of the physics group.

"Another interesting question is whether our Big Bang universe will continue forever to expand and cool," he said.

"Neutrinos fill the universe. If they have mass, gravitational attraction could cause our universe to recollapse and be reborn."

K-State has never had a high-energy physics program before this year, and the group had to go through a review process as if it were a new applicant.. The group faced a possible cut in funds, but after the review came out, there was a sizable increase instead, Reay said.

"The field received a 4-percent cut in fiscal year 1994," Reay said.

"After the review, we received a 20-percent increase. This is a substantial vote of confidence."

The grant will provide between $2.5 and $4 million during the next five years, depending on the progress of the research, Reay said.

Noel Stanton, physics professor and member of the group, said he was relieved because the review went well.

"What we had to do was resign from Ohio State and apply to the DOE as a new start," he said.

"The official mechanism is that you let go of one trapeze, hoping the next one is there."

Reay said the new research program will bolster K-State's image.

"In the next five to 10 years, this will have a huge impact on KSU's international reputation," he said.

James Doyle and Kai Draper, assistant professors of philosophy, joined the department's faculty this semester. Doyle is from England, and Draper is from California.

Philosophy professors come to Kansas for job opportunities

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Liverpool, England, and Irvine, Calif., are worlds apart, yet they converge in the Department of Philosophy.

James Doyle and Kai Draper, assistant professors of philosophy, are both new additions to the department this semester.

"I thought people wouldn't like the long-haired hippy type. But I haven't had any problems so far."

KAI DRAPER
ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY

Doyle was born in Canada, but was raised in England. After receiving his bachelor's degree in philosophy at Cambridge University, Doyle moved to the United States to attend the University of Virginia for his doctorate.

Draper is a native Californian, who is living outside of that state for the first time. He was educated at the University of California at Irvine and taught at the University of California at San Diego.

Each said his move to Kansas was based on necessity, because of a shortage of teaching positions in philosophy.

"The employment situation is really bad in academia. I feel very lucky to have gotten a tenure-track job," Doyle said.

He said he previously held temporary positions at the State University of New York, the University of Virginia and the University of Oregon.

Doyle came to America because of a similar lack of employment opportunities in Great Britain.

He said cuts in education by former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher made jobs scarce.

Once he arrived in northeastern Kansas, Doyle said he was surprised by the Flint Hills.

"I guess the main thing I thought of was flatlands because of the cover of Bruce Springsteen's 'Nebraska' LP," he said.

Draper said his prior notions of Kansas were more personal.

"I thought people wouldn't like the long-haired hippy type. But I haven't had any problems so far."

Draper said he found Kansas to be very friendly.

"Especially on the road. When I first came here, and the people were polite and friendlier, I thought they were pretending. I wondered if waitresses got paid more to be that nice. And sometimes even if I have a stop sign, and another car doesn't, they'll stop.

"Nobody would give up the right of way in California," he said.

Doyle discovered differences also. Especially between British and American universities, he said.

"British universities tend to be more academically serious. But in America, there are benefits to getting a more eclectic education."

British schools are more specialized, with students taking classes only in their chosen fields, he said.

Even though Doyle and Draper come from different areas of the world, their strategies for teaching philosophy are similar.

Each describes his teaching style as informal and stressed the importance of debate among students.

"My main aim is to try to bring out what is of importance and interest to them in the material we're covering.

"I'm trying to get them to overcome the idea that moral philosophy is just shooting the breeze and consider the idea that you can go wrong in moral thinking," Doyle said.

Draper said he focuses on teaching students how to analyze and evaluate arguments.

However, Draper said he doesn't expect to be teaching analysis and evaluation early mornings next semester.

"Teaching an 8:30 class is way too early for me. I won't have an 8:30 next semester. I made sure of that," he said.

This semester, both professors teach Introduction to Ethics.Doyle also teaches Philosophy of Law, and Draper instructs Introduction to Philosophical Problems.

Fellowship established for alumna

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

The Josephine E. Brooks Fellowship in Foods and Nutrition has been established with the KSU Foundation by Brooks' cousin, Mary Parsons.

Brooks graduated from K-State with a bachelor's degree in 1926 and a master's degree in 1928 in foods and nutrition.

She earned her doctorate from Cornell University. She returned to Manhattan and was a professor of foods and nutrition at K-State. She died May 25, 1964.

Parsons, also a K-State graduate from the College of Human Ecology, has donated almost $70,000 worth of Eaton Corp. common stock to establish a graduate-student award program.

"In doing this, she wanted to recognize her cousin's accomplishments in foods and nutrition," Jane Bowers, head of the Department of Foods and Nutrition, said.

The fellowship is awarded to a graduate student who has an interest in education of foods and nutrition.

The students may apply by making a written statement of their objectives and career goals.

"We review all applicants, and the fellowship goes to the student who meets the criteria for receiving it," Bowers said.

"A minimum GPA is not required since there is a minimum GPA required to be accepted into the graduate program."

One of the criteria for receiving the fellowship is that the graduate student must have an interest in education of foods and nutrition.

"We have foods and nutrition students who are interested in other departments, such as restaurants, who do not meet the criteria," Bowers said.

Students are required to have their applications submitted by the end of the spring semester in order to receive the fellowship for the following year, Bowers said.

There is only one recipient of the fellowship a year, and this year's recipient is Debby Heim.

Heim, a graduate student in foods and nutrition and teaching assistant in Basic Nutrition, was chosen as the recipient of the fellowship this summer by the Department of Foods and Nutrition.

"When I applied for graduate school, I wrote a statement on what I wanted to do," she said.

Bowers said Heim was chosen because of her interest in education of foods and nutrition.

"My Doctoral research will be on women on birth control and women not on birth control and compare the differences in body-mass index and physiological differences and how eating behaviors change over the course of the month," Heim said.

The fellowship covers babysitting expenses for Heim's children, tuition and books, and it should last throughout the year, she said.

Union Station manager aims to empower, respect staff

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Emphasizing good relations between patrons and employees is high on the Union Station managers' list of priorities.

Teto Henderson, who has been manager of Union Station since June 1990, said his goals are to please his customers and work well with the students he supervises.

Henderson's duties include overseeing, advising and monitoring the student staff about sanitation and health services.

"As manager, I try to empower the staff as much as possible," Henderson said. "I try to let them be a part of all phases to include what is on the menu to programming the entertainment.

"My philosophy is that Union Station is here for students, so I let them have as much say in how we do things as long as it is rational, reasonable and practical."

Henderson's staff includes 32 student workers.

"He'd never make us do anything he wouldn't do himself," Rhonda Greenway, junior in secondary education, said. "He gets right in there and works with us. A lot of managers would just stand there."

Travis Rink, senior in secondary education, said Henderson also offers encouragement to his employees.

"He's always there for everybody and tells us he will help us with our problems," Rink said. "He also has a good sense of humor, which can be intimidating to some people because they think he's serious about his jokes."

Henderson said he credits his success to the student workers.

"My stronger aspect is working with students than any other staff because I enjoy them. They are eager to learn and like to have fun," Henderson said. "They're going to make mistakes, but that's OK because it's part of learning.

Twin's faking could end relationship

Dear Cassandra,

I have a slight problem, and I don't know how to deal with it. My sister and I are identical twins. I have done nothing in my life to hurt my sister. Until now.

I really like my sister's boyfriend a lot. So much, in fact, that when she was gone for a weekend, I called him up acting as her. I stated that plans were changed, and I (or she) would be home for the weekend. I basically asked him out as her. That is just one of the problems.

I had sex with him, not once, but three times that night. My sister has no idea. She speaks highly of her boyfriend and how she hopes he will be the one and only in her life. Mainly, she hopes he will be her first and only.

Now, I have ruined that. Cassandra, I don't know what to do. Can you help me, please?

Signed,
The Loose Twin

Dear LT,

This is big. Man, this is big.

Well, I'm not going to yell at you. And I'm not tell you what you did was acceptable. That's not my role. I'll just tell you what I think you should do.

Assuming you regret what you did and want to make amends, you should sit both your sister and her boyfriend down and tell them about what happened as soon as possible. Prepare yourself for the shock, anger and disbelief from both of them, though. More than likely, this won't go over so well, to say the least.

I'm surprised, though, that this guy didn't realize it wasn't your sister. You may be identical twins and look alike, but you can't act exactly alike or smell the same. Was he drunk? Hmmm.

Anyway, tell them now before it goes any further. You can't live with this under the rug for much longer. They are bound to figure it out on their own, and it would best if the bad news came from your mouth.

Film focuses on homophobia in America

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

As part of K-State's Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, Union Program Council's Multicultural and Issues and Ideas committees are sponsoring "Pink Triangles," a documentary on homophobia and homosexuality.

The film will be shown at 7 tonight in Union 212.

Immediately following the film will be a group discussion for anyone interested in sharing views on, but not limited to, the topics of homophobia, homosexuality and discrimination.

According to the 1982 documentary, homophobia may have begun with an extreme right-wing movement in the United States. Differing attitudes toward homosexuality gave rise to hate crimes on gays and lesbians.

The 35-minute documentary explores the preliminary explanations for homosexuality and homophobia. No questions are answered on whether homosexuality is a result of nature or nurture. However, "Pink Triangles" does raise some valid arguments.

For example, does defining another group as "queer" or "abnormal" attain normality for an opposing group?

"Pink Triangles," for such an early endeavor, discusses in brief many of the issues of interest now in 1993: gays in the military, child custody for homosexuals, myths of the origin of homosexuality and lack of support for coming out of the closet. One aspect missing from the film is any commentary on the AIDS virus, which was perhaps too obscure a disease yet in 1982.

Jeff Strater, program adviser for UPC, said about 50 to 100 people are expected for the discussion. Strater said in lieu of having a panel discussion, the facilitation of a group discussion would provide more of an opportunity to express different perspectives.

"We're featuring this during Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week to present some alternative ideas and maybe start some dialogue on issues that haven't been addressed in the past on this campus."

"All I want is a little damn courtesy."
BOB ROUSEY
Operator of Manhattan Milling Co.

Burning and building BRIDGES

Bob Rousey has worked at Manhattan Milling Co. for the past 33 years.

For 20 of those years, the City of Manhattan and the State of Kansas have discussed tearing his business down in order to build a new bridge over the Kansas River.

But Bob Rousey, the mill operator, said no one has ever talked to him about those plans.

"There isn't a day that goes by that I don't worry about them tearing down this mill," Rousey said. "I still haven't officially found out about it."

Rousey said no one from the city or the state has talked to him about what exactly it is they are planning.

"All I can do is speculate about what the city and the Kansas Department of Transportation are doing," Rousey said.

What they are doing is planning to build a new bridge to replace the more than 50-year-old structure directly south of the mill that is the southeast entrance to Manhattan.

Though Rousey said it is disheartening that this project is going through without his knowledge, part of him is not surprised.

So now, Rousey sits at his business and waits. Waits for word to come down as to how many days Manhattan Milling Co. has left.

Which burns Rousey, because, though he has heard rumors, he does not know exactly what is going to happen. Which, in turn makes it hard to run his business when he does not know what the future will bring.

"What am I supposed to do?" Rousey said. "Say you work for me, and you and your family depend on you, and somebody comes in to the mill and asks you what you're going to do when they tear down this old mill? What do you think? What do you say?"

Manhattan's city officials see it another way, however.

Concerning the bridge project, William Frost, city attorney, said though the project is going forward, there is nothing to tell Rousey.

Just within the past couple of weeks, the city signed an agreement with KDOT, placing the responsibility on the city to acquire Manhattan Milling Co. Until that document was executed, there was no legal ability for the city to be involved in the process, Frost said.

Part of the reason for this is because it is in the city's best interest not to talk with any landowner involved.

If discussions about land acquisitions are entered into prematurely, the city would be responsible for living up to those discussions, perhaps costing taxpayers more money in the long run, Frost said.

"If the landowner changes his business plan in reliance upon those discussions, then, if the plan is not fulfilled, there is precedent that the governmental entity is responsible to buy the property," he said.

Landowners were aware the project was being discussed, Frost said.

"In general terms, all of the public has been notified of the public hearing process and to participate in that process," Frost said. "I'm sure that Mr. Rousey was aware of that process."

Aware or not, Rousey still contends no one from the city has notified him of any plans to tear down the mill. Frost agreed with this.

"I'm sure no one has specifically gone to the mill and talked to them about what was going to be acquired, how much the city was going to pay, because that is not known yet," Frost said.

Frost may not have answers to Rousey's questions, but other Manhattan businesses and their managers do have some answers.

Chris Heavey, manager of the Manhattan Town Center, is currently making plans for the new bridge project.

Heavey said the city has communicated its plans for the bridge project to the mall.

"We are aware that there are two pieces of property that the City of Manhattan, in their negotiations with KDOT, will acquire that will cause a reconfiguration of the mall's parking lot area," Heavey said.

The first phase will close the current entrance to the mall under the current bridge and build a new entrance, he said.

Heavey also said he is familiar with the timetable in which the project will transpire.

"Work will begin the first of next year in Phase I of this," he said. "That is all conditional on KDOT and the City of Manhattan. Forest City, the people I work for, and the City of Manhattan have arrived at the new configuration of the parking lot."

Heavey said though he is aware the city is going to remove the mill, he is not aware of anything else concerning Manhattan Milling Co.

"But anything related to the downtown area, the city staff has been very much in great communication with myself as manager of the shopping center," he said. "We've had great communication from the beginning of this project with the city."

So there is a question here: Why does the mall know details of the bridge project, and the mill does not?

"I'm not really sure, to be real honest with you," said Manhattan City Commissioner Steve Hall. "I can't answer that, but I absolutely don't think it's right."

Manhattan's city government is divided into a city staff that works on projects and a city commission that passes or fails those projects, Hall said.

"My belief is that the city commission should have more input on what we're doing," he said.

Rousey said Hall is the only person from the city who has contacted him concerning the acquisition of his property, and Hall said Rousey has been neglected.

"When I saw that the mill site was involved in the bridge plans, I picked up the phone and asked Mr. Rousey if he had any knowledge of this," Hall said. "And I was just absolutely amazed that he hadn't."

Manhattan's Director of Public Works, Bruce McCallum, said part of the reason no one has talked to Rousey about the acquisition of the mill is because the city was always under the impression that KDOT was going to acquire the mill.

But McCallum also said he has talked to the people at the mill personally.

"I've had some discussions with the representatives of the mill and told them where the project stood," he said. "But those talks couldn't be in any official capacity because we were not representing the acquisition of the property."

The city never tried to hide anything from property owners in the area affected, McCallum said.

"I would say this: all Mr. Rousey had to do was ask," McCallum said. "I know he knows how to get in touch with me. I know his employees have asked me questions, and I've answered them. I don't know what information Mr. Rousey needs, but I'd be glad to cooperate with him and always have been."

But perhaps it is too late.

With construction tentatively scheduled to begin March 1994, the future of Manhattan Milling Co. looks bleak.

Other businesses in the area may be able to move their businesses to another location, but that possibility doesn't exist for the mill.

"You just don't move a thing like this," Rousey said. "The feed mill proper was made on site. It took a year to build, and the wiring and the plumbing are, while not exactly hi-tech, quite extensive."

If this were not happening he would be out beating the bushes for business, Rousey said. Though the mill has fought a 20-year battle against rumors and innuendo, he said, the mill has been fortunate to be running to capacity throughout.

Rousey said he would like to fight the acquisition of the mill, but it would be a losing battle.

"You can't fight it," he said. "They have eminent domain on their side. I'd love to fight it. But you just can't."

Despite the struggle, Rousey still has good things to say about Manhattan.

"Hell, it's still a good town," he said. "I'm old enough to wish it were still like it was when I first came here. And if I were still a young guy, I would be out looking for a job."

Rousey wished he would have gotten several things from the city: a timetable of the project, and someone from the city to have told him what was going on. And, Rousey said, he wished he could have gotten one more thing.

"All I want," he said, "is a little damn courtesy."

THE BRIDGE

The State of Kansas will soon spend about $22 million on a new entrance to Manhattan.

The bridge over the Kansas River in southeast Manhattan is more than 50 years old and ready to be replaced, said Bruce McCallum, director of public works for the City of Manhattan.

"The bridge has seen its useful life," McCallum said.

It is more cost-effective to build a new bridge than to recondition the old one, he said.

The bridge will be a four-lane bridge, McCallum said. It was designed to be four lanes prior to the state's approval of the expansion of Kansas Highway 177 to four lanes north of Interstate 70, he said.

Structures and properties on both the city and the county side will have to be acquired by the state.

The agreement has been structured so the state is in charge of acquiring all of the property except for Manhattan Milling Co. The city will acquire the mill in the name of the state and use part of the property to facilitate parking spaces lost to the Manhattan Town Center. The city will give the rest of the property to the state, McCallum said.

The bridge project will be built in two phases, he said. Phase I will be the construction of the new bridge, and Phase II includes the approaches to the bridge.

The Kansas Department of Transportation will ask for sealed bids for Phase I beginning February 1994. KDOT will ask for bids for Phase II March 1995.

Stan Whitley, public information assistant with KDOT, said construction is tentatively scheduled to begin the month after bids are received.

McCallum said he estimates construction time for the bridge at two years, with the approaches for the bridge beginning in the second year of bridge construction.

The approaches are estimated to take one to one and a half years to construct, he said.

Total construction will take about two and a half to three years.

"My guess is there will be a completed structure sometime in 1997," McCallum said.

"All Mr. Rousey had to do was ask."

THE HISTORY

The original building of Manhattan Milling Co. burned to the ground in 1982.

The building had been built on the west side of the Kansas River, adjacent to the main line of the Union Pacific railroad, in the 1880s.

"Most of the year the whirr of belts and the buzz of machinery is heard day and night in this big building," reads a 1910 Riley County Historical Society article about Manhattan Milling Co.

In the 1880s, the operation milled flour and exported it around the world.

Since that time, owners and supervisors have come and gone, and buildings have been added to the site.

But the original building was set on fire in the early 1980s by a man who worked for owner-manager Bob Rousey.

"It one of those deals where he was a convicted felon, and I gave the guy a second chance; you never know how that might work," Rousey said.

He said he wasn't positive why the man set the old building on fire.

"I'm not sure a pyromaniac needs a reason to burn something, but he used as an excuse he was mad at my manager," Rousey said. "But anyone who does that isn't quite right."

Rousey began working at the mill 33 years ago, when the mill was more dependent on government monies and grain storage. Now, the mill mixes feed.

The business is mostly local, Rousey said. Some customers come from as far east as Maple Hill, as far north as Frankfort, and some from the south near Council Grove. With Fort Riley to the west, little business comes to Manhattan Milling Co. from that area.

Democracy in the making?

Yeltsin demands resignations from all hard-liners

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin followed his bloody victory against hard-line lawmakers with a demand Wednesday that opponents in the provinces resign. He also yanked the ceremonial guard from Lenin's Tomb — a symbolic but potent blow against Communist holdovers.

In a stern, commanding voice on nationwide television, Yeltsin said elections should take place in December for every legislative body in the country — not just for a new national parliament as he previously decreed but for new regional and local councils as well.

His aim clearly was to use the momentum of Monday's climactic battle with hard-liners from the dissolved parliament to sweep his opponents out of office in cities and regions from Karelia in the west to Kamchatka in the Far East.

The rifle-toting guards who kept a stone-faced vigil at Lenin's Tomb on Red Square were unceremoniously withdrawn.

They did not even march away in their customary goose step. They simply waved their white-gloved hands at tourists and walked away from the red granite and black marble mausoleum — the pantheon of communism where generations of Politburo members stood on holidays.

Police said for the time being, the body of Bolshevik leader Vladimir Lenin would remain in its glass sarcophagus for tourists to see.

For 18 months, Yeltsin has struggled for power with diehard Communists, extreme nationalists and would-be populists who bemoan and resist his painful economic reforms.

The confrontation climaxed Monday when government tanks and troops stormed the white marble parliament building. Lawmakers and their heavily armed, paramilitary supporters had holed up there for two weeks, defying Yeltsin's decree to disband.

Officials were still considering Wednesday what charges to bring against the hard-line leaders, parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov and Vice President Alexander Rutskoi.

They were being kept in the high-security Lefortovo Prison. If convicted of treason, they could get the death penalty.

During Wednesday's 15-minute address on primetime television, Yeltsin said everyone who had taken up arms against the government would be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

He also said the national parliament had received all kinds of hinted assurances of support from local and regional councils, called soviets.

He stopped short of dissolving the hundreds of soviets, the equivalent of state legislatures and city councils in the United States. But he pressed them to disband voluntarily and agree to new elections on Dec. 12.

"I think the soviets ... must take a dignified and courageous decision to dissolve themselves and leave peacefully, with civility, without shocks and scandal," he said.

Yeltsin called Sunday's rioting in Moscow a communist-fascist revolt stirred up by parliament.

But he also said his soul aches over the high cost of Monday's retaliatory tank barrage.

Yeltsin has declared Thursday a national day of mourning for the dead on both sides.

Russian newspapers have estimated the toll at more than 300. City health authorities confirmed more than 100 dead and predicted the total would rise as soldiers searched the shattered interior of the parliament building, known as the White House.

Life was returning to normal in Moscow, with fewer roadblocks and tanks on the streets.

Yeltsin announced he had lifted censorship of the mainstream press, which he admitted was an excessive measure. Opposition newspapers, however, remained banned.

Moscow also remained under a curfew, and police combed the city for snipers who escaped from the siege of the White House.

No more shooting was reported, and officials said random street searches had drastically reduced crime in the capital.

Yeltsin showed his gratitude to the armed forces by opening a meeting of his Security Council in the Kremlin with a discussion of a new military doctrine. Senior officers have been frustrated by indecision about the military's future role, size, cost, armaments and strategy.

He ordered the new doctrine to be drafted by Oct. 15. It calls for cutting the military to 1.5 million soldiers from the current 2.5 million — the same target Yeltsin has cited for more than a year.

No new details were made public.

The Russian president also got rid of a leading opponent Wednesday when Valery Zorkin resigned under pressure as chairman of the Constitutional Court.

Zorkin had led a majority of the court's 13 judges in ruling against Yeltsin in several major cases, including the constitutionality of the president's Sept. 21 decree dissolving parliament.

GEORGIA

Troops, rebels clash in Georgia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Georgian troops battled a rebel advance Wednesday that has cut off the capital from the sea, and the United States sent a planeload of food to thousands of hungry refugees.

And in Geneva, talks opened Wednesday between rebels in the northwest Abkhazian region and a United Nations peace mediator trying to end the fighting in the former Soviet republic.

Swiss diplomat Edouard Brunner met with Arni Jerjenia, a special envoy of Abkhaz leader Vladislav Ardzinba. Negotiations were to resume Thursday on reviving a July 27 cease-fire agreement brokered by Russia.

Rebel forces killed one government soldier and wounded several others along a rough front between Georgia's second-largest city, Kutaisi, and the Black Sea port of Poti in western Georgia, the Defense Ministry said Wednesday.

Fighters loyal to ousted president Zviad Gamsakhurdia seized Poti on Saturday in their drive east toward Tbilisi. There was no information on rebel casualties.

Gamsakhurdia, Georgia's first democratically elected president since it split from the Soviet Union in 1991, was ousted in a bloody military coup in January 1992.

He returned from exile two weeks ago, assembled a powerful army in his native stronghold of Mingrelia in northwestern Georgia and began fighting to overthrow Shevardnadze.

Shevardnadze imposed a curfew Tuesday in Tbilisi and areas torn by fighting with Gamsakhurdia's forces.

"We need tough measures to combat terrorists and those forces attempting to overthrow the state," said Dzhaba Isoeliani, military commander of Shevardnadze's Emergency Defense Council.

Shevardnadze, a former Soviet foreign minister, won special emergency powers from parliament to confront the rebellion. He has ordered the arrest of several prominent Gamsakhurdia supporters, including 70-year-old newspaper editor Irakli Gotsiridze.

The arrests continued Wednesday, but officials refused to release the names of the detainees.

Shevardnadze's government, also struggling to cope with a refugee crisis, awaited a U.S. plane loaded with relief supplies for the estimated 30,000 people trapped high in the snowbound Caucasus mountains along the Russian border.

The refugees fled there from the separatist province of Abkhazia. Rebels battling the government have seized near-total control of the coastal province.

The relief plane was to arrive in Tbilisi on Thursday for handling by the CARE relief agency and the Georgian government. The agency said it planned further flights of food and medical supplies over the next few weeks in a relief mission estimated at $4.3 million.

"If lives are to be saved, it is critical we receive outside help now — we cannot do it ourselves," said Ramin Chelidze, representative for Georgia's parliament.

Government takes full control of capital

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Soldiers disarmed and arrested several groups of gunmen today as violent resistance to President Boris Yeltsin collapsed, and the government took full control of the capital.

Isolated attacks by snipers were reported overnight, but there were no casualties.

Yeltsin's government continued to crack down on the opposition. Several mainstream Moscow newspapers appeared today with blank spots on their pages where articles had been censored and removed. But the government later today ended censorship, saying it was a temporary emergency step.

Government troops and tanks stormed the parliament building Monday and crushed armed resistance by some 1,500 lawmakers and their supporters. Hard-liners were holed up in the building for almost two weeks after refusing Yeltsin's order to disband and conduct new elections.

Fighting began after hard-liners rioted Sunday in central Moscow. The battles left more than 100 dead and hundreds more wounded.

Yeltsin had been locked in a power struggle with an informal alliance of Communists, fascists and ultra-nationalists opposed to the scale and pace of his political and economic reforms. Both sides had tried to oust each other during an 18-month power struggle that crippled the government.

Life was returning to normal in Moscow today with heavy commuter traffic headed to the city center. Tanks were pulled back from around the blackened parliament building and fewer troops were seen on the streets.

Officials were considering what charges would be filed against the parliament leaders, former vice president Alexander Rutskoi and parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov. The two men and other top leaders were being held in high-security prisons.

Ex-Communist leader elected by 98 percent

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW (AP)—Azerbaijan's former Communist boss, Geidar Aliev, has been elected president of the Caucasus Mountain country by 98.8 percent of the vote, news reports said Wednesday.

Many Azerbaijanis hope the familiar leader from Soviet times can bring peace and economic stability to Azerbaijan, which has been devastated by a five-year war with Armenians over the enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh. Others accuse him of violating human rights.

Aliev, 70, succeeds Abulfaz Elcibey, who was ousted in a military coup in June. Aliev returned to power then as acting president and leader of parliament.

Last month his government held a referendum, reportedly rife with violations, in which more than 90 percent of voters supported Elcibey's ouster.

On Sunday, voters returned to the polls to choose between Aliev and two other candidates for president: Terrar Abilov, 63, leader of the United Azerbaijan party; and 45-year-old businessman Zakir Tagiyev.

The Central Election Commission said with 90 percent of the votes counted, 3.9-million people voted for Aliev and 40,298 for the two other candidates combined, Azerbaijan's Turan news agency reported.

Helsinki Watch, a U.S.-based human rights organization, wrote Aliev last week asking him to live up to promises of fairness and democracy.

The group cited several allegations of intimidation, media censorship and beatings.

Judge quits under pressure

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — The contentious chairman of Russia's Constitutional Court resigned Wednesday, ridding Boris Yeltsin of yet another thorn in his side.

Valery Zorkin had been under growing pressure to quit since Monday, when Yeltsin crushed parliamentary opponents and ended his 18-month power struggle with those who resisted his reforms.

The court is Russia's highest tribunal for constitutional issues. Zorkin, a 50-year-old former law professor, had led the panel of 13 judges since its creation in late 1991.

Yeltsin could not legally fire the chief judge, but the president's chief of staff reportedly urged Zorkin to quit on Monday. It was unclear whether he would remain a judge, and the ITAR-Tass news agency reported Wednesday he was suffering from an undisclosed illness.

The court will be headed temporarily by its deputy chairman, Nikolai Vitruk, court spokeswoman Emilia Kharlamova said. Vitruk, 55, is one of only four judges on the court who have consistently supported Yeltsin.

The president and the chief judge have clashed often recently:

—When Yeltsin declared a form of emergency rule on March 20, Zorkin joined parliament Speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov and Vice President Alexander Rutskoi in denouncing the move on nationwide television.

—After Yeltsin dissolved parliament and called new elections on Sept. 21, Zorkin led the court in a 9-4 ruling that the decree was unconstitutional.

—While the military assaulted hard-line lawmakers in the barricaded parliament building Monday, Zorkin consulted with Rutskoi by telephone, then called for a compromise to end this carnage as soon as possible.

Yeltsin apparently punished Zorkin last month by taking away his country house outside Moscow. The official explanation was that bacteria had been found in a nearby part of the Moscow River.

U.S. deaths increase

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAIROBI, Kenya — Two more U.S. soldiers died Thursday from fighting in Somalia, and the United Nations began evacuating civilian workers from the Somali capital.

One American died in a U.S. military hospital in Landstuhl, Germany, from wounds suffered Sunday in clashes in the capital, Mogadishu.

A mortar attack on Mogadishu's airport wounded 13 soldiers Wednesday night, and one of them died several hours later.

In all, 14 American soldiers have died in fighting this week in Somalia. The Pentagon said Thursday that 29 Americans have died in Somalia since December.

Maj. David Stockwell, the chief U.N. military representative in Somalia, said four of the wounded in Wednesday's attack also were flown to Landstuhl. He said they were in stable condition.

Farouk Mawlawi, a U.N. civilian representative in Mogadishu, said non-essential staff was being flown out of Mogadishu to Nairobi in neighboring Kenya. He said he did not know how many people were being evacuated.

The first evacuation came in mid-June, when U.S. helicopters and AC-130 planes began attacking command centers of fugitive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid. Most of those evacuated later returned to Mogadishu.

Stockwell declined to identify the dead and wounded in Wednesday's attack. He spoke at a press briefing in Mogadishu, which was monitored by telephone in Nairobi.

Mortar and rocket-propelled grenade attacks on U.N. positions in southern Mogadishu have become an almost nightly occurrence in the past few months but have never before resulted in any deaths.

The former international airport has become a logistics center for the United Nations and houses the 1,300-strong U.S. Quick Reaction Force and 400 Rangers.

It was a Ranger unit and two companies of the Quick Reaction Force, a mobile infantry group, that suffered the 13 killed and 77 wounded in Sunday's fighting in southern Mogadishu.

Six soldiers are still missing and feared dead, and a helicopter pilot, Chief Warrant Officer Michael Durant, is being held captive by Aidid's militia.

Stockwell said the International Committee of the Red Cross had requested a visit with Durant, which was expected within several days.

An unidentified aide to Aidid said in Mogadishu on Wednesday that Durant would not be freed unless all Somalis being held by the United Nations are released.

The United Nations is holding at least 24 Somalis, including what it describes as four key aides of Aidid. The capture of 21 Somalis touched off 15 hours of fighting Sunday and Monday.

The battle was the costliest for U.S. forces since the American-led military coalition arrived in Somalia last December to protect food shipments to the starving.

The United States originally sent 28,000 soldiers to the chaotic East African country but sharply pared the number before turning the mission over to the United Nations five months later.

Shuttle suggested to solve parking woes

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

A graduate student suggested to Student Senate Thursday that a shuttle system be implemented to alleviate the lack of parking at K-State.

Bharath Vellanki, graduate student in civil engineering, said there is a need for the system because of several problems with campus parking.

"There is a big shortage of parking space," Vellanki said. "The ratio of permits sold to parking spaces available is 1.44."

Vellanki said a second problem is the uneven distribution of parking spaces on campus.

"Approximately 70 percent of all parking violations were observed on the south campus," Vellanki said. "It is obvious where you have more activities on campus, you have less parking. We are not really short of spaces, but the distance is uneven between the spaces."

Vellanki said next year K-State motorists will temporarily lose about 185 parking stalls when the expansion of Farrell Library and the construction of the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum begin.

"We are going to lose parking spaces by Farrell for about three

PARKING DILEMMA DISCUSSED

The pros, cons and costs of three possible parking solutions.

Option	Advantages	Disadvantages
Surface parking lots. Cost: $400,000	Easy to construct and relatively inexpensive.	Would not alleviate existing problems, displaces green space.
Multi-level parking structure. Cost: $7,000,000	Will solve parking shortage in long run, parking closer to buildings.	Expensive to construct and high maintenance costs.
Shuttle system. Cost: $560,820 per year	Redistributes new parking spaces, could be extended into whole city.	May create traffic problems on campus, students may not want to ride.

Collidascope Game heightens awareness

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

Students gathered Thursday around the K-State Union Courtyard to watch students participating in a game.

The Collidascope Game was in conjunction with Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, and its purpose was to create awareness of ethnic cultures.

"It is an awareness game, but it also dispenses knowledge," said Gary Pierson, assistant director of the Office of New Student Services.

It not only creates awareness for students but helps the students who play the game with their communication skills.

"It goes beyond awareness — it's also about skills development," Alex Delgadillo, program coordinator for residential life, said.

This was the first time the game was played on campus at K-State.

Four teams participated in the game, with each team consisting of four to five players. Pierson asked the teams a series of questions.

Questions were picked from four categories — racism, sexism, heterosexism and contemporary issues. If the team answered correctly, they were given a situation in that same category, which they had two minutes to respond to. Some situations involved role playing. The team then got a situation card for that category.

"The object of the game is to get all four category cards. The first team to get all cards wins," Pierson said. "But winning is not important — the process of the game is most important."

One team was from the Office of New Student Services, the second team was from Hispanic-American Leadership Organization. Members of Asian American Students for Inter-Cultural Awareness made up the third team, and the fourth team was group of residents of West Hall.

"I am doing this to create awareness of other cultures," said Armando Eseneta, treasurer of ASIA and sophomore in milling science and management. "We have a lot of other plans for awareness activities coming up. We will have the Asian American Awareness month in March."

The ASIA team members applied their personal experiences to one situation question that asked them to describe how they have been influenced by messages of ethnic groups.

The winners of the game were the HALO team, and their prize was a T-shirt for each member. ASIA came in second place. New student services came in third place, and West Hall came in fourth place.

Week to end with Harmony Walk

TRISHA BENNINGA
Collegian

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week will come to a close this afternoon with the fifth annual Harmony Walk around campus.

The Harmony Walk will begin at 5 p.m. today at the Vietnam Memorial near All Faiths Chapel, said Phil Anderson, speech instructor and member of the Racial/ Ethnic Harmony Week Committee.

The Panhellenic and Black Pan-Hellenic Councils are organizing the walk, he said. Anderson said the walk is open to everyone.

K-State President Jon Wefald and his wife, Ruth Ann, will gather with the group and say a few words before the walk, Anderson said.

The group will walk from the memorial to North Manhattan Avenue, up Manhattan Avenue to Claflin Road, from Claflin to Denison Street, from Denison to Anderson Avenue and then from Anderson back to the memorial.

Following the walk, Don Fallon, coordinator of religious affairs from the dean of student life office, will give the closing remarks.

"At the end, Don Fallon will say a few words, which in effect brings the week to a close," Anderson said. "But really the idea is to open us up to the challenges yet ahead."

Claudia Streeter, departmental secretary for multicultural affairs, said about 50 to 100 people turn out for the walk each year.

"We walk around campus together, and hopefully all races and ethnicities will be represented," Streeter said. "The walk symbolizes that we're more alike than we are different. If we can walk together, we can live together in peace and harmony."

The walk continues the week's theme of uniting all of the races, Anderson said.

"It's kind of a final coming-together of the week," he said. "It kind of shows support and is a way of saying 'we shall overcome, and we shall continue to be resolute in our efforts to view each other as human beings and not as members of specific groups.'

"I can't stress enough that the final event is only symbolic. It's not that we're stopping, but we are gathering our strength to go on and accept the challenges yet ahead."

'Info-Kansas' offers natural disaster victims data about housing, loans and volunteer aid

TOPEKA (AP) — The new machines some shoppers in six cities should see soon will look suspiciously like bank automatic teller machines.

But they'll be from the government, and they will be there to help victims of natural disasters.

Gov. Joan Finney and other state officials unveiled Thursday the new "Info-Kansas" machine. It spits out names, addresses, phone numbers and other information, much like the bank machines spit out money and deposit slips.

The machines can provide information about where to find help, such as housing information or low-interest business loans, or where people can go if they want to volunteer their services.

Finney demonstrated how to use a machine following a news conference on the second floor of the Capitol rotunda.

It took her a little time to find the correct area of the machine's computer screen to touch. But in less than a minute, it told her where to go to find information about housing in Elwood, a small town in Doniphan County hit hard by flooding.

"The technology is overwhelming. It's mind-boggling," Finney said later.

"I think it's very easy to use. I certainly want to encourage flood and disaster victims to make use of this."

State officials said the seven machines should be in place in discount stores and shopping centers in Atchison, Kansas City, Manhattan, Pittsburg, Salina and Topeka by Tuesday.

They said their placement will allow Kansans to obtain help outside the standard 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. government hours.

And the machines could have wider government use. Bob Molander, assistant secretary of human resources, noted California residents can use such machines to renew their driver's licenses.

U.N. General Assembly to repeal sanctions against South Africa as it strives for democracy

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The General Assembly, pleased with the progress of South Africa's march toward democracy, will repeal all economic and financial sanctions, opening the way for desperately needed foreign investment.

The assembly will declare an end to the voluntary sanctions in trade, finance, investment, travel and transportation that won worldwide compliance in 1985. It will also urge all states to lift restrictions, a U.N. statement said.

An 18-year-old-voluntary embargo on the sale of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa will be lifted when a multiracial panel that is to help govern the country is in place.

A mandatory arms embargo imposed by the Security Council in 1977 will remain in effect, as well as a voluntary ban on military imports from South Africa.

The formal lifting of sanctions, planned for Friday, has been expected since Sept. 24 when African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela urged the international community to put aside its most potent weapon against apartheid.

Mandela, whose movement is expected to win the country's first multiracial elections in April, urged extensive investment to shore up the South African economy and fortify the transition to democracy.

The United States and most Western nations have lifted most sanctions, especially in the past two years as the South African government has pursued democratic reform.

Voluntary sanctions were imposed beginning in the 1960s in an effort to punish the white-minority South African government for its policies of racial segregation and to pressure it to end discrimination against non-whites.

Gideon sentenced as victim's parents watch

COLUMBUS (AP) — A Leawood couple watched from a few feet away as Donald Ray Gideon, taking his lawyer's advice, pleaded guilty to kidnapping and murdering their daughter.

"For the first time in my life, I felt I was in the presence of something evil," Gene Schmidt, father of 19-year-old Stephanie Schmidt, said after Wednesday's proceedings.

Gideon, who was conditionally released November from a prison sentence for an earlier rape, was scheduled for a preliminary hearing Wednesday in Cherokee County District Court.

Instead, he waived the hearing and pleaded guilty to first-degree murder, aggravated kidnapping, aggravated criminal sodomy and rape. Prosecutors said they would seek to ensure at his Nov. 18 sentencing that Gideon, 31, spends the rest of his life in prison.

Stephanie Schmidt, a student at Pittsburg State University, disappeared July 1 after she accepted a ride from Gideon as they left a bar in Frontenac. The two were co-workers at a restaurant in Pittsburg.

Gideon led authorities to her body in rural Cherokee County on July 27 after surrendering to police July 16 in Florida, where he had seen himself on the TV show "America's Most Wanted."

THE 'GANGSTA' MENTALITY

story by William F. McKeen III

Denail Carter, a former gang member of the Rolling 30s Crips gang in Denver, speaks during an interview. Carter moved to Manhattan following an arrest on drug charges in Denver.

Manhattan is not immune to gang members coming into the community.

Denail Carter, street name B. G., was involved in the Rolling 30s Crips in Denver before he was arrested on a drug-dealing charge. The courts told him he could finish time in prison or leave town. He said he decided he would come to Manhattan and live with his mother.

He granted an interview to the Collegian and spoke about his history of gang involvement, prevalence of the Manhattan gang scene and his attitude on gangs now.

B.G., 20, walked in with a gangster stagger. Two layered white T-shirts and sagging tan pants covered his average size frame. His red and blue hat signified he was not banging right now.

In the beginning of the interview B.G. talked proudly of his history of gang involvement in Denver.

Q: How did you get the street name B. G.?

A: It was because I had a baby face. They started calling me Baby Gangsta.

Q: How old were you when you got involved?

A: I was 12. I was in the sixth grade.

Q: Did you ever try hard in school?

A: I been getting good grades. It's just that I'd rather be doing something else.

Q: How did you get involved in the gangs?

A: I just jumped in. My oldest sister and brothers and my cousins were in gangs.

Q: Why did you get involved?

A: It's just a thing you have to do there because of the atmosphere. If you're not in a gang there, you don't have anyone. Growing up, you had no choice. You can get killed just for living there.

Q: What is the gang mentality like?

A: The gang mentality is that we don't care. We do what we have to do. If someone is in my way, I get them no matter what.

Q: How is the lifestyle?

A: A lot of people see the lifestyle as good because they see all the money and cars, but that is just on the surface. There's a lot of hard shit going on that nobody knows about.

Q: What are some things you would do as gangs?

A: We would just hang out. We were like a family. We would also deal and do other stuff.

Q: What is the reason behind doing drive-bys?

A: Sometimes it's for revenge, but sometimes we would just be sitting around, getting high and drinking. It's kind of fun to watch someone run from a gun.

Q: Did you ever get involved in doing hard drugs, crack, cocaine, PCP?

A: No, I usually just got high. You're stupid to get hooked on that hard stuff. It fucks you up.

A: You look at yourself like you're not normal. We see everyone else as being normal. They can't understand how we think.

Q: Did you carry a gun while in Denver?

A: You had to carry a gun.

Q: Have you ever shot or killed someone?

A: I shot someone before I was 17. I was on my way to school and some guys started messing with me, some Bloods. Someone threw a brick at my car. I jumped out and started blasting. I shot one in the butt, and he fell. I've shot at other people, but I just saw them fall. I don't know if they died.

Q: Have you ever been shot at or hit?

A: Yeah, I been shot at. In a drive-by shooting, one of my friends got shot. Five of my friends have gotten killed.

Q: How did the gang problem start in Denver?

A: A lot of the California Rolling 30s came to Denver and started it up. They could make more money in Denver.

Q: Is the gang problem big here in Manhattan?

Q: How are the gangs different here than Denver?

A: They don't have the mentality. They would be scared to see some of the stuff in Denver. Where I'm from, we all don't have parents. We are looking out for ourselves. I laugh at them.

Q: Have you tried to start a gang here?

A: No, I don't want to be in a gang here. I don't want anyone from my set here. I'm just chilling. I'm taking a break from it. That's why I'm wearing these colors, to show I'm chilling. (The red and blue hat signified he was neither down with Crip or Blood, but neutral.)

Q: Why do you think kids start gangs in Manhattan?

A: They watch movies like "Boyz N the Hood" and think that the stuff is cool. They think it's the Minority resolution could make life hard for every Kansan

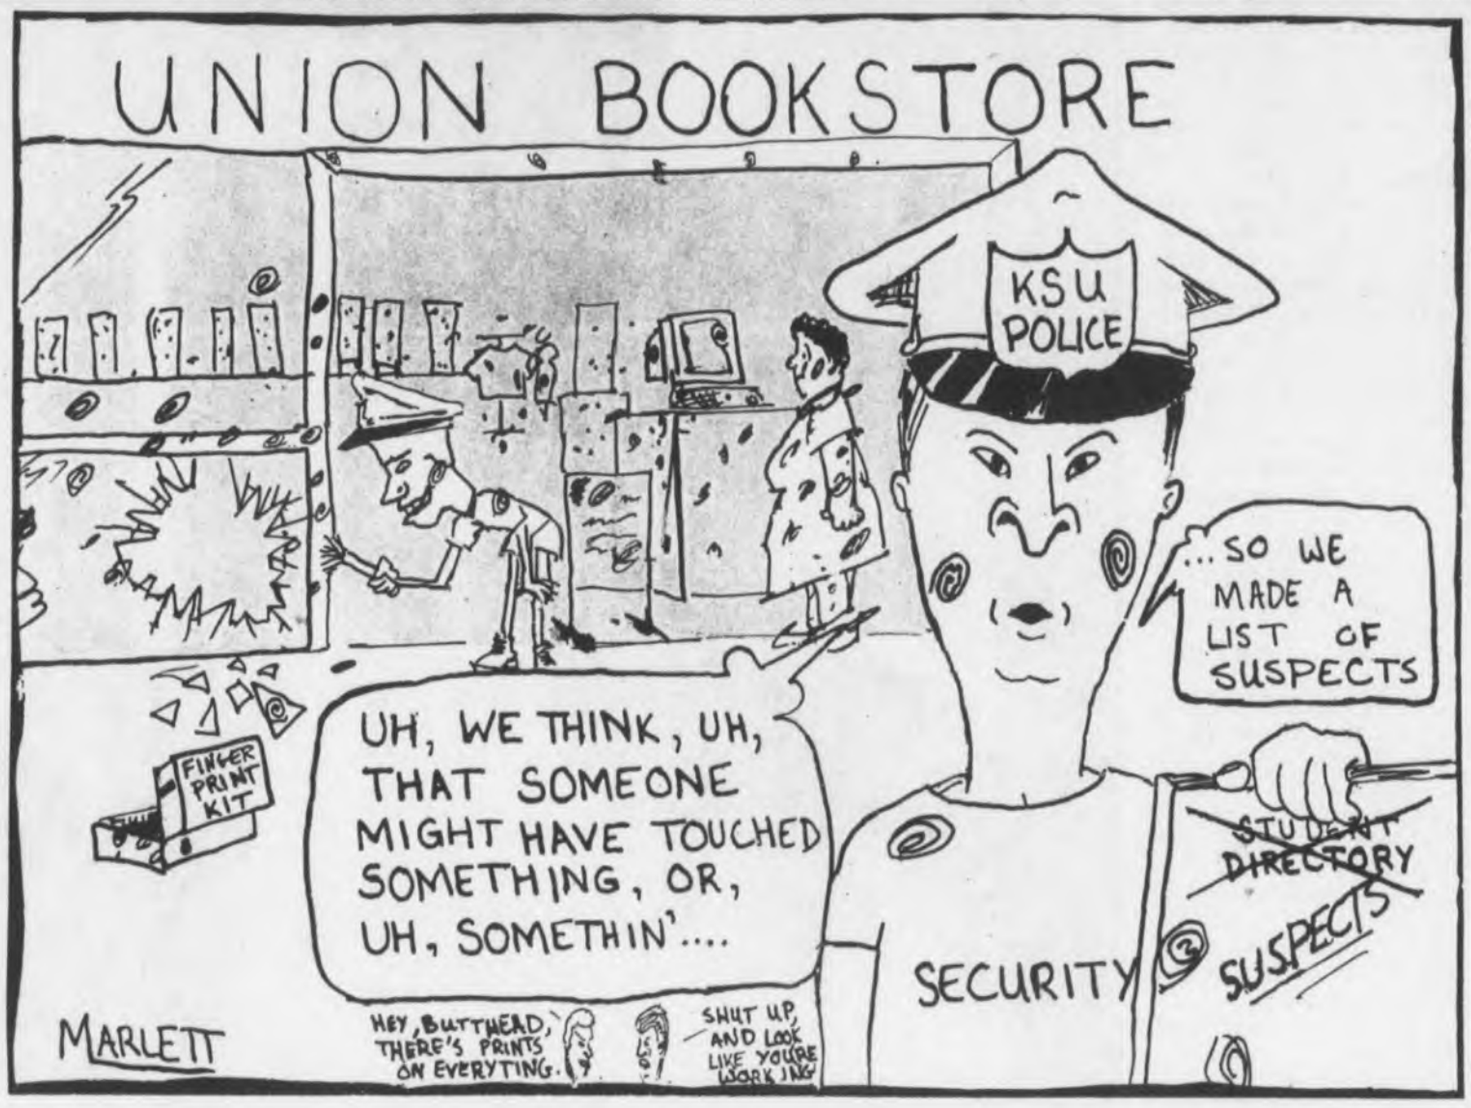
A resolution has been introduced into the Kansas House of Representatives that would "memorialize Congress to refrain from passing legislation that defines certain sexual or life-style preferences as having protected class statutes." This resolution is not about denying special rights; it is about denying protection, which is a constitutional right.

If passed, this bill would allow discrimination against minority groups like gays and lesbians. And discrimination of any kind is against the fundamental principles on which this nation was founded.

This resolution is similar to Colorado's Constitutional Amendment No. 2, which was passed by the voters last year. The constitutional amendment prohibited the legislature or any city government from enacting a state law or city ordinance that prohibited discrimination on the basis of sexual preference or orientation. It is now being challenged in the courts.



The big difference between the two is it would not become a law like Colorado's amendment. Instead, it could be used to show legislative intent. This would allow a court to use it to construe the language of another state statute, for example, the Kansas act against discrimination.

Another thing that may come along with the resolution that the authors were not expecting is an economic boycott of the state. Immediately after the amendment was passed in Colorado, the state suffered a boycott of products, its skiing resorts and several tourist attractions.

Do we want that to happen here in Kansas? Instead of boycotting skiing resorts, large organizations might decide to have conventions in other states, hurting Kansas' large convention business. The list of problems that comes along with this resolution goes on and on.

Contact your state representatives, and tell them to vote 'no' on this House resolution when it comes to a vote during the next legislative session.

MARLETT'S WORLD

Depiction of soldiers leaves much to be desired

Well, I knew if I waited long enough, Rush Limbaugh would finally say something intelligent. I just never thought I would agree with him.

He said there was no reason to run that picture of the dead soldier being drug through the streets of Mogadishu. I agree completely. That's almost scary.

I saw that image on the news Monday night.

Now I can't get it out of my mind.

Then I opened the paper I subscribe to, and a picture of that man was on the front page.

What I want to know is: How do you explain running that picture to his family? How do you explain to his mother the need to see over and over and over, the nude body of her child being kicked and beaten?

I'll tell you how. It's called the "The right to know."

This is the same right that will allow the press, when they find out who that man is, to surround the his parents' house for days on end. It explains how they can shove microphones and cameras in his family's faces, asking, "How did it feel to see your son's body dragged through the streets?"

I'll tell you how it feels in two words.

Like shit.

Is that the stupidest question you have ever heard? "How does it feel ..." My God, how callous can people be? It's not enough to know that your son died. Now, they have to see his body being desecrated while the press says people have the "right to know."

I agree people have the right to know things that happen in the government and the world today. But there are better ways to inform of events like this than splash a picture of someone's son, father or husband being mutilated.

The worst thing is now there are probably thousands of people out there saying to themselves, "Is that my ..."

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

Freedom of the press is one of our most basic rights and one that should be respected; so is the responsibility of self restraint. It all goes back to the question: If a man's wife is dying of cancer, and you find out he's having an affair, do you tell her?

Therein lie the murky depths of our First Amendment rights. Without these rights, Watergate would never have happened, and Nixon never would have been known for the scum he was.

Without these rights, crimes would never be reported, people would be afraid of talking to the press, and reporters would be routinely censored.

Without these rights, the horrors of war would never be reported.

The only problem is that some journalists get so caught up in the ratings game they forget the human element they're dealing with. There's no human decency in their actions, and the need to be the "first on the scene" clouds their judgment.

So, they end up chasing terrified mothers and children down the street, run the names of rape victims and show pictures of dead soldiers being dragged through the streets. They meet soldiers on beaches, in missions that are potentially deadly, with cameras and spotlights, risking their lives and the entire mission.

All to be the first on the scene.

Well, in my mind, this isn't news. This isn't responsible reporting. This is all sensationalism and shock tactics.

It seems to me some reporters have lost sight of the high purpose of reporting and instead are catering to the lowest in themselves and the rest of us.

And the worst part of it all is "the right to know" isn't a light in the darkness anymore. It's an excuse.

▶ FINE ARTS

Legitimate is the word when it comes to all fine-arts expenditures

Editor,

There are many inaccuracies and concerns in David Frese's column on "Cash for Stuff."

The speech department is allocated funds from the Student Governing Association via the fine-arts/athletic fee. It was the decision of Student Senate at the time that if the students were to support various athletic programs through tuition fees, then why not support the arts at K-State through tuition fees.

I applaud Senate for its vision of enhancing a full range of activities that are important in a university environment. The speech department certainly appreciates and is indebted to all students for their support. In return, we attempt to use student money wisely to produce high-quality performances for students to experience. I believe we do not use student money in a judicious manner.

That is why I felt the need to respond to Mr. Frese's column. He called our office Wednesday afternoon and asked how our fine-arts monies were used. Our office assistant told him she needed more information before she could answer his questions (for example, which specific accounts he was interested in). He could not provide this information and said he would call back later. Thursday morning the column appeared with several inaccuracies.

Half of the items identified as purchased from the fine-arts fee simply were not. If Mr. Frese had called back and talked with our office assistant she could have let him know T-shirts were purchased, as costumes, from our own ticket sales (much like their advertising sales), notebooks and photocopies were charged to our departmental office supplies account (as he suggests they should be). Other items he listed were purchased from the fine-arts fee account. However, these materials were used directly to produce the shows K-State students participate in and enjoy watching.

These fees are used to help create "the University," which fundamentally includes the arts. What concerns me most is that Mr. Frese did not take the time to work with our office staff to obtain an accurate understanding of the situation. Had he worked with our office assistant (who is as committed and as prudent about fiscal matters as his wife sounds), he would not have created certain false impressions about the way the speech department uses student money.

▶ FINE ARTS

A big chunk of change is shelled out by all, even music majors

Editor,

Hey, David! I'm a music major. Guess what: Nobody helps me buy my textbooks, either. I know you may find it shocking. I know I did when I marched into the office of the head of the music department and said, "I've been robbed. David Eugene Frese said the fine-arts fee is supposed to have been paying for my textbooks, sheet music and classroom supplies.

I was really angry, you see, because during the course of my college career I have spent more than $500 on sheet music, $200 per semester on books and at least $150 on classroom supplies. Also, when I give a recital, guess who pays the $75 accompanist fee, $18 recording fee (optional) and all the other performance expenses? Me!

Are you aware that between eight and 10 percent of K-State's entire student body is in performance organizations? And we only get one hour of credit for five hours of class. We get no credit for public performances, but we are required to do them.

After being laughed out of the music office, I'm on your side. This University owes me a lot of money.

▶ NAFTA

All jobs going south should include cushy Washington positions

Editor,

All the debate over how good the North American Free Trade Agreement will be for our republic is causing me to worry about jobs lost and moved out of Washington, D.C.

If NAFTA passes, could the President and Congress lose their jobs because we, as owners of this great republic, feel we can get a better deal on our money south of the border? I'm sure we'll be able to find a Mexican worker willing to be President of the United States.

The Congressional jobs will also go quickly. These productive Mexican employees, serving as our leaders, will only need to be paid one-tenth the current wage, reducing our taxes and debt. Sure, President Clinton and Congress will be out of work. But with a new, extensive job-training programs, they'll be retrained in new careers. What kind of jobs are unknown at this time.

Unemployed politicians in Washington are going to have to realize what's good for the republic holds true for them too.

I will be totally convinced NAFTA is beneficial if it's experimented with in Washington first.

The background of our next speaker spits in eye of human rights

Editor,

Oct. 12 is Columbus Day, the 501st anniversary of the explorer's arrival in this part of the world. It is a solemn and sorrowful day for many indigenous peoples as the genocidal practices of Columbus and his men upon the Arawak people – leading to their total annihilation – is remembered.

On that day, K-State, under the auspices of the president and other University dignitaries, will have a guest speaker, someone who once used his influence to channel millions of dollars to the regime of Guatemalan dictator Rios Mont, claiming that Mont's rise to power was a symbol of a nation "turning to God."

Apparently, Mont's reign of terror, during which as many as 100,000 Guatemalen Indians were massacred, meant little to the man who will soon speak here. Otherwise, why would he have said that with Rios Mont in power, "God's people unite, his marvelous plan is fulfilled"? Perhaps our speaker really meant it. In that case, he is a fitting tribute to Columbus. And very well timed, coming off the heels of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

I just hope no one is too busy supporting, protesting, counter-protesting or ignoring the speaker or his counterpart to ponder why this nation still has a federal holiday commemorating a murderer of genocidal proportions.

And why Oct. 12 was chosen as the day for this speaker. Insensitivity? Or was the quincenntenial simply last year's issue? Don't want that multiculturalism to go to far!

By the way, does anyone know if the speaker, who is giving his address as part of the "most prestigious" (aka "wealthiest") lecture series on campus, will use any of his honoraria to pay off that $400,000 fine for campaign violations assessed to him last week? Or is it true that he really plans to donate it to AIM — the American Indian Movement?

There are ways to get around the stifling crunch of Clinton's bill

Editor,

Concerning your Oct. 1 editorial about President Clinton's gas tax, I have one question and one comment.

First, how do you explain that levying a tax to fund our federal government will increase its deficit? As for your complaint this tax will hurt college students, let's do some simple math. A $40 per-year increase of the gas expense for the average person will mean a monthly increase of about $3.33.

If you still think that will put a crimp in your lifestyle, then let me give you two ways you can fund this increase.

Example 1: Forego a pitcher of beer once a month or any combination of beer and mixed drinks that will produce the needed savings.

Example 2: Walk three miles per day to take care of your on your car getting 30 miles per gallon, a 30-day month and the price of gas being $1.10 per gallon.) If you want to walk four miles, then you only need to walk 23 days to save $3.33, and that means you can still use your car for shopping trips on the weekend. However, if your car only gets 20 miles per gallon, then you only have to walk two miles each day or 2.6 miles for 23 days each month.

It seems to me that the second example would be the better solution. Not only because I enjoy beer too, but also because if everyone walked, there would be not only less parking congestion on campus, but in the rest of Manhattan as well. This would mean that there would no longer be a debate about whether to increase student fees to fund a parking garage.

In addition, there might also not be the need to expand the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. This is due to the fact that instead of driving to the Rec Complex to exercise, people would be getting their exercise just by walking.

The funds being used to pay for that planned project might be able to be used to help pay for, say, the expansion of Farrell Library.

Maybe President Clinton had K-State students in mind after all.

Vietnam parallels do exist, but we can't pull out at this moment

Editor,

It is correct and proper to draw, as you do, similarities between the current mission in Somalia and our mission in the Republic of Vietnam circa 1963-64. But, as the cliché states, those who cannot learn from history are doomed to repeat it. While pulling all U.S. troops out of Somalia would not be repeating history, it would be learning all the wrong lessons.

In 1963, the U.S. military had a very poorly defined mission: "Contain" Soviet Communism.

In 1993, the U.S. military has been given another poorly defined mission: Feed Somalis.

In 1993, the U.S. government is increasing the level of commitment without defining a mission or goals.

As we remember from our history classes, in 1973, the U.S. lost the Vietnam War.

However, we cannot pull out. If we pulled out now, whether or not you wish to believe this, we would be in effect negating everything those men died for.

Two things need to happen immediately. First, for the sake of the service members currently serving in Somalia, we (as in the federal government) need to define a mission. Are we only there to dispense food? Or are we there to dispense food, keep the peace and reign in warlords with bad attitudes? I personally would prefer the first option, but the United States has been pushed beyond that by events. This fight has been picked for us by Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

Second, we need to give the troops the material and manpower to ensure that they can complete the mission we have defined for them. Until our troops have the ability to defend themselves effectively, bloodbaths like last Sunday are going to, sadly, be repeated constantly.

It is very important to understand we cannot just pack up and leave. The United States would be squandering foreign respect, a commodity that is almost as valuable to our continued well-being as public goodwill is right now for President Boris Yeltsin. Neither our allies nor our potential foes will respect a nation that pulls out of a multi-national coalition solely because we didn't understand what we were doing and we, as a nation, got our hands burned for it.

A thought to leave you with: What do you think Saddam Hussein would have done had he thought he could make us turn tail and run home after only 16 casualties. I would venture to bet the war would have definitely had a different ending and, as a veteran of that war, I doubt I would be here to write this letter.

A little common sense can do wonders when running, driving

Editor,

In the darkness of Tuesday morning, Sept. 28, I was driving east on Marlatt Avenue when I experienced an instant terror. All at once, I saw two shadowy figures directly in front of me (yes, on the edge of the avenue), running side by side with their backs to traffic, and as near as I could determine, they were wearing no light-reflecting material. Luckily, I was traveling slower than the 50-mph speed limit. So, I could evade these two unyielding runners.

When I was in grade school, we learned that pedestrians should walk or run on the left side of the road and facing approaching traffic. But these two and several other runners lately seem to ignore this useful advice.

With their posteriors to oncoming traffic, they seem to convey the message they have no responsibility in this space that should be shared by walkers, runners, bike riders and vehicles, namely our streets. Or perhaps their message is even more uncomplimentary. The very runners who seem to have no sense of responsibility on the streets remind me of a few bike riders who run stop signs or vehicle drivers who ignore the rules and responsibilities of driving.

My final word to runners: When you go for a run, please don't leave your brain at home.

Cats look to avenge 31-7 thrashing from last year

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

4-0 and 2-3.

Those are the records of the K-State and the Kansas football teams, respectively. But when the two rivals meet at 1:10 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium, those records won't mean anything.

Four of the past six games have been determined by less than a touchdown, and the Jayhawks' 31-7 victory in Lawrence a year ago was the first time since 1985 the margin of victory was more than 20 points.

Kansas coach Glen Mason said the importance of the game is a given.

"I remember my first year here in Lawrence, and someone asked me if this was a big game," Mason said.

"Of course it is. The reason it is a big game is because it is Kansas vs. Kansas State. It should be built in."

K-State coach Bill Snyder said even though this game is important to the season, it is not the biggest game of the year.

"I would argue, but I would not accept it as the biggest game of the season. I don't view it that way," Snyder said. "Our focus has got to be to perform and prepare well. If our concentration is focused on last year's loss, then we aren't prepared to play."

Snyder said the changes Kansas made because of injuries in last week's 24-6 victory against Colorado State has profited them.

"They have had to do innovated things with their team," Snyder said. "Their week off before the Colorado State game was beneficial for them. Their changes worked very well. They played hard and have put it all back together."

One change the Jayhawks made was the switching of quarterbacks from Fred Thomas to Asheiki Preston. Snyder said Preston could have an effect against them.

"Preston threw the ball well last week," Snyder said.

"He can throw downfield and hit the tight spots. He'll be a significant player in the game."

The defense also changed for Kansas. It went from three defensive linemen and four linebackers to four defensive linemen and three linebackers.

Mason said he is impressed with K-State's team.

"There is a reason that they are 4-0," he said. "They are good in the kicking game, and their secondary is tremendous. They've got an all-American center, great running backs and a great quarterback that's playing well for them.

"They are in the same class that Michigan State is in."

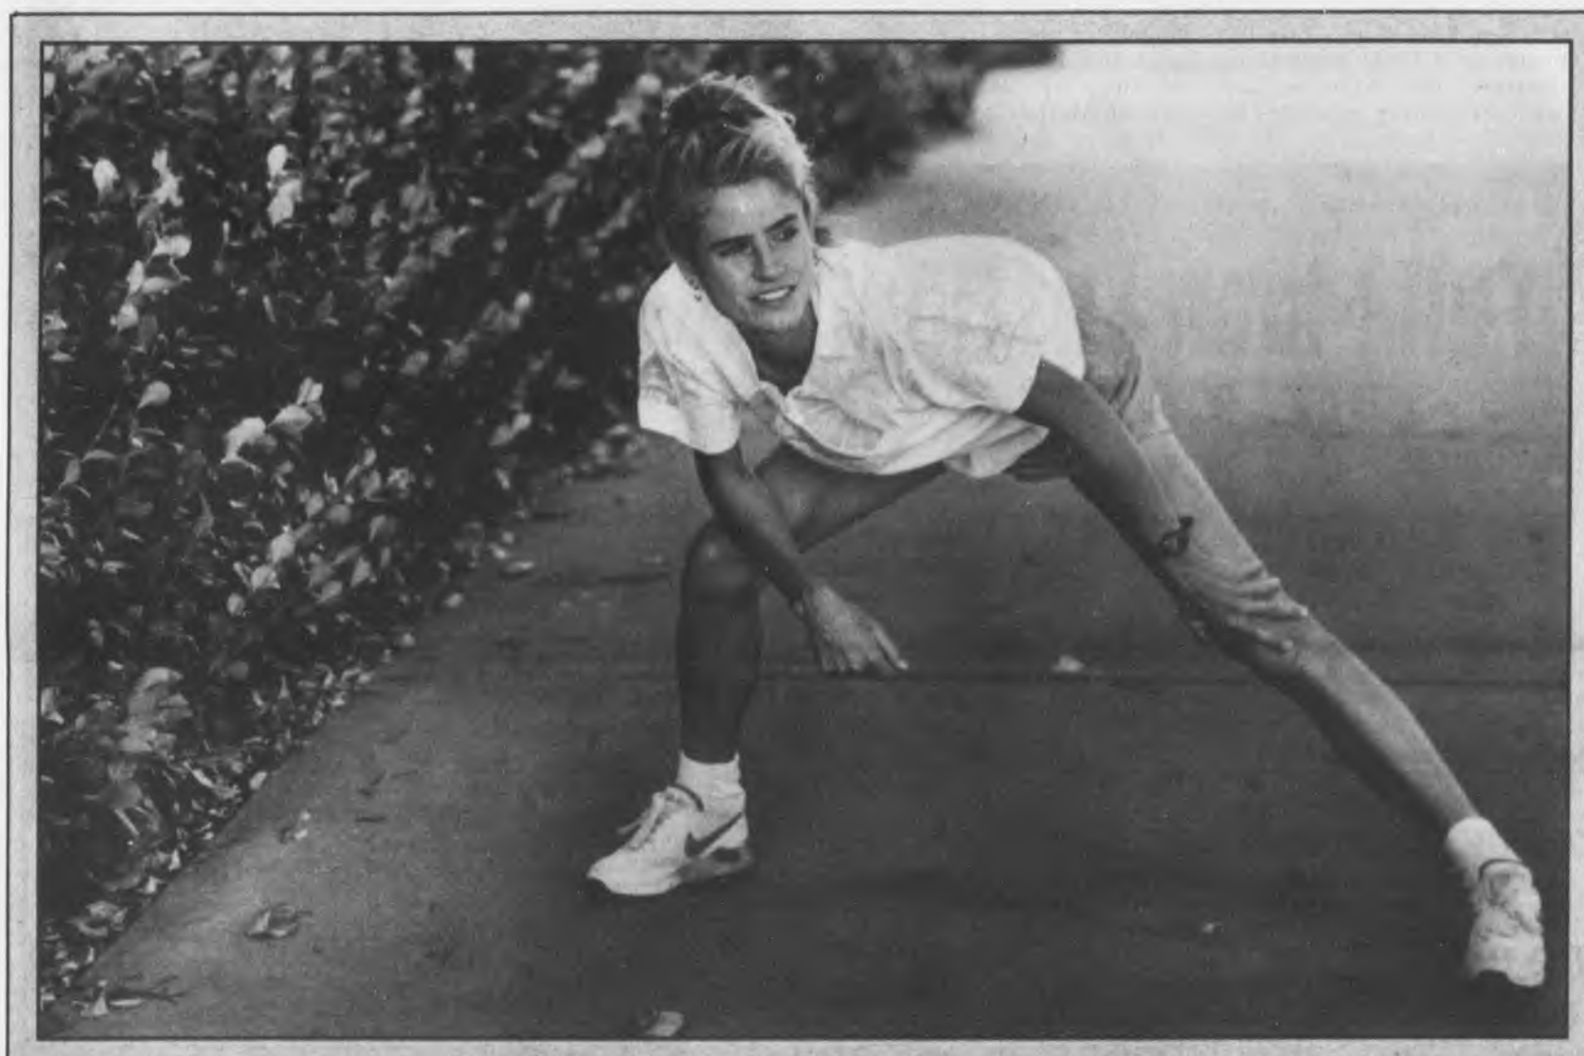
Mason and strong safety Clint Bowen said they are impressed with quarterback Chad May's ability.

"He sits in the pocket, can scramble around back there and can throw it with accuracy for short or long distances," Mason said.

"May is a good quarterback," Bowen said. "He has a lot of composure on the field. He appears to be the general out there."

K-State wide receiver Andre Coleman said he doesn't expect the same results from last year's game to happen again on Saturday.

"We got embarrassed, and we are determined not to let that happen to us," Coleman said.



May said he has heard about last season's game, but he expects the game to be a battle.

"Everybody is telling me about last year," May said. "I haven't heard much about the rivalry. From what I've seen on the film, they are a good team.

"It's going to be a war on Saturday."

Roommates and teammates are words that may be used to describe Paulette Staats and Jeanene Rugan.

Another way to describe them is defending Big Eight champions.

As members of the only varsity sport at K-State to win a conference title last year, Staats and Rugan are counted upon to lead a young cross country team through another grueling season.

"We try to run together during races and pump each other up when we have the air," Rugan said.

Staats and Rugan have been roommates for the last two years but said they see each other more at practice than they do at home.

"She is really encouraging. If someone is hurting and starting to fall back, she is always there to bring them back," Rugan said of Staats.

However, Rugan said there is nothing that can really help her during a race. She said she tells herself she is in good shape and not tired.

"When I am at the starting line, I just concentrate on breathing and relaxing," Staats said. "I don't get nervous anymore. I consider it another challenge."

Last weekend at the Oklahoma State Cowboy Jamboree, the Wildcats successfully defended their title from a year ago behind the strength of a third-place finish by Staats and a fourth-place finish from Rugan.

"It's certainly nice to get the win, and I feel we made the statement that we are a team to be reckoned with," Coach Terry Drake said.

As a result of Staats' performance, she was nominated for the K-State Athlete-of-Week. She covered the 5,000-meter course in a time of 17:46.4, nearly a full minute faster than her first race at the Woody Greeno/Nebraska Invitational.

"Paulette has a lot of experience, and the younger girls really look up to her because she has been through it all before," Drake said.

Rugan was named the Big Eight Runner of the Month for her second place-finish at Nebraska, with a time of 18:12.3.

"I really admire her for her determination and dedication," Staats said. "I will miss running with her when the season is over."

The biggest improvement, Drake said, is that team members are growing closer to one another and are realizing they have a good team.

"We have the potential to do better than last year if we don't let down," Staats said.

Drake said both Staats and Rugan have the potential to become all-Americans. He said the times at the first two meets are only seconds from K-State all-American runners in the past.

"I don't think they realize it yet, but if they keep working hard, they can get there," Drake said.

The next challenge for Staats and Rugan will come Oct. 17 at Penn State.

"I know that they will both do well," Drake said. "They both put the team as a first goal."

Jordan leaves NBA as the best to play the game

BOB LEHMAN

Michael Jordan retired from basketball Wednesday. He leaves as the best player the game has seen.

I am a Chicagoan and a sports fan. I'm not real sure how to feel about this. There are aspects of this story that make me happy, but there are just as many that make me feel terrible.

He is the best to have ever played. It is great to see him leave under his own terms. Unlike the other two legends of my time, Magic Johnson and Larry Bird, Jordan made his own decision.

Johnson was "forced" out by fellow players because of his positive HIV test. Bird spent the better part of his last couple of seasons on the sideline and in traction with severe back problems.

Jordan, however, left as the most important player on a three-time NBA championship team.

He smiled throughout his announcement and the questions that followed. Normally, this is the hardest and most emotional event in a player's career. There were no tears, though — only smiles.

Why is he so happy? Two reasons. First, he achieved everything he set out to do in professional basketball. He did all he could, more than any other player has done, and he is content to leave now.

More importantly, though, he claimed his life back. In his press conference he said, "they (the press) go into my personal life," because "they (the press) can't blame my basketball."

The privacy he has been without for the past nine years is his again. No wonder he's smiling.

For all these reasons, I am happy for him and am glad to see him go. There is one overwhelming fact that remains, and it tears me up inside. I never got to see him play.

Of course, I have seen countless games on television. I have the three championship series on tape. But I was never able to go to Chicago Stadium and have that experience.

I had never really known until then what it was I was missing.

But right then and there, I decided I was going to get tickets to a game while I was home during Christmas break and experience it for myself.

As big a sports fan as I am, it went far beyond cheering for my favorite team.

It meant being able to say I saw the best. I have an unbelievable amount of respect and envy for people who can say they saw athletes such as Jim Brown or Ted Williams.

Michael Jordan is the best to play basketball. He is a part of my generation. It was the chance of a lifetime, and now he's gone.

I am happy that he was able to do things his way. It is what he deserves, but I cannot help feeling a deep sense of loss.

It is a loss of not only personal opportunity, but of an ideal.

There will never again be a professional athlete like M.J. He has become the standard by which all others are measured. He excelled as much off the court as he did on.

He was a nearly perfect role model for kids and adults alike. People really do want to "be like Mike."

Then there is the effect he had on the entire city of Chicago. He brought a city together. He gave the "second city" something it could be proud of.

The sporting world will miss him; the city of Chicago will miss him, and I will miss him.

So long Michael Jeffrey Jordan. And thank you.

Cornhuskers upend Cowboys 27-13

ASSOCIATED PRESS

STILLWATER, Okla. — Nebraska righted itself after a sluggish first half, getting big plays from its offense and special teams to beat Oklahoma State 27-13 and give coach Tom Osborne his 200th victory.

Nebraska (5-0, 1-0 Big Eight) hasn't lost to the Cowboys since 1961. The teams tied in 1973.

The seventh-ranked Cornhuskers fell behind 13-3 in the first half as Oklahoma State (3-2, 0-1) took advantage of good field position and held tailback Calvin Jones in check.

Jones, as well as the rest of the Husker offense, got going in the second half when field position swung in the Cornhuskers' favor. When Barron Miles blocked a punt and recovered it in the end zone early in the fourth quarter, Nebraska had the lead for the first time and was on its way.

Jones sealed things with a 44-yard touchdown run with 3:38 remaining. He finished with 136 yards on 21 carries.

Osborne, in his 21st season, is 200-46-3. He is the 11th coach to win 200 games and joins Joe Paterno of Penn State and Bobby Bowden of Florida State as the only active coaches to do so.

Jones, who had played only one snap in the previous three games because of a knee injury, had just 26 yards on nine carries in the first half.

But his 20-yard run midway through the third quarter put the ball at the Oklahoma State 4, and on the next play, Tommie Frazier scored on an option keeper to tie the score at 13. It was the first rushing touchdown against the Cowboys this season.

It was Oklahoma State's fourth possession of the half, none of which started outside the Cowboys' 20.

Oklahoma State failed to convert a fake punt on fourth-and-8 at the Cornhuskers' 45 late in the fourth quarter, and three plays later, Jones scored on his long run to end any doubt.

Aside from a play or two, Oklahoma State could not have scripted the first half any better. The Cowboys did not turn the ball over, controlled the clock and handled Jones.

Union TVs offer closed caption

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

When it was time to buy new televisions, the K-State Union didn't buy ones with the closed-caption feature on purpose.

The new ones just happened to have the feature, Jack Sills, director of the Union, said.

"In retrospect, I think it's probably something we should have looked for in the screens," Sills said. "Because it has better enabled us to serve students at Kansas State University, especially those that have a hearing impairment or deficiency."

Closed caption is a feature of all high-quality televisions, Terri Eddy, recreation manager of the Union, said.

"We bought top of the line," Eddy said.

Closed caption does not appear on the large TV screen in the recreation area.

"The television down here at least 90 percent of the time is on MTV," Eddy said.

Eddy said she believes closed captioning is great for the people who need it.

"It's not hard to miss part of a conversation in this room. Being able to read the words can help a person catch up on the story."

NICKI SANDATE
SENIOR IN SOCIOLOGY AND WOMEN'S STUDIES

"But, for the people who don't, I think it distracts from the picture," she said.

The closed caption can be turned off.

"We have ours turned off," Eddy said. "I guess most of the students have decided that this is going to be an MTV-TV," Eddy said.

Students haven't asked the staff to turn the closed caption back on, she said.

"But, we will turn it back on if a student asks us to," Eddy said.

The closed caption has never been turned off on the big screen in the TV room, Bob Sultzer, building manager, said.

"The caption can be turned on and off with a remote control, but we don't want to leave it down here because it might turn up missing," Sultzer said.

Some students like the feature.

"I think the closed captioning feature is great. It's super," Nicki Sandate, senior in sociology and women's studies, said.

Sandate said she thinks this option can even be helpful to people who don't have a hearing impairment.

"It's not hard to miss part of a conversation in this room," she said.

"Being able to read the words can help a person catch up on the story."

All students at K-State can enjoy watching television in the Union because of this component, Heather Ballew, sophomore in public relations, said.

"I think it's great. My brother is hearing impaired, and we have closed caption at home," Ballew said.

Although the words that zip across the Union TV room screen are helpful to some students, it is often distracting to other students.

"I always find myself reading it," Jarret Barell, sophomore in geology, said.

"It is kind of annoying because I always concentrate on the words and miss the pictures."

Machines accept Wildcat cards

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

Wildcat-card users do not have to dig for spare change to purchase items at some campus vending machines anymore.

Twenty-one vending machines across campus are equipped with Wildcat-card readers, and 32 additional machines are scheduled to be in operation with the cards by mid-October, Bill Wisdom, K-State Union vending manager, said.

The new machines are being installed at the Veterinary Medicine Complex, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, Edwards, Marlatt, Goodnow and Durland halls.

The Wildcat Account, a declining-balance account available through the Union, allows individuals to use their Wildcat card to make transactions without paying cash.

Each vending machine accessible to the Wildcat card is equipped on the outside with a visible display and reader. A box on the inside of the machine communicates with a controller that is hooked by phone line to the computers in the Union, Wisdom said.

Individuals swipe their Wildcat cards through the reader, and a wait signal is given while the account is verified. A selection may then be made, and the balance after the transaction is displayed.

Operation of the new devices on 32 machines has been delayed until the telecommunications department can hook up the phone lines for the controllers, Wisdom said.

Vending machines in Eisenhower, Ackert, Cardwell and Bluemont halls and the Union were made accessible to the Wildcat cards last spring.

Although Wisdom said it is too early to tell if the system is cost-effective, he said he felt it would be an effective system for Wildcat-card holders.

"I really think it's a benefit to the user to use the Wildcat card," Wisdom said. "I use mine. It's real simple."

Bryan Yates, freshman in pre-law, said he uses his Wildcat card in the Union vending-machine area about once a week.

"I think it's more convenient to use a card with an account on it than having to walk around with change all the time," he said.

Andrea McGrath, junior in speech pathology, said if she did not use her Wildcat card at the vending machine, she would have to withdraw money from the automatic teller machine. That, she said, costs 50 cents per withdrawal.

"This way I can budget my money, and I won't use my money indiscriminately," she said.

Wisdom said although there were some initial problems with Wildcat cards not cooperating with the readers, all problems have been corrected.

"I encourage people to talk to me," Wisdom said. "We want to know what people like and don't like about the system."

Running for leukemia

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

As part of the annual Fiji Run for Leukemia, the men of Phi Gamma Delta will meet today with fellow Fijis at the University of Kansas to carry the K-State-KU game ball from Lawrence to Manhattan.

Today's run marks the 20th year for the event, which was started in memory of Rod Morgan, a Fiji member from K-State who died of leukemia in 1974.

In the past 19 years, the run has raised more than $205,000 for the Leukemia Society of America, said Tammy Hale, a program coordinator for the Kansas chapter of the Leukemia Society of America in Wichita.

Also, Fiji is the largest organization in Kansas to contribute to the Leukemia Society, Hale said.

Thursday night, several Fiji members drove to Lawrence to spend the night at the KU Fiji House. At 8 a.m., members of both Fiji houses will run along Kansas Highway 24 with the game ball.

CONTRIBUTIONS
Can be sent to the Fiji House, 1614 Fairchild Ave., Manhattan, KS., 66502.

Runners, periodically replaced by other Fijis, will reach Manhattan at about 5 p.m.

Scott Moore, sophomore in wildlife biology, said he is looking forward to his first run. At about 1:30 p.m., he will join the other runners at St. Mary's.

"I decided to run because it's been a tradition for the last 20 years," he said. "I learned from some of the actives that it's a good time, and I'm looking forward to doing it."

Although the K-State-KU game represents a rivalry between schools, the run is a time for camaraderie between the two chapters, Trevor Williams, K-State's Fiji assistant philanthropy chair, said.

"There's no competition," Williams said. "We just try to raise as much as we can."

The run raises money through collections made from sponsors. The money is then given to the Leukemia Society of America. The society's mission is to find a cure for leukemia and its allied diseases: lymphomas, multiple melanoma and Hodgkin's disease.

Recently, the Leukemia Society announced its Cure 2000 program. The goal of this program in to find a cure for some forms of leukemia by the year 2000, Hale said. The money raised by the Fiji's will go toward this program.

"All monies the Fijis raise is ear marked for leukemia research," Hale said.

Last year, the event raised about $20,000, Williams said. At the game, a check will be presented to the Leukemia Society, and a football signed by all the players will be presented to the Morgan family, Williams said.

Gospel singer records album with children

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

A Manhattan gospel singer is making an album of praise and worship for children.

Small children's voices, Sunday school songs and instruments such as the violin and the flute will be included in the album, Anna Buckland, gospel and inspirational singer, said.

"I think it is encouraging to have children involved with something like this because that is how I grew in my faith," she said. "I feel like this is way for me to help children grow closer to God.

"It's just something I'll do in my life that will leave a little part of me behind."

Buckland has performed for the Purple Power Play, local coffeehouses and churches. She sang in Nashville, Tenn., and she has done performances to raise money for the homeless.

Buckland became interested in gospel music while she was a member of the Living Word Choir at the First Christian Church in Manhattan.

"I had a heart's desire to sing for the Lord when I was 13 years old, but I didn't think my voice was good enough. I couldn't sing at all," Buckland said. "I couldn't even hold a tune to a bucket. So, I just sang in the choir."

She said she believes God knows the desires of people's hearts.

"I believe that if it is something pleasing to him, he'll give it to us," she said.

"I sang with the celebration singers while I was a student at Manhattan Christian College. After I graduated, I worked at the K-State Union. This gave me the opportunity to sing solo gospel music during lunch-hour gigs."

People often frown upon gospel music because it is different, she said.

"Gospel music is different, but people have different gifts and styles of music," Buckland said. "I think all styles should have their say just to be fair."

She said she hopes there is a message in her music that will bring people closer to God.

"I feel like the voice that he has given to me — I just want to give it back to him," Buckland said. "I want to plant seeds of faith along the way and encourage people to build their faith without being pushy.

"I don't think that being pushy wins people over. I think lifestyle actions are a more appropriate way to let people know about the Lord," she said.

Buckland will be singing for Picnic Under The Stars at 7 p.m. Wednesday in Manhattan Town Center.

Indian students help victims

TONYA FOSTER

Santhosh Thadigiri, graduate student in civil engineering and secretary of the group, said 32,000 people were killed in the earthquake.

"I know others in other parts of the United States that have relatives in the earthquake," Thadigiri said. "We keep in touch through news network."

The group is collecting contributions to be sent to the American Red Cross, he said.

"We will have a table in the Union on Friday from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.," Thadigiri said. "All donations are tax-exempt."

He said people have been supportive of the victims.

"Response has been quite good, but our efforts haven't been publicized," Thadigiri said. "We're thinking about putting contribution boxes in the departments to make students more aware."

The group has been handing out fliers telling students the contribution table is in the K-State Union, Thadigiri said.

"Everybody who comes to contribute would be a great help," he said.

Vani Bolnedi, graduate student in grain science and I.S.A. member, said it was a collective effort to help the victims in India.

There is a possibility a table will be set up in the Union next week. The group will not stop taking donations, Bolnedi said.

Shubham Maheshwari, graduate student in chemical engineering, said the K-State chapter of the I.S.A is not the only group that is helping.

"All of the universities with I.S.A chapters are doing this."

BY STEVEN ROCK

Beaten by the barrel

"If you'll look to your left, you'll see yet another breathtaking view of beautiful Niagara Falls. And straight ahead, floating directly toward us and seemingly bleeding profusely, you'll see what appears to be ... a large barrel?"

Indeed, the tour guide of the Maid of the Mist tour boat was right, though Weekend doubts it was in those exact words. John David Munday, who vowed in 1985 never again to go over Niagara Falls in a barrel, broke his own promise recently and became the first person ever to do it twice.

And what were his first words after being recovered by the tour vessel?

"Oh God, I hit hard," he muttered. "It was a bad one. It just knocked me out."

Munday was cited for violating the Niagara Parks Act and the Trespass to Property Act. The 56-year-old diesel mechanic could be fined as much as $15,000.

They say experience is the best teacher. Somebody needs to tell Munday.

We were kind of hoping to see them test results!

Weekend can't help but laugh at this whole Joey Buttafuoco thing. Surely you know the story, so we won't bore you with the details. But we do find it humorous that Buttafuoco pleaded guilty only after it was suggested he take a physical exam — a physical exam that could have confirmed Amy Fisher's detailed description of his physical attributes.

Kind of brings those genital wart rumors into fruition, don't it?

Yuck.

We're sad to see leaders shop in toy penis section

It seems that Rep. Jimmy Benefield, a state lawmaker from Atlanta who brought a toy penis to the House floor, won't be charged with showing the toy to a 13-year-old page.

The toy consisted of a penis that popped up when an apron covering it was raised. Jason Bunkley, the page, had said a legislator summoned him to his seat, directed his attention to the apron and displayed the fake penis.

Bunkley, however, was not completely sure which representative did it, and charges against Benefield were dropped.

Isn't it a reassuring feeling to know our nation's leaders are spending their time in the office so darned productively?

Please, no silver dollars

Anything going on tomorrow around Manhattan?

Ahh, just kidding.

Rumor has it that more than 40,000 fans are going to cram into KSU Stadium to watch the game that, in recent years, has been the turning point of the Wildcat season. And the Cats are looking to go 5-0 for the first time since 1961.

But records take a back seat this weekend — state bragging rights are on the line.

But, contrary to popular belief, the game most likely will NOT break the K-State attendance record. In 1974, when the record was set, there were more temporary bleachers set up than are currently available. Jack Key, K-State's assistant athletic director, said only 43,000 tickets will be sold. The record is 43,576.

One final thought: Weekend recommends that adoring fans keep their spare change in their pockets.

PHONE TAG

Time: 6:50 p.m.
Date: Thurs., Oct. 7
Place: K-State Union.
Number of rings: 6 (a record low!).
Answerer: Mark Obermeyer
Year and major: "I don't go to school."
(Congratulations. It's overrated.)

A. "Pizza Hut."
Q. (Wait a minute – I'm the funny guy here.) Is this the K-State Union?
A. "Do you want thin or crispy?"
Q. (Listen, buddy. I can run over there, you know.) This is the Union, correct?
A. "Yeah, it is."
Q. That's what I thought. Good evening. I'm calling from the Collegian, and I was wondering if you would want to take a couple of minutes this evening and BS with me.
A. "BS? Well, I'd love to. I'm a good BSer (Yeah, that Pizza Hut crack was a good one.) But I have to be somewhere at 7, and that's in ten minutes."
Q. Hey, Man. That gives you five minutes.
A. "Okay."
Q. Where are you headed this evening?
A. "Well, I'm here with a young lady, and we're going to some 'Pink Triangles' thing. It's about homophobia."
Q. Good for you. Would this young lady be a girlfriend?
A. "She's a girl, and she's a friend, but she's not a girlfriend. And don't tell my fiancè about this. There have been rumors."
Q. Does your girlfriend live in Manhattan?
A. "No, she doesn't."
Q. Then you have nothing to worry about.

WEEKEND

▶ GAME DAY

The K-State/KU game will be televised at 10:30 p.m. on Prime Sports Network (Channel 24).

Where everybody knows your name

As Eric Clapton's acoustic "Layla" played on the sound system, Magill ground her hips to the rhythm.

The topless Magill confided in the journalist. Although she likes Clapton, she said, she never listens to "Slow Hand" at work.

"That's my make love album," she said. Magill returned to her dancing and sang the lyrics in a frail voice:

"Layla, you got me on my knees, Layla ..."

The journalist is not a pervert. He is a writer. And Magill, who takes her clothes off in a loud bar, is not a stripper. She's an exotic dancer at Dr. Love's, a dance club in Manhattan.

Magill, who has "danced" for about 10 years, said she gets more fringe benefits than the cash and the art of the dance.

"I like the surprised looks," she said.

Surprised looks didn't end with the customers. The journalist learned the dance clubs didn't adhere to the stereotypes. Instead of the smoky, knife-wielding atmosphere people might expect, the clubs often take on a sort of family atmosphere.

"It's really like 'Cheers'," Lee, another dancer at the club, said. The club has mostly regulars, whom the dancers often come to know on a first-name basis. In addition to blue- and white-collar workers, the bar attracts soldiers from nearby Fort Riley.

Todd Vaughn, from Fort Riley, said he visits the bar every night except Sundays.

"The atmosphere's cool," he said. "Ain't nobody gonna bother you here. And they got some nice women out here. They're not stuck up. They talk to you."

Another customer, Vernon, shouted over the mid-80s rock and explained the attraction to the dance club in more compassionate terms. The club is an exclusive place, he said, and the dancers treat him right.

"They make you feel like a human being for the first time," he said.

Eternity, a dancer at the Hollywood Supper Club in Junction City, has been dancing for two years. She said she dances with the philosophy, "If you got it, flaunt it," and that she meets a lot of good people.

"They want attention," she said.

The attention pays off. Eternity, 21, said she can make from $150 to $200 nightly with the tips customers slip into her G-string. Eternity, who lifts weights to enhance her image, said she uses the money to support herself as she studies graphic design at vocational school.

That dollar bill is the most touch allowed in the Hollywood Supper Club, owner Jerry Barber said. In days past, customers at the club could lie on the dance floor with bills in their mouths. Ever since he took over as owner, Barber said, that's been a no-go.

Mercedes, a dancer at Dr. Love's, said Riley County allows touch in some clubs as long as touch is from the dancer to the customer and not the reverse. Junction City clubs, she said, have too many problems with prostitution.

Tom Wefoloski, administrative assistant to the chief of police for the Junction City Police Department, said his department wasn't aware of any prostitution in the bars.

"Mainly, we check for underage drinkers," he said.

Mike Watkins, co-manager of the Malibu Club in Junction City, doesn't mind calling his bar a strip bar. Watkins said he also wouldn't know anything about prostitution. The most trouble he's heard of is hustling. Dancers try to get customers to buy them drinks. The drinks aren't real, though and the dancers split the cash with the bartenders.

Watkins said hustling doesn't go on at the Malibu Club. He said the Malibu Club, which attracts customers of all backgrounds, has been working on improving its image. Other strip bars in Junction City, he said, have problems with hustling and fights.

On the whole, though, Wefoloski said people have nothing to fear when they visit strip bars.

"Not if that's what you want to do," he said.

Story by Tom Lister

"Poison" gets close as a customer holds a bill ready to pay for the dance at Dr. Loves'. The club has four dancers who specialize in lap and chair dancing. Because dancers may come back to the same customer many times, tips are usually a dollar.

Film prompts discussion

About 200 people attended the Union Program Council's Thursday evening presentation of the documentary, "Pink Triangles."

"I was overwhelmed by the amount of people who attended the presentation," Jeff Strater, UPC program adviser, said."We really weren't sure what to expect, so we set up seating for about 100 people and then added as many seats as we had room for.

"We had people leaning against the wall and sitting on the floor because of the lack of chair space."

Almost everyone stayed after the documentary to take part in the open forum to discuss impressions and feelings about the presentation.

"We hoped people would stay after the documentary and participate in an open forum to express what they thought or felt," Strater said.

"We thought about trying a panel discussion but felt that the open forum would create a more interactive discussion."

Jason Leuker, sophomore undecided and co-president of the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society, said he was impressed with the turnout.

"I was shocked," he said. "I didn't expect it to be wall-to-wall people."

One of the topics discussed from the video material was public display of homosexual affections.

"Some people get offended when they see a homosexual couple holding hands," Nikka Hellman, sophomore in psychology, said. "Yet the video pointed out that heterosexual displays are everywhere, all the time."

Leuker said he also saw that situation as a problem.

"I found it ironic that heterosexual displays are all over, but you can't do the same as a homosexual," he said.

"I found it ironic that heterosexual displays are all over, but you can't do the same as a homosexual."

JASON LEUKER
CO-PRESIDENT OF BISEXUAL AND GAY AND LESBIAN SOCIETY

"Overcoming this is a slow process" he said. "It gradually has to be worked into our ideals by exposing this to the public."

Hellman said the public's perception of homophobia hasn't changed much over time.

"Even though the material was a decade old, it is still very relevant for today," Hellman said.

Another audience member agreed and said though the film is more than 11 years old, most of the things he has seen haven't changed much.

A female audience member spoke about the military's homophobic views.

"The military is concerned with homosexual relationships developing and how that would affect their image," she said.

One man said not all Christians believe the same things Robertson does.

"I'm glad someone pointed out that not all Christians believe the same," said Jennifer Lee, program adviser to the UPC multicultural committee.

"You shouldn't categorize people."

Overall, Leuker said he was impressed by the video and the following discussion.

"I think it did a lot to stimulate thinking about homophobia," he said. "It got them to speak out and maybe learn something."

Shuttle will alleviate parking problem

years and will lose 60 to 120 spaces for one year with the construction of the art museum," he said.

The shuttle system would ease some of the demand by connecting Bramlage Coliseum with different locations on campus, Vellanki said.

"A round trip covers a route of four miles and would take about 30 minutes."

Vellanki said the $560,820 estimated cost of the shuttle system is much less expensive than constructing a parking garage.

He also said the shuttle system does a better job of addressing long-term parking problems than constructing new parking lots would.

"Every new building we place on campus will demand some parking spaces," Vellanki said. "New parking lots will also take up a lot of green space."

For the shuttle system to work, students and faculty will have to share the cost, he said.

"Faculty and staff members would pay about $170, and students would pay $150 in parking fees per year," Vellanki said.

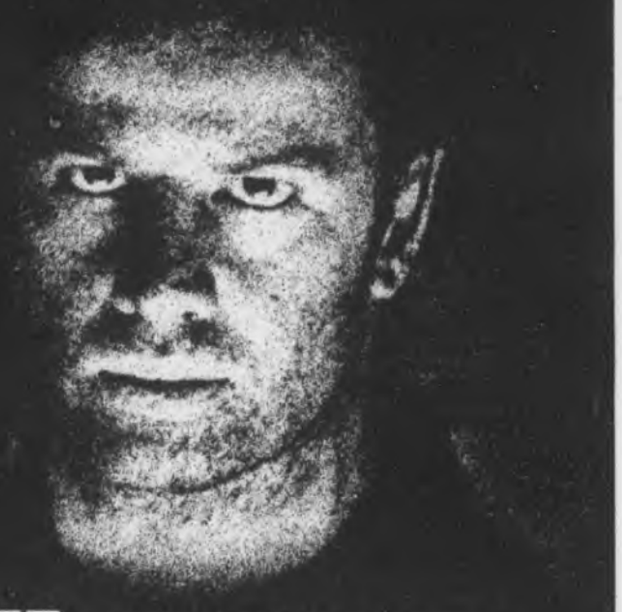
Jim Persinger, chair of the K-State parking study committee, said he thinks the parking proposal has the potential to improve the quality of student life at K-State.

"We're very excited about this proposal," Persinger said. "We think it can change the lives of students and will help solve student problems."

Persinger said even though the parking proposal is finished, the challenge of implementing it is just beginning.

"This is only the first step," Persinger said. "Student Senate will still have to decide a funding scheme."

Persinger said the shuttle system could be in place by fall 1994 if the students really want it.



"If this is going to be done, students will have to do it," he said.

In other business, Senate approved a $2,300 request to bring award-winning novelist Tobias Wolff to K-State for an Oct. 19 reading, film and panel discussion.

In an effort to increase its visibility among students, Senate approved a proposal requiring senators and interns to purchase identification tags to be worn on the days of Senate meetings.

Mating cries create many sleepless nights

Dear Cassandra,

I have a rather funny but exasperating problem. I live on the second floor of an apartment complex above a single lady. Everything was fine until about three weeks ago, when it seems she got a boyfriend.

Now, they wake my husband and I up every night with loud moaning and wailing. You can also hear the bed springs and bed bouncing.

If I didn't have to get up at 3:30 a.m., I would not care what they did, but they're wrecking my sleep. I have never spoken to her but would like advice on how to get them to be more quiet. Short of stomping on the floor or writing tasteless notes, I don't know what to do.

Signed,

Bleary-eyed and Grouchy

Dear Bleary Girl,

Heh-heh. Oh, the fun you could have with this woman.

You could write a polite little letter suggesting she curb her late-night sexual habits. Explain your sleeping needs and, ask kindly for a cessation of her newly adopted noisy activities.

If the problem continues after this Miss Manners-approved suggestion, feel free to bang on your floor with large power tools and furniture until the noises stop.

More convincing, give your sex-obsessed neighbor a house call whenever the moaning begins. Just stare with your red, swollen eyes, holding a large hammer when she, or her mad-cap lover, asks what you want.

If this doesn't work — it means war.

When the downstairs sex dance begins, you and your husband start your own moaning — and screaming, and screeching, and thudding, and rolling and squeaking — everything, as if you were making whoopee yourselves. Let it rip. Start this every time they start.

If none of the above work, you and your spouse should invest in a sturdy pair of ear plugs.

Connor sings blues tonight

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Blues guitarist Joanna Connor will bring her own brand of gender-barrier-busting blues into town tonight at the Warehouse.

Connor is no stranger to the Manhattan scene. She has played here several times, including a recent benefit concert for summer flood relief.

"Manhattan was conveniently on the route between two shows," Connor said Wednesday in a telephone interview. "I was so glad we could come. We all had a blast."

Connor said it is an uphill battle being a woman in the male-dominated field of blues guitar.

"It's like you have to go out and prove that you can play every night," she said. "It's time for the scene to realize it's a two-way street."

Connor has released two compact discs on the Blind Pig label, her 1989 debut "Believe It!" and the 1992 "Fight."

Although she has not been able to secure a record deal, Connor has earned the respect of her peer blues performers. She has shared stages with legends such as Buddy Guy, B.B. King and even Jimmy Page.

When she's not on the road, Connor resides in Chicago with her husband and 6-year-old son. Connor will be kicking off a mini-tour of the Midwest and Southwest tonight. Later, she'll fly off to play several dates in Europe.

Connor said she likes small venues like Manhattan that offer an intimate concert experience and a date between major shows.

"Manhattan has become a great routing city for acts on their way to K.C. or Chicago," she said.

While she may be a kind of maverick in the blues world, audiences around the world have given her show favorable reviews.

"Of course I can't speak for everybody, but usually they're all very supportive of me," she said.

JOANNA CONNOR

Connor will play at the Warehouse, 318 Houston St., tonight at 9:30 p.m.

Buffalo Tom polishes sound

MEGANNE MOORE
Collegian

Buffalo Tom's latest release, "Big Red Letter Day," leaves this Boston band nowhere near a slow musical stance.

The trio's fourth compact disc is a post-sampling of small advances the band has made from its so-called "Dinosaur Jr." days of heavy guitars.

BT's eccentric background stems the influence Dinosaur Jr.'s J. Mascis left when he produced their first two CDs. Those loud-sounding guitar days are long gone. BT has filed down its guitars and, they are back to more traditional up-beat labels such as "polished" and "emotionally honest."

A most ideal representative of those words is found in the first single, "Soda Jerk," savoring MTV and college radio airplay. Displaying its ability in experimental lyrics and songwriting, BT's flexible harmonies are more refined than in past material.

New producers for BT, the Robb Brothers, may be the big rationale for the impeccable alternative sound the band has acquired in this release. Shades of Miracle Legion, Cracker and The Replacements can be heard among the practiced guitar patterns and painfully earnest lyrics from Bill Janovitz.

This exemplary range of sounds from BT can be heard easily in the second single to be released, "I'm Allowed." From loud and resigned to angry and not strained, BT has enhanced its savvy sound into one its followers can't ignore.

BT doesn't necessarily relish in stardom; yet, the band does have a quiet, cult-like following. Its ability to have a variety of listeners originates from the various bands BT has toured with.

Bands such as My Bloody Valentine, the Lemonheads and Jon Spencer are a few favorites BT has been paired with across Europe and Australia. However, the band's worldwide popularity has not gone to its head.

With time seriously spent in the studio and its strong bond with musical frankness, BT packs the punches required to be above the rest in the alternative norm.

Students share musical tastes

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

Students wishing to expand their knowledge about music should look into joining New Currents, a music appreciation club on campus.

The club's purpose is the acquisition of a broader knowledge of new age, jazz, and fusion music and to bring together people who enjoy this type of music, said Eric Brunt, president and co-founder of the club. Brunt said members get together and have listening parties.

"It's a good way to share music," he said.

"Members can bring tapes and record off of each others CD's or tapes."

The fun part of the club is listening to new artists and releases, said Tim Lindemuth, director of alumni publications and faculty adviser of New Currents.

"We talk about the music and sometimes analyze it," Lindemuth said.

. Brunt said he and a friend started the club in November 1989 to increase awareness of jazz and new age.

"We both liked jazz and we wanted to talk to others about music," he said.

The biggest event sponsored by New Currents is the Jazz Festival, which takes place in the spring, Brunt said.

"We get area jazz bands to perform. This year we are trying to expand and bring some in from Kansas City." Brunt said.

An ad about the festival also is placed in Jazziz, a national Jazz magazine, he said.

"We didn't get any national acts, but I did receive a card from someone in Canada wanting more information." Brunt said.

Brunt said five to 10 bands usually perform at the festival. The club also attends concerts and sponsors trips to Kansas City and Wichita, Lindemuth said.

REVIEW

Movie easy to forget

TED KADAU, JR.
Collegian

The film "Made in America" is what my ol' great grand pappy used to refer to as a tough call.

On one hand, you have the combined talents of Whoopi Goldberg and Ted Danson, both righteously enough comic actors. Yet, on the other you have a script with about as much originality as a flatulence joke, constricting its characters as if they were wrapped in latex.

MADE IN AMERICA
■ 7, 9:30 p.m., Fri. and Sat.
■ Forum Hall
■ $1.75

The formula here is simple entertainment that stays in your head for about three seconds after you leave the theater.

The story revolves around Sara, (Goldberg) and her 17-year-old daughter Zora (Nadine Schiff). Throughout her life, Zora has lived under the assumption her father had passed on 18-years earlier, leaving her fatherless and her mother a widower.

However, after a high-school biology experiment, Zora learns her blood type matches that of her mother's but comes nowhere near her father's. After confronting her mother, she learns the truth — shortly after her father's death her mother took a trip to the local sperm bank and made a small withdrawal.

Eager to find out who her real father is, Zora goes straight to the sperm bank. With the help of her lusting want-to-be boyfriend Tea (Will Smith), finds out who her biological father is. In short time she tracks this mystery man down. Who she hopes will be a successful black man, black being the key word here. He turns out to be a chain-smoking, hard-drinking car salesman named Hal Jackson (Danson).

Aside from the fact Jackson is a crass version of the Marlboro man, he's also about as white as you can get without blinding innocent bystanders. From his cowboy boots to his stupid car commercials, Jackson lives up to his motto "Hal's your pal."

Marlin Fitzwater to speak at Journalism Day

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Marlin Fitzwater, who was press secretary to former President George Bush, will be the featured speaker for the K-State–University of Kansas Journalism Day.

Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. Saturday in the Forum Hall lobby, and the general session will begin at 9:30 a.m. in Forum Hall. The morning will conclude with a buffet luncheon at 11 a.m. in the Union Ballroom and the football game.

Marlene Franke, office specialist for the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said a large number of reservations have been made.

"There are 350 people that have reservations for the luncheon — most are newspaper people," Franke said.

"The school of journalism ambassadors will be at the registration table to give out the lunch and football tickets if people have requested them."

Fitzwater, a 1965 journalism graduate, will give a speech titled "Jurassic Park Journalism."

Carol Oukrop, director of the school of journalism, said she has been in contact with Fitzwater to get him to come back to K-State.

"I wrote him not long ago and probed if he would be interested in teaching," Oukrop said.

"He said he was flattered, but he didn't he didn't have time."

Oukrop said Fitzwater said he was interested in speaking at Journalism Day.

While at K-State, Fitzwater worked at four journalism-related jobs. He was business manager and staff writer for the Collegian his sophomore year.

He was also an advertising representative for the Manhattan Mercury and stringer for the Topeka Capital-Journal.

Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc. and associate professor of journalism, said the day will be enjoyable for everyone.

"The whole day is a fun mix of K-State and Kansas alumni like a family reunion," Johnson said. "We'll see graduates and friends and people interested in journalism. It's kind of like our version of homecoming. It's our chance to show off what we've done in the past two years."

He said Fitzwater coming back to K-State is something that has been anticipated for a long time.

"We've been wanting to have him come back since I've been at K-State, and it's a real coup to have him here," Johnson said.

Johnson said he prepared the program booklet for the program.

"It is a combination of Journalism Day and an annual report," Johnson said. "It lists faculty and student achievements in both Royal Purple and the Collegian."

Oukrop said this will be the fourth year the two journalism schools have had a conference together.

CLASSIFIED DIRECTORY

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Gang member has respect for police

way to be.

Q: Would you stop other kids from getting involved in gangs?

A: I'm not here to save nobody. I'm not nobody's father.

"I have a certain respect for cops, but they're just another gang to us," B.G. said. They are not the ones who can solve the problem, he said, and prisons don't help a great deal either.

Q: What should the cops do to solve the problem?

A: Parents need to watch out for their kids. It starts at home. Police can only do so much. In Denver, parents don't care.

Q: What are some of the things to watch for?

A: Watch for signs: bad attitude, pants are sagging, wearing khakis, white T-shirts, way they're talking and acting, terminology, rags, flying colors.

Q: Do prisons or juvenile detention do anything?

A: Juvenile detention didn't scare me at all. Prison didn't scare me. It was like a party. We (the gangs) stayed together in prison. When I left I went right back to it.

Carter's attitude has changed since his arrest here, he said. Now that he has two kids, two and a half and six months old, his life is changing.

Q: How was being in jail different here (the Riley County Police Department)?

A: It was boring. I thought about my life. My second kid was born while I was in jail.

Q: Why have you stopped now?

A: Because I have my kids. I need to be more responsible now.

"Don't get involved in it," B.G. said in his final words when asked about what he would say to kids who want to get involved in gangs.

Jazz club sponsors artists

"Sometimes we review concerts, and then someone will write the review for the Collegian," Brunt said.

New Currents also puts on Jazz nights at the Union Station, Brunt said.

The next Jazz night is Oct. 16 and will feature a jazz band called The Firm, Brunt said.

He said he is hoping the Jazz nights will build up to the Jazz Festival.

The club also sponsors new artists, Brunt said.

"We co-sponsored Adrian Legg at DowBows on earlier this semester. We got three new members for the club from it. Hopefully we can do it again." Brunt said.

The club started a newsletter this year. It goes out to members and also to the Collegian, Manhattan Mercury, Manhattan Arts Magazine and a jazz magazine called Jam.

Brunt said he enjoys the club and wishes he could do more.

"I would love to do it all, but I'm trying to get more people." he said.

Lindemuth also invited students to participate.

"It's a different kind of club and a fun thing — different in that we get together to enjoy music," Lindemuth said.

Movie lacks script, dialogue

Needless to say, Zora is shocked, but Sara has the proverbial cow when she learns the truth. She asked for a smart, not-too-tall, black man and instead got John Wayne in a little plastic cup.

The rest of the film plays itself out as the trio learn to like and eventually care for one another. Periods of good fun and comic relief follow. However, the film never passes the slapstick to allow you to truly care about the characters.

Good performances by Goldberg, Danson and Smith add to "Made in America," but unfortunately it is shadowed by poor dialogue and a flimsy script.

Black American wins Nobel

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRINCETON, N.J.— Novelist Toni Morrison, the first black American to win the Nobel Prize in literature, said Thursday that her lyrical works such as "Beloved" and "Jazz" were inspired by "huge silences in literature."

"Winning as an American is very special — but winning as a black American is a knockout," Morrison, 62, said at her office at Princeton University, where she has taught since 1989.

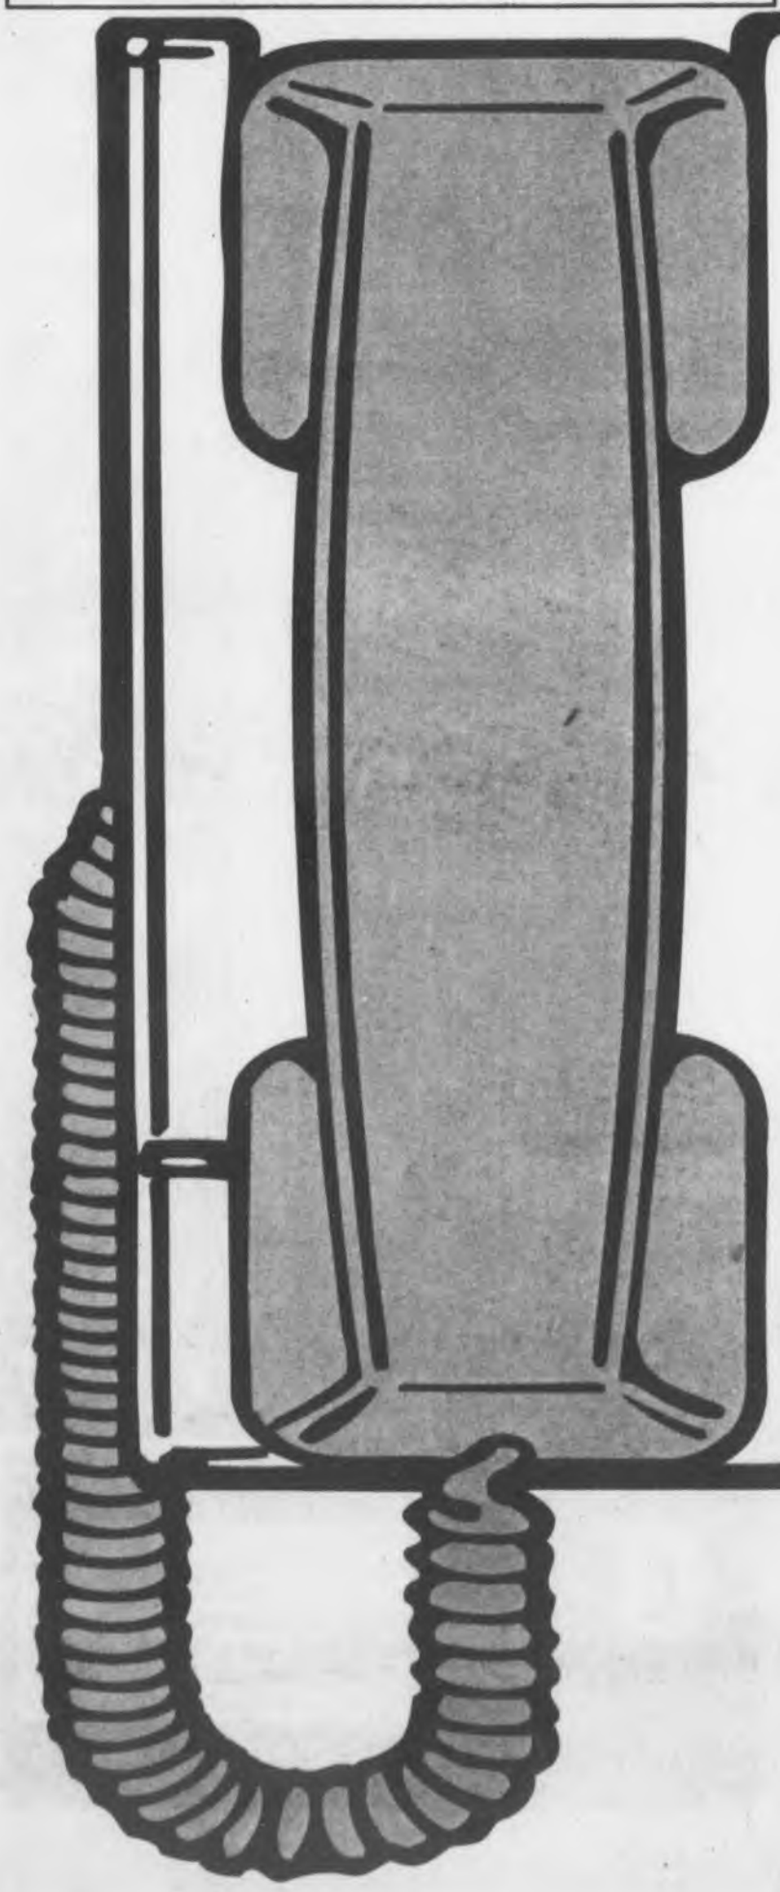
In awarding the 1993 prize Thursday, the Swedish Academy called Morrison a literary artist of the first rank whose work is unusually finely wrought and cohesive, yet at the same time rich in variation.

Morrison said she was inspired by huge silences in literature, things that had never been articulated, printed or imagined, and they were the silences about black girls, black women.

"It was into that area that I stepped and found it to be enormous," she said.

The author of six novels, Morrison won the 1988 Pulitzer Prize for fiction for "Beloved." Her first work of fiction, "The Bluest Eye," came out in 1970, followed by "Sula" in 1974, "Song of Solomon" in 1977, "Tar Baby" in 1981, "Beloved" in 1987 and "Jazz" in 1992.

Morrison also lectures on black literature, wrote a play, "Dreaming Emmett," and a book of criticism, "Playing in the Dark — Whiteness and the Literary Imagination."



She conceived, edited and contributed to a 1992 collection of essays on Anita Hill and Clarence Thomas.

Since 1981, she has been a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.
